CCH Trade CASES

1957

TRADE CASES

1957

Cited 1957 Trade Cases

Texts of decisions rendered by federal and state courts throughout the United States in cases involving antitrust, Federal Trade Commission, and other trade regulation law problems, with table of cases and topical indexes

COMMERCE CLEARING HOUSE, INC.
PUBLISHERS of TOPICAL LAW REPORTS

CHICAGO 46 NEW YORK 36 WASHINGTON 4

Printed in the United States of America

Library of Congress Catalog Card No.: 54-7169

FOREWORD

TRADE CASES reports the full, official texts of all decisions rendered by the higher courts, state and federal, in cases involving antitrust, Federal Trade Commission, and other trade regulation law problems. In addition, the more important lower court decisions and attorney generals' opinions are included, either in full text or in excerpt form. For good measure, Government antitrust consent decrees are included in full text.

The Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act are the principal federal laws interpreted and applied by these decisions. The state fair trade acts (involving resale price maintenance), unfair practices acts (involving sales below cost), and price discrimination and basic antitrust laws are the state laws concerned in these cases.

This volume, cited 1957 TRADE CASES, contains exact reproductions of the decisions as reported in the "Current Court Decisions" volume of the CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS from January 25, 1957, to January 24, 1958.

Decisions are designated by the identical paragraph numbers under which they originally appeared in the TRADE REGULATION REPORTS, thus facilitating direct and cross reference.

Each decision is preceded by: the full name of the case; the name of the court, the docket number, and the date of the decision; the case (Blue Book) number in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice for antitrust suits brought by the United States; an accurate, succinct and informative headnote, with emphasis on the main issue; a reference to all paragraphs in the compilations of the Tenth Edition of TRADE REGULATION REPORTS which are pertinent to the subject matter of the case; the names of attorneys representing the litigants, whenever available; and a reference to any previously reported decision in the same case.

Effective indexing is provided to afford quick and convenient contact with any case by reference to its paragraph number. The indexing system includes:

(a) Table of Cases. Alphabetical, with complete listings under plaintiffs' names and cross references under defendants' names. The official and national reporter citations are included when available.

(b) Indexes. Complete and detailed. In addition to the General Topical Index, covering all of the decisions in the volume, special indexes are provided for:

  (i) Antitrust Consent Decrees
  (ii) Attorney Generals' Opinions
  (iii) Federal Trade Commission Cases
  (iv) Robinson-Patman Act Cases
  (v) State Fair Trade Act Cases
  (vi) State Unfair Practices Act Cases

This thorough indexing affords instant contact with any case (a) by case name, and (b) by subject matter.

In planning and producing TRADE CASES, the aim of the publishers throughout is to make this volume of the utmost utility in the important and extensive field of trade regulation. The user's time is saved by concentration on the subject of trade regulation (no time is lost leafing through irrelevant cases); by the single reporting medium for courts of all jurisdictions; and by the explanatory headnotes—clearly stated captions written by specialists in trade regulation law.

COMMERCE CLEARING HOUSE, INC.

TRADE CASES

A Comprehensive Reporter of Decisions Rendered by Federal and State Courts Throughout the United States on Antitrust, Federal Trade Commission, and Other Trade Regulation Law Problems

1957

TABLE OF CASES

for

1957 TRADE CASES

A COMPLETE LIST OF THE CASES REPORTED IN THIS VOLUME, ARRANGED ALPHABETICALLY BY NAMES OF PLAINTIFFS, WITH CROSS REFERENCES UNDER DEFENDANTS' NAMES *

Each case name is followed by the name of the court rendering the opinion, the official or national reporter citation if available at the time of printing, and the number of the paragraph in this volume at which the case is reported.

* Cases in which the "Federal Trade Commission" or the "United States" is a party are listed under the name of the other party only.

— M —

— N —

COURT DECISIONS

—Cited 1957 Trade Cases—

[¶ 68,584] Cardinal Films, Inc. v. Republic Pictures Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 110-286. Filed January 4, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Exclusive Dealing—Copyright Licensing Agreement—Legality of Tying Provision.—A provision of a copyright licensing agreement under which a producer-processor of motion picture films required a distributor of motion pictures to order from the producer-processor exclusively all prints of films needed by the distributor for the distribution of the copyrighted motion pictures which the producer-processor had exclusively licensed to the distributor did not violate Section 3 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act. Under the copyright law, the producer-processor, as a copyright proprietor, could license the exhibition of its motion pictures and could license or retain the right to process and reproduce its own films. The copyright monopoly included the processing of the films; therefore, the provision was not within the "tie-in" prohibition of the Clayton Act. Since the exercise of the copyright monopoly did not go beyond the legitimate exploitation of the exclusive privilege of the producer-processor, there was no violation of the Sherman Act. There was no suppression of competition beyond that permitted by the copyright law.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.880; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.550; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.580.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Federal Statute—Applicability.—The Federal four-year statute of limitations was held to be applicable to a treble damage action which was commenced after the effective date of the statute, and claims accruing more than four years prior to the institution of the action were held to be barred.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Federal Statute of Limitations—Tolling of Statute—Pendency of Government Action—Relation Between Private Suit and Government Suit.—The pendency of a Government antitrust action against a defendant in a private antitrust action did not suspend the running of the Federal statute of limitations in the private action since the matters complained of in the private action against the defendant were not based in whole or in part on any of the matters complained of in the Government antitrust action against the defendant. The Government action involved an alleged conspiracy to refuse to license motion picture films, while the private action involved an alleged illegal tying arrangement in the licensing and processing of copyrighted motion picture films.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Federal Statute of Limitations—When Cause of Action Accrues.—Since an action does not lie for a conspiracy, but for the overt acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy, the Federal statute of limitations runs from the commission of the last overt act alleged to have caused damage. While an action does not lie for a continuing conspiracy as distinguished from the overt act that puts it into execution, an action does lie for a continuing violation of the antitrust laws. The continuing violation involved the defendant's conduct in continuing practices complained of under a contract.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.200.

For the plaintiff: Louis Kipnis, New York, N. Y.

For the defendant: Meyer H. Lavenstein, New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Agreement Between Parties]

EDELSTEIN, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant has moved for summary judgment, under Rule 56, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, in an action for treble damages under the antitrust laws. Plaintiff, Cardinal Films, Inc., is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures, prints and films in 16mm widths, for rental and exhibition by others throughout the United States. Defendant, Republic Pictures Corporation, is engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures and in licensing the right to distribute them. In connection with its business, it processes film; that is, it develops negatives and makes the positive prints not only of its own motion pictures, but, on a commercial basis, of the motion pictures produced or distributed by others. The activities are admittedly in interstate commerce. On April 30, 1949, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement in writing whereby Republic granted to Cardinal an exclusive license to distribute 16mm prints of 30 specified motion pictures, of which the defendant was and is the owner and copyright proprietor. Included in the agreement was a provision that the plaintiff was to order from the defendant exclusively all prints required by the plaintiff for the distribution of the pictures, at charges provided.

[Alleged Antitrust Violations]

It is this provision in the agreement which presents the nub of the controversy. Defendant furnished a total of 658 16mm prints to the plaintiff, and because Cardinal was unable to get the film processing done elsewhere, under the agreement, it alleges that Republic has, from the date of the contract to the date of the filing of the complaint, been in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 14, by monopolizing and restraining trade and by enforcing an illegal "tie-in" provision. The effect of the contract, it is contended, is a substantial and unreasonable restraint of competition in the processing of motion pictures, causing ultimate users and consumers of the prints of motion pictures to pay arbitrary and monopolistic prices. It is further alleged that the defendant charged higher prices for prints furnished than it charged to different purchasers of similar prints, and higher prices than other film processors would have charged the plaintiff, resulting in a loss of $7,000 to Cardinal.

A second cause of action seeks to recover, in the event that the contract should be decreed to be illegal and void, in contravention of the Sherman Act, triple the amount of an advance payment of $25,000 and of $12,000 Cardinal claims it had to expend to assure itself of prints of a commercially satisfactory quality, because of the poor quality of the prints furnished.

[Scope of Copyright Monopoly]

The first issue presented is whether the provision in the licensing agreement requiring the plaintiff to get its prints exclusively from the defendant is an abuse of the lawful copyright monopoly defendant has in the motion pictures subject to the contract. Under the copyright law, the defendant has the exclusive right, 17 U. S. C. § 1, "(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work; * * * (d) * * * and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce, or reproduce [a dramatic work] in any manner or by any method whatsoever * * *." It is clear that the defendant, as copyright proprietor, could license the exhibition of its motion pictures. It seems equally clear that the defendant could license or retain the right to process and reproduce its own films. That right is obviously one included in its monopoly. It is difficult to see how the scope of the monopoly is enlarged by the granting of the one license only. The block-booking aspect of United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 156, wherein one copyrighted feature was licensed on condition that the exhibitor would also license another copyrighted feature or group of features, is easily distinguishable. The exhibitors' free choice of copyrighted features was restricted, but had they desired the features otherwise forced upon them, they would have had to license those features from the copyright proprietors. In the case at bar, the plaintiff wants the allegedly "Tied-in" service, but he objects to purchasing it from the copyright owner. Nor is the situation at all analogous to such cases as Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,201], 320 U. S. 661; Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; International Business Machines Corporation v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES

¶ 55,112], 298 U. S. 131; United Shoe Machinery Corporation v. United States, 258 U. S. 451; or Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502. In those cases, the restrictions involved not materials within the patent monopoly, but rights to use or purchase materials not covered by patents. Here, any laboratory attempting to process one of defendant's films would be guilty of infringement. But in the I. B. M. case, supra, for example, the use in the patented machine of a card manufactured by someone else than the patentee would not constitute infringement. Here, the copyright owner derives his profit from an operation within the scope of the copyright monopoly. In the cited cases, the patent owners sought to derive profit, on the basis of their patents, not only from the patented devices, on which the law gave them a monopoly, but from unpatented materials used with the machines, thereby expanding the patent monopoly to cover the unpatented materials. The situation in the case at bar would be quite different, of course, if the copyright monopoly did not cover the processing of film.

[Clayton Act]

The patent case of Steiner Sales Co. v. Schwartz Sales Co., (10 Cir.) [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,187], 98 F. 2d 999, cert. den. 305 U. S. 662, is highly analogous to the instant case. There the patentee licensed the use of his device, but required the licensee to purchase it only from a manufacturer authorized by the licensor. The requirement was limited to the licensor's patented devices only. It was held that a patentee may condition the right of his licensee to purchase only from himself or his authorized manufacturer, and that the license agreement did not impose restrictions beyond the lawful monopoly of the patents. Here, the copyright owner licensed a certain use of its motion pictures, but the licensee was required to obtain the film from the copyright proprietor. The requirement is limited to those motion pictures owned by the licensor and the subject of the contract. It follows that the licensor may properly condition the right of his licensee to purchase only from the licensor the services necessary to bring the licensed use to fruition. The provision of the licensing agreement requiring plaintiff to order all prints exclusively from the defendant is not within the "tie-in" prohibition of the Clayton Act.

[Sherman Act]

By the same token, since the defendant's exercise of its copyright monopoly does not go beyond the legitimate exploitation of its exclusive privilege, there is no violation of the Sherman Act. It is true that an agreement illegal because it suppresses competition is not any less so because the competitive article is copyrighted. Interstate Circuit v. United States [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208, 231. But there is no suppression of competition here beyond that permitted by the copyright law. The only competition precluded by the agreement and the only monopolization or restraint of trade involved is in connection with the processing of defendant's films, an activity over which defendant has been granted exclusive domain by copyright. There is no attempt to enlarge that domain by the leverage of the copyright, as for example, where price fixing licenses are used as a means of extending the copyright monopoly so as to govern the admission price to exhibitions which include pictures not covered by the copyright, as was found in Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra; or where a copyright holder seeks to impose price control upon future sales of an article, after having divested himself of title to it, Straus v. American Publishers' Ass'n., 231 U. S. 222; or where price maintenance on copyrighted films is shown to constitute a part of a general plan to restrain unreasonably interstate commerce in motion picture films or to monopolize or suppress competition in their exhibition, United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,316], 323 U. S. 173. Such agreements violate the Sherman Act and are afforded no immunity by the copyright laws. United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131. But an agreement which goes no further than to preserve the legitimate monopoly of a copyright is not vitiated by the antitrust laws.

[Statute of Limitations]

The defendant has also raised the statute of limitations as a bar to this suit. Title 28 U. S. C. § 15b provides that a suit for treble damages based upon a violation of the antitrust laws is barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. The effective date of the provision was six months after its enactment on July 7, 1955. The complaint in this case was filed on June 21, 1956, so that there can be no question of the applicability of the section. Any cause of action which accrued prior to June 21, 1952, therefore, is barred. Plaintiff contends, however, that under 15 U. S. C. § 16(b), the statute of limitations was tolled by the pendency, from July 22, 1952 to January 10, 1956, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, of the case of United States v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,205], 137 F. Supp. 78, in which the defendant here was also a defendant. That section does provide for the tolling of the statute of limitations for private rights of action when a suit is instituted by the United States under the antitrust laws, where those private rights of action are "based in whole or in part on any matter complained of" in the Government's suit. But the matter complained of in that suit was a conspiracy to restrain interstate trade and commerce in 16mm films, pursuant to which the defendants refused to license the exhibition of those films in any place or manner that would compete with the exhibition of 35mm films. An analysis of the complaint in that action, a copy of which has been submitted by defendant, does not disclose that there were any acts of the defendants complained of by the United States common to the acts of the defendant complained of by the plaintiff in this case. See Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation, (9 Cir.) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304] 232 F. 2d 190, 196. The statute of limitations, therefore, was not tolled by the Government's suit in California.

Consequently, so much of the claim under the first cause of action as accrued more than four years prior to the filing of the complaint is barred. It appears that of the 658 prints of the licensed pictures furnished by defendant to plaintiff under the contract, only 46 were furnished within the four year period. Inasmuch as plaintiff complains of a continuing violation of the antitrust laws, only so much of his damages as are attributable to those 46 prints are beyond the bar of limitations, if he has a valid cause of action. The situation is not like those in cases involving a statute of limitations in connection with continuing conspiracies. Action does not lie for a conspiracy, but for overt acts done in furtherance of a conspiracy. United States v. Pan-American Petroleum Co., (9 Cir.) 55 F. 2d 753. Consequently, in a civil conspiracy, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the last overt act alleged to have caused damage. Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation, (9 Cir.) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304] 232 F. 2d 190, and cases cited at p. 194. While action does not lie for a continuing conspiracy as distinguished from the overt act that puts it into execution, action does lie for a continuing violation such as is here alleged. Bluefields SS. Co. v. United Fruit Co., (3 Cir.) 243 Fed. 1. The continuing violation involves the defendant's conduct (if it be a violation) in continuing the practices complained of under the contract. If more affirmative action on the part of the defendant causing damage to the plaintiff is required, Pastor v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 76 F. Supp. 781, it may be, as alleged in plaintiff's affidavit, the defendant's refusal to relieve the plaintiff of the restriction in the contract. At least an issue of fact on that point is raised.

On the second cause of action, the plaintiff seeks to recover treble the damages resulting from a $25,000 advance under the contract and a $12,000 expenditure because of poor quality of the prints furnished. But the $25,000 payment was made by September 15, 1949, and the $12,000 expenditure was made before June 21, 1952. Recovery on this cause of action is clearly barred by the statute of limitations.

[Motion Granted]

Accordingly, the motion for summary judgment will be granted.

[¶ 68,585] Honorable Walter J. La Buy v. Howes Leather Company, Inc. and Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1956. No. 27. Dated January 14, 1957.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suits for Civil Damages—Appeal and Error—Review of Order Referring Cases to Master—Writ of Mandamus—Power of Court of Appeals.—A United States Court of Appeals had the power to issue writs of mandamus compelling a United States District Court Judge to vacate his orders, entered under Rule 53(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, referring two antitrust cases to a master for trial. The judge had referred the cases to a master because they were very complicated and complex, they would take considerable time to try, and his calendar was congested. However, in view of the judge's knowledge of the cases at the time of the references, together with his long experience in the antitrust field, it was held that he could have disposed of the cases with greater dispatch and less effort than anyone else. Under the circumstances in the cases, the Court of Appeals was justified in finding that the orders of reference were an abuse of the judge's power under Rule 53(b). The parties were deprived of a trial before the court on the basic issues involved in the cases. The use of masters is "to aid judges in the performance of specific judicial duties, as they may arise in the progress of a cause," and not to displace the court. The exceptional circumstances in the cases warranted the use of the extraordinary remedy of mandamus. The "All Writs Act is meant to be used only in the exceptional case where there is clear abuse of discretion or 'usurpation of judicial power.'" The Court of Appeals, in the instant cases, found a clear abuse of discretion.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013, 9015.12.

For the petitioner: Edward R. Johnston, James A. Sprowl, and Edward H. Hatton, Chicago, Ill.

For the respondents: Jack I. Levy, Chicago, Ill., for Howes Leather Co., Inc.; and Charles J. Barnhill, David L. Dickson, and John F. McClure, Chicago, Ill., for Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc.

Affirming a decision of the United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,261.

[Issue]

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

These two consolidated cases present a question of the power of the Courts of Appeals, led to our grant of a writ of cerpel a District Judge to vacate his orders entered under Rule 53(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure referring antitrust cases for trial before a master. The petitioner, a United States District Judge sitting in the Northern District of Illinois, contends that the Courts of Appeals have no such power and that, even if they did, these cases were not appropriate ones for its exercise. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has decided unanimously that it has such power and, by a divided court, that the circumstances surrounding the references by the petitioner required it to issue the mandamus about which he complains. 226 F. 2d 703 [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,261]. The importance of the question in the administration of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, together with the uncertainty existing on the issue among the Courts of Appeals, led to our grant of a writ of certiorari. 350 U. S. 964. We conclude that the Court of Appeals properly issued the writs of mandamus.

[Antitrust Cases]

History of the Litigation.—These petitions for mandamus, filed in the Court of Appeals, arose from two antitrust actions instituted in the District Court in 1950.[1] Rohlfing[2] involves 87 plaintiffs, all operators of independent retail shoe repair shops. The claim of these plaintiffs against the six named defendants—manufacturers, wholesalers, and retail mail order houses and chain operators—is identical. The claim asserted in the complaint is a conspiracy between the defendants "to monopolize and to attempt to monopolize" and fix the price of shoe repair supplies sold in interstate commerce in the Chicago area, in violation of the Sherman Act. The allegations also include a price discrimination charge under the Robinson-Patman Act. Shaffer[3] involves six plaintiffs, all wholesalers of shoe repair supplies, and six defendants, including manufacturers and wholesalers of such supplies and a retail shoe shop chain operator. The allegations here also include charges of monopoly and price fixing under the Sherman Act and price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. Both complaints pray for injunctive relief, treble damages, and an accounting with respect to the discriminatory price differentials charged.

[1] Rohlfing v. Cat's Paw Rubber Co., No. 50 C 229, U. S. D. C. N. D. Ill., and Shaffer v. U. S. Rubber Co., No. 50 C 844, U. S. D. C. N. D. Ill.

[2] The figures indicated refer to the number of parties at the time of the petition for mandamus. When the action was originally filed there were 87 plaintiffs and 25 defendants.

The record indicates that the cases had been burdensome to the petitioner. In Rohlfing alone, 27 pages of the record are devoted to docket entries reflecting that petitioner had conducted many hearings on preliminary pleas and motions. The original complaint had been twice amended as a result of orders of the court in regard to misjoinders and severance; 14 defendants had been dismissed with prejudice; summary judgment hearings had resulted in a refusal to enter a judgment for some of the defendants on the pleadings; over 50 depositions had been taken; and hearings to compel testimony and require the production and inspection of records were held. It appears that several of the hearings were extended and included not only oral argument but submission of briefs, and resulted in the filing of opinions and memoranda by the petitioner. It is reasonable to conclude that much time would have been saved at the trial had petitioner heard the case because of his familiarity with the litigation.

[References]

The References to the Master.—The references to the master were made under the authority of Rule 53(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.[4] The cases were called on February 23, 1955, on a motion to reset them for trial. Rohlfing was "No. 1 below the black line" on the trial list, which gave it a preferred setting. All parties were anxious for an early trial, but plaintiffs wished an adjournment until May. The petitioner announced that "it has taken a long time to get this case at issue. I remember hearing more motions, I think, in this case than any case I have ever sat on in this court." The plaintiffs estimated that the trial would take six weeks, whereupon petitioner stated he did not know when he could try the case "if it is going to take this long." He asked if the parties could agree "to have a Master hear" it. The parties ignored this query and at a conference in chambers the next day petitioner entered the orders of reference sua sponte.[5] The orders declared that the court was "confronted with an extremely congested calendar" and that "exception [sic] conditions exist for this reason" requiring the references. The cases were referred to the master "to take evidence and to report the same to this Court, together with his findings of fact and conclusions of law." It was further ordered in each case that "the Master shall commence the trial of this cause" on a certain date and continue with diligence, and that the parties supply security for costs. While the parties had deposited some $8,000 costs, the record discloses that all parties objected to the references and filed motions to vacate them. Upon petitioner's refusal to vacate the references, these mandamus actions were filed in the Court of Appeals seeking the issuance of

[3] The figures indicated refer to the number of parties at the time of the petition for mandamus. When the action was originally filed there were 10 plaintiffs and 20 defendants.

[4] Rule 53(b) provides:

"(b) REFERENCE. A reference to a master shall be the exception and not the rule. In actions to be tried by a jury, a reference shall be made only when the issues are complicated; in actions to be tried without a jury, save in matters of account, a reference shall be made only upon a showing that some exceptional condition requires it."

[5] The fact that the master is an active practitioner would make the comment of Chief Justice Vanderbilt with regard to the effect of references appropriate here. In his work, Cases and Materials on Modern Procedure and Judicial Administration (1952), at pages 1240-1241, he states:

"There is one special cause of delay in getting cases on for trial that must be singled out for particular condemnation, the all-too-prevalent habit of sending matters to a reference. There is no more effective way of putting a case to sleep for an indefinite period than to permit it to go to a reference with a busy lawyer as referee. Only a drastic administrative rule, rigidly enforced, strictly limiting the matters in which a reference may be had and requiring weekly reports as to the progress of each reference will put to rout this inveterate enemy of dispatch in the trial of cases."

writs ordering petitioner to do so. These applications were grounded on 28 U. S. C. § 1651(a), the All Writs Act.[6] In his answer to the show cause orders issued by the Court of Appeals, petitioner amplified the reasons for the references, stating "that the cases were very complicated and complex, that they would take considerable time to try," and that his "calendar was congested." Declaring that the references amounted to "a refusal on his [petitioner's] part, as a judge, to try the causes in due course," the Court of Appeals concluded that "in view of the extraordinary nature of these causes" the references must be vacated "if we find that the orders were beyond the court's power under the pertinent rule." 226 F. 2d, at 705, 706. And, it being so found, the writs issued under the authority of the All Writs Act. It is not disputed that the same principles and considerations as to the propriety of the issuance of the writs apply equally to the two cases.

[Court of Appeals]

The Power of the Courts of Appeals.—Petitioner contends that the power of the Courts of Appeals does not extend to the issuance of writs of mandamus to review interlocutory orders except in those cases where the review of the case on appeal after final judgment would be frustrated. Asserting that the orders of reference were in exercise of his jurisdiction under Rule 53(b), petitioner urges that such action can be reviewed only on appeal and not by writ of mandamus, since by congressional enactment appellate review of a District Court's orders may be had only after a final judgment. The question of naked power has long been settled by this Court. As late as Roche v. Evaporated Milk Association [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,276], 319 U. S. 21 (1943), Mr. Chief Justice Stone reviewed the decisions and, in considering the power of Courts of Appeals to issue writs of mandamus, the Court held that "the common law writs, like equitable remedies, may be granted or withheld in the sound discretion of the court." Id., at 25. The recodification of the All Writs Act in 1948, which consolidated old §§ 342 and 377 into the present § 1651 (a), did not affect the power of the Courts of Appeals to issue writs of mandamus in aid of jurisdiction. See Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Holland [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,626], 346 U. S. 379, 382-383 (1953). Since the Court of Appeals could at some stage of the antitrust proceedings entertain appeals in these cases, it has power in proper circumstances, as here, to issue writs of mandamus reaching them. Roche, supra, at 25, and cases there cited. This is not to say that the conclusion we reach on the facts of this case is intended, or can be used, to authorize the indiscriminate use of prerogative writs as a means of reviewing interlocutory orders. We pass on, then, to the only real question involved, i. e., whether the exercise of the power by the Court of Appeals was proper in the cases now before us.

[Court's Exercise of Power]

The Discretionary Use of the Writs.—It appears from the docket entries to which we heretofore referred that the petitioner was well informed as to the nature of the antitrust litigation, the pleadings of the parties, and the gist of the plaintiffs' claims. He was well aware of the theory of the defense and much of the proof which necessarily was outlined in the various requests for discovery, admissions, interrogatories, and depositions. He heard arguments on motions to dismiss, to compel testimony on depositions, and for summary judgment. In fact, petitioner's knowledge of the cases at the time of the references, together with his long experience in the antitrust field, points to the conclusion that he could dispose of the litigation with greater dispatch and less effort than anyone else. Nevertheless, he referred both suits to a master on the general issue. Furthermore, neither the existence of the alleged conspiracy nor the question of liability vel non had been determined in either case. These issues, as well as the damages, if any, and the question concerning the issuance of an injunction, were likewise included in the references. Under all of the circumstances, we believe the Court of Appeals was justified in finding the orders of reference were an abuse of the petitioner's power under Rule 53(b). They amounted to little less than an abdication of the judicial function depriving the parties of a trial before the court on the basic issues involved in the litigation.

---

[6] "(a) The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law."

The use of masters is "to aid judges in the performance of specific judicial duties, as they may arise in the progress of a cause," Ex parte Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 312 (1920), and not to displace the court. The exceptional circumstances here warrant the use of the extraordinary remedy of mandamus. See Maryland v. Soper, 270 U. S. 9, 30 (1926). As this court pointed out in Los Angeles Brush Corp. v. James, 272 U. S. 701, 706 (1927): ". . . [W]here the subject concerns the enforcement of the . . . [r]ules which by law it is the duty of this Court to formulate and put in force," mandamus should issue to prevent such action thereunder so palpably improper as to place it beyond the scope of the rule invoked. As was said there at page 707, were the Court ". . . to find that the rules have been practically nullified by a district judge . . . it would not hesitate to restrain [him]. . . ." The Los Angeles Brush Corp. case was cited as authority in 1940 for a per curiam opinion in McCullough v. Cosgrave, 309 U. S. 634, in which the Court, summarily ordered vacated the reference of two patent cases to a master. The cases arose from the same District Court in which the Los Angeles Brush Corp. case originated and the grounds for the references largely followed that case. It is to be noted that the grounds there are much more inclusive than those set out here, alleging all of those claimed by the petitioner and, in addition, the prolonged illness of the regular judge and the fact that no other judge was available to try the cases. It appears to us a fortiori that these cases were improperly referred to a master.

[Decisions Distinguished]

It is claimed that recent opinions of this Court are to the contrary. Petitioner cites Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Holland [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,626], 346 U. S. 379 (1953), and Parr v. United States, 351 U. S. 513 (1956). The former case did not concern rules promulgated by this Court but, rather, an Act of Congress, the venue statute. Furthermore, there we pointed out that the ". . . All Writs Act is meant to to be used only in the exceptional case where there is clear abuse of discretion or 'usurpation of judicial power'. . . ." 346 U. S., at 383. Certainly, as the Court of Appeals found here, there was a clear abuse of discretion. In the Parr case, the District Court had not exceeded or refused to exercise its functions. It dismissed an indictment because the Government had elected to prosecute Parr in another district under a new indictment. The effect of the holding was merely that the dismissal of the first indictment was not an abuse of the discretion vested in the trial judge.

[Review of Interlocutory Orders]

It is also contended that the Seventh Circuit has erroneously construed the All Writs Act as "conferring on it a 'roving commission' to supervise interlocutory orders of the District Courts in advance of final decision." Our examination of its opinions in this regard leads us to the conclusion that the Court of Appeals has exercised commendable self-restraint. It is true that mandamus should be resorted to only in extreme cases, since it places trial judges in the anomalous position of being litigants without counsel other than uncompensated volunteers. However, there is an end of patience and it clearly appears that the Court of Appeals has for years admonished the trial judges of the Seventh Circuit that the practice of making references "does not commend itself" and ". . . should seldom be made, and if at all only when unusual circumstances exist." In re Irving-Austin Building Corp., 100 F. 2d 574, 577 (1938). Again, in 1942, it pointed out that the words "exception" and "exceptional" as used in the reference rule are not elastic terms with the trial court the sole judge of their elasticity. "Litigants are entitled to a trial by the court, in every suit, save where exceptional circumstances are shown." Adventures in Good Eating, Inc. v. Best Places to Eat, Inc., 131 F. 2d 809, 815. Still the Court of Appeals did not disturb the reference practice by reversal or mandamus until this case was decided in October 1955. Again, Chief Judge Duffy in Krinsley v. United Artists Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,424], 235 F. 2d 253, 257 (1956), in which there was an affirmance of a case involving a reference, called attention to the fact that the practice of referring cases to masters was ". . . all too common in the Northern District of Illinois . . . ." The record does not show to what extent references are made by the full bench of the District Court in the Northern District; however, it does reveal that petitioner has referred 11 cases to masters in the past 6 years. But even "a little cloud may bring a flood's downpour" if we approve the practice here indulged, particularly in the face of presently congested dockets, increased filings, and more extended trials. This is not to say that we are neither aware of nor fully appreciative of the unfortunate congestion of the court calendar in many of our District Courts. The use of procedural devices in the heavily congested districts has proven to be most helpful in reducing docket congestion. Illustrative of such techniques are provision for an assignment commissioner to handle the assignment of all cases; the assignment of judges to handle only motions, pleas, and pretrial proceedings; and separate calendars for civil and criminal trials in cases that have reached issue. We enumerate these merely as an example of the progress made in judicial administration through the use of enlightened procedural techniques. It goes without saying that they can be used effectively only where adaptable to the specific problems of a district. But, be that as it may, congestion in itself is not such an exceptional circumstance as to warrant a reference to a master. If such were the test, present congestion would make references the rule rather than the exception. Petitioner realizes this, for in addition to calendar congestion he alleges that the cases referred had unusual complexity of issues of both fact and law. But most litigation in the antitrust field is complex. It does not follow that antitrust litigants are not entitled to a trial before a court. On the contrary, we believe that this is an impelling reason for trial before a regular, experienced trial judge rather than before a temporary substitute appointed on an ad hoc basis and ordinarily not experienced in judicial work. Nor does petitioner's claim of the great length of time these trials will require offer exceptional grounds. The final ground asserted by petitioner was with reference to the voluminous accounting which would be necessary in the event the plaintiffs prevailed. We agree that the detailed accounting required in order to determine the damages suffered by each plaintiff might be referred to a master after the court has determined the over-all liability of defendants, provided the circumstances indicate that the use of the court's time is not warranted in receiving the proof and making the tabulation.

[Affirmed]

We believe that supervisory control of the District Courts by the Courts of Appeals is necessary to proper judicial administration in the federal system. The All Writs Act confers on the Courts of Appeals the discretionary power to issue writs of mandamus in the exceptional circumstances existing here. Its judgment is therefore affirmed.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, MR. JUSTICE BURTON and MR. JUSTICE HARLAN join, dissenting.

[Issue]

The issue here is not whether Judge La Buy's order was reviewable by the Court of Appeals. The sole question is whether review should have awaited final decision in the cause or whether the order was reviewable before final decision by way of a petition under the All Writs Act for the issuance of a writ of mandamus addressed to it. I do not agree that the writ directing Judge La Buy to vacate the order of reference was within the bounds of the discretionary power of the Court of Appeals to issue an extraordinary writ under the All Writs Act.[1] Only last Term, in Parr v. United States, 351 U. S. 513, this Court restated those bounds:

> "The power to issue them is discretionary and it is sparingly exercised. . . . This is not a case where a court has exceeded or refused to exercise its jurisdiction, see Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U. S. 21, 26, nor one where appellate review will be defeated if a writ does not issue, cf. Maryland v. Soper, 270 U. S. 9, 29-30. Here the most that could be claimed is that the district courts have erred in ruling on matters within their jurisdiction. The extraordinary writs do not reach to such cases; they may not be used to thwart the congressional policy against piecemeal appeals. Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., supra, at p. 30." 351 U. S., at 520.[2]

---

[1] "(a) The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U. S. C. § 1651(a).

[2] Cf. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,626], 346 U. S. 379; Ex parte Fahey, 332 U. S. 258.

The action of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit here under review is outside these limitations. The case before the Court of Appeals was "not a case where a court has exceeded or refused to exercise its jurisdiction. . . ." Rule 53(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure vested Judge La Buy with discretionary power to make a reference if he found, and he did, that "some exceptional condition" required the reference.[3] Here also "the most that could be claimed is that the district [court] . . . erred in ruling on matters within [its] jurisdiction." If Judge La Buy erred in finding that there was an "exceptional condition" requiring the reference or did not give proper weight to the caveat of the Rule that a "reference to a master shall be the exception and not the rule," that was mere error "in ruling on matters within [the District Court's] jurisdiction." Such mere error does not bring into play the power of the Court of Appeals to issue an extraordinary writ. Nor did Judge La Buy's order of reference present the Court of Appeals with a case "where appellate review will be defeated if a writ does not issue." The litigants may suffer added expense and possible delay in obtaining a decision as a consequence of the reference, but Roche settles that "that inconvenience is one which we must take it Congress contemplated in providing that only final judgments should be reviewable."[4]

[Piecemeal Appeals]

But, regrettable as is this Court's approval of what I consider to be a clear departure by the Court of Appeals from the settled principles governing the issuance of the extraordinary writs, what this Court says in reaching its result is reason for particularly grave concern. I think this Court has today seriously undermined the long-standing statutory policy against piecemeal appeals. My brethren say:

> "Since the Court of Appeals could at some stage of the antitrust proceedings entertain an appeal in these cases it has power in proper circumstances as here to issue writs of mandamus reaching them. . . . This is not to say that the conclusion we reach on the facts of this case is intended or can be used to authorize the indiscriminate use of prerogative writs as a means of reviewing interlocutory orders."

I understand this to mean that proper circumstances are present for the issuance of a writ in this case because, if the litigants are not now heard, the Court of Appeals will not have an opportunity to relieve them of the burden of the added expense and delay of decision alleged to be the consequence of the reference. But that bridge was crossed by this Court in Roche and Alkali, where this very argument was rejected:

> "Here the inconvenience to the litigants results alone from the circumstance that Congress has provided for review of the district court's order only on review of the final judgment, and not from an abuse of judicial power, or refusal to exercise it, which it is the function of mandamus to correct." 319 U. S., at 31.

[All Writs Act]

What this Court is saying, therefore, is that the All Writs Act confers an independent appellate power in the Courts of Appeals to review interlocutory orders. I have always understood the law to be precisely to the contrary. The power granted to the Courts of Appeals by the All Writs Act is not an appellate power but merely an auxiliary power in aid of and to protect the appellate jurisdiction conferred by other provisions of law, e. g., the power to review final decisions granted by 28 U. S. C. § 1291,[5] and to review specified exceptional classes of interlocutory orders granted by 28 U. S. C. § 1296.[6] This holding that an independent ap-

[3] It should be noted that the objection to references stated by Chief Justice Vanderbilt, as quoted in footnote 5 of the majority opinion, is reflected in New Jersey Revised Rules 4:54-1, which provides as follows: "No reference for the hearing of a matter shall be made to a master, except under extraordinary circumstances, upon approval of the Chief Justice, or for the taking of a deposition, or as to matters heard by a standing master appointed by the Supreme Court." (Emphasis added.) If the federal rule required a like consent by a chief judge, a reference without such consent would be outside the jurisdiction of the District Court, and, therefore, subject to correction by writ of mandamus. The vital distinction is that the federal rule as presently framed vests discretion in the District Courts.

[4] 319 U. S., at 30. Cf. United States Alkali Export Assn. v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,372], 325 U. S. 196, 202-203.

[5] "The courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the district courts of the United States, . . . except where a direct review may be had in the Supreme Court." 28 U. S. C. § 1291.

[6] Section 1292, in substance, confers upon the Courts of Appeals jurisdiction of appeals from interlocutory orders of the District Courts relating to injunctions, receivership, and certain admiralty and patent infringement cases.

pellate power is given by the All Writs Act not only discards the constraints upon the scope of the power to issue extraordinary writs restated in Parr, but, by the very fact of doing so, opens wide the crack in the door which, since the Judiciary Act of 1789, has shut out from intermediate appellate review all interlocutory actions of the District Courts not within the few exceptional classes now specified by the Congress in § 1292.

The power of the Courts of Appeals to issue extraordinary writs stems from § 14 of the Judiciary Act of 1789.[7] Chief Judge Magruder, in In re Josephson, 218 F. 2d 174, provides us with an invaluable history of this power and of the judicial development of its scope. He demonstrates most persuasively that "[t]he all writs section does not confer an independent appellate power; the power is strictly of an auxiliary nature, in aid of a jurisdiction granted in some other provision of law, as was sharply pointed out in Roche v. Evaporated Milk Ass'n, 1943, 319 U. S. 21, 29-31 . . . " 218 F. 2d, at 180.

[Question for Court]

The focal question posed for a Court of Appeals by a petition for the issuance of a writ is whether the action of the District Court tends to frustrate or impede the ultimate exercise by the Court of Appeals of its appellate jurisdiction granted in some other provision of the law. The answer is clearly in the affirmative where, for example, the order of the District Court transfers a cause to a District Court of another circuit for decision. That was Josephson, where the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit held that an order of a District Court in the circuit transferring a case to the District Court of another circuit was within the reach of the Court of Appeals' power under the All Writs Act because "the effect of the order is that the district judge has declined to proceed with the determination of a case which could eventually come to this court by appeal from a 'final decision'."[8] 218 F. 2d, at 181. In contrast, a District Court order denying a transfer would not come under the umbrella of power under the All Writs Act, since retention of the cause by the District Court can hardly thwart or tend to defeat the power of the Court of Appeals to review that order after final decision of the case. The distinction between the grant and denial of transfer was recognized in Carr v. Donohoe, 201 F. 2d 426, where the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit denied a petition for writ of mandamus directed to an order of a District Court transferring the cause to another District Court within the same circuit. The Court of Appeals properly noted that the order was merely a nonappealable interlocutory order in nowise impairing its actual or potential jurisdiction to review that and any other action after final decision, observing:

> "It seems obvious that the transfer of the . . . action . . . to [another district in the same circuit] cannot in any way impair or defeat the jurisdiction of this Court to review any appealable order or judgment which eventually may be entered in the case."[9] 201 F. 2d, at 428-429.

[Decisions Distinguished]

This Court's reliance upon Los Angeles Brush Corp. v. James, 272 U. S. 701, and McCullough v. Cosgrave, 309 U. S. 634, is, in my opinion, misplaced. Those cases involved the power, not of the Courts of Appeals, but of this Court, to issue extraordinary writs. In Josephson, Chief Judge Magruder took pains to emphasize the "caution that decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, at least prior to 1948, supporting the issuance, by that Court, of a writ of mandamus directed to a lower federal court, may not safely be relied upon by an intermediate court of appeals as authority for the issuance by the latter court of a writ of mandamus directed to a district court within the circuit. The reason is that the Supreme Court might have been exercising a different sort of power from the strictly auxiliary power given to us under the all writs section." 218 F. 2d, at 179. This "different sort of power" derived from § 13 of the Judiciary

[7] 1 Stat. 81, substantially re-enacted in § 262 of the Judicial Code of 1911, 36 Stat. 1162.

[8] Accord, Wiren v. Laws, 90 U. S. App. D. C. 105, 194 F. 2d 873; Gulf Research & Development Co. v. Harrison, 185 F. 2d 457.

[9] In the Josephson case, Chief Judge Magruder said much the same thing:

"If the district judge had held on to the case, i. e., had denied the motion for transfer, such action would have preserved, not frustrated, any potential appellate jurisdiction which we might have had; and we are at a loss to understand how we could properly review on mandamus an order denying a transfer, on the pretense that such a review would be in 'aid' of our appellate jurisdiction." 218 F. 2d, at 181.

Act of 1789, granting the Supreme Court power to issue writs of mandamus "in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law." [10] This provision, unlike the All Writs Act, was not restricted in its use to aiding the jurisdiction of the appellate court, and therefore might be deemed to have granted a broader power to this Court than that conferred on the Courts of Appeals by the latter statute.

Furthermore, Los Angeles Brush Corp. was a case where a reference was made, not because a district judge decided that the particular circumstances of the particular case required a reference, but pursuant to an agreement among all the judges of that District Court always to appoint masters to hear patent cases regardless of the circumstances of particular cases. The McCullough situation was much the same. As that case was delimited in Roche, this Court was there confronted by a case of "the persistent disregard of the Rules of Civil Procedure prescribed by this Court." 319 U. S., at 31.

The key to both Los Angeles Brush Corp. and McCullough is found in the language in the former in 272 U. S. at 706:

> ". . . we think it clear that where the subject concerns the enforcement of the Equity Rules which by law it is the duty of this Court to formulate and put in force, and in a case in which this Court has the ultimate discretion to review the case on its merits, it may use its power of mandamus and deal directly with the District Court in requiring it to conform to them." (Italics added.)

In other words, neither of those cases can be accepted as supporting what the Court of Appeals undertook to do here, both because of the absence in old § 234 of the "in aid of" jurisdiction limitation now contained in § 1651, and of anything approaching a wholesale disregard of the rules prescribed by this Court, such as was involved there. I subscribe fully to Chief Judge Magruder's conclusion in Josephson:

> "Contrary to the view which seems to have been occasionally taken, or at least sub silentio assumed, in other courts of appeals, we do not think that 28 U. S. C. § 1651 [the All Writs Act] grants us a general roving commission to supervise the administration of justice in the federal district courts within our circuit, and in particular to review by a writ of mandamus any unappealable order which we believe should be immediately reviewable in the interest of justice." 218 F. 2d, at 177.

[Federal Appellate Procedure]

The view now taken by this Court that the All Writs Act confers an independent appellate power, although not so broad as "to authorize the indiscriminate use of prerogative writs as a means of reviewing interlocutory orders," in effect engrafts upon federal appellate procedure a standard of interlocutory review never embraced by the Congress throughout our history, although it is written into the English Judicature Act [11] and is followed in varying degrees in some of the States.[12] That standard allows interlocutory appeals by leave of the appellate court. It is a compromise between conflicting viewpoints as to the extent that interlocutory appeals should be allowed.[13] The federal policy of limited interlocutory review stresses the inconvenience and expense of piecemeal reviews and the strong public interest in favor of a single and complete trial with a single and complete review. The other view, of which the New York practice of allowing interlocutory review as of right from most orders is the extreme example, perceives danger of possible injustice in individual cases from the denial of any appellate review until after judgment at the trial.[14]

The polestar of federal appellate procedure has always been "finality," meaning that appellate review of most interlocutory actions must await final determination of the cause at the trial level. "Finality as a condition of review is an historic characteristic of federal appellate procedure. It was written into the first Judiciary Act and has been departed from only when observance of it would practically defeat the right to any

[10] 1 Stat. 80, 81, substantially re-enacted in § 234 of the Judicial Code of 1911, 36 Stat. 1156.

[11] Judicature Act, 1925, 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49, § 31(1)(i).

[12] E. g., Miss. Code Ann., 1942, § 1148; N. J. Rev. Rules 2:2-3.

[13] See, e. g., the discussion by Mr. Justice Jacobs in Appeal of Pennsylvania R. Co., 20 N. J. 398, 120 A. 2d 94; Crick, The Final Judgment as a Basis for Appeal, 41 Yale L. J. 539; Note, 50 Col. L. Rev. 1102; Note, 58 Yale L. J. 1186; Report, Special Meeting of Judicial Conference of the United States, p. 7 (March 20-21, 1952); Report, Regular Annual Meeting of Judicial Conference of the United States, p. 27 (1953).

[14] N. Y. Civ. Prac. Act, § 609.

review at all." Cobbledick v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,011], 309 U. S. 323, 324-325. The Court's action today shatters that statutory policy. I protest, not only because we invade a domain reserved by the Constitution exclusively to the Congress,[15] but as well because the encouragement to interlocutory appeals offered by this decision must necessarily aggravate further the already bad condition of calendar congestion in some of our District Courts and also add to the burden of work of some of our busiest Courts of Appeals. More petitions for interlocutory review, requiring the attention of the Courts of Appeals, add, of course, to the burden of work of those courts. Meanwhile final decision of the cases concerned is delayed while the District Courts mark time awaiting action upon the petitions. Rarely does determination upon interlocutory review terminate the litigation. Moreover, the District Court calendars become longer with the addition of new cases before older ones are decided. This, then, interposes one more obstacle to the strong effort being made to better justice through improved judicial administration.[16]

The power of the Court of Appeals to correct any error in Judge La Buy's reference is found exclusively in the power to review final decisions under § 1291. The Court of Appeals erred by assuming a nonexistent power under the All Writs Act to review this interlocutory order in advance of final decision. Insofar as the Court approves this error, I must respectfully dissent.

[¶ 68,586] Robert Demeulanaere, et al. v. Rockwell Manufacturing Co., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 74-115. Filed January 2, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Intervention.—An application by three individuals to intervene in a treble damage action based upon an alleged conspiracy to monopolize interstate and foreign commerce in cash registers was granted where all of the questions of law and fact indicated by the proposed complaint of the applicants were identical with the questions of law and fact already at issue in the action, the defendants conceded that the proposed complaint was identical with the complaint of prior intervenors, except for the parties and amount of interest, and the proposed complaint was substantially similar to the complaint of the plaintiffs. The applicants agreed to be bound by all prior proceedings on the action, with certain exceptions. However, the order of intervention was to be entered only in the event that the defendants' pending motion to dismiss the action is denied.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.535.

For the plaintiffs: Amen, Gans, Weisman & Butler, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Shearman, Sterling & Wright; Fulton, Walter & Halle; and Cahill, Gordon, Reindl & Ohl, all of New York, N. Y.

[Intervention]

PALMIERI, District Judge [In full text]: This is an application by three individuals, Raymond Flasselaerts, Andre Matthyssens and Auguste Lambiotte, to intervene in this action pursuant to Rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The action is under the Sherman Act for treble damages based upon an alleged conspiracy on the part of defendants to monopolize interstate and foreign commerce in cash registers. See 15 U. S. C. §§ 1-15 (1952).

It appears that the intervener-plaintiffs already in this action, whose interests are identical with those of the applicants, were permitted to intervene by order of Judge

[15] U. S. Const., Art. III, § 1.

[16] The seriousness of the problem of calendar congestion in both federal and state courts prompted the Attorney General of the United States, in May 1956, to call a conference on court congestion and delay. This conference resulted in the appointment of a distinguished committee to formulate a frontal attack upon the problem. Rogers, Towards Eliminating Delayed Justice, an address prepared for delivery before the Mid-Atlantic Regional Meeting of the American Bar Association, October 11, 1956.

Bondy pursuant to stipulation of the parties. It further appears that all the questions of law and fact indicated by the proposed complaint of the applicants are identical with the questions of law and fact already at issue in this action. Indeed, it was conceded upon the argument by counsel for the defendants that the proposed complaint is identical with the complaint of the prior interveners, except for the parties and amount of interest. Moreover, it is substantially similar to the complaint of the plaintiffs.

Since I can discern no prejudice or delay to the defendants in view of the applicants' expressed willingness to be bound by all proceedings, discovery and stipulations performed to date in this action, except as to those portions thereof made by plaintiffs with respect to applicants' ownership or interests in the patents involved, the application is granted as an exercise of discretion pursuant to the permissive provisions of Rule 24(b). See Moore, Federal Practice, 2d Ed. Vol. 4, p. 59 et seq.

[Motion to Dismiss]

I understand there is now pending before Judge McGohey a motion by defendants to dismiss this action. The order herein should abide the entry of the order pursuant to Judge McGohey's decision and shall be entered only in the event the motion is denied and on two days' notice.

[¶ 68,587] C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1956, September Session, 1956. No. 11526. Dated January 9, 1957.

Petition to Review an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Practices Constituting Discrimination—Discounts Based on Prior Year's Purchases.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a manufacturer of automotive products unlawfully discriminated in prices by granting discounts from its jobber price list on the basis of each of its customer's purchases during the preceding year was affirmed. The manufacturer classified its customers according to their prior purchases and established discounts for each classification. However, the Commission's cease and desist order against the manufacturer was modified so as not to make the order effective until such time as the reviewing court directs because it appeared that the manufacturer would be forced out of business if similar orders were not entered against its competitors, who were engaged in similar pricing practices. The reviewing court also ruled that there was substantial evidence to support the Commission's findings that the manufacturer failed to cost justify its prices and failed to establish that its prices were made in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3508.448, 3508.730.

Price Discrimination—Justifications for Discrimination—Differences in Cost—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a manufacturer of automotive products failed to justify its price differentials by differences in costs of sale and delivery was affirmed on the ground that the Commission's finding was supported by substantial evidence. Although the manufacturer had introduced evidence concerning sales expenses, advertising expense, and costs of processing orders, the Commission rejected the manufacturer's claim that its price differentials were cost justified.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3510.01.

Price Discrimination—Defenses—Meeting Competition—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a manufacturer of automotive products failed to establish that its price differentials were made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor or competitors was affirmed on the ground that the Commission's finding was supported by substantial evidence. The Commission had rejected the manufacturer's claim that its price discriminations were justified under the good faith proviso on the basis of its findings that the manufacturer did not establish any price in response to a particular competitor, that the manufacturer did not deviate from its price structure to meet prices of particular competitors, and that the net prices accorded by the manufacturer were a reflection of its nation-wide pricing system formulated to meet competition generally and not designed to meet any particular competitor's prices.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3515.65.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibition Against Price Discrimination—Federal Trade Commission Order—Postponement of Effective Date of Order—Injury to Respondent Where Similar Orders Not Entered Against Competitors.—A Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order prohibiting a manufacturer of automotive products from engaging in certain discriminatory pricing practices was modified by a United States Court of Appeals so as not to make the order effective until such time in the future as the Court may direct, since certain competitors of the manufacturer were engaged in pricing practices similar to those condemned in the order against the manufacturer and the Commission had not, as yet, obtained orders or initiated proceedings against such competitors. In view of the lapse of time involved in proceedings before the Commission, the manufacturer's business would suffer economic extinction before the Commission adjudicates upon the pricing practices of the manufacturer's competitors. This would result if the manufacturer were required, by the elimination of its present selling methods, to charge higher prices for its products than the prices charged by its competitors against whom the Commission has not yet ruled. Under Section 11 of the Clayton Act, the Commission has the power to postpone the time at which an order is to take effect, and a Court of Appeals has the power to modify an order of the Commission. The power of the Court to enforce, modify, or set aside an order of the Commission is an exercise of original jurisdiction, rather than appellate jurisdiction, and the Court may by its own order protect the rights of the parties in any manner in which any trial court of equity of general jurisdiction might do in an injunction suit.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibition Against Price Discrimination—Court Review of Commission Order—Sufficiency of Evidence.—Findings of the Federal Trade Commission in a price discrimination proceeding were affirmed by a Court of Appeals. The court held that while there may be some conflict in the evidence, there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the Commission. Substantial evidence means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. It is not the law that the Court may displace the Commission's choice between two fairly conflicting views, even though the Court would justifiably have made a different choice had the matter been before the Court initially.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.410.

For the petitioner: Charles R. Sprowl, Whitney Campbell, and James J. Magner, Chicago, Ill.

For the respondent: Robert B. Dawkins and James E. Corkey, Washington, D. C.

Modifying and affirming Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 5768.

Before MAJOR, FINNEGAN and SCHNACKENBERG, Circuit Judges.

[Review of FTC Order]

SCHNACKENBERG, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Petitioner, sometimes referred to herein as Niehoff, asks us to review an order to cease and desist issued by the respondent, sometimes referred to herein as the commission, upon a complaint charging violation of section 2(a) of the amended Clayton Act.[1]

[Complaint]

The complaint charges that Niehoff, in its nationwide sale of automotive ignition and hydraulic brake parts to automotive

[1] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases in-jobbers competitively engaged in the resale of such products, discriminates in price between its small quantity purchasers and its large quantity purchasers, and that the effect thereof may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the lines of commerce in which Niehoff and its favored purchasers are engaged, or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with Niehoff, said favored purchasers or with customers of either of them.

[Answer]

Niehoff's amended answer admits that it is engaged at Chicago, Illinois, in the manufacture, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of automotive products and supplies to different purchasers and that it is in active and substantial competition with other companies similarly engaged in manufacturing and selling automotive products and supplies; admits that Niehoff sells its products to different purchasers at different price differentials, but alleges that such differentials are openly available to all of its purchasers and are not discriminatory, and denies that the effect thereof may be substantially to lessen competition and create a monopoly in its line of commerce; alleges that such price differentials make only due allowance for differences in the cost of sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods of quantities in which such products and supplies are sold or delivered to its purchasers; and also alleges that such price differentials as were granted by Niehoff were granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of its competitors.

[Findings of Fact]

Following extensive hearings before an examiner, he entered findings of fact. He concluded "that petitioner sold its products of like grade and quality to customers at different prices, that the customers competed with one another in the resale of these products, and that the different prices were discriminatory and in violation of section 2(a) * * "; that " * * the differentials in price were not justified by differences in cost under the cost proviso of section 2(a)" (except in a minor particular which the commission on review set aside); and that "* * * the discriminations were not justified under the 'good faith' proviso of section 2(b) of the Act." Accordingly the examiner entered a provisional order to cease and desist. Upon cross appeals to the commission by both parties, the commission, on May 17, 1955, affirmed the findings and order of the examiner with slight modification and entered the order now under review. Summarized, the basic facts, which are not in real dispute, are now stated.

[Business]

Niehoff sells and distributes in commerce certain automotive products and supplies. There are many different items classified into three lines: an ignition line, a hydraulic line, and a testing equipment line.

Niehoff's total sales volume in the sample year 1949 was $2,068,499, and of this amount approximately 90% represented sales in the ignition line, 3 to 6% in the hydraulic line, 2% in the testing equipment line, and 2% in rebuilt items.

[Discounts]

Its domestic sales were made to some 866 jobber accounts. The prices paid by these customers were based in the first instance on Niehoff's jobber price list which is the base price schedule. Niehoff grants discounts from this schedule which vary the net prices actually paid by its several jobber accounts. For discount purposes Niehoff classified its jobber customers at the beginning of each year on the basis of the purchases made during the preceding year. A 2% discount for prompt payment is accorded to all accounts regardless of classification. Niehoff grants uniform freight allowances to all jobber customers and treats all accounts uniformly in the handling of merchandise returned for credit. As found volved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States * * *, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly received the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: * * *." 15 U. S. C. A. § 13.

by the examiner, the various accounts are placed in one of four classifications:[1a]

1. Jobbers whose annual purchases are less than $1,200 are classified as "jobbers without agreement"[2] and who pay the regular jobber list price.

2. Jobbers whose annual purchases range from $1,200 to $3,600 receive Niehoff's "jobbers agreement" and as such receive the following discount and allowances from the base jobber price:

Annual volume of purchases	Discount allowance, percent
$1,200-$2,400	5
$2,400-$3,600	7
$3,600 and over	10

3. Jobbers whose annual purchases range from $3,600 to $6,000 are classified as "distributors without agreement" and receive a 10% discount off Niehoff's base jobber price on all purchases.

4. Jobbers whose annual purchases are in excess of $6,000 are classified as "distributors with agreement" and as such receive 10% discount off Niehoff's base prices on all purchases and the following additional discount allowances in the form of merchandise credits:[3]

Annual volume of purchases	Discount allowance, percent
$6,000-$8,400	5
$8,400-$12,000	6
12,000 and over	7[4]

[FTC Findings]

The commission found, and it is not disputed, that this system of pricing provided different net purchase prices. It also found, and the record shows, that Niehoff sold to more than one account in a single city or trading area and that the net prices paid by accounts within given trading areas varied. It was further found that accounts within trading areas competed with one another in selling Niehoff's products.

The commission found that Niehoff's price differentials constituted discriminations in price. It was further found that the effect of these discriminations may be to substantially lessen, injure, destroy or prevent competition in the resale of Niehoff's products. This finding took into account the size of the differentials, amounting to as much as 16% in net purchase price; the fact that the record shows that the automotive parts business is highly competitive; that jobbers stock many lines ranging from 15 or 20 for the small operator to more than 100 for the large operator and these lines generally consist of thousands of items; that net profit depends on the accumulation of small margins on the numerous items handled; and that the record also shows that the margin of profit generally runs about 4% of sales.

The commission also found that Niehoff's discounts to favored distributors contribute a direct and powerful advantage to the recipient and concluded that there was a reasonable probability that Niehoff's pricing practices substantially lessened competition at the secondary level and that the effect of discriminations may be to injure, destroy or prevent competition between purchasers receiving the benefit of the discriminations and those to whom they were not accorded.

[Defenses]

Niehoff introduced evidence for the purpose of justifying its price differentials by differences in costs of sale and delivery. This evidence pertained to sales expenses, advertising expense, and costs of processing orders. Upon consideration of all this evidence the commission rejected Niehoff's

[1a] The classifications referred to are somewhat confusing, there appearing to be overlapping of the classes. This circumstance is in our view of the case immaterial.

[2] In 1950 the designations used to describe the accounts in each classification were changed but the basis of classification and the buying prices remained the same for each class.

[3] The additional discount allowances do not apply to purchases of service stocks, equipment and brake fluid.

[4] In 1949, 299 accounts were in class 1 and purchased at jobber list less cash discount. 228 were in class 2; 241 accounts were in class 3 and 98 accounts in class 4. There was a deviation from the stated price plan in that Niehoff sold to one buying group known as Cotton States, Inc., which in 1949 was composed of nine jobbers. Niehoff treats this group as a single purchaser, selling on its class 4 basis. The jobber member pays the invoice to group headquarters and it in turn remits monthly for all purchases by its members during that month. Except for one monthly billing instead of 9, the operation saves Niehoff nothing. In 1949 the annual purchases of only one member would individually have justified the discount given.

claim that its differentials were cost-justified within the meaning of the proviso of section 2(a).

Niehoff also introduced evidence to prove that its price differentials were made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor or competitors within the meaning of the good faith proviso of section 2(b) of the Act.[5] The commission found that Niehoff did not establish any price or prices as a response to a particular competitor, and that, once the base price structure was established with reference to general competitive conditions, Niehoff did not deviate to meet the prices of particular competitors. It also found that the net prices accorded by Niehoff were a reflection of its nation-wide pricing system formulated to meet competition generally and not designed to meet any particular competitor's prices. On the basis of this finding the commission rejected the claim that Niehoff's price discriminations were justified under the good faith proviso of section 2(b).

[Controlling Decisions]

I. With the exception of certain phases of this case with which we shall hereinafter deal specially, our holding in this case is controlled by our decisions in Whitaker Cable Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission[6] [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,559] and E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission[7] [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,558]. We adhere to the views expressed in those cases.

[Cost Justification—Meeting Competition]

II. We have made a thorough search of the record and considered the evidence introduced by both parties on the issues involving cost justification and the alleged good faith of Niehoff in meeting equally low prices of its competitors. While there may be some conflict in the evidence upon these issues, we find that there is substantial evidence to support the findings of the commission.[8] Substantial evidence means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. Consolidated Edison Co. v. N. L. R. B., 305 U. S. 197, 229.

It is not the law that we may displace the commission's choice between two fairly conflicting views, even though we would justifiably have made a different choice had the matter been before us de novo. Universal Camera Corp. v. N. L. R. B., supra, 488.

[Order Affirmed]

For the reasons herein set forth, the commission's order to cease and desist will be affirmed, subject to a modification to which we now refer.

[Effect of Order]

III. At this point we consider Niehoff's prediction that it "would be forced out of business if the traditional pricing practices which it now follows were denied to it while its competitors are free to continue such practices." There is uncontradicted evidence in the record to factually support this prediction.

[Action Against Competitors]

The record shows that, as to the automotive ignition line which constitutes at least 90% of Niehoff's business,[9] it has 19 competitors, and included in this group are 3 competitors who presently have complaints or orders to cease and desist pending against them before the commission, the other 16 competitors being free to continue their present pricing practices unless and until cease and desist orders are entered against them in proceedings not yet commenced.

It thus appears that the order against Niehoff was entered at a time when the commission had acted against only a few of this firm's competitors. We are per-

[5] "Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(b).

[6] No. 11494 (C. C. A. 7) decided 12-14-56.

[7] No. 11500 (C. A. 7) decided 12-14-56.

[8] 5 U. S. C. A. § 1009(e)(5); Universal Camera Corporation v. N. L. R. B., 340 U. S. 474, 488.

[9] Another 6% of Niehoff's business is in the hydraulic line where it has 10 principal competitors.

suaded by Niehoff's argument that, in view of the lapse of time which is inevitably involved in proceedings before the commission, Niehoff's business will suffer economic extinction before the commission adjudicates upon trade practices of Niehoff's competitors, which in their purpose and effect are essentially similar to those condemned in the Niehoff order. This result will follow if Niehoff is required by elimination of its present selling methods to charge higher prices for its products than the prices charged by its competitors against whom the commission has not yet ruled.

[Power to Postpone Effective Date]

The commission takes the position that it has no power to stay compliance with its order. It relies upon a part of section 11 of the amended Clayton Act,[10] contending that it has no discretion as to the enforcement of the law. It fails to cite that part of section 11 which provides that the commission "shall issue * * * an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations * * * within the time fixed by said order." (Italics supplied for emphasis.) It is our opinion that this statutory language vests in the commission power to postpone the time at which an order is to take effect.

In any event, the commission in this case has not exercised this permissive power under section 11, and it argues that this court has no power to delay or postpone compliance with the commission's order. If this be true we are impotent to postpone the effective date of the order and, furthermore, under section 11 of the act we can be required to enforce the order in the manner therein provided without delay. In other words, according to the commission, we may witness and participate in, but not interfere with, the economic death of Niehoff while the commission machinery continues to operate toward cease and desist orders against Niehoff's competitors.

However, we do not admit judicial impotency in this situation. Section 11 of the Clayton Act[11] gives this court power, inter alia, to modify an order of the commission. This includes the power to change that part of an order stating when it shall take effect. We have held[12] that the power of a court of appeals to enforce, set aside or modify the commission's order is an exercise of original jurisdiction, rather than appellate jurisdiction, and that the court may by its own orders protect the rights of the parties in any manner in which any trial court of equity of general jurisdiction might do so in an injunction suit. The order in this case was issued on May 17, 1955 and directed that Niehoff "forthwith" cease and desist. This order is in the nature of an injunction. We have a right to consider its effect upon Niehoff in the light of equitable principles, and to grant relief accordingly. We have no way of knowing in advance what further proceedings, if any, will be had by the commission against Niehoff's competitors to whom we have heretofore referred. The fixing of the time at which the order against Niehoff shall become effective is a matter over which we now reserve jurisdiction, the exercise of which will depend upon the future course of the commission's proceedings against Niehoff's competitors. For that reason the order against Niehoff is hereby modified by striking the word "forthwith" therefrom and by adding to said order the following:

> "This cease and desist order shall take effect at such time in the future as the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit may direct, sua sponte or upon motion of the Federal Trade Commission."

As thus modified, the order is affirmed.

Order, As Modified, Affirmed.

[Dissenting Opinion]

[Suspension of Order]

FINNEGAN, Circuit Judge. Dissenting. Affirming this order of the Commission and then directing its indeterminate suspension, causes me to diverge from the majority view. Section 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended, mandates that: "The findings of the Commission * * * as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive," 64 Stat. 1127, 15 U. S. C. § 21(1952). If, as my brothers find, this order squares with the statutory yardstick then a violation of the Clayton Act has been established. But, on the other hand if the order, approved by the majority, requires modification for the reasons they state, then it would seem the Commission's order is defective since it is unsupported by evidence concerning petitioner's competitors. After all the matter involves an economic problem within a defined industry. In its opinion (T. R. 1027-1028) the Commission stated, inter alia:

[10] 15 U. S. C. A. § 21.
[11] 15 U. S. C. A. § 21.
[12] Natural Gas Pipeline Co. v. Federal Power Commission, 128 F. 2d 481, 484.

"The initial decision in effect held that the status of the price of respondent's competitors as lawful or unlawful was not controlling to decision here . . . . The lawfulness or unlawfulness of its competitors' prices . . . are not in issue inasmuch as respondent's defense has been legally insufficient on other grounds."

We reach much too far into the administrative agency's province by reserving our jurisdiction contingent upon "the future course of the Commission's proceedings against Niehoff's competitors." Either such matters are now before us and we have failed to properly evaluate them in reviewing evidence of price discrimination, or, they are not, now, and in that state of affairs we have no business with them. Just when this Court will decide to infuse vitality into the Niehoff order, currently in suspended animation, escapes me entirely. It appears that the majority's modification compels the Commission to investigate, or complete examination of, Niehoff's competitors at the risk of forfeiting an otherwise approved order. Whether this entails all 19 competitors or a baker's dozen is unrevealed. My grave doubts that our statutory power to modify Federal Trade Commission orders can be converted into policing and supervising, though perhaps obliquely, the length, breadth and sequence of Commission investigations brings me to the position I now take. Certainly we would refuse to activate the Commission upon a bare petition for mandamus to investigate the automotive ignition industry. Responsibility of achieving enforcement of the statutes Congress assigned to the Commission lies elsewhere.

[¶ 68,588] San Antonio Retail Grocers, Inc. v. W. W. Lafferty.

In the Supreme Court of Texas. No. A-6012. Dated January 9, 1957.

On Direct Appeal.

Texas Sales Limitation Act

Sales Below Cost—Texas Sales Limitation Act—Grocery Stores—Constitutionality.— The Texas Sales Limitation Act, which makes it unlawful for grocery stores to sell any merchandise at less than cost if the number of units of such merchandise that may be purchased is limited to any quantity less than the entire supply or if the right to refuse to sell such merchandise to any willing purchaser is retained or exercised by such seller, was held unconstitutional. The Act is applicable only to grocery stores, and it contains no definition of a grocery store. Owners of grocery stores violate the Act if they offer to sell any merchandise at less than their cost basis, while owners of other types of stores, competing in the sale of many identical items of merchandise, can sell at less than their cost basis without violating the Act. Consequently, the Act discriminates against grocery stores and grants special privileges to other types of stores. The mere fact that the Act discriminates against grocery stores does not render it unconstitutional. However, there is no reasonable relationship between the class created and the purposes to be accomplished or the evils to be prevented, and, therefore, the Act is unconstitutional. There is no basis for the classification which could have seemed reasonable to the legislature.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7111.

For the appellant: Bruce Waitz, San Antonio, Tex.; Dan Moody, Austin, Tex.; and Carlton J. Smith, Waco, Tex.

For the appellee: Dodson, Duke, Branch & Davis, San Antonio, Tex.; Seipel & Seipel, San Antonio, Tex.; Greathouse & Zuercher, San Antonio, Tex.; Small, Small & Craig, Austin, Tex.; and Fulbright, Crooker, Freeman, Bates & Jaworski, Houston, Tex.

[Sales Limitation Act]

ROBERT W. CALVERT, Associate Justice [In full text]: This is a direct appeal from a judgment of the District Court of the 73rd Judicial District, Bexar County. Appellant was plaintiff and appellee was defendant in the trial court.

Appellant sought a judgment restraining and enjoining appellee from further violations of Article 1111m, Vernon's Texas Penal Code (Acts 1955, 54th Leg., p. 1622, ch. 524), known as the "Sales Limitation Act." By way of defense to the suit appellee attacked the constitutionality of the Act on several grounds, one of which was that it applied only to grocery stores and thus established an arbitrary and unreasonable classification and resulted in denying to the defendant the equal protection of the laws in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and Sections 3 and 19 of Article 1 of the Constitution of the State of Texas. The trial court sustained the foregoing contention, declared the Act unconstitutional and denied to the appellant any injunctive relief.

Article 1111m, V. T. P. C., contains eight sections. Section 1 provides that the Act shall be known as the "Sales Limitation Act." Section 2 contains eight paragraphs, lettered from (a) to (h), inclusive. Paragraph (a) defines the term "cost basis" as applied to merchandise offered for sale. Paragraph (b) provides that when two or more items are offered for sale at one price each item shall be regarded as being offered for sale and the cost basis of each shall be determined according to the formula set out in paragraph (a). Paragraph (c) defines the term "replacement costs," paragraph (d) the terms "sell at retail," "sales at retail," and "retail sale," paragraph (e) the terms "sell at wholesale," "sales at wholesale," and "wholesale sales," paragraph (f) the term "retailer," and paragraph (g) the term "wholesaler." Paragraph (h) reads: "This Act shall apply only to grocery stores."

Section 3 is the heart of the Act. It reads as follows:

"Sec. 3. No offer to sell any merchandise, however expressed or communicated, and no sale of any merchandise shall hereafter be made by any retailer or wholesaler at a price which is lower than the cost of same to the seller thereof as herein defined if the number of units of said merchandise that may be purchased by any customer is limited or curtailed to any quantity less than the entire supply of said article on hand or if the right to refuse to sell said merchandise to any willing purchaser thereof is retained or exercised by the prospective seller thereof. Any merchandise so offered for sale at a price below cost as herein defined shall be prominently displayed in the outlet offering same in sufficient quantities to meet any usual and reasonably expectable demand therefor."

Section 4 makes any retailer or wholesaler who violates the Act guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine not exceeding Five Hundred Dollars. Section 5 authorizes the type of injunctive relief sought in this case. It provides that a suit for injunction may be maintained by anyone refused the right to purchase any quantity of merchandise offered for sale at a price below the seller's cost basis. Section 6 excepts certain transactions, not relevant here, from the provisions of the Act. Section 7 excepts sales made in good faith to meet the price of a competitor. Section 8 requires defendants and witnesses to testify in injunction proceedings and grants to such defendants and witnesses immunity from criminal prosecution.

[Alleged Violation of Act]

On the trial of the case it was stipulated that at all relevant times appellee owned and operated a store in San Antonio, Texas, known as "Kelly Food Center" at which he sold at retail "goods, wares and merchandise consisting of canned, frozen, cured, packaged and fresh meats, vegetables and fruits; bread, cake, cookies, and other bakery goods; milk, butter, eggs, cheese, ice cream, merlorine and other dairy products; oleomargarine, condiments, flour and soft drinks; soap, detergents and other cleaning materials; cigars, cigarettes, tobacco and beer; toothpaste, face powder, alcohol, cosmetics, first aid items such as bandages, mercurochrome, aspirin and other similar proprietaries commonly contained in drug departments; fertilizers, seeds and other garden equipment, supplies and tools." The parties also stipulated that on various days in the month of April 1956, the appellee offered for sale and sold at Kelly Food Center at less than his cost basis Tide and Oxydol, detergents, Snowdrift shortening, Parkay margarine, Blue Bonnet margarine, Meadowlake margarine, Folger's coffee and Pioneer flour, and that he limited and curtailed the quantity of each such item of merchandise that might be purchased by a customer to less than his entire supply of said item on hand and refused to sell to appellant's agents who were willing and able to purchase the same.

[Constitutionality]

Appellant argues that in making the terms and provisions of the Act applicable to grocery stores only the Legislature but exercised its constitutional right and power to create a class for legislative purposes, and that in the absence of a showing that the classification is arbitrary and unreasonable the legislation must be held constitutional. We consider, then, whether there is any reasonable basis for applying the restrictive provisions of the Act to grocery stores only. We recognize that the test is whether there is any basis for the classification which could have seemed reasonable to the Legislature. Clark v. Finley, 93 Tex. 171, 54 S. W. 343, 346; Gerard v. Smith, Tex. Civ. App., 52 S. W. 2d 347, 350, writ refused.

[Discrimination]

The legislation is obviously intended to discourage, and indirectly to prohibit, the practice of attracting customers through the sale of what is generally referred to as "loss leaders." It is to be noted that while the restrictions of the Act apply to grocery stores only they are not limited to the sale of groceries. On the contrary they apply to sales of all merchandise. Owners of grocery stores are thus to suffer the burdens and the penalties of the Act if they offer to sell any merchandise at less than their cost basis while owners of other than grocery stores, competing in the sale of many identical items of merchandise, may sell at less than their cost basis with impunity. For example, a grocery store may not sell Bayer's aspirin at less than its cost basis while a drug store occupying an adjoining building or one across the street, with the same cost basis, can advertise and sell the item at any price it wishes.

The Act contains no definition of a grocery store. For opinion purposes we accept the statement of appellant's counsel, made in oral argument, that any store which sells groceries is a grocery store within the meaning of the Act. By that test Joske's Department Store of San Antonio is a grocery store because the record shows that Joske's sells groceries. The far-reaching impact of the discriminatory features of the Act is brought into bold relief when we consider that Joske's could not sell clothing below its cost basis without incurring the penalties of the Act while clothing stores all around and near Joske's, having no grocery departments, could sell the same brand, style and make of clothing at any desired price without suffering its penalties. It will thus be seen that the Act creates two classes of stores: those which sell groceries and must suffer the burdens and penalties it provides in the sale of all merchandise, and those which sell no groceries and are exempt from its burdens and penalties in the sale of all merchandise. Discrimination against grocery stores is too plain to admit of argument. Special privileges to other types of stores are obvious. But the mere fact that the Act discriminates against grocery stores does not render it unconstitutional. Before we may strike it down it must appear that there is no reasonable relationship between the classes created and the purposes to be accomplished or the evils to be prevented. Dodgen v. Depuglio, 146 Tex. 538, 209 S. W. 2d 588, 594; Texas Co. v. Stephens, 100 Tex. 628, 103 S. W. 481, 485.

[Relation Between Class and Purpose of Act]

The precise evil at which the Act is directed does not clearly appear from its terms. The emergency clause recites that an emergency is created by the fact that "the State has no law to protect producers, owners, distributors, dealers and consumers in the ordinary purchase and sale of commodities." In so far as the purpose of the Act may be the protection of the named groups "in the ordinary purchase and sale of commodities," the classes created bear no reasonable relationship thereto. If the groups are to be protected against evils arising from "the purchase and sale of commodities" they can only be protected by applying the restrictions of the Act to all who buy and sell commodities—grocery stores and other than grocery stores alike.

Appellant does not suggest the particular evils from which the named groups are to be protected, unless such a suggestion may be found in the following quotation taken from appellant's brief:

> "The issue here is may the state prohibit the sale of groceries below cost in an attempt to injure his competitor. * * * May not the State of Texas * * * attempt to protect the wholesome quality of the foods sold in grocery stores by prohibiting the 'loss leader' practice of offering groceries for sale?"

The quoted language seems to assume, erroneously as we think, that the Act prohibits the sale of groceries only at less than cost. If that were the true interpretation of the Act and if all stores selling groceries are properly classed as grocery stores, conceivably its validity might be ruled by such cases as Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502, 78 L. Ed. 940, 54 S. Ct. 505, upholding the validity of New York legislation fixing minimum prices on milk, Highland Farms Dairy, Inc. v. Agnew, 300 U. S. 608, 81 L. Ed. 835, upholding the validity of Virginia legislation fixing minimum prices on milk and cream, and May's Drug Stores v. State Tax Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,741], 242 Iowa 319, 45 N. W. 2d 245, upholding the validity of Iowa legislation fixing minimum prices on cigarettes. As to that we need not decide for we do not regard it as the true interpretation of the Act.

If the object of the legislation is to protect one merchant from injury through the loss of customers to a competitor who runs "loss leaders" sales, that object can hardly find fulfillment in an Act which prohibits the sale of "loss leaders" by grocery stores only. The Act can only result in injury to grocery stores through the loss of customers to other types of stores, none of which are prohibited from selling "loss leaders."

[Prior Rulings]

There are no Texas cases in point or on the subject. Cases cited by appellant bearing on the various legal problems arising out of this general type of legislation and held to be valid by courts of other jurisdictions fall into two categories: those involving legislation fixing minimum prices on particular products and items of merchandise, and those prohibiting the sale by all businesses of all products and merchandise at less than cost. Into the first category fall the Nebbia, Agnew and May's Drug Stores cases heretofore noticed. Into the second category fall McElhone v. Geror [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,042], 207 Minn. 580, 292 N. W. 414; McIntire v. Borofsky [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,266], 95 N. H. 174, 59 A. 2d 471; Rust v. Griggs [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,178], 172 Tenn. 565, 113 S. W. 2d 733; Hill v. Kusy [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,363], 150 Neb. 653, 35 N. W. 2d 594; State v. Walgreen Drug Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,124], 57 Ariz. 308, 113 P. 2d 650; Moore v. Northern Kentucky Independent Fruit Dealers [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,115], 286 Ky. 24, 149 S. W. 2d 755; Wholesale Tobacco Dealers v. National Candy & Tobacco Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,191], 11 Cal. 2d 634, 82 P. 2d 3; Mering v. Yolo Grocery & Meat Market (Cal.), 127 P. 2d 985; Fournier v. Troianello [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,063], 332 Mass. 636, 127 N. E. 2d 167; State v. Ross [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,860], 259 Wis. 379, 48 N. W. 2d 460; Carroll v. Schwartz [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,055], 127 Conn. 126, 14 A. 2d 754; Associated Merchants of Montana v. Ormesher [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,209], 107 Mont. 530, 86 P. 2d 1031; State v. Langley [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,197], 53 Wyo. 332, 84 P. 2d 767 and State v. Sears [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,043], 4 Wash. 2d 200, 103 P. 2d 337. The instant case falls into neither category.

[Act Unconstitutional]

We can conceive of no reasonable basis for applying the provisions of the Act to grocery stores and exempting other stores therefrom. Neither can we conceive of any basis therefor which could have seemed reasonable to the legislature. We agree with the conclusion of the trial court that the Act is unconstitutional.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

[¶ 68,589] Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Association, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission.

Harlem Paper Products Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission.

Robins Paper Company of Baltimore City v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Nos. 54, 55, 56—October Term, 1956. Docket Nos. 23372, 23373, 23676, respectively. Argued November 14, 1956. Decided January 9, 1957. Petition for rehearing denied and opinion modified (Dkt. No. 23373), February 18, 1957.

Three petitions by Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Association, Inc., and others, by Harlem Paper Products Corporation and others, and by Robins Paper Company of Baltimore City, respectively, seek review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission finding the National Paper Trade Association of the United States, Inc., and its affiliates, including the petitioners, engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices and uniform discount terms in the sale and distribution of fine and wrapping paper products, contrary to § 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a), and directing them to cease and desist from specified activities to that end. Reversed as to Shuttleworth Wollny Co., Inc.; Imperial Bag & Paper Co., Inc.; Daniel W. Margolin; Robins Paper Company of Baltimore City; and Fred Free, Jr.; affirmed as to the remaining petitioners.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Combining or Conspiring to Fix Prices and Discounts—Participation in Conspiracy—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a national trade association, regional trade associations, paper distributors, and others conspired to fix prices and uniform discount terms in the sale and distribution of fine and wrapping paper products in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act was affirmed in part and reversed in part on a petition to review the Commission's finding filed by one of the regional trade associations, several paper distributors, and certain individuals. The Court, assuming the establishment of a national conspiracy to fix prices and discount terms, found that there was substantial evidence to support the Commission's finding that the regional trade association and certain of the paper distributors participated in the national conspiracy. But the Court reversed the Commission's finding of participation as to the other petitioners because the evidence of their participation in the conspiracy was insufficient. Also, the Court, in determining the sufficiency of the evidence concerning the participation of each of the petitioners in the national conspiracy, ruled that the Commission may not infer participation in a conspiracy from mere membership in a trade association which engaged in a conspiracy.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5035.41, 5035.51, 5035.66; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.06, 8611.30.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibition Against Unfair Practices—Cease and Desist Order—Defenses—Dismissal of Proceeding Against Competitors.—In reviewing a Federal Trade Commission finding that a regional trade association, paper distributors, and others conspired to fix prices and uniform discount terms in the sale and distribution of fine and wrapping paper products, the court ruled that the decision of the Commission not to proceed against other conspirators appears to be within the Commission's discretion, and, therefore, the parties subjected to the Commission's order have no ground for complaint on the review. The parties complained that they were unfairly discriminated against by the Commission's dismissal of the proceeding as to certain correspondents.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8621.

For the petitioners: Nathan Frankel, New York City (Barshay & Frankel, New York City, on the brief), for Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Association, Inc., and others. Max Wechsler, New York City (Wechsler & Solodar and Albert L. Solodar, New York City, on the brief), for Harlem Paper Products Corporation and others. John D. Alexander, Baltimore, Md. (Duer & Taylor, New York City, and Wm. Pepper Constable, Baltimore, Md., on the brief), for Robins Paper Company of Baltimore City.

For the respondent: John W. Carter, Jr., Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C. (Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, and Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., on the brief).

On petition for rehearing: Wechsler & Solodar (Max Wechsler and Albert L. Solodar, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Harlem Paper Products Corp. Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, FTC, and Jno. W. Carter, Jr., Attorney, FTC, Washington, D. C., for the FTC.

Affirming in part and setting aside in part a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 5592.

Before: Clark, Chief Judge, and Frank and Hincks, Circuit Judges.

Clark, Chief Judge [In full text]: These are three petitions to review a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission, each petition being filed by paper merchants who belong to a different local trade association. The Commission's complaint had been directed against the National Paper Trade Association, its officers, 23 affiliated local associations, their officers, and some 941 paper merchant members, and charged them with conspiracy to fix uniform prices and discount terms in the sale and distribution of "fine paper" (printing and book paper, stationery) and "wrapping paper" (wrapping, toilet tissue, towels, drinking cups, etc.), in violation of § 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a).

The Commission found a conspiracy clustering around the efforts of National to (1) issue Blue, Yellow, and Brown (price) Books; (2) keep members' cash discounts uniform, despite a shift in manufacturers' credit terms in 1946; (3) co-operate with regional efforts at price-fixing. For the purposes of this review we must take the main conspiracy, spearheaded by National, as established and have to determine only whether the petitioners, operating somewhat on the periphery, have been properly implicated, i.e., whether as to each petitioner the Commission's finding of participation is supported by the necessary minimum of substantial evidence. Excelsior Laboratory v. F. T. C., 2 Cir. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,345], 171 F. 2d 484, 486. The chief question is whether there was substantial evidence to link the petitioners to the second and third of National's goals which we have stated. A subordinate question the petitioners attempt to raise is that they were unfairly discriminated against by the Commission's order of dismissal entered in favor of various correspondents.

I. The New York City Petitioners

(1) Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Association, Inc. Four local trade associations—"New Jersey," "New York," "Cosmopolitan," and "Metropolitan"—engaged in a regional conspiracy to fix prices and credit terms of wrapping paper products from 1934 to the time of the complaint. There were six points of contact between this regional conspiracy and the national one: (1) all four local associations were dues-paying members of the national association; (2) in January 1936 the national group gave information to a regional council composed of three of these local associations engaged in price-fixing; (3) in April 1940 the national group organized a regional council of these four local associations for illegal activities; (4) in November 1943 the president of Cosmopolitan urged its members to pay national dues; (5) in January 1947 Cosmopolitan's Board of Directors discussed writing the national group concerning proposed standardized credit terms; and (6) in 1948 and 1949 officers of Yorkville Paper Company, Inc. (a member of Metropolitan), and A. E. MacAdam & Co., Inc. (another member of Metropolitan), served as officers of the national group, as did an officer of Harlem Paper Products Corporation (a member of Cosmopolitan).

We must accept the inferences drawn by the Commission that (1) the regional council created in 1940 continued in existence until the filing of the complaint; (2) the members of the local councils who had dealings with the national group in 1936, 1940, and 1947 knew of its purposes and joined in the conspiracy to further them; and (3) these local trade associations on continuing to be members of National are to be charged with all they would have learned had they tried to discover what National was doing with their dues and moral support. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. v. F. T. C., 2 Cir. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,297], 139 F. 2d 393, 396. Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Association, Inc., as one of these four local trade associations, can thus be found to be a national conspirator.

(2) Yorkville Paper Company, Inc. This company was a member of Metropolitan in December 1941; and Arthur H. Stein, an officer of Yorkville, was president of Metropolitan at that time. Stein was an officer of the national group for the year 1948-1949, and was a speaker at the 1948 national convention. He was also president of Metropolitan in 1942 when the organization was engaged in efforts at standardizing credit terms in the industry and similar practices. While Stein was Metropolitan's president that group paid at least $750 dues to the national association. Thus there was sufficient proof to link Yorkville to the national conspiracy.

(3) A. E. MacAdam & Co., Inc. This corporation was a member of Metropolitan in December 1941, June 1942, and at the time the complaint was filed. It was represented by Alfred E. MacAdam, III, at Metropolitan's meetings of December 1941 and June 1942. In 1941 Alfred E. MacAdam was appointed to Metropolitan's Finance Committee, charged with getting money to cover the expense of national dues and the local credit bureau. MacAdam was chairman of the local credit bureau committee which worked with other local trade associations to establish uniform regional credit terms. MacAdam was a speaker at the 1948 national convention and was a national officer for 1948-1949. Consequently there was enough evidence to connect this corporation with the national conspiracy.

(4) John H. Free, Inc. This corporation was a member of Metropolitan in 1941, 1942, and at the time the complaint was filed. It was represented at the December 1941 and June 1942 meetings of Metropolitan where the members discussed paying national dues; forming a credit bureau; distributing resale price tables; and establishing central control over all advertising done by members of Metropolitan.

The Commission could properly infer that this corporation knew the purposes of Metropolitan, knew of Metropolitan's connection with the national conspiracy, and continued to remain a member of Metropolitan and the National Association. John H. Free, Inc., was thus adequately linked to the national conspiracy.

(5) S. Posner Sons, Inc. The evidence against this corporate member of Metropolitan is identical with the evidence against John H. Free, Inc.

(6) Shuttleworth Wollny Co., Inc. This was another corporate member of Metropolitan, but there is no proof that its representatives attended any meetings, paid any dues, or participated in the activities of Metropolitan or the national group. There is no basis for inferring that the petitioner had any knowledge of Metropolitan's illegal activities. There is no evidence that Metropolitan was a small group, and the probability is that it was large inasmuch as the Commission began the action by naming four persons at random to represent the class of Metropolitan's members. The petitioner is one of the members so selected. Although the petitioner was in the same trade as Metropolitan and would presumably benefit from Metropolitan's illegal acts, the Commission may not infer participation in a conspiracy from mere membership in the trade association without more. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. v. F. T. C., supra, 2 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,297], 139 F. 2d 393, 396.

(7) Fred Free, Jr. The only evidence against this individual is his admission that he was secretary of Metropolitan at the time the complaint was filed—October 5, 1948. Metropolitan, as indicated previously, was last shown to have participated actively in the national conspiracy in 1940, and the Commission inferred continued participation in it because Metropolitan continued to pay national dues and several officers of Metropolitan's corporate members were national officers in 1948. The Commission argues that active participation in 1948 is shown by Metropolitan's attempt to fix the regional resale price of wrapping paper products in 1941 and National's adoption of that goal on a larger geographical scale in 1947-1948. Such delayed parallel action seems too meager evidence to be probative of conspiracy, even though two officers of Metropolitan's member corporations were officers of the national group for 1948-1949. Without proof of the role of these two officers in the national conspiracy we would hesitate to affirm a finding that Metropolitan was visibly engaged in the national conspiracy at the time when Fred Free became its secretary. Accepting such a finding, arguendo, there is still no substantial evidence that Free was a conspirator. Phelps

Dodge Refining Corp. v. F. T. C., supra, 2 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,297], 139 F. 2d 393, 397. In the Phelps Dodge case we dealt with a "board member" rather than a "secretary," but there is nothing in the present record to suggest that Free knew about Metropolitan's illegal life; and to infer so much from his title is unwarranted.

(8) Harlem Paper Products Corporation. Harlem was a corporate member of Cosmopolitan—one of the four local trade associations in greater New York City. Mr. David Kasson, a leader in all aspects of restraint of trade in wrapping paper products in this region from 1934 to 1947, represented Harlem in 1948 on the Board of Directors of the National Association. There is sufficient evidence against Harlem.

(9) David Kasson. There is adequate evidence to connect this individual with the national activities, as well as regional efforts at unfair competition. In 1943 he urged members of Cosmopolitan to pay national dues, and in 1948 he was on the National Association's Board of Directors. He was the moving spirit in local efforts at uniform credit terms in 1941-1942, and he discussed a letter from the National Association in 1947 which dealt with the same topic.

(10) Imperial Bag & Paper Co., Inc.; Daniel W. Margolin d/b/a Liberty Bag & Paper Co. These two members of Cosmopolitan were selected at random to represent the class of members. The proof against them is identical with that against Shuttleworth Wollny Co., Inc., discussed previously, and is similarly insufficient.

II. THE BALTIMORE PETITIONER; ROBINS PAPER COMPANY

The sole petitioner from Baltimore is Robins Paper Company, a member of the local Maryland trade association. Maryland was engaged in restraint of trade in 1932 and during the NRA period—1933 through 1936. In 1947-1948 Maryland complied with a request of the National Association, of which it was a member, to submit its minutes to the national group for approval. The Commission is warranted in inferring that the "approval" amounted to censorship and that Maryland and National were then engaged in fixing prices of fine and wrapping paper products. This is borne out by the number of officers of Maryland's members who were on committees of National for 1948-1949.

The record reveals that Robins resigned from Maryland in 1936. In its answer Robins admitted being a member of Maryland at the time the complaint was filed in 1948. There is no evidence that Robins was an active member, paid dues, attended meetings, or had knowledge of Maryland's activities. None of Robins' officers were on the committees of the national trade association. Robins appears to be a member selected at random to represent the class of members of Maryland. Robins was represented at one meeting of Maryland in 1932 where local illegal trade practices were discussed. It continued membership during NRA days when similar practices were continued with government approval. This knowledge of Maryland's behavior during the depression was not so damning as to put Robins on notice at the time it rejoined the trade association that Maryland might be engaged in a national price-fixing conspiracy; consequently Robins cannot be charged with knowledge of all that diligent inquiry would have revealed concerning Maryland's role in this present conspiracy.

The remaining points raised by the petitioners we find without merit. The findings of the Commission were sufficiently detailed to permit appellate review; and the Commission's decision not to proceed against other conspirators appears to be within its discretion so as to give the present petitioners no ground for complaint on this review.

The order of the Commission on review is set aside as to petitioners Shuttleworth Wollny Co., Inc.; Imperial Bag & Paper Co., Inc.; Daniel W. Margolin d/b/a Liberty Bag & Paper Co.; Robins Paper Company; and Fred Free, Jr. It is affirmed as to the remaining petitioners, and an order of enforcement against them will be entered by us.

On Petition for Rehearing (No. 23373)

PER CURIAM [In full text]: Petition for rehearing denied. The second sentence of the paragraph on page 357 of the slip opinion headed "(8) Harlem Paper Products Corporation." is changed to read: Mr. David Kasson, a leader in all aspects of restraint of trade in wrapping paper products in this region from 1934 to 1947, represented Harlem in 1948 on the Board of Directors of the National Association. [Reflected in place. CCH.]

[¶ 68,590] United States v. Erie County Malt Beverage Distributors Association; Erie County I. D. Malt Beverage Association, also known as Erie County Importing Malt Beverage Distributors Association; Kahkwa Beer Company; George B. Barber; Robert E. Carney; Ralph A. Deck; Anthony D. Marinelli; Harold J. Mulvihill; and Louis Sawicki.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. Criminal Action No. 14870. Dated January 3, 1957.

Case No. 1272 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Construction of Sherman Act—Applicability to Regulated Industries—Alcoholic Beverage Industry—State Liquor Control Laws.—In a criminal action charging that distributors of malt beverages conspired to suppress competition in the sale of such beverages to home consumers in Pennsylvania, the distributors' motion to dismiss the indictment on the ground that, under the 21st Amendment to the United States Constitution, the rights of the United States under the commerce clause were subordinated to the power of the state to control the traffic in liquor within its borders, and that the policy of Pennsylvania is to prevent competition in the sale of liquors, was denied. The Sherman Act continues to apply to commerce in liquor at least where it does not conflict with state policy, and the Act does not conflict with Pennsylvania policy insofar as this prosecution is concerned. No provision of Pennsylvania law permits the type of private combination charged in the indictment.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2039.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Sufficiency of Indictment—Interstate Commerce.—In an action charging that distributors conspired to suppress competition in the sale of malt beverages to consumers in Pennsylvania, the distributors' contention that malt beverages coming into the state must, under state law, be delivered onto the licensed premises of a distributor, that any subsequent handling, after they have come to rest, is intrastate in nature, and that therefore the Sherman Act is inapplicable was rejected. The interstate flow of malt beverages from outside Pennsylvania from the brewers, through the various distributors, to the home consumer was not terminated by such delivery onto the premises of the distributor. But, whether or not the flow of interstate commerce has terminated, an agreement to fix the price in advance is an interference with interstate commerce, even though the sale is made at the local level.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.620.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Sufficiency of Indictment—Uncertainty.—A motion to dismiss an indictment, charging distributors of malt beverages with conspiring to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale of such beverages to home consumers, on the ground that it violates the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the United States Constitution and does not meet the requirements of Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure because it is vague, indefinite, uncertain, and ambiguous was denied. In a conspiracy case, it is not necessary to set out in detail in the indictment the evidence of the conspiracy, nor is it necessary to describe the conspiracy with the same degree of particularity required in describing a substantive offense. The indictment sufficiently informed the defendants of the nature and scope of the charges against them so that they can properly prepare their defenses and be protected from further prosecution for the same offense.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.740.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Sufficiency of Indictment—Bill of Particulars.—A motion by defendants for a bill of particulars was denied on the ground that the allegations of the indictment, together with the information furnished in a voluntary bill of particulars filed by the Government, was sufficient to enable the defendants to adequately prepare their defense without being prejudicially surprised at the trial.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.800.

For the plaintiff: William L. Maher and John E. Sarbaugh, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Thomas W. Barger and Francis B. Quinn, Erie, Pa.

Opinion

[Indictment]

HERBERT P. SORG, District Judge [In full text]: Defendants were indicted on March 19, 1956, for violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. The indictment charges that, beginning in or about the year 1951, the defendants have engaged in a combination and conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale of malt beverages to home consumers in Erie County, Pennsylvania. The indictment charges that the combination and conspiracy consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action to fix and maintain case lot prices, markups and delivery charges, to observe uniform closing hours, and to enforce the agreement by boycott.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Defendants have moved to dismiss the indictment, or, in the alternative, for a bill of particulars.

The motion to dismiss is based on the following grounds:

1. The indictment violates the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and does not meet the requirements of Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure because it is vague, indefinite, uncertain and ambiguous.

2. The activity which is the subject matter of the offense charges is intrastate and thus Section 1 of the Sherman Act is inapplicable.

3. The activity and method of conducting business of the defendants is regulated by state laws, which laws make the business of defendants local and intrastate and thus make the Sherman Act inapplicable.

[Constitution]

The Fifth Amendment provides:

> ". . . nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; . . ."

The Sixth Amendment provides:

> "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; . . ."

[Rules of Criminal Procedure]

Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides:

> "The indictment . . . shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged . . . It need not contain a formal commencement, a formal conclusion or any other matter not necessary to such statement . . ."

[Sufficiency of Charges]

The indictment in this case charges the offense substantially in the language of the Sherman Act. In addition it sets forth the terms of the "continuing agreement and concert of action." In a conspiracy case, it is not necessary to set out in detail in the indictment the evidence of the conspiracy. Nor is it necessary to describe the conspiracy with the same degree of particularity required in describing a substantive offense. Mercer v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,013], 61 F. 2d 97 (C. A. 3d. 1932); United States v. Sherwin-Williams Co., et al., D. C. W. D. Pa. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,405], 9 F. R. D. 69 (1949). The Court is of the opinion that the allegations of the indictment sufficiently apprise the defendants of the nature and cause of the charges against them so that they can properly prepare their defenses and be protected from further prosecution for the same offense.

[Interstate Commerce]

Defendants contend that malt beverages coming into the state must, under state law, be delivered onto the licensed premises of a distributor, and that any subsequent handling, after they have there come to rest, is intrastate in nature and the Sherman Act has no application.

The indictment alleges that importing distributors of malt beverages produced out of state store them only for short periods of time prior to resale to other distributors, retail outlets and home consumers, because of a lack of storage facilities and because malt beverages tend to soon become stale. The Court is of the opinion that the interstate flow of malt beverages from outside Pennsylvania from the brewers, through the various distributors, to the home consumer is not terminated by such delivery onto the premises of the distributor. But, whether or not the flow of interstate commerce has terminated, the agreement to fix the price in advance is an interference with interstate commerce, even though the sale is made at the local level. In fact, the indictment alleges that as a result of the conspiracy, distributors and importing distributors, not participating in the conspiracy, are hindered and prevented from purchasing supplies.

The principles expressed in United States [v.] Food and Grocery Bureau of Southern California, Inc. et al., 43 F. Supp. 966 (D. C. S. D. Calif. 1942) are applicable here. The Court had before it a retail price-fixing agreement on foods shipped into California to be sold in local grocery stores. The Court said at page 972:

> ". . . And if the effect of a policy be such, it matters not that the restraint occurs at the end of the interstate journey . . . But prices fixed in advance to effect a product at the end of its interstate journey are an interference with that commerce, although at the time the sale is actually made, the product originating in interstate commerce may actually have come to rest on the shelf of a retailer. It is the agreement on the price, in advance, which constitutes the violation, not the sale at the price."

As the Court said in United States v. Women's Sportswear Manufacturers Association et al. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,390], 336 U. S. 460, 464 (1948):

> "The source of a restraint may be intrastate, as the making of a contract or combination usually is; the application of the restraint may be intrastate, as it often is; but neither matters if the necessary effect is to stifle or restrain commerce among the states. If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze."

[State Control of Liquor]

Defendants contend in their brief that under the 21st Amendment to the Constitution of the United States the rights of the United States under the commerce clause were subordinated to the power of the state to control the traffic in liquor within its borders, and that the policy of Pennsylvania, as expressed in state law, is to prohibit competition in the sale of intoxicating liquors.

A similar contention has been made in several cases. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,338], 324 U. S. 293 (1945); Washington Brewers Institute et al. v. United States [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,289], 137 F. 2d 964 (C. A. 9th, 1943); United States v. Maryland State Licensed Beverage Association, Inc., et al. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,243], 138 F. Supp. 685 (D. C. D. Md. 1956). These cases hold that the Sherman Act continues to apply to commerce in liquor at least where it does not conflict with state policy. We find no provision of Pennsylvania law which permits private combinations to fix prices, delivery charges, and closing hours on malt beverages. The Court is of the opinion that the Sherman Act does not conflict with Pennsylvania policy insofar as this prosecution is concerned.

[Motion Denied]

The motion to dismiss the indictment will be denied.

[Bill of Particulars]

Defendants have moved in the alternative for a bill of particulars. The United States has filed a voluntary bill of particulars setting forth substantially all the information sought by defendants in their motion with the possible exception of minute details of evidence. The Government is not required to furnish defendants with its evidence in the case. The Court is of the opinion that the allegations of the indictment, together with the information furnished in the voluntary bill, is sufficient to enable the defendants to adequately prepare their defense without being prejudicially surprised at the trial.

The motion for a bill of particulars will be denied.

An appropriate order will be entered.

[¶ 68,591] Burton-Dixie Corporation, John G. Sevcik, A. T. Burton, George S. Knott, Oscar D. Wiley and Ira W. Spackey v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1956, January Session, 1957. No. 11570. Dated January 10, 1957.

Petition for Review of Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresentations—Down Content of Pillows—Average of Analyses—Down Fiber—Expert Testimony.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a manufacturer falsely represented that its pillows contain "all new material consisting of down" was reversed on the ground that the finding was not supported by substantial evidence. The hearing examiner, whose ruling dismissing the complaint against the manufacturer was reversed by the Commission, properly found that down fiber should be counted as a part of the down content of the pillows, and that the experts (on behalf of the manufacturer and the Commission) had conducted their analyses of the content of the pillows in the manner provided by the feather and down industry trade practice rules and were entitled to equal credibility. Also, the examiner correctly averaged the analyses submitted by the experts and arrived at an average down content of 85.8 per cent. Since this was within the 15 per cent tolerance prescribed by the rules, the examiner properly concluded that the misrepresentation charge was not supported by the evidence. The Commission erroneously disregarded the testimony of the manufacturer's expert witness and accepted the testimony of its own expert. Both witnesses qualified as experts, and their testimony was entitled to equal weight.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.482; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.27.

Unfair Practices—Misrepresentations—Crushed Feather Content of Pillows—Accuracy of Analysis—Public Interest.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a manufacturer falsely represented that its pillows contain all new material consisting of 50 per cent crushed chicken feathers and 50 per cent crushed duck quill feathers, or all new material consisting of 50 per cent crushed goose quill feathers and 50 per cent crushed turkey feathers, was reversed on the ground that the finding was not supported by substantial evidence. The hearing examiner, whose ruling dismissing the complaint against the manufacturer was reversed by the Commission, properly found that it was impossible to separate and analyze crushed feathers accurately and concluded that there was no substantial evidence to show that there is any public interest either in the matter of labeling the content of such pillows or in distinguishing between the various kinds of crushed feather content. An analysis made by an expert for the Commission did not furnish substantial support for the Commission's finding in view of the fact that the examiner's finding was based, in part, on admissions of the Commission's expert.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.482; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.27, 8621.620.

For the petitioners: Kenneth F. Burgess and James E. S. Baker, Chicago, Ill.

For the respondent: Robert B. Dawkins, Washington, D. C.

Setting aside a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6134.

Before DUFFY, Chief Judge, MAJOR and LINDLEY, Circuit Judges.

MAJOR, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is a petition under Section 5(c) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45(c), to review and set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), issued June 30, 1955, ordering petitioner Burton-Dixie Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Burton-Dixie) and certain of its officers to cease and desist from misrepresenting the identity of the type of filling material contained in its feather and down products or of the proportions of each type when the filling material is a mixture of more than one kind or type.

[Complaint]

The proceeding was commenced by the issuance of a complaint on October 28, 1953, which alleged that petitioners are engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling down and feather products, including pillows, to dealers for resale to the general public and are carrying on such business in interstate commerce in competition with others similarly engaged. The complaint further alleged that petitioners affix labels to their pillows purporting to state the kinds or types and proportions of filling materials contained therein; that typical of the representations as to the kind of such pillows are the statements:

"Trade Name of Pillow
'Countess'—
All new material consisting of Down
'Chatham'—
All new material consisting of 50% Crushed Chicken Feathers, 50% Crushed Duck Quill Feathers
'Spring'
'Keystone'—
All new material consisting of 50% Crushed Goose Quill Feathers, 50% Crushed Turkey Feathers."

The complaint charged that these representations are false, misleading and deceptive in that the "Countess" pillows contain substantial quantities of material other than down; the "Chatham" pillows contain substantially less than 50% crushed chicken feathers and substantially less than 50% crushed duck quill feathers, and the "Spring" and "Keystone" pillows contain substantially less than 50% crushed goose quill feathers and substantially less than 50% crushed turkey feathers. The complaint charged that these false, misleading and deceptive representations have the tendency and capacity to deceive dealers and the purchasing public as to the filling material of the pillows and to induce the purchase of substantial quantities of pillows because of such mistaken and erroneous belief; that as a result, substantial injury has been done to competition in commerce. Petitioners' practices were alleged to constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[Answer]

Petitioners by answer admitted the jurisdictional averments of the complaint and that their pillows were labeled as alleged, but denied all other material allegations.

[FTC Proceedings]

Hearings were had before a designated Examiner of the Commission who, on December 3, 1954, issued his initial decision containing findings of fact, with his conclusions and an order that the complaint be dismissed. Counsel supporting the complaint appealed to the Commission from the Examiner's decision. After hearing the matter on the record, briefs and oral argument of counsel, the Commission rendered its decision, reversing the initial decision of the Examiner. Thereupon, the Commission issued its cease and desist order now under attack.

The instant action was one of eleven proceedings brought by the Commission, involving the feather and down products industry, ten of which were contemporaneously heard, considered and decided by the same Examiner. These related proceedings covered practically all pillow production in the industry. All ten cases heard by the Examiner were appealed to the Commission. In the instant case and in two others in which the complaints had been dismissed, the Commission reversed the decisions of the Examiner and issued cease and desist orders. As to the other seven cases, the Commission sustained the Examiner's issuance of similar orders. Thus, the Commission sustained the charges against each manufacturer without exception and irrespective of the conclusion of the Examiner in the separate cases.

[Primary Issues]

The primary issues on this review are two: (1) Whether the decision by the Commission that Burton-Dixie misrepresented the filling content of its down pillows, contrary to the findings of the Examiner, is supported by substantial evidence. This issue involves a number of subsidiary questions which we shall subsequently consider. (2) Whether the decision of the Commission that the contents of Burton-Dixie's crushed feather pillows were misrepresented (a) has any probative evidentiary support and (b) comports with the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U. S. C. A. Par. 1001 et seq., and the Commission's own rules of procedure.

[Feather Processing Methods]

Prior to a consideration of the issues, it appears pertinent to make some statement relative to the nature of feather and down products, together with the processing methods employed, about which there seems to be no dispute. Raw feathers are procured principally from Oriental and European sources of supply. In Europe, second-hand feathers are customarily mixed with new stock, while in the Orient there is no careful sorting, so that "a bale of feathers purchased as goose feathers may contain substantial quantities of duck or chicken feathers." After purchasing raw feathers, Burton-Dixie draws samples so as to insure that the stock contains the type of feathers represented, within acceptable limits.

The feathers are thoroughly washed, sterilized and dried, after which they are separated by mechanical means. The separator consists of five chambers divided by baffles of varying heights. The feathers are blown upwards by air currents, with the result that down and the lighter feathers are blown over the higher baffles while heavier feathers remain in the compartments separated by lower baffles. At the end of this process, the farthest compartment contains approximately 90% down and 10% small feathers; the next compartment contains about 80% very small feathers and approximately 20% down; the third chamber contains somewhat larger body feathers with approximately 5% down; the fourth contains large body feathers with almost no down; and the fifth contains wing and tail feathers, commonly known as quills. While it is possible in this manner to isolate a high percentage of down, it is physically impossible to separate some of the small, unmatured feathers from the down or to separate feathers according to type of fowl.

[Pillow Production]

Pillow production falls generally into three types: (1) the down pillow, which is always recognized to contain some light feathers, (2) the mixed whole feather or whole feather and down pillow, and (3) the crushed feather pillow. The instant case involves pillows of the first and third types.

Pillows are never filled singly but in batches. In filling a batch of down pillows, the down is taken from the separator and blown into a steamer, where it is agitated with paddles and live steam. From the mixing steamer, the material is blown into bins, and from these bins the pillows are filled by means of suction blowers. While the content of each pillow thus depends in part upon the mixture in the filling bin as a whole, it will vary from pillow to pillow despite the exercise of the greatest care.

The reason for this result is that feathers and down are unique in their lack of uniformity or homogeneity. They do not mix well. When mixed, they do not stay mixed. Thus, when blown into the filling bin, the feathers have a tendency to sift to the bottom of the bin and the down to the top, so that pillows filled from different parts of the bin always contain different proportions of the materials in the bin. The Examiner stated in this regard:

> "The exact amount or proportion of down and feathers going into any particular pillow cannot be controlled by any mechanical means. The expert whose testimony was presented in support of the complaint stated that the contents of pillows filled from the same bin will vary as much as 30%; that the same percentage will not be found in any two pillows; that the mixture in each pillow will vary from the mixture in the filling bin; that if any one pillow should contain exactly the same percentage of feathers and down as that originally placed in the filling bin it would be pure accident; and that the closest practical indication of the contents of a pillow product of a manufacturer and the correctness of its labeling will result if several different pillows are sampled, preferably pillows obtained at different times and places."

[Crushed Feather Pillows]

The crushed feather pillow is the least expensive product made by the industry from new material. This filling material consists of chicken and turkey feathers and waterfowl quills that would not otherwise be suitable for pillows, which are twisted and curled in a machine to increase their resiliency and prevent matting. A mixture of crushed feathers is made by first weighing the proper proportions of the various kinds of feathers that are to be mixed and then placing alternate handfuls of these feathers into the hopper of the crushing machine, after which the material goes into a filling bin from which the pillows are filled in the manner described above. With respect to this operation, the Examiner stated:

"Because of the nature of these larger feathers, they frequently go through the hopper in lumps, so that it is impossible to get a mixture with any degree of homogeneity. Despite agitation in mixing, slugs of chicken or turkey feathers and slugs of quill feathers will get into the pillows without ever being separated or mixed. The label 'Crushed Feathers', showing the types of feathers used, can indicate no more than that the mixture was made from the types or kinds of feathers stated on the label."

[Industry Trade Practice Rules]

On April 26, 1951, the Commission promulgated Trade Practice Rules (subsequently referred to as the Rules) for the feather and down products industry. (16 C. F. R. 1955 Supp., 200.) At this point we think it appropriate to refer to some of the more salient provisions and requirements contained therein. Rule 3 requires that feather and down products contain a label stating the identity of the filling material. Section III(a) of that Rule, entitled "Tolerance," provides that the filling material of a product may be represented as being of but one kind or type "when 85% of the weight of all filling material contained in the product is of the represented kind or type"; and that when the filling material consists of a mixture of different types, the proportions of which are stated on the label as percentages, the filling material may not vary by more than 15% from the stated percentages. Paragraph (b) of the same section, as to a filling material represented as being wholly of down, provides that any proportion within the tolerance percentage which is not down "shall consist principally of down fiber and/or small, light, and fluffy waterfowl feathers." The Rule further provides:

"It is the consensus of the industry that determination as to whether any representation is violative of the provisions of this Rule should be based on an average of the results of tests of at least two products of the same type when same are readily available for testing * * *."

The Rule also contains a formula for testing the filling material by providing "that samples of equal weight and size be drawn from at least three different locations in the product; that such samples be thoroughly mixed; and that a test be made of not less than 3 grams of the mixture."

[Related Proceedings]

As already noted, the instant proceeding was one of eleven similar proceedings contemporaneously heard by the Examiner. One of such proceedings, Lazar et al., trading as Globe Feather & Down Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (sometimes referred to as Globe), No. 11569, is now under review and awaiting decision by this court. Another of such proceedings, Northern Feather Works, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, has been reviewed and decided by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,366], 234 F. 2d 335. Still another, Buchwalter etc. (National Feather and Down Co.) v. Federal Trade Commission, has been reviewed and decided by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,425], 235 F. 2d 344. Each of those courts denied a petition to set aside the order of the Commission and directed its enforcement. By stipulation, the record before us contains not only the proceedings in the instant case but also those in Globe, as well as portions of the testimony in some of the other cases heard by the Examiner.

[Expert Testimony]

The evidence in this and the related proceedings consisted principally of testimony concerning the methods of operation of the feather and down industry, and the testimony of J. Davis Donovan of the Maryland State Health Department, the expert witness retained by the Commission, and of Ernest Anderson, of United States Testing Company, the expert retained by members of the industry, both of whom analyzed samples taken from the pillows selected by the Commission as a basis for its complaint.

With respect to the "Countess" (down) pillows manufactured by Burton-Dixie, the analyses submitted by Donovan and Anderson respectively were made from the contents of the same two pillows and were as follows:

"Donovan	Pillow 1	Pillow 2
"Down	82.2%	80.3%
Fibers	1.3%	2.5%
Feathers (small downy type)	15.7%	15.7%
Pith and scale	0.8%	1.5%
"Anderson
"Down and down fiber	86.2%	90.7%
Waterfowl feathers (predominantly duck)	13.8%	9.3%"

[Examiner's Findings]

The Examiner found, first, that down fiber, which had been stated separately in Donovan's analysis, should properly be counted as part of the down content, and second, that both experts had conducted their analyses in the manner provided by the Rules and were entitled to equal credibility. He, therefore, averaged the four analyses, arriving at an average down content of 85.8%. Since this was within the 15% tolerance prescribed by the Rules, he found and concluded that the charges of misrepresentation against Burton-Dixie as to its "Countess" pillows were not supported by the evidence. It may be noted that these down pillows of Burton-Dixie were the only ones involved in any of the proceedings in which the Examiner found that average down content exceeded 85%.

At the request of the Commission, Donovan also submitted analyses of the contents of four crushed feather pillows, but testified that it is impossible to analyze crushed feathers accurately, and that crushed material is "not worth testing." He also testified that he thought that in the minds of the public there is no distinction between different types of crushed feathers. The Examiner accordingly concluded that the charges were not supported by the evidence and that there is no reliable evidence of any public interest in distinguishing between the various kinds of crushed feathers.

[Commission's Ruling]

On appeal, the Commission reversed the Examiner's decision with respect to the down pillows by rejecting the analyses made by Burton-Dixie's expert witness, by accepting those made by the Commission's expert, and by excluding "down fiber" in calculating the percentage of down in the pillows. With respect to the crushed feather pillows, the Commission reversed the Examiner's finding that there was no reliable evidence of any public interest in the labeling of crushed feather products and concluded that the contents of the pillow had been misrepresented on the basis of Donovan's analysis.

As already noted, the Examiner as to the down pillows found that the analyses submitted by petitioners' expert, Anderson, and the Commission's expert, Donovan, were entitled to equal weight and should, therefore, be averaged. The Commission overruled that finding, rejected Anderson's analyses entirely and gave controlling weight to those of Donovan. The Commission in its decision stated:

"On the basis of professional qualifications and experience and by comparing testing techniques, the Commission has weighed the expert testimony and evidence and is constrained to adopt as determinative of the questions herein the results of the tests performed under the witness in support of the complaint."

The Commission, in an attempt to justify its reliance upon its own professional expert in preference to that of petitioners, recites in considerable detail the experience of the two witnesses. It is pointed out that Donovan has had some forty years' experience in connection with the feather and down industry, while Anderson has had only five or six years. Donovan's office has made more than a thousand feather analyses while Anderson has made about one hundred. Donovan has two employees who are chemists while Anderson has none, although he is himself a graduate chemist. We need not go further in comparing their qualifications because after a thorough study of their testimony we are firmly convinced of the soundness of the Examiner's conclusion that their testimony was entitled to equal weight. They both qualified as experts and testified as such. The cross-examination of Anderson by counsel for the complainant, which was only perfunctory in nature, indicates that his qualifications were recognized.

[Importance of Expert Testimony]

The fact is, so we think, that the importance of expert testimony in this case, due to the nature of the product involved, has been greatly exaggerated. A good part of the process by which feathers are made available for the filling of pillows in their various forms and about which there was so much testimony and discussion is within the knowledge and competency of any person with a reasonable amount of experience in the business. We have heretofore shown the manner in which feathers are treated, from the time of their receipt by the manufacturer until they are used for the filling of pillows. Briefly, the feathers are washed, sterilized and dried, then separated by mechanical means into various compartments. For down pillows, the down is then removed, again by mechanical means, to the filling bin from which the pillows are filled. Certainly up to this point no expertness is required. The Commission in its brief appears to recognize as much because in its agrument in favor of the reasonableness of the 15% tolerance rule it states, "The process of separating feathers and down is not difficult."

Thus, expert testimony becomes important only in making an analysis of the samples which have been removed from the accused pillows, which involves the ability to separate and properly characterize the elements contained in such samples. Donovan, after testifying that the separation of feathers is made by picking out each individual feather, was asked, "In making a separation, just what particular scientific knowledge is required, if any?" to which he responded, "Knowledge of the characteristics of the goose feathers, down feathers, chicken feathers, goose down, duck down, and if the article contains an appreciable proportion of fibers, the characteristics of those fibers." We are unable to comprehend that the scientific knowledge thus required can be made to depend upon the number of years a witness has been familiar with the involved problem. In evaluating the testimony of the expert witnesses, we think it should also be kept in mind that due to the special nature of the product involved, all analyses are subject to variation and uncertainty. As the Examiner stated, "* * * the conclusion is inescapable that as a practical matter, the contents of feather pillows cannot be accurately labeled." In this connection, counsel supporting the complaint in his appeal brief before the Commission made the following significant statement, "In reality, the matter of analysis is a chance. No one knows the distribution of a pillow's content in one position or another or after agitation or before."

[Down Fiber]

Petitioners in their brief state, "* * * Donovan testified that, on the basis of tests he had conducted, individual pillows showed as much as 30% variation from the known proportions of feathers and down in the filling bin." The Examiner in his report stated, "The expert whose testimony was presented in support of his complaint stated that the contents of pillows filled from the same bin will vary as much as 30%." The Commission in its brief categorically denies that Donovan so testified. The Commission is in error. The record supports the statement of petitioners and the finding of the Examiner in this respect. As previously shown, Donovan in his analysis did not include "down fiber" as down, while Anderson did. The Commission in its decision states, "In arriving at these results he [Anderson] failed to differentiate between down fiber content and down." There is no justification for this criticism of Anderson. The fact is, as the record overwhelmingly discloses, down fiber has always been treated and considered by the industry as down. It is not a separate constituent but an inevitable incident of the processing of pure down. It cannot be purchased on the market and it cannot be separated from down by mechanical means. That such is a fact has often been recognized by the Commission's expert witness. In the hearing on the Trade Practice Rules Donovan testified, "They classify it as down on the assumption that it originally was a part of the down. It has just broken away from the down cluster by machine processes." In the instant proceeding he admitted to the Examiner that he did not classify down fiber as down "because for the Federal Trade Commission we followed the Fair Trade Practice Rules, and the instructions that they have adopted as to taking and analyzing samples." More than that, this same expert witness in the Globe case (now also under review) included down fiber as down. Why it was excluded in the instant analysis and included in the Globe analysis is not explained.

Pursuing further the same subject matter, the Commission in its decision states,

> "The evidence is conflicting on whether down fiber should, as a practical matter, be included with down. We resolve that conflict by concluding that the trade practice rule providing that down fiber should not be included as down takes precedence; that the respondents' expert did not comply with those rules in making his analysis and that the hearing examiner was in error when he included downy fiber to arrive at the computed average of down content he did."

This reasoning, in our judgment, is fallacious. There is no conflict in the evidence as to the proper classification of down fiber other than that artificially created by the Commission's expert who refused to classify it as down solely on the basis of his interpretation of the Rules. At this point it appears pertinent to quote a voluntary statement injected into the hearing by the witness Donovan, as follows:

> "There is another thing I would like to put in the record and that is that there is a perpetual difference between down and feathers. Down never grows into a feather and feathers never grow into downs. They start from the fowl's body either as down or as feathers and for all the rest of their natural life they continue in that category."

Thus we have a situation where a Rule was utilized by the witness to create a conflict and the same Rule relied upon by the Commission to resolve the conflict. Obviously, there was no occasion to rely upon a Rule to resolve a conflict which did not exist. Assuming arguendo, however, that a conflict exists, we think the Commission's reliance upon the Rule is of doubtful propriety. Such reliance is based upon the premise as stated by the Commission, that the Rule provides "that down fiber should not be included as down." We do not so read the Rule. It states that the tolerance percentage (that is, the 15%) "shall consist principally of down fiber and/or small, light, and fluffy waterfowl feathers." The permissive use of down fiber in tolerance is quite different from prohibiting its classification as down. We think petitioners' expert correctly included down fiber as down, which as a matter of fact it was, and that the Examiner was not in error when he included it as such in computing the average of down content.

[Averaging of Analyses]

As already noted, the Examiner averaged the four analyses (two by Donovan and two by Anderson) and found an average down content of 85.8%. This average being within the 15% tolerance, he further found that the charges of misrepresentation against Burton-Dixie were not supported. As we understand from the Commission's decision as well as from its brief in this court, the objection to the averaging process employed by the Examiner is based upon the contention that petitioners' expert improperly included down fiber as down. We have shown our disagreement with this contention which renders the objection without force. However, it is pertinent to again point out that the Rule provides that a determination of misrepresentation "should be based on an average of the results of tests of at least two products of the same type when same are readily available for testing * * *." It would seem that the Examiner's action was not only in accordance with this Rule but that it was a fair and reasonable means of determining the issue with which he was confronted. Certainly is this so in view of the uncertain and inconclusive results which may be expected from an analysis, even though made by an expert. Moreover, we find nothing in the record in opposition to the averaging method employed by the Examiner unless it be the statement by Donovan that he would not be willing to average his test with those made by another person. This statement was made by Donovan in the face of his admission that it was quite possible that an analysis of the same pillows by another person would show a substantially higher percentage of down, even up to as high as 90%. Fortunately, the Examiner was not obligated to embrace this egotistical attitude of the Commission's professional and expert witness.

[Cases Distinguished]

The Commission places considerable reliance upon the decision of the Third Circuit in Northern Feather Works, Inc., supra, and that of the Second Circuit in Buchwalter, supra, wherein cease and desist orders of the Commission were approved in proceedings similar to that involved here. Those cases, of course, were reviewed on a record with which we are not familiar. It is evident from reading the opinions, however, that in the main the questions involved were different from those here. Moreover, they are readily distinguishable on the basis that in each of those cases the Commission accepted and affirmed the findings and conclusions of the same Examiner whose findings and conclusions it rejected and reversed in the instant case.

[Insufficient Evidence]

We are of the firm conviction that the order of the Commission as it relates to petitioners' "Countess" pillows is not supported by substantial evidence when the record is considered as a whole, including the decision of the Examiner directing a dismissal of the complaint. While we recognize the broad powers of the Commission, we as a reviewing court are also charged with the responsibility of making a determination and deciding if the Commission's order is substantially supported. We cite without discussion cases which so hold. Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U. S. 474; United States Steel Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 196 F. 2d 459; Folds v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,798], 187 F. 2d 658.

[Crushed Feather Pillows]

We now come to the phase of the case which involves petitioners' pillows designated "Chatham," represented to contain "All new material consisting of 50% Crushed Chicken Feathers, 50% Crushed Duck Quill Feathers," and pillows designated "Spring" and "Keystone," represented to contain "All new material consisting of 50% Crushed Goose Quill Feathers, 50% Crushed Turkey Feathers." Concerning these crushed feather pillows, the Commission referring to the Examiner's decision stated:

> "As to pillows represented as containing crushed feathers the hearing examiner found no reliable, probative, and substantial evidence to show any public interest either in the matter of labeling or price-listing, or in distinguishing between the various kinds of crushed feather content; that, therefore, there had not been shown any violation of the act through misrepresentation insofar as respondents' 'Chatham', 'Spring' or 'Keystone' pillows are concerned. The charges, in his opinion, not being supported by the evidence and there being no public interest, the hearing examiner dismissed the complaint herein."

[Analysis of Crushed Feathers]

Again the Commission reversed the decision of the Examiner, which we think it did without justification. Its finding of substantial proof of mislabeling is based solely on the testimony of Donovan. On this issue, a marked contrast is shown between the attitude of the two expert witnesses—Anderson, whose testimony the Commission brushes aside on his lack of experience, and Donovan, whose testimony is accorded lavish commendation. Anderson, although employed by petitioners and requested by them to make an analysis of the crushed feather pillows, refused to do so for the stated reason that he had learned from experience that such an analysis because of its inaccuracy would be of no value. On the other hand, Donovan, employed by the Commission, made an analysis upon which the Commission relied, which Donovan's own testimony demonstrates was of no probative value. Donovan's procedure for testing the contents of the crushed feather pillows was the same as that employed in testing the down pillows, that is, by removing a quantity of feathers from three positions in the pillow and analyzing not less than three grams. He testified that crushed feathers are even less homogenous than uncrushed feathers and that, when pillows are filled, crushed feathers of one kind come through in lumps and do not mix with crushed feathers of another kind.

Donovan stated that a three gram sample is not likely to be representative of the contents of the pillow as a whole; that it is just chance whether the analyst grabs a lump of turkey or duck quills, and that he had instructed his inspectors not to bring in samples of crushed stock. He was asked, "As a matter of fact, Mr. Donovan, you wrote a letter to Mr. Hafferman of the Burton-Dixie Company a few years ago in which you stated in substance that you did not think it was possible to analyze crushed materials accurately, or words to that effect, did you not?" To this question he responded, "I have held that opinion. I think it is not only a very difficult thing to do, but it is absolutely unnecessary." He was further asked, "In other words, the label describes what the product is and it means really that the product was made from a batch of material that was prepared in that manner, is that it?" to which he responded, "That is what I would take it to mean."

The Examiner in his decision stated:

> "In his [Donovan's] opinion, it is impractical to attempt to distinguish between the various types of crushed feathers in any batch of such pillows, and he suggested during the course of his tests for the Commission that no further pillows filled with crushed feathers be sent to him for analysis."

The Examiner concluded, "It is impossible to separate and analyze crushing feathers accurately." This conclusion was based upon the testimony of Donovan and was the identical reason assigned by Anderson in his refusal to make an anlysis. Under such circumstances, and particularly in view of the admissions by Donovan, we are of the view and so hold that the analysis made by him of the crushed feather pillows does not furnish substantial support for the Commission's decision.

[Public Interest]

The Examiner, as shown, dismissed the complaint also for the reason that "there is no reliable, probative and substantial evidence to show that there is any public interest either in the matter of the labeling * * *, or in distinguishing between the various kinds of crushed feather content thereof." Relative to this finding the Commission stated in part, "We conclude that the evidence herein is reliable, probative, and substantial as to consumer preference for waterfowl feathers; that the preference can be assumed to carry over to crushed feathers * * *." Thus, the Commission argues that because there was proof as to consumer preference for waterfowl feathers, it may be inferred that the same preference would carry over to crushed feathers. Assuming that such an inference might be permissible under other circumstances, we are not able to discern how it can here be utilized by the Commission, in view of Donovan's testimony. The witness, after testifying that the public had a preference for goose feathers and goose down over duck feathers and duck down, as well as over chicken and turkey feathers, was asked, "Would that preference possibly carry over to crushed goose feathers?" to which he answered, "I don't think that in the minds of the general public there is much of a distinction between any type of crushed feather." Again, Donovan testified to a conversation with a Mrs. Nicholls, an Examiner of the Commission, relative to the testing of the contents of crushed feather pillows. As to that conversation he testified, "I explained to her the extreme tediousness and difficulty of separating the portions of feathers and the fibers and the fact that it was, in my opinion, a waste of time, because there was no material difference either to the processor, the manufacturer or the consumer, the purchaser, in the various types of materials." He further testified, "I tried to dissuade her from having any more pillows of that type collected for examination and report to the Federal Trade Commission."

[Order Set Aside]

For the reasons stated, the petition of Burton-Dixie to review and set aside the order of the Federal Trade Commission, issued June 30, 1955, is allowed, and an appropriate order will be entered. As a corollary, the Commission's request that a decree be entered affirming the said order is denied.

[¶ 68,592] United States v. Robertshaw-Fulton Controls Company and Wilcolator Co.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 14745. Dated January 8, 1957.

Case No. 1286 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing.—Manufacturers of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding with any other manufacturer of temperature controls (1) to fix or maintain prices or other terms or conditions for the sale of temperature controls to third persons, (2) to advise or suggest prices or other terms or conditions for the sale of temperature controls to third persons, or (3) to sell or offer to sell temperature controls only at prices quoted in published price lists or announcements.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exchange of Information or Price Lists.—Manufacturers of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding with any other manufacturer of temperature controls to exchange or communicate any information concerning (1) costs relating to the manufacture of temperature controls, or

(2) prices or other terms or conditions relating to the sale or distribution of temperature controls, except in connection with a bona fide negotiation or quotation concerning the purchase or sale of temperature controls.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.218; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Allocation of Customers.—Manufacturers of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding with any other manufacturer of temperature controls to allocate customers for the sale of temperature controls.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.240.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Acquisitions.—A manufacturer of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges was prohibited by a consent decree (1) for a period of five years, from acquiring ownership or control of the business, physical assets, or good will, or any capital stock or securities, of any person engaged in the manufacture of temperature controls, and (2) thereafter, for an additional ten years, from acquiring such ownership or control except after an affirmative showing to the satisfaction of the court that such ownership or control would not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution, or sale of temperature controls. However, the manufacturer was not prohibited from acquiring all or part of the securities or assets of any of its subsidiaries, or from forming subsidiaries and transferring to such subsidiaries its assets or assets of its subsidiaries.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.833; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.120.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Patent Licensing Agreements—Agreement Not To License Patents.—Manufacturers of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges, which were ordered by a consent decree to license their patents, were each prohibited from entering into any agreement with any person from whom it acquires, on a nonexclusive basis, any license, grant of immunity, or similar right under any existing patent, or under any patent issued or applied for within the five years after the entry of the decree, that such person will not grant similar rights to other applicants.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.360; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.550.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Patents—Institution of Patent Infringement Suits.—Manufacturers of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges, which were ordered by a consent decree to license their patents, were each prohibited from instituting or threatening to institute any suit or proceeding against any person for acts of infringement of patents alleged to have occurred prior to the entry of the decree.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.225; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.525.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Licensing of Patents.—Two manufacturers of temperature controls for gas cooking ranges were each ordered to grant a nonexclusive license to manufacture, use, and sell temperature controls under any or all of the patents owned or controlled by the manufacturer at the time of the entry of the decree, or which are owned by the manufacturer within five years from the date of entry. The defendants could charge a reasonable nondiscriminatory royalty.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.30, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; William D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, William L. Maher, Donald G. Balthis, John E. Sarbaugh, and Walter L. Devany, III, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay by H. E. Hackney, Paul J. Winschel, and J. Tomlinson Fort, Jr., for Robertshaw-Fulton Controls Company. Breed, Abbott & Morgan, by William C. Breed, for Wilcolator Co.

Final Judgment

JOHN L. MILLER, District Judge [In full text except for Appendix A]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its Complaint herein on June 21, 1956, and defendants Robertshaw-Fulton Controls Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "RFCCo."), and Wilcolator Co. (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Wilcolator"), having appeared and filed their answer to the Complaint denying violations of law and the substantive allegations thereof, and plaintiff and defendants by their attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without the Final Judgment constituting any evidence or admission by any party in respect of any such issues;

Now, therefore, before the taking of testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of each party hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against RFCCo. and Wilcolator under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Temperature Controls" means oven thermostatic regulator units for regulating the temperature in the oven of a gas range, and parts of such units when manufactured for and used therein;

(B) "Person" means any individual, partnership, corporation (including any defendant), association, firm, trustee or other business or legal entity;

(C) "Patents" means United States Letters Patent and all reissues and extensions thereof, relating to the manufacture, use or sale of temperature controls.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to the defendants RFCCo. and Wilcolator, their officers, directors, agents, employees, successors and assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with a defendant who receives actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise; provided that the said provisions shall not apply to the foreign activities and operations of the defendants unless such activities and operations unreasonably restrain domestic trade and commerce of the United States.

IV

[Termination of Agreements]

(A) Defendants RFCCo. and Wilcolator are each ordered and directed to terminate and cancel, within sixty (60) days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, each of the following agreements which shall not theretofore have been terminated or cancelled:

(1) Agreement dated February 28, 1949, between RFCCo. and Wilcolator;

(2) Agreement dated April 1, 1949, between Wilcolator and Penn Controls, Inc.;

(3) Agreement dated February 13, 1936 between Wilcolator and Magic Chef, Inc.

(B) Defendants RFCCo. and Wilcolator are each enjoined and restrained from entering into, adopting, performing, adhering to, maintaining, or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program in relation to temperature controls which (1) is inconsistent with any provision of this Final Judgment, or (2) has as its purpose or effect the continuing or renewing of any provision of any of the agreements listed in subsection (A) of this Section IV which is inconsistent with any provision of this Final Judgment;

(C) Defendants RFCCo. and Wilcolator are each ordered and directed to file with the Court within three (3) months following the date of entry of this Final Judgment, an affidavit that the aforesaid written agreements have been terminated and that they are not parties to any agreement or arrangement, plan or program, which is inconsistent with any provision of this Final Judgment.

V

[Licensing of Patents]

(A) Defendant RFCCo. is ordered and directed, and, except as to RFCCo., defendant Wilcolator is ordered and directed, in so far as each has or may acquire the power to do so, to grant to any applicant making written application therefor a nonexclusive license to manufacture, use, and sell temperature controls under any, some, or all of the patents owned or controlled by such defendant at the time of entry of this Final Judgment (including those listed on Appendix A [not reproduced] hereto) or which are applied for or issued to or owned by such defendant within five (5) years from such date of entry. Defendants are each enjoined and restrained from making any sale or other disposition of any of the aforesaid patents which deprives such defendant of the power or authority to grant such licenses, unless such defendant sells, transfers, or assigns such patents and requires as a condition of such sale, transfer, or assignment that the purchaser, transferee, or assignee shall observe the requirements of Section V of this Final Judgment with respect to the patents so acquired and the purchaser, transferee, or assignee shall file with this Court, prior to the consummation of said transaction, an undertaking to be bound by the provisions of said section with respect to the patents acquired;

(B) Each defendant is enjoined and restrained from acquiring, on an exclusive basis, any license, sublicense, grant of immunity, or similar right under any existing patent or any patent issued or applied for within the five years after the entry of this Final Judgment, unless such license, sublicense, grant of immunity, or similar right grants to the defendant a full and unrestricted power to sublicense, pursuant to the provisions of this Section V. Each defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into any agreement or understanding, either direct or implied, with any person from whom it acquires, on a nonexclusive basis, any license, sublicense, grant of immunity, or similar right under any existing patent or under any patent issued or applied for within the five years after the entry of this Final Judgment, that such person will not grant similar or at least as favorable rights to other applicants therefor;

(C) Each defendant is enjoined and restrained from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense, as the case may be, granted by it pursuant to the provisions of subsection (A) of this Section V, except that:

(1) The license may be nontransferable;

(2) A reasonable nondiscriminatory royalty may be charged;

(3) Reasonable provision may be made for periodic inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor or any person acceptable to the licensee who shall report to the licensor only the amount of the royalty due and payable;

(4) Reasonable provision may be made for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to pay the royalties or to permit the inspection of its books and records as hereinabove provided;

(5) The license shall provide that the licensee may cancel the license by giving thirty (30) days' notice in writing to the licensor; and

(6) The license must refer to and identify this Final Judgment;

(D) Upon receipt of a written request for a license or a sublicense, as the case may be, under the provisions of this Section V, each such defendant shall advise the applicant in writing of the royalty which it deems reasonable for the patent or patents to which the request pertains. If the parties are unable to agree upon a reasonable royalty within sixty (60) days from the date such request for the license was received by such defendant, the applicant or such defendant may forthwith apply to this Court for the determination of reasonable royalties, and the defendant shall, upon receipt of notice of the filing, or upon the filing of such application, promptly give notice thereof to the Attorney General. In any such proceeding, the burden of proof shall be on the defendant to establish the reasonableness of the royalty requested, and the reasonable royalty rates, if any, determined by this Court shall apply to the applicant and all other licensees under the same patent or patents. Pending the completion of negotiations or any such proceedings, the applicant shall have the right to make, use, and vend temperature controls under the patent or patents to which its application pertains without payment of royalty or other compensation as above provided, but subject to the provisions of subsection (E) of this Section V;

(E) Where the applicant has the right to make, use, and vend temperature controls under any patents pursuant to subsection (D) of this Section V, said applicant or the defendant may apply to this Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty. If this Court fixes such interim royalty rate, the defendant shall then issue, and the applicant shall accept, a license or, as the case may be, a sublicense, providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date of the filing of such application by the applicant. If the applicant fails to accept such a license or fails to pay the interim royalty in accordance therewith, such action shall be ground for the dismissal of his application and his rights under subsection (D) shall terminate. Where an interim license or sublicense has been issued pursuant to this subsection, reasonable royalty rates, if any, as finally determined by this Court shall be retroactive for the applicant and other licensees under the same patents to the date the applicant files his application with this Court;

(F) Each defendant is enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute, or maintaining or continuing any action, suit, or proceedings against any person for acts of infringement of patents alleged to have occurred prior to the entry of this Final Judgment; and

(G) Nothing herein shall prevent any applicant for a license or sublicense from attacking in the aforesaid proceedings or in any other proceeding or controversy, the validity or scope of any of the patents nor shall this Final Judgment be construed as importing any validity or value to any of the said patents.

VI

[Price Fixing and Allocation of Customers]

Defendants RFCCo. and Wilcolator are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from combining or conspiring or from entering into, adhering to, performing, maintaining, furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, with any other manufacturer of temperature controls to:

(A) Fix, maintain, determine, control, stabilize or adhere to prices, discounts, allowances or other terms or conditions for the sale of temperature controls to third persons;

(B) Urge, advise or suggest prices, discounts, allowances or other terms or conditions for the sale of temperature controls to third persons;

(C) Circulate, exchange, disclose or communicate any information concerning costs relating to the manufacture of temperature controls, or, prices, discounts, allowances or other terms or conditions relating to the sale or distribution of temperature controls, except in connection with a bona fide negotiation, inquiry, or quotation concerning the purchase or sale of temperature controls;

(D) Sell or offer to sell temperature controls only at prices quoted in published price lists or announcements; and

(E) Allocate customers for the sale of temperature controls.

VII

[Acquisitions]

(A) Defendant RFCCo. is enjoined and restrained:

(1) For a period of five years from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, from acquiring, directly or indirectly, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise, ownership or control of the business, physical assets or good will, or any part thereof, or any capital stock or securities of any person engaged in the manufacture of temperature controls in the United States, its territories or possessions; and

(2) Thereafter, for an additional ten years, from directly or indirectly acquiring such ownership or control except after an affirmative showing to the satisfaction of this Court, upon 30 days' notice to plaintiff, that such ownership or control would not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, distribution or sale of temperature controls.

(B) Nothing in this Section VII, however, shall be construed to prohibit

(1) Acquisition by RFCCo. of all or part of the securities or assets of any of its subsidiaries;

(2) Formation of subsidiaries by RFCCo. and the transfer thereto of assets of RFCCo. or of its subsidiaries.

VIII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted (1) access during the office hours of such defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any matter contained in this Final Judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matter. Upon such request the defendants shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VIII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

IX

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,593] Dean Oil Company v. American Oil Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action, File No. 7-56. Dated December 26, 1956.

Clayton Act and Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Right To Maintain Suit for Violation of Section 3, Robinson-Patman Act.—Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act is one of the antitrust laws as defined by Section 1 of the Clayton Act; therefore, a private treble damage action based on a violation of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act may be maintained under Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.710.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable Statute.—In a treble damage action brought in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, the Court held that a private antitrust suit under the Clayton Act is an action on the case for a tortious injury to the rights of another, and, therefore, it is governed by a New Jersey six-year statute of limitations. The Federal four-year statute of limitations was not applicable since the statute did not become effective until two days after the action was instituted.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010, 9010.100.

Price Discrimination—Robinson-Patman Act, Section 3—Constitutionality.—In a treble damage action based upon an alleged violation of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, the court refused to rule on the defendant's contention that Section 3 of the Act is unconstitutional under the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution since the section is vague and indefinite. The constitutionality of an act may not be questioned by a party whose rights are not affected by the act.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3551.15.

For the plaintiff: Koestler & Koestler, by Melvin J. Koestler.

For the defendant: Stickel & Stickel, by Fred G. Stickel.

Opinion

[Robinson-Patman Act, Section 3]

REYNIER, J. WORTENDYKE, JR., District Judge [In full text]: Defendant's motion in this private treble-damage action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, for dismissal of the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, poses the critical question of whether Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act is one of the anti-trust laws as defined by Section 1 of the Clayton Act, for violation of which Section 4 of the same Act provides a private civil action for treble damages. The motion also impugns the constitutionality of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act as violative of the Fifth Amendment. Movant also charges that Section 3 is, in any event, inapplicable to the transactions complained of and asserts that the complaint fails to allege that sales of goods of like grade, quality and quantity were involved or that the charged offending acts of the defendant were for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.

[Defenses]

Plaintiff, on its part, moves to strike from defendant's answer the fourth and fifth affirmative defenses therein set forth, which respectively allege that the plaintiff itself discriminated in price among its customers, thereby lessening competition and precluding its recovery in this action, and that the cause or causes of action alleged in the complaint accrued more than two years prior to the commencement of this action and are, therefore, barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff's motion addressed to the fourth affirmative defense was denied. With respect to the fifth affirmative defense, decision was reserved.

THE COMPLAINT

Plaintiff, a New Jersey corporation, engaged in the sale and distribution of petroleum products throughout certain Counties of the State of New Jersey, charges that from 1940 through June 30, 1953 it was a customer of the defendant, a Delaware corporation authorized to transact business in New Jersey and engaged in interstate commerce. It is alleged that defendant's oil fields and refining plants are located without the State of New Jersey, and that it shipped the products of its refineries to its marine bulk storage station at Carteret, New Jersey, from which defendant made sales in interstate commerce to retail gasoline service stations, both operated by itself and by dealers within the State. It is further alleged that plaintiff purchased defendant's products at the latter's terminal aforesaid, taking delivery thereat in plaintiff's own tank trucks, and thereby transporting same to plaintiff's own storage tanks within the State and to the service stations of customers of the plaintiff. Plaintiff charges that from January 6, 1950 to June 30, 1953, in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, and of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, defendant continuously discriminated against the plaintiff in certain respects and particulars, all as set forth in the subdivisions of paragraph 9 of the complaint. Plaintiff claims that in consequence of such discriminations and differences in price it suffered damage in the amount of $150,000, was unable successfully to compete with other distributor-customers of defendant, and was unable to sell the gasoline which the plaintiff purchased from defendant at prices which would enable the gasoline service station customers of the plaintiff to successfully compete with other gasoline service station operators. Plaintiff claims to have suffered loss of customers because some were taken over as customers by the defendant and others were forced out of business; thereby causing a decline in plaintiff's business to the extent of $100,000, and a loss of equipment and facilities which plaintiff had furnished to its customers amounting to $20,000. Treble the aggregate of all of these damages is sought, together with attorney's fees.

Answer

Defendant denies the offenses charged against it in the complaint and affirmatively pleads, in addition to those defenses hereinabove referred to, that it falls within the exonerative provisos of subsections (a) and (b) of Section 13 of Title 15 of the United States Code. Section 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 13a) reads as follows:

> "§ 13a. Discrimination in Rebates, Discounts, or Advertising Service Charges; Underselling in Particular Localities; Penalties
>
> "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to be a party to, or assist in, any transaction of sale, or contract to sell, which discriminates to his knowledge against competitors of the purchaser, in that, any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge is granted to the purchaser over and above any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge available at the time of such transaction to said competitors in respect of a sale of goods of like grade, quality, and quantity; to sell, or contract to sell, goods in any part of the United States at prices lower than those exacted by said person elsewhere in the United States for the purpose of destroying competition, or eliminating a competitor in such part of the United States; or, to sell, or contract to sell, goods at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.
>
> "Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

Defendant's present motion to dismiss rests upon its contention that a violation of the foregoing section does not justify the invocation of Chapter 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 15) in the form of a civil action for treble the damages suffered by the plaintiff in consequence of such violation. The latter section authorizes suit for threefold damages by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." The presently moving defendant insists that section 3 of the Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 13a) is not a part of the "antitrust laws" as that phrase is used in section 4 and that therefore the remedy sought in the instant action is not available insofar as it may be based upon a violation of section 3.

The issue presented by plaintiff's denial of movant's contention in this regard has apparently not yet been directly adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States and the decisions of the Courts of Appeal are in conflict thereon.

[Motion]

The motion under consideration, according to the Notice thereof, is brought under Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to dismiss the complaint "insofar as it is sought to be based on Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act" (15 U. S. C. A. § 13a) (1) for lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter and (2) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The Rule invoked provides (in part) that "every defense, in law or fact, to a claim for relief in any pleading * * * shall be asserted in the responsive pleading thereto if one is required, except that the following defenses may at the option of the pleader be made by motion: (1) lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, * * * (6) failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, * * *. A motion making any of these defenses shall be made before pleading if a further pleading is permitted." Defendant has seen fit to postpone this motion to the filing of its answer. With respect to Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act which the complaint charges was violated by defendant, the answer denies the violation but admits that the action is brought "to recover treble damages pursuant to the named statute for alleged violations by defendant of other listed statutes." Nowhere in the answer, however, appears any charge or averment embodying an attack upon the complaint "insofar as it is sought to be based on Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act" as presented by this motion. The defenses which defendant now raises, however, are excepted from waiver. See Rule 12(b) and Gavin v. Hudson & Manhattan R. Co. (3 Cir. 1950), 185 F. 2d 104.

[Constitutionality]

The pending motion, insofar as it seeks a dismissal of the complaint must be denied, irrespective of this Court's views respecting the validity or efficacy of the provisions of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, to support the present action, which the defendant here attacks. The complaint rests only partly upon alleged violation of Section 3 as a basis for jurisdiction. Plaintiff also charges violations of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, and defendant makes no attack upon Section 2 as an appropriate basis for some of the claims asserted in the complaint. Whether the evidence will show the existence of violations of Section 2 will depend upon the trial of the case upon the merits. For the purpose of the present motion we must, therefore, assume as true the plaintiff's allegations that the defendant was guilty of violations of that Section. Frederick Hart & Co. Inc. v. Recordgraph Corporation, (3 Cir. 1948) 169 F. 2d 580. Accordingly, the attacked pleading withstands the motion to dismiss. Defendant however suggests that if violations of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act are found to be insufficient to afford a basis for the present civil action for treble damages the issues may be simplified by a determination accordingly in advance of trial. While the Court deems it unnecessary to make this determination in order to justify its denial of the motion to dismiss the complaint, counsel for each of the parties apparently desires an expression of the Court's view of a question which has evoked much discussion but which has not been finally determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; although it has been recently conflictingly responded to by the Courts of Appeal of two Circuits. See Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Co. (7 Cir. Nov. 1, 1956) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,520] — F. 2d — (25 L. W. 2208); and Vance v. Safeway Stores (10 Cir. Nov. 6, 1956) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,538] — F. 2d — (25 L. W. 2207). Neither of these cases involved an adjudication upon a question of the constitutionality of Section 3. Movant here charges such unconstitutionality upon the assertion that Section 3 violates the Fifth Amendment in that it is vague and indefinite. It is elementary that the constitutionality of an Act may not be questioned by a party whose rights are not affected thereby. Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose (1932) 289 U. S. 373, 383. I refrain from passing upon the constitutionality of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act because the defendant has not shown itself to be entitled to raise the question here in view of the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U. S. 447; as Mr. Justice Sutherland, speaking for the Court, said, at page 488:

> "We have no power per se to review and annul acts of Congress on the ground that they are unconstitutional. That question may be considered only when the justification for some direct injury suffered or threatened, presenting a justiciable issue, is made to rest upon such an act. Then the power exercised is that of ascertaining and declaring the law applicable to the controversy. It amounts to little more than the negative power to disregard an unconstitutional enactment, which otherwise would stand in the way of the enforcement of a legal right. The party who invokes the power must be able to show not only that the statute is invalid but that he has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining some direct injury as the result of its enforcement, and not merely that he suffers in some indefinite way in common with people generally."

It is, of course, obvious that if, as defendant contends, Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act is not one of the antitrust laws for the violation of which Section 4 of the Clayton Act invests a private party with a cause of action for treble damages, then the question of the constitutionality of Section 3 is irrelevant. Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota (1927), 274 U. S. 1, relied on by defendant to justify its charge of unconstitutionality against Section 3 is not authority for the asserted contention nor does it justify defendant's standing to make the charge. In Fairmont Creamery, appellant was convicted under a law of the State of Minnesota which imposed a penalty upon anyone engaged in the business of buying milk, etc., who paid a higher price for the commodity in one locality than for the same commodity in another within the State. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the conviction because it found that the statute infringed the liberty of contract guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. The appellant there was obviously in a position to contest the constitutionality because the conviction appealed from depended entirely upon the determination of that issue. Although Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act imposes penalties for commissions of the forms of discrimination therein stated to be unlawful, the present defendant is not exposed to any of those penalties in the present action or under Section 3. In the case at bar the plaintiff is seeking treble damages for acts on the part of the defendant which the plaintiff charges amounted to the forms of discrimination enumerated in Section 3. The reasons which induced the Supreme Court to affirm the constitutionality of the Sherman Antitrust Act in United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc. (1945) [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,338] 324 U. S. 293 and in Northern Securities Co. v. United States (1904) 193 U. S. 197, afford equal support for the constitutionality of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act.

[Right To Maintain Suit]

We come now to a consideration of the authorities which have considered the question whether Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act is one of the anti-trust laws for the violation of which a private person may recover treble damages from the violator under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. It is the opinion of this Court that Section 3 is clearly an anti-trust law for the reasons expressed by the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals in Vance v. Safeway Stores (supra) and by Judge Yankwich in Balian Ice Cream Co. Inc. v. Arden Farms Co. (D. C. S. D. Cal. 1950) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,742] 94 F. Supp. 796, which embodied the view adopted in Vance. Moreover, although the point was apparently not raised before it, the Supreme Court of the United States treated Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act as one of the anti-trust laws for the purpose of supporting the recovery of treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act in Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co. (1954) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,906] 348 U. S. 115, reh. den. 348 U. S. 932. The same high Court in Bruce's Juices Inc. v. American Can Co. (1947) [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,533] 330 U. S. 743, dealt with the question whether renewal notes for the purchase price of goods sold would be uncollectible if the vendor violated Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act. While the Court concluded that the maker of the notes could not be relieved by proof of such violations, Mr. Justice Jackson, speaking for the Court, at page 750, said:

> "The Act prescribes sanctions, and it does not make uncollectibility of the purchase price one of them. Violation of the Act is made criminal and upon conviction a violator may be fined or imprisoned. * * * Any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden therein (Section 3) may sue and recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. (Citing 15 U. S. C. § 15). This treble damage provision to redress private injury and the criminal proceedings to vindicate the public interest are the only sanctions provided by Congress."

Because I am persuaded by the reasoning and conclusions in Balian, which were adopted in Vance, I hold that Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act is one of the anti-trust laws contemplated by Section 4 of the Clayton Act. It would serve no useful purpose to review the legislative history or to analyze the authorities so ably presented and discussed in Balian, and I therefore refrain from doing so.

I conclude that this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter in this action and that the complaint therein sets forth claims upon which relief can be granted. Defendant's motion to dismiss is accordingly denied.

[Statute of Limitations]

Plaintiff's motion to strike the fifth affirmative defense, set forth in defendant's answer, is granted. That defense pleaded a two-year Statute of Limitations in bar of the causes of action alleged in the complaint. The cause or causes of action alleged arose in New Jersey. This Court sits in the District of New Jersey and therefore the Statute of Limitations of the forum applicable to the causes of action alleged controls in this Court. As I pointed out in Frank L. Gordon et al. v. Loew's Inc., et al., C. 202-55 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,573], the private anti-trust suit under the Clayton Act is an action on the case for a tortious injury to the rights of another. It is, therefore, governed by Section 2A:14-1 of the Revised Statutes of New Jersey, which requires that it be commenced within six years next after the cause of action shall have accrued. The Act of July 7, 1955 (15 U. S. C. A. § 15b) prescribing a Federal four-year Statute of Limitations for actions of this kind did not take effect until two days after the present action was instituted, consequently, this action is governed by the New Jersey Statute of Limitations cited. The period within which the complaint charges that the anti-trust violations complained of took place extended from January 6, 1950 to June 30, 1953; hence the causes of action for which treble damages are here sought accrued within six years preceding the commencement of this action (complaint filed January 5, 1956) and the defense of Statute of Limitations must fall. The motion to strike the fifth affirmative defense in defendant's answer is granted.

Orders may be presented in conformity with the views hereinabove expressed.

[¶ 68,594] LaCroy Johnson et al. v. Shell Oil Co.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin. August Term, 1956. No. 119. Filed January 11, 1957.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County: William F. Shaughnessy, Circuit Judge. Affirmed.

Wisconsin Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Legality of Practices—Requirements Contracts.—A provision of a gasoline station lease giving the lessor-oil company the right to terminate the lease in the event that the lessee does not purchase at least 144,000 gallons of gasoline from the lessor-oil company annually, and a provision of a dealer sales agreement prohibiting the lessee from disposing of anything but the lessor-oil company's products under the company's trade-marks, were not illegal under the Wisconsin antitrust laws. The contracts do not limit the supply or amounts of the commodities sold at the station, and they do not eliminate other brands from the market or deprive the public of a choice. The contention that the lease and sales agreement constitute illegal requirement contracts was rejected. A minute portion of the market would be affected by the requirement in the lease. Furthermore, it could not be said that the requirement was not for a just and honest purpose or was not for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it was imposed, or that it was not reasonable as between the parties or that it was specially injurious to the public. At the most, the requirement was a partial restraint, limited as to time and extent of purchases, which did not impede the right of the lessee to purchase and sell products of the oil company's competitors upon the premises.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2325, 2339.

For the appellants: John E. Reilly, Milwaukee, Wis.

For the respondent: Wayne J. Roper, Milwaukee, Wis.

[Nature of Action]

Summary Judgment. This action was commenced July 22, 1953 by the plaintiffs, LaCroy Johnson and his wife Dorothy Johnson, against the defendant, Shell Oil Company, a foreign corporation, for relief from a lease of a gasoline and service station, and also from a dealer's sales agreement between the respective parties, upon alleged ground that the contracts were violative of sec. 133.26, 133.01 and 133.85, Stats., and therefore were illegal and void. Issue was joined by the answer of the defendant wherein there was specific denial of any violation of the provisions of the statutes relied upon by the plaintiffs, and also denial that the lease or the dealer's sales agreement are severally or jointly a combination to restrain trade, or to prevent competition.

[Summary Judgment]

Both parties moved the court for summary judgment on the pleadings, supporting affidavits, the contracts, and also on portions of an adverse examination of the plaintiff, LaCroy Johnson. By its judgment the trial court denied the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and ordered summary judgment in favor of the defendant dismissing the complaint.

This appeal is by the plaintiffs from the judgment.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

[Lease Arrangement]

STEINLE, Justice [In full text]: The plaintiff, LaCroy Johnson successfully operated a gasoline station owned by the defendant, Shell Oil Company, in the city of Milwaukee from 1945 until the spring of 1951, when he and his wife purchased a tract of land consisting of about one acre at 683 South Hawley Road, West Allis, upon which was located a gasoline and service station, and where Johnson thereafter conducted a filling and service station business. Previous to the purchase of the property by the plaintiffs, the defendant had leased it from the former owner and had operated it. The defendant, through an employee, R. A. Ramaker, negotiated the purchase transaction for the plaintiffs, and procured the necessary financing for them. The price of the property was $22,000 and Ramaker arranged for a loan of $16,000 for the Johnsons from the Bank of Kewaskum to enable them to buy the property. After the purchase of the property, the plaintiffs leased the station to the defendant for a ten year term from May 1, 1951 until April 30, 1961, with an option to extend the lease for an additional five year period. Rent was to be paid by the defendant at the rate of one and one half cents for each gallon of gasoline delivered to the station, with a $50 minimum rental payment per month. It was agreed that the defendant was to pay all rentals under the lease, to the bank. The defendant was given the option to terminate the lease upon 30 days notice, at any time. There was also provision that the defendant was privileged to terminate the lease upon 30 days notice should Johnson fail to maintain the premises in good condition and repair, or fail to rebuild promptly any of the property destroyed in any manner or fail to pay taxes, etc. If without defendant's fault, the licenses and permits of the station were not in existence, or if the business or the property was used for illegal purposes, the defendant was privileged to terminate the lease on five days notice. On the day when the aforementioned lease was executed, the defendant subleased the premises to the plaintiff, LaCroy Johnson, for a term commencing May 1, 1951 and ending April 29, 1961, with right of extension of five years provided that the defendant itself had renewed its own lease of the property for such period. The rent payable by Johnson to the defendant under the sublease was at the rate of one cent for each gallon of gasoline delivered to the premises, and the defendant was given the right to terminate the sublease within 30 days after the expiration of any year during the term in the event that Johnson failed to purchase at least 144,000 gallons of gasoline from the defendant during the year. Neither lease contained provision that Johnson was privileged to terminate the same for any cause.

[Sales Agreement]

The "dealer's sales agreement" was a written contract executed on the same day as the leases. It afforded the plaintiff, LaCroy Johnson, the right to purchase products from the defendant at established dealer prices, in any quantities to be ordered by him, and also the right during the continuance of the contract to use the defendant's trademark, trade name and its color scheme of advertising in connection with his sale of its products at the station, but not to use such trademarks, etc., in connection with the sale of products purchased by Johnson from other concerns.

[Sale of Property]

Before Johnson started the operation of the station in question, the defendant made certain improvements to the property which included the construction of two new approaches to the station that were sunk to the grade level of the street; the addition of an island for the service of customers; the addition of a light pole; the painting of the building. It appears without dispute that the contracts do not prohibit Johnson from selling products of other concerns, including gasoline, or that they prohibit the use of pumps other than those used for the sale of the defendant's gasoline. The plaintiff did not purchase 144,000 gallons of gasoline annually, but the defendant did not seek termination of the lease because of plaintiffs' failure in such regard, nor for any other cause. Johnson now desires to sell the property free and clear of the defendant's lease.

[Trial Court Ruling]

By his application for summary judgment Johnson sought a ruling that the contracts are null and void for reason that they violate the antitrust laws. The Shell Oil Company moved for summary judgment in its favor dismissing the complaint for reason that the contracts are in all respects valid.

In its memorandum decision the trial court stated:

> "it is inconceivable to the court that the agreements between the parties to this action restrain or stifle competition or tend to injury or detriment to the public generally, and it is, therefore, held that the motion of the defendant for summary judgment dismissing the complaint on the merits must be granted."

[Antitrust Claim]

On this appeal it is the position of the plaintiffs that the agreements must be considered together and that they violate the provisions of sec. 133.01, Stats., principally for reason that the defendant has retained a right to terminate the lease in the event that Johnson does not purchase 144,000 gallons of gasoline from the defendant annually.

In so far as material sec. 133.01, Stats., provides:

> "(1) Every contract or combination in the nature of a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is hereby declared illegal. Every combination, conspiracy, trust, pool, agreement or contract intended to restrain or prevent competition in the supply or price of any article or commodity in general use in this state, to be produced or sold therein or constituting a subject of trade or commerce therein, or which combination, conspiracy, trust, pool, agreement or contract shall in any manner control the price of any such article or commodity, fix the price thereof, limit or fix the amount or quantity thereof to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold in this state, or fix any standard or figure in which its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled or established, is hereby declared an illegal restraint of trade. . . ."

The particular provision of sec. 133.01(1), Stats., in question was interpreted by this court in State v. Lewis and Leidersdorf Co. (1930), 201 Wis. 543, 553, 554, 230 N. W. 692. There, Mr. Justice Fowler, speaking for the court, said:

> "The word 'supply' covers not only the idea of the quantity of cigars but also that of the brands and sizes of cigars that may be sold in Milwaukee county. Combination and conspiracy to restrain competition in supplying cigars to retailers so as to eliminate from the retail market all kinds of cigars except those exclusively handled by defendants are alleged. The necessary effect of this is to deprive the public of choice in the cigars they will buy, and to cut off supply from the portion of the public who prefer brands of cigars other than those supplied by the defendants. This idea is plainly within the language of the statute banning every combination 'intended to restrain or prevent competition in the supply or price of any article or commodity in general use in this state.' Control of price and quantity are especially mentioned, but control of supply in other ways than quantity is also covered. Under many decisions anything that 'prejudices the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade' falls within the prohibition of the statute. Nash v. U. S., 229 U. S. 373, 376, 33 Sup. Ct. 780."

[Limitation on Supply]

The contracts in the case at bar do not limit the supply or amounts of the commodities sold at the station. They do not eliminate other brands from the market or deprive the public of choice. It appears without dispute that the plaintiff is not prohibited or prevented from installing pumps of other gasoline concerns at the station and disposing of gasoline other than that of the defendant from such pumps. A restriction such as appears in paragraph 7 of the dealer's sales agreement prohibiting the disposing of anything but Shell products under Shell's trademarks and trade names, and through Shell gasoline tanks, is nonviolative of a statutory provision such as that in question. Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair Refining Company, 261 U. S. 463. The lease to Johnson does not contain any restriction as to the use to which he can put the property. It appears without dispute that Johnson had a substantial income from the property by virtue of his activities in the repair of automobiles, tune-ups, wash jobs, the sale of accessories, tires, and additives, none of which are Shell products.

[Requirement Contract]

Plaintiffs contend that the lease to Johnson and the dealer's sales agreement are requirement contracts such as have been held to be in restraint of trade in cases as Standard Oil Company of California and Standard Stations, Inc. v. United States (1949) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 78 Fed. Supp. 850, 337 U. S. 293, and United States v. Richfield Oil Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,878] 99 Fed. Supp. 280, (S. D. Cal.). In each of those cases it was established that there was a substantial restraint upon a sizeable segment of the market. In the instant situation it appears that but a minute portion of the market in Wisconsin would be affected by the limitation in the lease. It has long been the rule in this state that agreements although in partial restraint of trade, where effected for a proper purpose and limited in time and scope and otherwise reasonable are not invalid. In Wisconsin Creameries, Inc. v. Johnson (1932), 208 Wis. 444, 449, 243 N. W. 498, it was said:

"Coming now to the merits of the case, it is argued that the contracts between Ebbe, Panter, and Otto are void because they are in restraint of trade. The contracts each contained a clause to the effect that the buyer or lessee of certain equipment described therein, for a period fixed in the contract, agrees to buy and use exclusively and to the extent of his requirements, ice cream, ices, and other dairy products sold by the plaintiff, at certain specified prices.

"These contracts are attacked on the ground that being exclusive sales contracts they are void as against public policy. Contracts of this character have been so frequently upheld that it is considered sufficient to cite the cases which sustain them. E. L. Husting Co. v. Coca-Cola Co. 205 Wis. 356, 237 N. W. 85, 238 N. W. 626; Rose v. Gordon, 158 Wis. 414, 149 N. W. 158; Butterick Pub. Co. v. Rose, 141 Wis. 533, 124 N. W. 647."

See also Rose v. Gordon (1914), 158 Wis. 414, 149 N. W. 158, National Refining Company v. Cox (Mo. 1933), 57 S. W. (2d) 778, and Cunningham v. Esso Standard Oil Company (Del. 1955), 118 Atl. (2d) 611.

In Cottington v. Swan (1906), 128 Wis. 321, 323, 107 N. W. 336, it was said:

"The vital question in the consideration of every such contract is whether the restraint imposed is reasonable under the circumstances with reference to 'the situation, business, and objects of the parties,' and if 'the restraint contracted for appears to have been for a just and honest purpose, for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed, reasonable as between them and not specially injurious to the public, the restraint will be held valid.' "

It cannot be held that the requirement under attack was not for a just and honest purpose, or was not for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it was imposed, or that it was not reasonable as between the parties, or that it was specially injurious to the public. It does not appear from the record that it unduly restricts or unduly obstructs the cause of trade. In his adverse examination incorporated in an affidavit filed in support of defendant's motion for summary judgment, Johnson stated that he had no knowledge of any competitor being prejudiced by virtue of the arrangement in the lease. There is no indication of record that the challenged arrangement prejudiced the interests of the public. The claim that it may reasonably be anticipated that the defendant will negotiate similar arrangements with others for the purpose of gaining monopoly of the market, is not substantiated by the record.

[Reasonableness]

By making the improvements to the station, the defendant had an investment for which it was entitled to be remunerated. The protection which it afforded to itself in such respect by its requirement of the minimum amount of gasoline to be purchased by Johnson for the limited period of the contracts, appears reasonable. At most it was a partial restraint, limited as to time and extent of purchases, and did not impede the right of Johnson to purchase and sell products of defendant's competitors upon the premises in quantities as he chose. In F. T. C. v. Sinclair Refining Co. 261 U. S. 473, the court noted that the petroleum industry has been and remains highly competitive. Actually the defendant set Johnson up in business for himself by establishing the outlet not only for its own benefit, but for that of others as well. It seems that by such action the opportunity for competition was enhanced, rather than diminished. The provision in the lease relating to payment of the rentals by the defendant to the bank manifestly was for the bank's protection in the matter of its collection of payment of the loan from the bank of Johnson.

By the Court.—Judgment affirmed.

[¶ 68,595] Myrtle Schreiber, Fannie London, Rose G. Smilay, and Alex Schreiber v. Loew's Incorporated, Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al.

Don Harlo v. Loew's Incorporated, Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, Southern Division. Civil Action Nos. 2164 and 2191, respectively. Dated January 4, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable State Statute.—In treble damage actions brought in a Federal District Court in Michigan, a general six-year Michigan statute of limitations, covering all personal actions, was held to apply to the actions, rather than a Michigan three-year statute of limitations, covering actions to recover damages for injuries to a person or property. In determining the applicable Michigan statute of limitations, the court ruled that state law governs as to the limitations, that the decisions of state courts must be followed to determine to what actions certain statutes of limitations apply, and that the nature of an action under the Federal antitrust laws is determined solely by Federal law.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Tolling of Statute.—The pendency of a Government antitrust action did not suspend the running of a Michigan six-year statute of limitations as to defendants in a private antitrust action which were not named as defendants in the Government antitrust action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.275.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Jurisdiction Over Parties—Service of Process—Dissolved Corporation.—Treble damage actions brought in a Federal District Court in Michigan were dismissed as to a corporation which was dissolved under the laws of New York prior to the institution of the actions. The corporation had not done any business within Michigan since its dissolution, and, having been dissolved, it could not be present in Michigan. The contention that Section 12 of the Clayton Act and the general venue statute (Title 28, U. S. Code, Section 1391(c)) should be interpreted to read "a corporation may be sued in any judicial district in which it is incorporated or licensed to do business or is doing business or has done business in such a manner as to create a claimed cause of action" was rejected. The provisions of the Clayton Act and the general venue statute are phrased in the present tense, and they do not give any right except as a corporation may be found actually present or doing business in a state. At the time of the commencement of the actions, the corporation was not doing business in any state, although it was subject to service of process in New York.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.350.

For the plaintiffs: Elden W. Butzbaugh, Benton Harbor, Mich., and Seymour F. Simon, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Clayton F. Jennings and Everett R. Trebilcock (Ballard, Jennings, Fraser & Parsons), Lansing, Mich., for Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company and W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. Rockwell T. Gust and David A. Howell (Butzel, Eaman, Long, Gust & Kennedy), Detroit, Mich., for Paramount Pictures, Inc., and all remaining defendants.

Opinion

[Plaintiffs]

W. WALLACE KENT, District Judge [In full text]: These actions arise under the anti-trust laws of the United States [1] for damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiffs in the operation of certain theatres. Plaintiffs Schreiber, et al. are the successor owners of the Three Rivers Rialto Theatre in Three Rivers, Michigan, from December 25, 1935, until August 16, 1938. Plaintiff Harlo was the owner and operator of the Harlo Theatre in St. Joseph, Michigan, "from July 1, 1944 up to and including the present time" (paragraph 2 of the complaint which was filed February 5, 1953).

[Defendants]

The defendants are distributors of motion pictures and owners of chains of motion picture theatres with the exception of Butterfield Michigan Theatre Company and W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. All of the defendants were alleged to be parties defendant in the case entitled United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 72 L. Ed. 1260, which was an anti-trust action commenced on July 20, 1938, and terminated completely on February 8, 1950, when the last final decree was alleged to have been entered. Final decrees had previously been entered against R. K. O. Pictures on November 8, 1948, and against Paramount Film Distributing Corporation on March 3, 1949.

Paramount Pictures Inc., a New York corporation, one of the parties defendant in each of the actions was admittedly dissolved as a corporation under the provisions of the laws of the State of New York a substantial period of time prior to the commencement of these actions.

[Motion to Dismiss]

All of the defendants have joined in motions to dismiss on the ground that both actions are barred by the provisions of the Michigan Statutes relative to limitations of actions. Michigan Statute Annotated § 27.605 provides in part as follows:

> "Sec. 27.605. Limitations of personal actions; .... Sec. 13. All actions in any of the courts of this state shall be commenced within six years next after the causes of action shall occur, and not afterward, except as hereinafter specified; Provided, however, ... (2) Actions to recover damages for injuries to person or property shall be brought within three years from the time said actions accrue, and not afterwards;"

[Applicable Statute of Limitations]

The first question before the court in each case is whether plaintiffs are bound by the general six year provision of the above quoted statute or by the specific three year provision, which turns on a determination of whether the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 12 et seq. which gives a right of action to one who "has been injured in his business or property," has the same connotation as the limitation of action provision of the cited Michigan statute which requires plaintiffs to bring "actions to recover damages for injuries to person or property .... within three years."

Counsel have cited us to and the court has examined numerous state statutes relating to limitation of actions and the interpretation by various and sundry state and federal courts of these statutes of limitations as they relate to the meaning of "business" and "property" and whether these terms are synonymous.

It is clear that state law will govern as to limitations and the decisions of state courts must be followed to determine to what actions certain limitations apply. However, the nature of an action under the anti-trust law has been held to be a matter to be determined solely by federal law. Barnes Coal Corp. v. Retail Coal Merchants Assn., et al. (4, 1942) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,217] 128 F. 2d 645, Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickenson Fuel Co. (4, 1934) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,062] 72 F. 2d 885, and Williamson v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corp. (D. C. Del. 1939) 27 F. S. 198. However, certain of the courts have not been consistent in following the above announced rule as appears in Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co., (7, 1951) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925] 191 F. 2d 912; Christensen v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. (D. C. Utah, 1951) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,751] 95 F. S. 446; Jaeger Research Lab. v. R. C. A. (3, 1937) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,162] 90 F. 2d 826; Northern Kentucky Telephone Company v. Southern Bell Tele- phone and Telegraph, et al. (6, 1934) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,063] 73 F. 2d 333, cert. den. 294 U. S. 719. Two Michigan cases have been cited which would appear to be applicable to the present situation. Sweet v. Shreve (1933) 262 Mich. 433 and American Surety Co. v. McKievnan (1943) 304 Mich. 322.

[1] 15 U. S. C. A. 1-7; 15 U. S. C. A. § 12 et seq.

The Sweet case, supra, was a suit for damages for fraud perpetrated upon the plaintiff when the plaintiff purchased a boarding house. It was the defendant's contention that the injury was within the "injury to person or property" section of the Michigan statute relating to the limitation of actions, above cited, and that plaintiff's case was thereby barred because more than three years had elapsed since the cause of action accrued. The court commented that some testimony indicated that the action was commenced within one and one-half years after discovery of the fraud but the court stated at page 435:

> "Furthermore, we do not believe that the present action constitutes one for injuries to person or property. It is a suit brought for the recovery of damages caused plaintiffs as a result of fraudulent representations made by defendants. Previous Michigan decisions have assumed that actions for fraud are covered by the general six-year limitation in section 13976. See Holman v. Moore, 259 Mich. 63, 68; Ramsey v. Child, Hulsmit & Co., 198 Mich. 658, 667; Armstrong v. Rachow, 205 Mich. 168, 179. While there are some authorities in other jurisdictions to the contrary, and it may be claimed that the precise point here involved was not carefully considered in the cases cited, we believe the correct rule to be that, where the damage claimed are not for injuries to specific property, subsection 2 of of 3 Comp. Laws 1929, Sec. 13976, does not apply, but the action may be brought within the general six-year provisions in 3 Comp. Laws 1929, Sec. 13976."

In the American Surety case supra plaintiff surety company had paid its liability under the terms of a certain bond on the defendant who had embezzled funds. Plaintiff then took a note from the defendant on which the suit in question was based. It was defendant's claim that the debt evidenced by the note was discharged by his bankruptcy. The court held that the suit was a suit on a note, but that plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to rely upon defendant's tort, i.e. willful conversion as defeating the claimed discharge in bankruptcy. The court thus held that the willful conversion of money was an injury to property within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act (Title 11 U. S. C. A. § 35).

From the Michigan cases it appears that the present action cannot be neatly labelled or clearly defined in any way that is helpful toward determining the applicability of the Michigan Statute relative to limitations of actions. It would appear that a proper construction of the statute in question would be; any case not clearly otherwise provided for must come within the six-year limitation. Thus the question before the court is whether the present action under the anti-trust laws is clearly provided for by subsection 2 of Section 27.605 M. S. A.

This court is of the opinion that the distinction drawn by a distinguished jurist is conclusive in the proper definition of this action. In Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, 51 L. Ed. 241, 27 S. C. 65, at page 398, Mr. Justice Holmes, delivering the opinion of the court, stated as follows:

> "It was pressed upon us that formerly the limitations addressed themselves to forms of action, that actions upon the case, such as this would have been, were barred in three years, following St. 21 Jac. 1, c. 21, § 3, and that when a change was necessitated by the doing away with the old forms of action, it is not to be supposed that the change was intended to affect the substance, or more than the mode of stating the time allowed. Of course, it was argued also that this was an injury to property, within the plain meaning of the words. But we are satisfied, on the whole, and in view of its juxtaposition with detention and conversion, that the phrase has a narrower intent. It may be that it has a somewhat broader scope than was intimated below, and that some wrongs are within it besides physical damage to tangible property. But there is a sufficiently clear distinction between injuries to property and 'injured in his business or property,' the latter being the language of the act of Congress. A man is injured in his property when his property is diminished. He would not be said to have suffered an injury to his property unless the harm fell upon some object more definite and less ideal than his total wealth. A trademark, or a tradename, or a title, is property, and is regarded as an object capable of injury in various ways. But when a man is made poorer by an extravagant bill we do not regard his wealth as a unity, or the tort, if there is one, as directed against that unity as an object. We do not go behind the person of the sufferer. We say that he has been defrauded or subjected to duress, or whatever it may be, and stop there. It was urged that the opening article to which we have referred expressed an intention to bar all civil actions, but that hardly helps the construction of any particular article following, since the dragnet at the end, 2776, catches all cases not 'expressly provided for.' On the whole case we agree with the court below."

For this reason this court is satisfied that the plaintiffs are not bound by the three-year provision of the Statute of Limitations and that the action may be commenced at any time within six years after the cause of action has accrued.

[Tolling of Statute]

In view of the conclusion that the court has reached relative to the application of the Michigan Statute of Limitations it is unnecessary to determine the effect of the decrees entered against certain of the defendants in the Paramount Pictures case since less than six years passed prior to the filing of these actions, and clearly the statute of limitations had been tolled by Section 5 of the Clayton Act, Title 15 U. S. C. § 16, which provides in part:

"Whenever any suit or proceeding in equity or criminal prosecution is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain or punish violations of any of the anti-trust laws, the running of the statute of limitations in respect of each and every private right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said suit or proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof."

The courts seem to have uniformly held that the tolling effect of the above quoted statutory proviso does not extend to defendants not parties to the government action. Levy v. Paramount Pictures (Calif. 1952) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,327] 104 F. S. 787; Momand v. Universal Film Exchanges (1, 1948) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,360] 172 F. 2d 37, cert. den. 93 L. Ed. 1118; Christensen v. Paramount Pictures Inc. (Utah, 1951) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,751] 95 F. S. 446.

It is agreed by all counsel that Butterfield Michigan Theatre Company and W. S. Butterfield Theatres Inc. were not named as parties defendant nor as co-conspirators in United States v. Paramount Pictures Inc. supra.

In Civil Action 2164 the plaintiffs allege that they, as successors in interest to the Three Rivers Rialto Theatre, a Michigan corporation, claim damages alleged to have been sustained by said corporation from December 25, 1935 to August 16, 1938. Since no cause of action could have arisen and no damages could have been suffered subsequent to September 1, 1938, the date on which the corporation was dissolved, the action must be dismissed as to the defendant Butterfield Michigan Theatre Company and defendant W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., the statute of limitations not having been tolled as to those defendants.

In Civil Action No. 2191 the plaintiff operated the theatre in question from July 1, 1949 until the commencement of the action in question. The allegation of damage relates to the period until at least January 1, 1950.

The Court having previously ruled that the six-year statute of limitations is applicable to this action it is not important whether the statute of limitations was tolled as to the Butterfield defendants. For this reason the motion to dismiss as to plaintiff Don Harlo by defendants Butterfield Michigan Theatre Company and W. S. Butterfield Theatres Inc. must be denied.

[Service of Process]

There is left one question relating to the service of process upon Paramount Pictures Inc. Paramount Pictures Inc. was dissolved as a corporation under the laws of the State of New York on December 30, 1949, and a notice of withdrawal from the State of Michigan was filed and became effective on January 11, 1950. Admittedly, this defendant has not done any business within the State of Michigan since that time and having been dissolved it could not be present in the State of Michigan.

Plaintiffs, however, rely on Mehl v. Barr Transfer Co., 305 Mich. 276 (1943) wherein the defendant, a corporation existing under the laws of a foreign state not licensed to do business in Michigan, operated a motor vehicle within the territorial limits of the State of Michigan. The motor vehicle was involved in a traffic accident which gave right to a suit for damages by the injured party. During the period between the occurrence of the accident and the institution of the suit the defendant corporation had been dissolved under the laws of the state in which it was organized. The Supreme Court of Michigan held in substance that a defendant operating a motor vehicle within the State of Michigan was subject to service of process in accordance with the provisions of the Michigan statute relating to nonresident motorists so long as it was subject to service of process under the laws of the state which gave it a right to exist, regardless of the fact that by law it had been dissolved though it was still subject to service of process in the state of domicile.

Defendant Paramount Pictures Inc. claims that the matter is controlled by the provisions of Title 15 U. S. C. A. § 22—

> "Sec. 22. District in which to sue corporation. Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found."

In effect the plaintiffs claim that the statutes applicable to this situation should be interpreted to read "a corporation may be sued in any judicial district in which it is incorporated or licensed to do business or is doing business or has done business in such a manner as to create a claimed cause of action." However, the provisions of the venue section of the Clayton Act, Title 15 U. S. C. A. § 22, and the provisions of the general venue statute Title 28 U. S. C. A. § 1391(c) are phrased in the present tense, and do not give any right except as a corporation may be found actually present in or doing business in a state.

At the time of the commencement of this action Paramount Pictures Inc. was not doing business within the meaning of the venue statutes in any state although it was subject to the service of process in the State of New York. For the above reasons the motion to dismiss by the defendant Paramount Pictures Inc. is granted.

[Motions To Strike]

There remain only certain non-briefed motions to strike certain allegations in the complaints. The court is satisfied that the allegations relating to the actions of the defendants over periods of time prior to the time when the causes of action arose may well become material to the disposition of the present actions. Under the provision of Rule 12 Federal Rules of Civil Procedure such matters should not be stricken unless it would be unduly prejudicial to the defendants to permit them to remain. We do not find such a situation in this case. The motions to strike are denied.

[Rulings]

In conclusion the court finds (1) that the six-year statute of limitations of the State of Michigan applies to these actions and the motions to dismiss based upon the three-year statute of limitations are denied; (2) that the Butterfield Michigan Theatre Company and W. S. Butterfield Theatres Inc., named as defendants in Civil Action No. 2164 were not named as parties defendant in United States v. Paramount Theatres Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 72 L. Ed. 1260, and that the action may be dismissed as to those defendants; (3) that the motion by Butterfield Michigan Theatre Company and W. S. Butterfield Theatres Inc. named as defendants in Civil Action No. 2191, to dismiss the action is denied; (4) that Paramount Pitcures Inc. was not subject to the service of process in the State of Michigan, and cannot be brought into the State of Michigan under the terms of any statute in an action of this type and the action is dismissed as to that defendant, and (5) the motions to strike the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint are denied.

[¶ 68,596] Enterprise Industries, Inc. v. The Texas Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 21—October Term, 1956. Docket No. 24045. Argued November 9, 1956. Decided January 7, 1957.

Appeal by the defendant from a judgment of the District Court for the District of Connecticut (SMITH, J., presiding), awarding damages to the plaintiff under the Robinson-Patman Act (§ 13(a), Title 15, U. S. C.).

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Measure of Damages—Price Discrimination.—An award of damages based on the amount of unlawful price discriminations was held to be improper in an action in which a refiner was found to have granted price allowances to its competing gasoline dealers on the condition that they drop their prices to a level competitive (equal price) with neighboring dealers in rival brands of gasoline and to have consequently discriminated in price against one of its dealers which either had not availed itself of the price allowances or had not received an allowance as large as its competitors. The proper measure of damages was held to be the dealer's gross loss of profits resulting from the discriminations. The measure of the dealer's loss, if any, was not the difference between the sale price charged the dealer and the lowest price charged any of the dealer's competitors. The Robinson-Patman Act should not be read as creating any presumption that where the fact of damage is shown, the pecuniary amount or equivalent of the prohibited discrimination is the proper measure of damages.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.390, 3508, 3515; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.750, 9010.475, 9011.640.

For the appellant: Milton Handler.

For the appellee: Wallace R. Burke.

Reversing a judgment of the U. S. District Court, District of Connecticut, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,163.

Before: HAND, MEDINA and LUMBARD, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

HAND, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The defendant appeals from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action tried to a judge, awarding treble damages suffered by the defendant's violation of the Robinson-Patman Act (§ 13(a), Title 15, U. S. C.). The plaintiff was a corporation, operating a gasoline "filling station" in the town of Wethersfield, Connecticut, on the right hand side, going south, of the main highway from Boston to New York, a short distance south of the boundary of Hartford. During the period in suit it was a lessee of this station from the defendant at a rent that for the purposes of this action may be taken as two cents for every gallon of gasoline sold. It is not uncommon in the industry for a filling station to start what has come to be known as a "gas war"; that is, to cut the prevailing price of gasoline, which other competing stations must meet by a corresponding cut in order to keep up their sales; and that makes it important, if indeed not necessary, for the producing companies to reduce their price to their own competing stations. In the neighborhood of the city of Hartford between November 1950 and February 1952, two such "wars" occurred: the first lasted from November 1950 to July 1951; the second from November 1951 to February 1952. In each period the defendant by a rebate or allowance reduced its selling price to its tributary stations enough to enable them to meet a price cut, and yet to keep a net margin to each of two cents.

[Pricing Practice]

During a price war different prices prevail in different areas, dependent apparently upon the relative advantage of position of the stations. Moreover, as it was the defendant's practice not to underbid the prices of other producers, it imposed as a condition upon any allowance or rebate that its stations should not undercut the prevailing price for other brands. Thus it followed that, although the defendant cut its price enough to allow Texaco stations to meet the reduction, its price to a station, which like the plaintiff's was in an area of higher prices, was higher than its price to Texaco stations in areas of lower prices. This was the discrimination of which the plaintiff complained, for it alleged that a greater allowance was extended to Texaco stations that were in competition with itself.

[Plaintiff's Business]

The larger part of the plaintiff's sales were to cars coming from points east of Hartford and bound south; and, as there were no stations of any kind for about forty miles to the east on the main highway, the plaintiff enjoyed as to this through traffic an important advantage. On the other hand Judge Smith found that there were nine Texaco stations so situated that they did compete with the plaintiff for local sales, by which he meant sales to cars of workmen and others that commuted back and forth from Hartford, in some cases for a distance of twenty miles or more. Such buyers were advised of the prices posted by the different stations as they passed, and would select the lowest. This finding the defendant challenges as "clearly erroneous" because the testimony was not definite that these stations did compete with the plaintiff, but at most proved no more than that there might be such competition.

[Proof of Damages]

However, even though we were to agree that the finding was right, and that for that reason the plaintiff had proved its claim for relief, we do not think that it proved the amount of its damages, or indeed that it suffered any damages at all. The wrong was in selling gasoline to the nine Texaco competitors at a lower price than to the plaintiff; and a distinction should be made at the outset between the first "gas war"—November 1, 1950 to July 1951—and the second—November 1951 to February 1952. During the second the plaintiff refused to accept any allowance or rebate and in consequence was free to charge what it could get for gasoline. The equation measuring its loss in that period may therefore be stated as follows. The gross loss was the profit on any sales that it would have made to the nine competitors' customers whom it could, and would, have retained, had it been able to buy from the defendant at the same price as the competitors. From this must, however, be deducted what added profit it may have got by being free to charge what it chose, particularly in the through traffic where there was little competition. Moreover, we have no reliable figures from which to appraise either the gross loss or the gain, for the plaintiff has not shown how much of the business of the nine Texaco competitors it would have retained or obtained at the same price as they; and equally we do not know what would have been its profit on the south bound through traffic if it had sold at the prevailing prices.

So much, therefore, for the second "war." During the first the plaintiff had had the advantage of the rebate or allowance, but had been obliged to sell to all customers at the prices prevailing in its area, as well as to pay a higher price than the nine. Of course the profit gained by means of the rebate or allowance may have been less than that lost by the lower prices granted to the nine together with the lower prices required to meet the prevailing prices in the through traffic; but it is impossible to know whether that was so, and even more impossible to appraise what the loss was, if there was any. The plaintiff kept no books from which it could be learned what were its profits from either part of its business, and even if it had, there was uncontradicted evidence that in June of 1951 the plaintiff was not charging the prevailing price. Moreover, the "wire recording" of the interview between Raymond, the plaintiff's president, and two of the defendant's officers, leaves no doubt that in that month they were complaining to him of his failure to conform. For these reasons we hold that there was also no evidence that would have sustained a finding as to the plaintiff's loss during the first "war."

[Measure of Damages]

The judge proceeded by an entirely different method; he assessed the damages by accepting as the measure of the plaintiff's loss the difference between the sale price charged the plaintiff and the lowest price charged any of the nine Texaco stations. For this he relied upon the decision of the majority of the Eighth Circuit in Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. v. Gus Blass Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,400] 150 F. 2d 988. In Sun Cosmetic Shoppe v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,521], 178 F. 2d 150, we held that the discrimination was not a proper measure of the loss; and the Eighth Circuit appears to have overruled its earlier view in a second majority decision, American Can Co. v. Russellville Canning Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,895], 191 F. 2d 38. There remains, however, a passage in the opinion of the Supreme Court in Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,553], 330 U. S. 743, 757, in which Justice Jackson said that, if the buyer showed that the prices charged were "discriminatory, * * * it would establish its right to recover three times the discriminatory difference without proving more than the illegality of the prices. If the prices are illegally discriminatory, petitioner has been damaged, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, at least in the amount of that discrimination." The question then before the court was whether discrimination should bar a seller from recovering the contract price from the buyer and should confine him to a recovery on a quantum meruit; and the passage quoted was only an answer to to the buyer's argument that, unless he was allowed to disaffirm the sale, he would be without any other relief. In that case the addition of 5% to the cost to the plaintiff of its cans, even if coupled with relief from "delivery charges" (155 Fla. 877) might well not have been passed on to the consumer, and have been absorbed by the canners, who sold fruit juices in cans. If that were true, the amount of the discrimination might well be a proper measure of the buyer's damages. On the other hand, in the case at bar we have as little means of knowing whether or how far the plaintiff passed on to car owners any difference in the price charged it, as we have of knowing how far the addition affected the gallonage that it sold. In Interstate Commerce Com. v. United States, 289 U. S. 385, it is true that an award to the shipper of the "discrimination" would presumably have been unlawful, because by hypothesis the rate charged him had been reasonable. Nevertheless, the reasoning of Cardozo, J., in discussing the proper way to measure damages is relevant here. "If by reason of the discrimination, the preferred producers have been able to divert business that would otherwise have gone to the disfavored shipper, damage has resulted to the extent of the diverted profits. If the effect of the discrimination has been to force the shipper to sell at a lowered * * * price * * * damage has resulted to the extent of the reduction. But none of these consequences is a necessary inference from discrimination without more" (pp. 390, 391). "Overcharge and discrimination have very different consequences, and must be kept distinct in thought" (p. 390).

[Construction of Statute]

At all events the statute should not be read as creating any presumption that "where the fact of damage is shown * * * the pecuniary amount or equivalent of the prohibited discrimination" is the proper "measure of damages." Exactly that was a provision in the bill, when it came from the Senate to the House (S. 3154, 74th Cong., 2d Sess.), and it was eliminated in conference. This action becomes particularly persuasive in contrast with the retention of that part of § 13(b) that imposes a burden of proof on the seller as to the effect of a "discrimination." * Congress obviously did not wish the seller to be under a double burden, as soon as the buyer proved that he had been charged a higher price than any of his competitors; especially the burden of proving the negative upon an issue as to which the seller could know nothing and the buyer everything. Indeed, that was a burden that Congress might well hesitate to impose in an action in which the seller must not only make good the buyer's loss, but also pay him a fine in double the amount of his loss. It is fair to suppose that, if Congress had thought the evil of price discrimination so great as to require so drastic a procedural support, it would have made its purpose more clear.

[Reversed]

In view of what we have said it is not necessary to consider whether the defendant proved its defense under the proviso to § 13(b). All the evidence was so fully developed that there is no reason for another trial.

Judgment reversed; complaint dismissed.

---

* Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,353], 148 F. 2d 378 (2 Cir.), cert. denied 326 U. S. 734; Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Brands, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,797, 62,846], 189 F. 2d 510, 515 (2 Cir.).

[¶ 68,597] Buryl J. Lazar, Jorge Lazar and Hattie Lazar, co-partners trading as Globe Feather & Down Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1956, January Session, 1957. No. 11569. Dated January 10, 1957.

Petition for Review of Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresentations—Down Content of Pillows—Average of Analyses—Down Fiber.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a manufacturer falsely represented that its pillows contain all new material consisting of imported white goose down, or contain all new material consisting of 50 per cent goose down and 50 per cent goose feathers, was affirmed on the ground that the finding was supported by substantial evidence. An average of analyses made by experts on behalf of the Commission and the manufacturer disclosed that the average down content, including down fiber, of one type of pillow was 83.85 per cent. Since the average down content of this type of pillow was not within the 15 per cent tolerance prescribed by the trade practice rules for the feather and down products industry, the down content of the pillows was misrepresented. Thus, a pillow represented to contain 100 per cent down is in compliance if it contains 85 per cent down. It is not enough that a manufacturer merely approach this line, he must as a minimum reach it. As to the manufacturer's other type of pillow, an average of the analyses disclosed that the average down content was 36.5 per cent. Therefore, the down content of these pillows was misrepresented since the allowable tolerance of 15 per cent was exceeded. The manufacturer's contention that the Commission's cease and desist order would require the impossible, that the order is therefore unreasonable and arbitrary, and that, consequently, the order is repugnant to the United States Constitution as a denial of due process was rejected.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.482; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.91.

For the petitioners: Marshall M. Holleb, Chicago, Ill.

For the respondent: Robert B. Dawkins, Washington, D. C.

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6188.

Before DUFFY, Chief Judge, MAJOR and LINDLEY, Circuit Judges.

[Review of FTC Order]

MAJOR, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is a petition under Section 5(c) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45(c), to review and set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), issued June 30, 1955, ordering petitioners Buryl J. Lazar, Jorge Lazar and Hattie Lazar, co-partners trading as Globe Feather & Down Company (hereinafter referred to as Globe), to cease and desist from misrepresenting the identity of the type of filling material contained in its feather and down products or of the proportions of each type when the filling material is a mixture of more than one kind or type.

[FTC Complaint]

The proceeding was commenced on June 10, 1954, by the issuance of a complaint by the Commission, naming the above named petitioners as respondents. The complaint alleged that Globe is engaged in the manufacture and sale in interstate commerce of pillows and other products known as feather and down products in competition with other manufacturers and that, in the course of their business, petitioners caused labels to be affixed to Globe pillows containing the following typical statements:

"Trade Name of Pillow	Statement
"Little Boy Blue	All new material consisting of imported White Goose Down
"Manchester	All new material consisting of 50% Goose Down, 50% Goose Feathers"

The complaint alleged that the representations as to the filling material were false and misleading and had a tendency to deceive dealers and purchasers as to the content of the filling material, thus resulting in injury to competition in commerce and prejudice to the public. It was further alleged that these acts and practices constituted unfair and deceptive acts and practices and unfair methods of competition within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 41, et seq.

[Findings of Examiner]

Globe and the individual petitioners by answer admitted the jurisdictional averments of the complaint and that their pillows were labeled as alleged but denied all other material allegations. Hearings were had before a designated Examiner of the Commission who, on December 17, 1954, issued his initial decision containing findings of fact, together with his conclusions. The Examiner found and so concluded that the charges against petitioners' "Little Boy Blue" pillows had not been sustained but that the charges against the "Manchester" pillows had been, and, accordingly, issued a cease and desist order. Upon appeal, the Commission reversed the decision of the Examiner relating to the "Little Boy Blue" pillows but sustained his decision relating to the "Manchester" pillows, and issued its cease and desist order now under attack.

[Related Proceedings]

The action against petitioners was one of eleven proceedings brought by the Commission involving the feather and down products industry, ten of which were contemporaneously heard and considered by the same Examiner. These related proceedings covered practically all pillow production in the industry. One of the related proceedings heard contemporaneously by the Examiner was Burton-Dixie Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 11570, now pending in this court, in which a decision has been rendered and an opinion filed simultaneously with the decision and opinion in the instant matter.

The nature of the product involved and the proceessing method employed by the industry in the manufacturing of various types of pillows, as well as pertinent provisions of the Trade Practice Rules for the feather and down products industry, are set forth in our opinion in Burton-Dixie and need not be repeated. Moreover, the findings, reasoning and conclusions of the Examiner and the Commission in the instant case are similar to those in Burton-Dixie, with such variation as is occasioned by a difference in the facts.

[Pillow Production]

As we pointed out in Burton-Dixie, pillow production falls generally into three types: (1) the down pillow, which is always recognized to contain some light feathers, (2) the mixed whole feather or whole feather and down pillow, and (3) the crushed feather pillow. Burton-Dixie involved pillows of the first and third types, and the instant case those of the first and second types. The controversy in Burton-Dixie revolved largely around the appraisement to be made of the testimony of J. Davis Donovan, an expert witness for the Commission, and of Ernest Anderson, an expert witness retained by members of the industry. The same controversy, to a lesser extent perhaps, exists in the instant case, particularly as it relates to petitioners' pillow labeled "Little Boy Blue."

[Analyses By Expert Witnesses]

Both expert witnesses tested and submitted an analysis of the contents of the "Little Boy Blue" pillows, using the same process and method as we have shown in Burton-Dixie. The analysis made by Donovan discloses a goose down content (including down fiber) of 80.6% in one pillow and 78.7% in the other pillow. Anderson's analysis discloses down and fiber in one pillow of 89.3% and in the other, 88.8%. We note that Donovan in the instant case included down fiber as down, while in Burton-Dixie it was excluded.

Here again, the Examiner averaged the four analyses (two by Donovan and two by Anderson) and found an average down content of 83.85%. The Commission here makes the same argument as it did in Burton-Dixie, that down fiber should not be included as down and that the Examiner improperly averaged the four analyses. We rejected that argument in Burton-Dixie, and for the same reason reject it here.

[Tolerance Rule]

There is this difference, however; in Burton-Dixie the average as found by the Examiner was 85.8% while in the instant case the average was 83.85%. Thus, in the former, the average down content was within the 15% tolerance prescribed by the rules, while in the instant case it was not. Notwithstanding this deficiency in the average down content, the Examiner found compliance. In doing so he stated:

"Taking into consideration the numerous variables involved, and the lack of absolute accuracy in any of these tests, this percentage is found not to be substantially outside the reasonable tolerances applicable to pillows of this type, and the conclusion is reached that the charges of the complaint have not ben adequately established by reliable, probative and substantial evidence as to these pillows."

In our view, the Commission was justified in rejecting the conclusion of the Examiner on this phase of the case, even though his reasoning is not without plausibility. It is true, of course, that the nature of the product is such as to create uncertainty and variations in analyses but, even so, the purpose of the 15% tolerance was to make allowance therefor. By this rule, a pillow represented to contain 100% down is in compliance if it contains 85%. In other words, the line between compliance and noncompliance was fixed at a down content of 85%. It is not enough that a manufacturer merely approach this line, he must as a minimum reach it. Any other view would seriously impair the efficacy of the tolerance rule. If the tolerance per-cent is increased in one case even by 1%, it might in some other case be increased by 3%, or 5%, or even more. The existing confusion and uncertainty would thereby be enhanced rather than diminished.

[Tolerance Exceeded]

As to petitioners' "Manchester" pillows, represented to contain 50% goose down and 50% goose feathers, the analysis of the Commission's expert showed an average down content of 36.5%. Anderson submitted no analysis of these pillows. Petitioner Lazar testified mostly concerning the mixture from which these pillows were filled and it is upon this testimony that petitioners rely in support of their contention that the analysis of Donovan should not be accepted. The Examiner, however, gave credence to the testimony of Donovan and, with reference to the average down content as found by him, stated:

"This is substantially greater than the allowable, reasonable tolerance of 15%, and cannot be justified. It is concluded, therefore, that these pillows have been mislabeled and that the representations made by respondents in respect thereto are false and misleading."

[Validity of Order]

The Commission sustained this finding or conclusion by the Examiner and we think properly so. Petitioners contend that there is no evidence that the alleged mislabeling in fact deceived or misled anyone or that the proceedings were in the public interest. We approve, without discussion, the findings of the Examiner sustained by the Commission on these issues. Petitioners also contend that the proposed cease and desist order would require the impossible; that it is therefore unreasonable and arbitrary and, consequently, repugnant to the Constitution of the United States as a denial of due process. This contention was advanced and rejected by the Second Circuit in Buchwalter etc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,425], 235 F. 2d 344, 346. We also reject it.

[Order Affirmed]

The petition to set aside the cease and desist order is denied, the order is affirmed and an appropriate order will be entered in this court.

[¶ 68,598] Frances Netter and Robert Netter v. Ashland Paper Mills, Inc., White-Washburne Corp., Bridgeport Paper Company, Inc., Isidor Baum, Seymour I. Baum, Morton J. Baum, Sarah Baum, and A. P. W. Products Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 107-271. Filed January 9, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Antitrust Violation—Motion To Stay Merger.—In a stockholders' derivative action, the stockholders' motion to stay the proceedings for the merger of their corporation with another corporation on the ground that the merger would violate the antitrust laws was denied. There was nothing alleged in the affidavits which would justify the court in imposing a prior restraint upon the merger in anticipation that it would prove on a trial to have been in violation of the antitrust laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9022.20.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures —Supplemental Complaint.—In a stockholders' derivative action charging that the merger of their corporation with another corporation would violate the antitrust laws, the plaintiffs were permitted to file a supplemental complaint against the corporation which was merging with their corporation. The allegations of the supplemental complaint contained the claim that the other corporation had gone into the merger proceedings with full knowledge of the purpose of their corporation to violate the antitrust laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9026.

For the plaintiffs: Netter & Netter, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Jaffin, Schneider, Kimmel & Galpeer, and Irving E. Kanner, all of New York, N. Y.

Memorandum on Motion to Stay Merger

DIMOCK, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiffs move for an order staying proceedings for the merger of A. P. W. Products Company, Inc., with Allied Paper Corporation or any other proceedings which will result in the absorption of A. P. W. by Allied. This is only one branch of an omnibus motion made by plaintiffs but I will dispose of it first and will refer to it for convenience as a motion to stay the merger of the two corporations. The corporations will be referred to as A. P. W. and Allied respectively.

[Parties]

The action is one brought by plaintiffs, stockholders of A. P. W., to enforce their derivative rights against the individual defendants, Isidor Baum, Seymour I. Baum, Morton J. Baum and Sarah Baum, and the corporate defendants, Ashland Paper Mills, Inc., White-Washburne Corp. and Bridgeport Paper Company, Inc. Plaintiffs proceed under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1, section 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13, and section 16(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 896, 15 U. S. C. § 78p(b). The individual defendants own two-thirds of the stock of A. P. W. so that the consent of two-thirds of the stockholders of A. P. W., necessary for the merger under section 21 of the New York Stock Corporation Law, is a foregone conclusion. Plaintiffs allege that it is proposed that the merger be accomplished by the exchange of one share of Allied common stock for eleven shares of A. P. W. common stock and that any such allocation is grossly unfair to the A. P. W. stockholders. Plaintiffs go on to say that they are placed in the position of either accepting unfair treatment in the merger or else losing their right to bring this action as stockholders by rejecting the unfair treatment and receiving the appraised value of their stock under section 21 of the New York Stock Corporation Law.

[Issues]

This plea raises the question whether defendants in a stockholders' derivative action have it in their power to eliminate the action, in a case where they own the control of the corporation and own substantially all of the stock of some other corporation, by simply arranging for a merger of the two on terms unfair to the stockholders in the corporation for whose benefit the derivative action is brought and thus forcing the complaining stockholders to accept the appraisal of their stock and disqualification as stockholders to maintain a stockholders' derivative action. On the other hand, the second question is raised: should stockholders of a corporation be permitted to hold up a proposed merger by bringing a stockholders' derivative action and alleging that the terms of the proposed merger are unfair and a mere device for freezing them and their lawsuit out at the appraisal price?

The facts presented on this motion do not raise the first question in its most extreme form. There is no allegation that the individual defendants own substantially all the stock of Allied. If the eleven to one ratio is unfair, therefore, the individual defendants must suffer from this unfairness to just the same degree as plaintiffs. To meet this point one of the plaintiffs says in an affidavit, "Surely the Baums would not dispose of their stock on the proposed terms except for the 'additional' benefits which they can derive out of the transaction. Although I am presently in no position to know all of such possible benefits, it is clear that the Baums would welcome the elimination of this law suit, as well as the elimination of A. P. W. as a competitor of their wholly owned corporation." Plaintiffs thus do not make a very strong case.

The question here is therefore the bald one: where plaintiffs have brought a stockholders' derivative action and a proposal is made to merge the corporation in which they are stockholders with another and plaintiffs allege that their share of the stock of the resulting corporation would not adequately recognize the value of their stock in the old corporation in the light of the claim presented in the stockholders' derivative action, must the merger be postponed until the outcome of the derivative action?

[Appraisal]

If plaintiffs did not introduce the element of the pending stockholders' derivative action into the problem it would be perfectly clear that they would have no right to a stay of the proposed merger. The sole remedy of one who objects to a proposed merger is to go to appraisal under the terms of the statute. Beloff v. Consolidated Edison Co. of N. Y., 300 N. Y. 11, 19. Such an appraisal is intended to give effect to every potentiality of the objecting stockholders' stock. Anderson v. International Minerals & Chemical Corp., 295 N. Y. 343, 350. The argument to the contrary in the case where a stockholders' derivative action is pending is based on the claim that such appraisals are usually made at a figure very close to the market price of the stock and that in the case of a stockholders' derivative action brought by a very small minority of the stockholders they are entitled to put to the test their belief that the claim asserted in the stockholders' derivative action is of much more value than anything reflected in the current market price. Stated another way, to force a merger on the plaintiff stockholders is to force upon them a settlement of the case at the market place's estimate of its value instead of their estimate.

This argument can be robbed of force by treating the problem in the appraisal proceedings not as the estimation of the value of the derivative claim for settlement purposes but as the actual determination of the validity of that claim. The appraiser can fix the value of the dissenting stock without reference to the claim asserted and then, after determining the validity or invalidity of the claim, may, if the determination is that the claim is valid, add to the appraisal as made an amount equal to the complaining stockholders' share in the recovery which the appraiser holds they would have obtained.

Thus, while the plaintiffs in the stockholders' derivative action would, in form, lose their lawsuit by the merger, they could obtain a very effective substitute by going to appraisal in the merger proceedings and, in substance, trying out their lawsuit on its merits before the appraiser.

Certainly that substitute is adequate in a case such as this where no evidence has been submitted to support a claim that the defendants in the stockholders' derivative action were in a position where they could afford to set up a merger whose terms were deliberately unfair to the stockholders in the corporation in which the plaintiffs held shares.

[Antitrust Claim]

As an additional ground for staying the merger, plaintiffs allege that it would result in further restraint of trade and thus would constitute one more act in the course of conduct of which they complain as violating section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1, and section 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13. It seems to me that to substantiate a stay of a merger on the ground that it would violate the antitrust laws would require an even stronger case than if the stay were desired only to preserve a stockholders' derivative action. Nothing that is alleged in the affidavits would justify me in imposing a prior restraint upon the merger in anticipation that it would prove on a trial to have been in violation of the anti-trust laws. See Anderson-Friberg, Inc. v. Justin R. Clary & Son, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,852], 98 F. Supp. 75; DeKoven v. Lake Share & M. S. Ry. Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 216 Fed. 955.

The motion to stay the merger is denied.

[Supplemental Complaint]

Besides seeking to stay the merger, plaintiffs' motion has other branches. Plaintiffs seek leave to file a supplemental complaint in which Allied is named as an additional defendant and they ask leave to bring in Allied as such a defendant.

These branches of the motion are opposed on the ground that no enforcible claim is made out in the proposed supplemental complaint. I do not propose to pass on that question. I am disposed to permit plaintiffs to assert whatever claims they think that they possess. Whether or not their pleadings state a claim can be later determined.

Since the new allegations contain the claim that Allied has gone into the merger proceedings with full knowledge of the purpose of the other defendants thereby to violate the anti-trust laws I can see no reason for refusing plaintiffs the right to make Allied a party.

The motion for leave to file a supplemental complaint and to make Allied Paper Corporation a party defendant is granted.

[¶ 68,599] United States v. Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc.; Confectionery & Tobacco Drivers & Warehousemen's Union, Local 805, Affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers, A. F. of L.; The Rowe Corporation; Cigarette Service, Inc.; United Tobacco Corporation; Herald Vending Corporation; County Enterprises, Inc.; Matthew Forbes; Milton Holt; Arthur Gluck; Gustave Stern; Jackson Bloom; Harold Jacobs; and Louis Price.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 92-388. Filed January 9, 1957.

Case No. 1193 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Allocation of Markets—Restricting Competition—Cigarette Vending Machines.—A trade association of cigarette vending machine operators, members of the association, a labor union, and others were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding (1) to allocate or divide locations, (2) to leave any person free from competition in the selection of locations, the placement of vending machines in locations, or the solicitation of location owners, (3) to hinder or restrict any person from placing a vending machine in any location, (4) to hinder or restrict any person from competing for a location, or (5) to hinder or restrict any location owner from selecting or doing business with any operator of his choice, placing or operating his own vending machine, or selling cigarettes over the counter.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468, 2005.605; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.240.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Agreements Not to Compete.—A trade association of cigarette vending machine operators, members of the association, and others were prohibited by a consent decree from refraining from competing for an open location because (1) another operator has evidenced an interest in placing a vending machine in that location, or (2) another operator once had a vending machine in that location. However, the decree did not prohibit any operator from entering into a legally valid covenant not to compete which is an integral part of a binding contract for the sale or purchase of the business of an operator.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.025; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.240; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Coercion and Intimidation.—A trade association of cigarette vending machine operators, members of the association, and others were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) using coercion to prevent any location owner from selecting and doing business with a vending machine operator of his own choice, (2) using coercion to prevent any person from competing for a location, or (3) inducing or attempting to induce any labor union, through any of its officers, members, or agents, to coerce or persuade a location owner not to permit a particular operator to place or operate a vending machine in his location.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.575; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Duration of Contracts.—A trade association of cigarette vending machine operators, members of the association, a labor union, and others were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any contract with a location owner for the placement of and sale of cigarettes through a vending machine, unless such contract shall be for a period not longer than three years and have no provision for automatic renewal at the end of the period.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.300.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Trade Associations—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Use of Trade Association Facilities.—A trade association of cigarette vending machine operators was prohibited by a consent decree from using or permitting the use of its facilities to carry out or enforce any agreement which was prohibited by any provision of the decree.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.121.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Withholding Union Labor.—A labor union was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) preventing any cigarette vending machine operator from securing or employing service men who are members of the union, (2) threatening to withhold or withholding union labor from any vending machine operator, or otherwise discriminating against any vending machine operator in the furnishing of union labor, for the purpose of inducing vending machine operator to join, or carry out any rules of a defendant trade association or any other association of vending machine operators, or (3) advising or compelling a location owner to refuse to do business with a particular vending machine operator because such operator is not a member of the defendant trade association or any other association of operators.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Union Activities.—A consent decree entered against a trade association of cigarette vending machine operators, members of the association, a labor union, and others provided that nothing in the decree should be deemed to prevent the labor union, its officers, agents, and members from (1) entering into and carrying out the terms of a collective bargaining agreement with a defendant trade association or with any other association of vending machine operators, or (2) initiating, participating in, and executing, solely in its separate capacity, policies and activities relating solely to a labor dispute concerning compensation or conditions of employment.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.45.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Amendment of Trade Association's By-Laws—Expulsion of Members—Listings of Placements and Removals of Vending Machines—Membership.—A trade association of cigarette vending machine operators was required by a consent decree (1) to amend its by-laws to incorporate therein certain provisions of the decree, (2) to require, as a condition of membership, that each present and future member (a) abide by the terms of such provisions of the decree, (b) file with the association a listing of each placement and removal of a vending machine, and (c) where any such placement is pursuant to a contract with a location owner, file with the association the facts of the existence and of the expiration date of such contract; and (3) to expel promptly from membership any present or future member who violates any such provision of the decree. The association was required to receive from any operator listings of that operator's placements and removals of vending machines and to report to every operator, members and non-members of the association, who shall make inquiry concerning a particular location, the name of the operator listed with the association as having a vending machine at that location and the expiration date of any contract between that operator and the location owner listed with the association. Also, the association was required to grant non-discriminatory membership to operators of cigarette vending machines.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60, 8401.21, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; John D. Swartz, W. D. Kilgore, Jr., and Richard B. O'Donnell, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; and Richard Owen, Louis Perlmutter, Ralph S. Goodman, and George S. Leisure, Jr., Trial Attorneys.

For the defendants: Parker, Chapin & Flattau, by Samuel Chapin, for Arthur Gluck, The Rowe Corporation, and The Rowe Corporation, as successor to defendant, The Rowe Corporation. Goldstein & Goldstein, by Ely Levy, for Cigarette Service, Inc., and Gustave Stern. Mervin C. Pollak for Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc., Matthew Forbes, United Tobacco Corporation, Jackson Bloom, Herald Vending Corporation, Harold Jacobs, County Enterprises, Inc., and Louis Price. Katz & Wolchok, by Charles Katz, for Local 805 and Milton Holt.

For a prior decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,183.

Final Judgment

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on April 28, 1954, and the defendants having respectively appeared and filed their separate answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and the defendants, by their respective attorneys herein, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party hereto in respect of any such issue,

Now therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of, or any admission with respect to any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent as aforesaid of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I.

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto. The complaint states a cause of action against the defendants, and each of them, under § 1 and § 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890 entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies," as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act.

II.

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(a) "Person" means any individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other legal entity.

(b) "New York metropolitan area" shall mean that part of the State of New York which includes the City of New York and the counties of Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester, Putnam and Rockland.

(c) "Vending machine" shall mean a coin-operated merchandising device through which packages of cigarettes are sold to the public.

(d) "Location" shall mean any place where people congregate within the New York metropolitan area and in which a vending machine is placed or may be placed, such as a bar, restaurant, hotel, apartment, office building or store.

(e) "Location owner" shall mean any person who has possession, ownership or control of a location whose permission or authority must be obtained to place, or who may himself place, a vending machine in the location.

(f) "Operator" shall mean any person engaged in the business of selling cigarettes to the public through vending machines at a location.

III.

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to each such defendant, its subsidiaries, successors, officers, directors, employees, agents and members, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any such defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise. Such provisions shall not apply to any transaction solely between a defendant and a subsidiary owned or controlled by such defendant.

IV.

[Amendment of By-Laws]

Defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc., is ordered and directed:

(A) Within sixty days after the entry of this Final Judgment, to serve by mail, upon each of its present members, a conformed copy of this Final Judgment, and to file with this Court and with the plaintiff herein proof by affidavit of such service upon each such member;

(B) Within three months from the date of entry of this Final Judgment to amend its by-laws to incorporate therein the substance of Section V, VI and VII of this Final Judgment, and to require, as a condition of membership, or retention of membership, that each present and future member abide by the terms of said Sections V, VI and VII; file with the association a listing of each placement and removal of a vending machine by that member; and where any such placement is pursuant to a contract, agreement or understanding with a location owner, to file with the association the facts of the existence and of the expiration date of such contract, agreement or understanding;

(C) To furnish to plaintiff and to each present and future member a copy of its by-laws as amended in accordance with the foregoing subdivision of this Section IV;

(D) To expel promptly from membership any present or future member who shall violate any of the provisions of Sections V, VI and VII of this Final Judgment.

V.

[Allocation of Locations]

Defendants and each member of defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc. are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, or claiming any rights under, any contract, combination, agreement, understanding, plan, program or common course of action with any defendant or any operator to:

(A) allocate or divide locations;

(B) refrain from or leave any person free from competition in the selection of locations, the placement of vending machines in locations or the solicitation of location owners;

(C) hinder or restrict any person from placing a vending machine in any location;

(D) hinder or restrict any person from competing for a location;

(E) hinder or restrict any location owner from selecting or doing business with any operator of his choice, placing or operating his own vending machine, or selling cigarettes over the counter.

VI.

[Use of Coercion]

Each defendant other than defendant Local 805 is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Refraining from competing for an open location because

(1) Another operator has evidenced an interest in placing a vending machine in that location;

(2) Another operator once had a vending machine in that location;

(B) Using coercion to prevent any location owner from selecting and doing business with a vending machine operator of his own choice;

(C) Using coercion to prevent any person from competing for a location;

(D) Inducing or attempting to induce any labor union, through any of its officers, members or agents, to coerce, persuade or otherwise prevail upon a location owner not to permit a particular operator to place or operate a vending machine in his location;

(E) Becoming or remaining a member of, participating in the activities of, or contributing anything of value to any association or other organization, the purposes, policies, rules, practices or activities of which are inconsistent with any of the provisions of this Final Judgment.

VII.

[Duration of Contracts]

Defendants and each member of defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc., are jointly and severally restrained and enjoined from hereafter entering into any contract, agreement or understanding with a location owner for the placement of and sale of cigarettes through a vending machine unless such contract, agreement or understanding

(1) shall be for a period not longer than three years, and

(2) shall have no provision for automatic renewal at the end of the period thereof.

Provided, however, that the foregoing injunction shall not prohibit any operator from entering into such a contract, agreement or understanding of duration longer than three years, if insisted upon by a location owner or if a location owner insists upon payments from the operator which the latter cannot reasonably expect to recoup within a three year period.

VIII.

[Use of Association Facilities]

Defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc. is enjoined and restrained from using or permitting the use by any person of the facilities of said defendant to promulgate, adopt, carry out or enforce any contract, agreement, understanding, plan, program, policy or conduct which is enjoined by any of the provisions of this Final Judgment.

IX.

[Trade Association Membership]

Defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc., is ordered and directed to grant non-discriminatory membership to any operator having one or more vending machines placed in the New York metropolitan area who shall apply for such membership and who shall agree to pay dues and assessments and who shall agree to abide by the provisions of the by-laws of defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association on the same basis as all other members of said defendant. Nothing in the provisions of this Section IX shall prevent defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc. from imposing reasonable penalties on, or expelling any member for failure to pay regular dues and assessments or for otherwise failing to abide by the provisions of the by-laws and rules of said defendant.

X.

[Union Activities]

Defendant Local 805 is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Preventing any operator from securing or employing service men who are members of defendant Local 805;

(B) Threatening to withhold or withholding union labor from any operator, or otherwise discriminating against any operator in the furnishing of union labor, for the purpose of inducing such operator to join, or carry out any rules, policies or programs of defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc. or of any other association of operators;

(C) Advising, inducing, threatening, coercing or compelling a location owner to refuse to do business with a particular operator because such operator is not a member of defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc., or of any other association of operators.

XI.

[Permissive Provisions]

Without determining, adjudicating or affecting the legality under the Sherman Act of the activities hereinafter referred to in this Section XI the provisions of this Final Judgment shall not be deemed to prevent defendant Local 805, its officers, agents and members, including members who may be employees of the defendants and other operators bound by the provisions of this Final Judgment, from:

(A) Bargaining collectively, entering into and carrying out the terms of a collective bargaining agreement with defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc., or with any other association of operators;

(B) Initiating, participating in and executing, solely in its separate capacity, policies and activities relating solely to a labor dispute concerning compensation or terms and conditions of employment.

XII.

Without hereby determining, adjudicating or affecting the legality under the Sherman Act of the contracts herein after referred to in this Section XII, the provisions of this Final Judgment shall not prevent any operator from entering into, continuing, abiding by or enforcing a reasonable and otherwise legally valid covenant not to compete which is an integral part of a binding contract with another operator for the sale or purchase of all or part of the business of one of such operators.

XIII.

[Listings of Placements and Removals]

Defendant Cigarette Merchandisers Association, Inc. is ordered and directed:

(A) To receive from any operator listings of that operator's placements and removals of vending machines and, where any such placement is pursuant to a contract agreement or understanding with a location owner, the facts of the existence and of the expiration date of such contract, agreement or understanding, and

(B) To report to every operator, members and non-members of said association, who shall make inquiry concerning a particular location, the name of the operator, if any, listed with said association as having a vending machine at that location, and the expiration date of any contract agreement or understanding between that operator and the location owner listed with said association.

XIV.

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted:

(A) Access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment, and

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon such written request the defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of said Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section XIV shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

XV.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment or for the termination or modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the purpose of the enforcement of compliance therewith and the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,600] United States v. Maryland State Licensed Beverage Association, Inc., et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7189. Argued November 16, 1956. Decided January 3, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore. THOMSEN, Chief Judge.

Case No. 1225 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Conspiracy To Restrain Trade and Conspiracy To Monopolize Trade—Separate or Identical Offenses—Same Evidence—Election of Offenses.—A trial court order requiring the Government to elect whether it will proceed under a count of an indictment charging a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, or a count of the indictment charging a conspiracy to monopolize trade in violation of Section 2 of the Act, was reversed. Although the trial court recognized that different offenses were created by Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, it was of the opinion, in view of the admission of the Government that the proof under the one count would be relied upon as proof of the other count, that only one conspiracy was involved, and that, therefore, one of the counts should be dismissed. The fact that the same evidence is relied upon to establish the conspiracies charged in both counts does not mean necessarily that there is only one conspiracy. The purpose underlying the practice of requiring that the prosecution elect between offenses or counts is to prevent prejudice to the accused which might result from being required to meet a multiplicity of charges in one trial. It has no application to a case where the different counts are merely variations of the same charge. In the instant case, there could be no possible prejudice to the accused in going to trial under an indictment charging in separate counts that the conduct complained of constituted violations of separate sections of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2037.123; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.520.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Appellate Review—Review of Order Requiring Election of Offenses—Jurisdiction of Court of Appeals.—A motion to dismiss an appeal, filed in a United States Court of Appeals, from an order requiring the Government to elect between two offenses charged in an indictment on the ground that the appeal from the order should have been made directly to the United States Supreme Court was denied. The contention that the dismissal of one of the counts of the indictment, which resulted from the Government's election, was based upon a construction of the statute upon which it was founded, and that an appeal, under Title 18, United States Code, Section 3731, lay direct to the Supreme Court and not to the Court of Appeals was rejected. The dismissal of the count was not based upon a construction of the statute but upon an erroneous view of the proper practice to be followed when two counts of a conspiracy indictment were admittedly based upon the same evidence and the same course of conduct.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.890.

For the appellant: Gordon B. Spivack, Attorney, Department of Justice (Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and Horace L. Flurry, Attorney, Department of Justice, on brief).

For the appellees: John Henry Lewin (David C. Green, G. C. A. Anderson, Everett L. Buckmaster, Charles Mindel, Robert E. Coughlan, Jr., Eugene M. Feinblatt, John R. Fitzpatrick, F. Joseph Donohue, Hilary W. Gans, Edwin Harlan, Isaac Hecht, Louis Hoffman, Ellis Levin, Zanvyl Krieger, William D. Macmillan, David R. Owen, George D. Hubbard, William L. Marbury, John W. Hardwicke, Read A. McCaffrey, C. Gordon Haines, Morris Rosenberg, Hugh B. Cox, James C. McKay, and Stanley H. Wilen, on brief).

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Maryland, at Baltimore, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,243.

Before PARKER, Chief Judge, SOPER, Circuit Judge, and HOFFMAN, District Judge.

[Issues]

PARKER, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal by the United States in a prosecution under the Sherman Act from an order requring the government to elect whether it would proceed under the first or second counts of the indictment, and when it elected to proceed under the first, dismissing the second count. Appellees have moved to dismiss the appeal or transfer it for hearing to the Supreme Court. We think that the motion should be denied and that the order requiring the election and dismissing the second count on the indictment should be reversed.

[Indictment]

Count one of the indictment charged conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act to restrain interstate commerce by establishing "fair trade" prices for alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland and taking steps to have them observed. Count two charged conspiracy to monopolize in violation of section 2 of that act. In answers to interrogatories and at the bar of the court counsel for the government stated that "the proof under count one will be relied upon as proof of the other counts" that there will be "no variation as far as proof is concerned" and that the government's evidence as to each count will be "the same evidence of that course of conduct." The trial judge recognized that different offenses were created by sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act as held in American Tobacco Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468] 328 U. S. 781; but, because of the foregoing admissions by government counsel, thought that only one conspiracy was involved and that, because of the holding in Braverman v. United States 317 U. S. 49, 53, he should require one of the counts to be dismissed. In this we think he was in error.

[Election of Offenses]

The fact that the same evidence was relied upon to establish the conspiracies charged in both counts of the indictment does not mean necessarily that there was only one conspiracy. It might very well establish separate conspiracies to fix prices and to monopolize, with the direct evidence as to each having probative value with respect to the other. Even if only one conspiracy was involved, however, this would not support the action taken by the District Judge. Braverman's case holds merely that there may not be more than one punishment for a single conspiracy, not that a single conspiracy may not be charged as a crime in several counts to meet different interpretations that might be placed upon the evidence by the jury. Upon the government's evidence, which has not yet been produced, the jury might conceivably conclude that the accused were guilty of conspiracy to restrain trade by fixing prices but not of conspiracy to monopolize, or they might conclude that they were guilty of conspiracy to monopolize but not to fix prices or they might conclude that they were guilty of conspiracy to do both. If the evidence showed that there was only one conspiracy, the judge would impose only one punishment; but this is no reason for requiring dismissal of one of the counts in the early stages of the case; and parties should not be allowed thus to try their case in advance and by piecemeal.

> "It has long been the approved practice to charge, by several counts, the same offense as committed in different ways or by different means, to such extent as will be necessary to provide for every possible contingency in the evidence". 27 Am. Jur. p. 688.

In the case of United States v. Anderson, 7 Cir. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,204] 101 F. 2d 325, one of the cases upon which defendants place their chief reliance for the proposition that only one punishment can be imposed for a single conspiracy, it was expressly held that the government was properly allowed to go to trial upon two indictments with a number of counts relating to the single conspiracy, although all were based upon precisely the same facts. The court said:

> "Each of the indictments, and each of the two counts of the antitrust indictment was based upon precisely the same facts, and we perceive no just reason why both indictments and all the defendants should not be tried at the same time and by the same jury.
>
> "It is also contended by appellants that the court erred in the imposition of cumulative sentences, and we think this contention must prevail. There was but one conspiracy and its primary object was to stop the transportation of coal * * *. This does not mean that both indictments were not properly pleaded, as a precautionary matter, but we can not believe that Congress intended to permit the accumulation of sentences upon diverse objects of a conspiracy where there was but one conspiracy and the evidence supporting each was precisely the same. * * *

"The judgment is affirmed as to all matters except as to the sentence of imprisonment and fines." (Italics supplied.)

In the old and celebrated case of Commonwealth v. Webster 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711, 731-32, Chief Justice Shaw pointed out the reason for permitting a number of counts charging a single crime, in that case homicide. He said:

"The indictment is but the charge or accusation made by the grand jury, with as much certainty and precision as the evidence before them will warrant. They may be well satisfied that the homicide was committed, and yet the evidence before them may leave it somewhat doubtful as to the mode of death; but in order to meet the evidence as it may finally appear, they are very properly allowed to set out the mode in different counts; and then if any one of them is proved, supposing it to be also legally formal, it is sufficient to support the indictment."

[Purpose of Election]

The purpose underlying the practice of requiring in proper cases that the prosecution elect between offenses or counts is to prevent prejudice to the accused which might result from being required to meet a multiplicity of charges in one trial. It has no application to a case where the different counts are merely variations or modifications of the same charge. 27 Am. Jur. pp. 690-691. Here there could be no possible prejudice to the accused in going to trial under an indictment charging in separate counts that conduct complained of constituted violations of separate sections of the Sherman Act; and to require such an election was to prejudice the prosecution in the presentation of its case and cannot be upheld as a sound exercise of discretion. In State v. Schaefer, 96 Ohio St. 215, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1137, 1138-1139, it was held to be error as matter of law to require an election between counts where they related to the same transaction. And in Herman v. People, 131 Ill. 594, 9 L. R. A. 182, it was said,

"The right of demanding an election, and the limitation of the prosecution to one offense, is confined to charges which are actually distinct from each other and do not form parts of one and the same transaction."

And see note 9 L. R. A. 182 et seq.

[Appeal—Proper Court]

There is no merit in the motion to dismiss the appeal or transfer it to the Supreme Court. It is argued in support thereof that the dismissal of the second count of the indictment was based upon a construction of the statute upon which it was founded and that appeal under 18 USC 3731 lay direct to the Supreme Court of the United States and not to the Court of Appeals. The dismissal of that count, however, was not based upon a construction of the statute but upon an erroneous view of the proper practice to be followed when two counts of a conspiracy indictment were admittedly based upon the same evidence and the same course of conduct of the persons charged.

[Reversed and Remanded]

The order appealed from will accordingly be reversed and the case will be remanded to be tried on all counts of the indictment.

Reversed.

[¶ 68,601] The Kansas City Star Company v. United States. Emil A. Sees v. United States.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. Nos. 15,456, 15,457. Dated January 23, 1957.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri. RICHARD M. DUNCAN, District Judge.

Case No. 1151 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolies—Monopolization—Dissemination of News and Advertising—Tests.—A jury verdict finding that a newspaper company attempted to monopolize and monopolized the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area was affirmed where there was substantial evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury. The newspaper company's position in the area was of such dominance that it could be found by the jury that the newspaper company possessed monopoly power, that it was an indispensable medium of advertising for some advertisers, that its position gave it the power to exclude competition, and that it exercised such power with the intent to exclude competition.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.250.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Elements of Offense—Power to Exclude Competition—Exclusion of Competition.—A jury verdict finding that a newspaper company attempted to monopolize and monopolized the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area was affirmed where there was substantial evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury. The newspaper company, which published a morning and an evening newspaper, controlled approximately 95 per cent of the newspaper circulation in the area and received approximately 94 per cent of the total newspaper advertising revenue in the area. The newspaper company's dominant position as to both circulation and advertising was therefore apparent. The newspaper company's position was of such dominance that it could be found by the jury that the company possessed monopoly power, that it was an indispensable medium of advertising for some advertisers, that its position gave it the power to exclude competition, and that it exercised such power with the intent to exclude competition. The jury properly concluded from the evidence that the newspaper company threatened advertisers with refusal to take their ads if they advertised in competitive publications, that advertisers were threatened with the loss of desirable position in the company's newspapers if they placed ads in competitive publications, that the newspaper company threatened to discontinue advertisements unless it was given equal space with competitive publications, that advertisers were threatened with having their credit cut off if they used competitive publications, that the newspaper company used the dissemination of news to control advertising, that the newspaper company used its dominant position to dictate to advertisers how much of their advertising quota would have to be spent with its newspapers, and that the newspaper company used its television and radio facilities to obtain advertising for its newspapers. Also, the newspaper company sold its morning and evening newspapers to its subscribers in combination only, and classified and general advertisers were required to run their advertisements in both the morning and evening newspapers. The record justified the jury's conclusions that the two newspapers were separate and distinct, that the combination sale of the newspapers had the effect of foreclosing the purchase of other newspapers, and that the unit advertising method was used with the intent and effect of excluding competition.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.520, 2530.54, 2610.287, 2610.310, 2610.728, 2610.806.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Relevant Market—Dissemination of News and Advertising.—A newspaper company's contention that it did not monopolize the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area because it was in direct and vigorous competition with other mass media engaged in the dissemination of news and advertising, and it could not exclude them from the market or control their prices, was rejected. Specifically, the newspaper company claimed that it had competition from radio and television broadcasting stations, magazines, newsreels, and topical books. "When a product is controlled by one interest, without substitutes available in the market, there is monopoly power." Also, where "there are market alternatives that buyers may readily use for their purposes, illegal monopoly does not exist merely because the product said to be monopolized differs from others." In determining the relevant market, the court concluded that radio and television stations located outside the Kansas City area, magazines, newsreels, topical books, and specialty publications are not "market alternatives" or effective substitutes for newspapers. The other media were not competitors in the real sense of the word.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2540.10.

Monopolies—Attempt To Monopolize—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A jury was justified in finding that the advertising director of a newspaper company, publishing a morning and an evening newspaper, attempted to monopolize the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area. The director's contention that the Government failed to prove that he attempted to monopolize the dissemination of news was rejected. The advertising revenues for which the individual was responsible made up a vast percentage of the total income of the newspaper company; therefore, such revenues helped to support news dissemination. Each was dependent upon the other and each without the other would fall. Furthermore, the evidence established that the director threatened to exclude an individual's name from the news columns of the newspapers if the individual did not take his advertising out of a competitor's publication. Monopolistic control of advertising strikes at the very heart of a competitor's dissemination of news. The effect of the director's advertising practices was "to destroy news publications for whom advertising was their life blood."

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2515, 2610.856.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Practices as Evidence of Monopolization—Dissemination of News and Advertising—Unit Advertising Rates—Combination Subscriptions.—A jury finding that a newspaper company, publishing a morning and an evening newspaper, monopolized the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area was affirmed. The evidence established that the company sold its morning and evening newspapers to its subscribers in combination only, and that the company required classified and general advertisers to run their advertisements in both of the newspapers at a unit advertising rate. The jury was justified in concluding that the morning and evening newspapers were two separate newspapers with distinct and separate uses for advertisers; that each newspaper was dominant in its own field; that together the newspapers dominated the market; that the unit advertising method was used, notwithstanding the protests of advertisers, with the intent and effect of excluding competition; and that the effect of combination subscriptions was to foreclose the likelihood of subscribers purchasing other competing newspapers. The company had contended that its position of dominance was entirely the result of superior skill, foresight, and industry; and that the purpose of its advertising and subscription rate structures was to enable it to increase its efficiency and to better serve its customers, both advertisers and subscribers.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.856.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Definition of Offense.—In an action charging that a newspaper company monopolized the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area, a trial court was held to have correctly defined the offense of monopolization. The trial court had instructed the jury that if the newspaper company occupied a monopoly position and that within the statutory period it committed the acts charged in the indictment with the intent to maintain its monopoly or to eliminate competition, then the newspaper company was guilty of monopolization; and that monopolization "means the possession of monopoly power by a party or parties through which power it is possible to exclude actual or potential competitors from any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, provided that he or they have the intent or purpose to exercise that power." It is necessary only to establish the existence of an intent to monopolize coupled with monopoly power.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.100.

Monopolies—Attempt To Monopolize—Definition of Offense.—In an action charging that a newspaper company and the company's advertising director attempted to monopolize the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area, a trial court was held to have correctly defined the offense of an attempt to monopolize. The trial court had instructed the jury that an attempt to monopolize "means the employment of methods and practices which are utilized for the specific purpose and with the specific intent to achieve or build a monopoly, and which, if successful, would be likely to accomplish such monopolization." The contention that the court should have specifically instructed the jury that the practices employed must have a "dangerous probability" of creating a monopoly was rejected. The trial court's requirement of a finding of "specific intent" plus the likelihood of accomplishment was tantamount to a "dangerous probability."

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2515.10.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Sufficiency of Indictment—Allegations of Acts Constituting Offense.—An indictment charging that a newspaper company and its advertising director attempted to monopolize and monopolized the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area was held to be sufficient under Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure since it contained a plain, concise, and definite statement of the essential facts constituting the offenses charged. The indictment charged offenses with sufficient clarity to enable the defendants to properly prepare their defense and with sufficient certainty and definiteness that the trial thereon would be an effective bar to future prosecution for the same acts. In prosecutions under the Sherman Act, there has been no marked reliance upon rigorous common law standards. The indictment did not violate or deny the rights guaranteed by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.599.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictment—Bill of Particulars.—A trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendants' motion for a bill of particulars, which was aimed at obtaining in particular the details of the Government's evidence. It is not the function of a bill of particulars to set forth evidentiary detail. Also, there was no showing that the defendants were prejudiced by the denial of their motion. The defendants had examined the documentary evidence relied upon by the Government when the trial court subsequently granted the defendants' motion for discovery and inspection.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.800.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Trial—Admissibility of Evidence—Acts Occurring Prior to Limitations Period.—A trial court did not err in denying defendants' motion for an order fixing the time within which evidence would be admitted to a period of three years (the period of the applicable statute of limitations) prior to the return of the indictment and excluding evidence of events occurring prior to that period. In order to show intent, it was entirely proper for the trial court to receive evidence of a course of conduct engaged in by the defendants over a period of years leading up to the indictment period which might assist the jury in attempting to determine whether or not the defendants possessed that necessary intent during the time covered by the indictment. It would be illogical not to admit evidence as to a course of conduct over many years which manifested an intent to monopolize. In antitrust cases, the Federal courts have long admitted evidence of conduct prior to the statutory period. Also, the trial court did not err in fixing a cut-off date for the evidence.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.600.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Trial—Severance.—In a criminal action charging that a newspaper company and its advertising director attempted to monopolize and monopolized the dissemination of news and advertising in the Kansas City area, the trial court did not err in denying the director's motion for severance. Separate trials are not necessarily a matter of right. Persons jointly indicted should be tried together, and the granting of separate trials is a matter of discretion. In the instant case, the trial court repeatedly admonished the jury that certain evidence received was not applicable to the director and carefully charged the jury that the director could be held responsible only for acts performed by him or under his direction. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for severance.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.750.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Defenses —Freedom of the Press.—A newspaper company's contentions that a criminal antitrust action against it endangers the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, and that a newspaper is intimidated if it is subject to prosecution under the Sherman Act whenever it opposes or antagonizes public officials, were rejected. Publishers of newspapers must answer for their actions in the same manner as anyone else. "A monopolistic press could attain in tremendous measure the evils sought to be prevented by the Sherman Antitrust Act. Freedom to print does not mean freedom to destroy. To use the freedom of the press * * * to destroy competition would defeat its own ends, for freedom to print news and express opinions as one chooses is not tantamount to having freedom to monopolize. To monopolize freedom is to destroy it."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.

For the appellants: Elton L. Marshall (Henry N. Ess, Carl E. Enggas, Colvin A. Peterson, Jr., and Watson, Ess, Marshall and Enggas were with him on the brief) for The Kansas City Star Company. Carl E. Enggas (Henry N. Ess, Elton L. Marshall, Melvin J. Spencer, and Watson, Ess, Marshall and Enggas were with him on the brief) for Emil A. Sees.

For the appellee: Earl A. Jinkinson, Attorney, Department of Justice, and Joseph E. McDowell, Attorney, Department of Justice (Edward L. Scheufler, United States Attorney; Victor H. Kramer and Daniel M. Friedman, Attorneys, Department of Justice; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; and Raymond P. Hernacki and Willis L. Hotchkiss, Attorneys, Department of Justice, were with them on the brief).

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Western District of Missouri, Western Division, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,117 and 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,683; for jury instructions of the District Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,040.

Before GARDNER, Chief Judge, and WOODROUGH and VOGEL, Circuit Judges.

[Indictment—Verdicts]

VOGEL, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The Kansas City Star Company, Roy A. Roberts, its president and chairman of the Board of Directors, and Emil A. Sees, its director of advertising, treasurer and a member of the Board of Directors, were all charged in an indictment with a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 2. The indictment was in two counts. The first count charged that the appellants had been and were up to the time of the return of the indictment engaged in an attempt to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in the dissemination of news and advertising. In Count No. 2 the appellants were charged with a monopolization of interstate trade and commerce in the dissemination of news and advertising. Prior to trial, and on motion of the government, the indictment was dismissed as to Roy A. Roberts. After a trial, lasting from January 17, 1955 to February 22, 1955, the jury returned a verdict of guilty as to The Kansas City Star Company on both counts of the indictment and a verdict of guilty as to Emil A. Sees on Count 1 and not guilty on Count 2. The court, concluding that the offense of attempting to monopolize as charged in Count 1 of the indictment merged into the greater offense of monopolization as charged in Count 2, imposed a single penalty of a $5,000.00 fine as to the appellant The Kansas City Star Company, hereinafter referred to as The Star. Appellant Sees, having been convicted on Count 1 only, was punished by a fine of $2500.00. Both parties separately prosecuted an appeal to this court. They were, however, indicted together, tried and convicted together, and will be considered together in this opinion, separate reference being made to each where that becomes necessary or expedient.

[Sherman Act]

That portion of the statute under which the indictment was found, 15 U. S. C. A. § 2, is as follows:

> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." (Emphasis supplied.)

The Sherman Act aims at the evils of monopoly and monopolistic practices in interstate trade and commerce. That it can apply to the dissemination of news and advertising there can be no doubt. In a case quite similar to this one, the Supreme Court commented, Lorain Journal v. United States, 1951 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 152:

> "The distribution within Lorain of the news and advertisements transmitted to Lorain in interstate commerce for the sole purpose of immediate and profitable reproduction and distribution to the reading public is an inseparable part of the flow of the interstate commerce involved. See Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 309; Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 516; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Louisiana R. Comm'n, 236 U. S. 157, 163; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 398. Unless protected by law, the consuming public is at the mercy of restraints and monopolizations of interstate commerce at whatever points they occur. Without the protection of competition at the outlets of the flow of interstate commerce, the protection of its earlier stages is of little worth."

See also Associated Press v. United States, 1945 [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,384], 326 U. S. 1, 14, holding trade in news among the several states to be interstate commerce.

In this appeal, both appellants allege many errors in rulings on various motions, the receipts of certain evidence, the exclusion of other evidence, and the court's charge to the jury.

Pre-Trial Orders

[Sufficiency of Indictment]

At the outset, appellants moved to dismiss the indictment and each count thereof on the grounds that each count failed to state the particular act or acts charged to constitute the offense with reasonable definiteness and that each count was so vague and indefinite that it did not inform the appellants of the nature and cause of the accusation against them, thereby denying rights guaranteed by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U. S. C. A.

The indictment identifies and describes The Kansas City Star Company as being a corporation and the publisher of a morning daily newspaper known as The Kansas City Times, an evening daily newspaper known as The Kansas City Star and a Sunday newspaper known as The Sunday Star. It alleges that The Star also owns and operates radio station WDAF and television station WDAF-TV at Kansas City, Missouri. Sees is described as the director of advertising, treasurer and a director of The Kansas City Star Company. The indictment makes it clear that the geographical area in which the appellants are charged with monopolization and attempt to monopolize news and advertising in metropolitan Kansas City, Missouri, covered the Counties of Jackson and Clay in the State of Missouri and the Counties of Wyandotte and Johnson in the State of Kansas. In addition, it sets forth its definitions of the terms "classified advertising", "display advertising", "local display advertising" and "general advertising". It describes the nature of the trade and commerce of an interstate nature to which the indictment was applicable; that The Times and Star are delivered to 96% of all the homes in metropolitan Kansas City each day; that The Times' total net paid circulation exceeds 353,000 copies daily, The Star's total net paid circulation exceeds 361,000 copies daily; that The Sunday Star exceeds 378,000 copies each Sunday. It sets forth the formation and growth of The Kansas City Star, and the acts and practices upon which it is charged that there was an attempt to monopolize, as well as the acts and practices on the part of the appellants which it is charged resulted in monopolization.

From an examination of the indictment and the particularizations set forth therein, we are convinced that Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure was satisfied in that the indictment does contain "* * * a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged." We are of the opinion that it charges offenses with sufficient clarity to enable the appellants to properly prepare their defense and with sufficient certainty and definiteness that trial thereon would be an effective bar to future prosecution for the same acts. United States v. Cruikshank, 1875, 92 U. S. 542, 566, 568; Bennett v. United States, 1913, 227 U. S. 333, 338; Berger v. United States, 1935, 295 U. S. 78, 82; Hewitt v. United States, 8 Cir., 1940, 110 F. 2d 1, 6, cert. den. 310 U. S. 641; Claiborne v. United States, 8 Cir., 1935, 77 F. 2d 682, 689. In prosecutions under the Sherman Act, it would seem particularly true that there has been no marked reliance upon rigorous common law standards. E.g., Nash v. United States, 1913, 229 U. S. 373; Knauer v. United States, 8 Cir., 1916, 237 F. 8; United States v. American Medical Association, C. A. D. C., 1940 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,010], 110 F. 2d 703, 715, 716, aff'd. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,254] 317 U. S. 519; United States v. Armour & Co., 10 Cir., 1943 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,288], 137 F. 2d 269, 270.

We are satisfied that the indictment complies with the provisions of Rule 7(c) and does not violate or deny the rights guaranteed by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the Constitution. There was no error in overruling appellants' motion.

[Discretion of Trial Court]

All of the pre-trial motions hereafter discussed are addressed to the discretion of the trial judge. It is a fundamental rule of our appellate procedure that the trial judge will not be reversed after using his considered judgment on discretionary orders provided there has been no abuse of such discretion. With this rule in mind, we proceed to examine separately the pre-trial motions and the alleged erroneous orders issued as a result of those motions.

[Bill of Particulars]

Subsequent to the court's denial of the motion to dismiss the indictment, appellants made a motion for a bill of particulars, the denial of which is cited as error. An examination of the motion for a bill of particulars convinces us that it was aimed at obtaining in particular the details of the government's evidence. It is not the function of a bill of particulars to set forth evidentiary detail. Furthermore, the granting or denial of a motion for a bill of particulars is generally addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. The rulings of the trial court thereon will not be disturbed excepting for clear abuse of that discretion. American Tobacco Co., et al. v. United States, 6 Cir., 1944 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,317], 147 F. 2d 93, 117, aff'd. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468] 328 U. S. 781 (an anti-trust case):

> "The granting or denying of demands for particulars is a matter within the discretion of the trial court and, unless there is an abuse thereof, its actions will not be disturbed."

In Sawyer v. United States, 8 Cir., 1937, 89 F. 2d 139, 141, this court said:

> "If the language of the indictment is so far definite and certain as to safeguard all of the rights of a defendant and to enable him properly to prepare his defense, a bill of particulars will not be required. Bedell v. United States (C. C. A.) 78 F. (2d) 358. The granting or the refusal of a motion for a bill of particulars is a matter that is governed by the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and unless it shall be shown affirmatively that such discretion has been abused by the trial court a refusal to require a bill of particulars will not be disturbed by an appellate court."

There is no showing here that appellants were prejudiced by the court's denial of their demand. This is particularly true in light of the fact that appellants subsequently on August 13, 1954, filed a motion for discovery and inspection which the court granted by order on September 2, 1954, making available to the appellants all documents covered by previous orders impounding such documents at the request of the grand jury. The case did not go to trial until January 17, 1955—apparently a sufficient length of time for the appellants to examine and become familiar with the documentary evidence relied upon by the government.

[Evidence—Cut-Off Date]

The appellants moved the court for an order fixing the time within which evidence would be admitted to a period of three years [1] prior to the return of the indictment and requested that evidence of events occurring prior thereto be excluded. In denying that motion, the trial court fixed January 1, 1936, as the cut-off date. Evidence of events occurring prior thereto was not to be admitted.

[1] 18 U. S. C. A. § 3282 provides for a three-year limitation to prosecutions such as here involved.

Intent was a vital element of the charges against the appellants. Times-Picayune v. United States, 1953 [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 626. Where that is true, "* * * it has always been deemed allowable, as well in criminal as in civil cases, to introduce evidence of other acts and doings of the party, of a kindred character, in order to illustrate or establish his intent or motive in the particular act directly in judgment". Wood v. United States, 16 Peters 341, 358. In United States v. Pullman Co., et al. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,272], 50 F. Supp. 123 (E. D. Pa., 1943), aff'd. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,550] 330 U. S. 806, an anti-trust case, the court, in commenting on evidence prior to the indictment period, stated at page 126:

> "We think they are competent evidence to show defendants' state of mind at the time. The time, of course, was a good while ago, long before the Sherman Act. But if such declarations point in the direction of a path which has been followed continuously since their adoption, it is not unfair to take them as the initiation of a consistent Pullman policy. Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 1911, 221 U. S. 1, 46, 47, 75, 76, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A., N. S., 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. Reading Company, 1920, 253 U. S. 26, 43-45, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 L. Ed. 760."

In order to show intent, it was entirely proper to receive evidence of a course of conduct engaged in by the appellants over a period of years leading up to the indictment period which might assist the jury in attempting to determine whether or not the appellants possessed that necessary intent during the time covered by the indictment. It would be illogical not to admit evidence as to a course of conduct over many years which manifested an intent to monopolize. But we need not use a rationale to explain this state of the law. The federal courts in anti-trust cases have long admitted evidence of conduct prior to the statutory period. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 1911, 221 U. S. 1, 75-76; United States v. Pullman Co., supra; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 1944, 6 Cir., [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,317], 147 F. 2d 93, aff'd. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,468] 328 U. S. 781. The evidence here of prior conduct was admitted by the trial court and the jury instructed that:

> "* * * you may consider all evidence of acts which occurred prior to January 6, 1950, insofar as it may show a design or intent or pattern of conduct of the defendants with respect to their actions after January 7, 1950."

They were specifically told:

> "Under the law the defendants cannot be convicted for acts which occurred prior to the three years immediately preceding the date of indictment."

After the court's denial of appellants' motion to confine the evidence to the three-year period, the appellants objected to the 1936 cut-off date for evidence as being arbitrary and without regard to their own relevant evidence. In fixing a cut-off date, the trial court's purpose was to eliminate remote evidence and keep the trial within reasonable bounds. Apparently the trial court felt that 1936 was the most practical date for such a cut-off. The trial court is given a wide range of discretion in exercising its right and duty to control the trial and keep it within reasonable time limits. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 1940 [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 229-231. In considering the numerous witnesses and the mass of evidence, some conceivably going back as far as 1880, the founding date of The Star, the trial court was exercising its considered judgment in fixing the cut-off date. We see no justification in the record for disturbing the court's determination.

[Continuances and Adjournments]

Complaint is made of the trial court's overruling of appellants' motion for a continuance filed on January 10, 1955. Such a motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. In the absence of a pure abuse of such discretion, the action of the trial court will be sustained. We find no such abuse here. We come to the same conclusion with reference to several motions for adjournment made during the trial.

[Severance]

Prior to trial, Sees filed a motion for severance which he claimed was improperly and erroneously denied. Separate trials are not necessarily a matter of right. See Rule 8(b) Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U. S. C. A. In Mellor v. United States, 8 Cir., 1947, 160 F. 2d 757, cert. den. 331 U. S. 848, this court, speaking through Judge Woodrough, stated at page 761:

"It is contended that it was improper to join two defendants in this single count indictment charging a substantive offense and not a conspiracy. However, the right to charge two defendants jointly in a single indictment is recognized in a number of well reasoned cases, which hold that such procedure does not result in misjoinder of defendants, nor render the indictment subject to attack for duplicity."

In dealing with a similar contention, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in Hall v. United States, C. A. D. C., 1948, 168 F. 2d 161, 163, cert. den. 334 U. S. 853, stated:

"Hall and Gray assert that their motions for severance were improperly denied. It is the general rule that persons jointly indicted should be tried together, and granting separate trials is a matter of discretion. The mere fact that admissions have been made by one which are not evidence as against the others is not a conclusive ground for ordering the parties to be tried separately. Lucas v. United States, 70 App. D. C. 92, 104 F. 2d 225."

Even where defendants have been separately indicted the ordering of a joint trial by the District Court may be sustained under the provisions of Rule 13 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U. S. C. A. In the case of Malatkofski v. United States, 1 Cir., 1950, 179 F. 2d 905, the Court of Appeals stated, at page 909:

"Since the defendants were alleged 'to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses', they might, under Rule 8(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U. S. C. A. have been joined as defendants in a single indictment. Under these circumstances the District Court was authorized by Rule 13 to order the indictments to be tried together. Each defendant moved for a separate trial on the general ground (no details being specified) that standing trial with the other defendant would be prejudicial. These motions for severance were denied. In this there was no error. The matter lay in the discretion of the trial judge, and no extraordinary facts appear from which it could be said that denial of the motions was an abuse of discretion. See Stilson v. United States, 1919, 250 U. S. 583, 40 S. Ct. 28, 63 L. Ed. 1154. Throughout the trial, whenever evidence was introduced which was competent against one defendant and incompetent against the other, the judge duly admonished the jury that the evidence was received only as against the one defendant and must be disregarded by them in their consideration of the case of the other defendant. See United States v. Ball, 1896, 163 U. S. 662, 672, 16 S. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300."

The Supreme Court has lent finality to the rule of discretion on the part of the trial court in determining a motion for severance in the recent case of Opper v. United States, 1954, 348 U. S. 84, 95:

"It was within the sound discretion of the trial judge as to whether the defendants should be tried together or severally and there is nothing in the record to indicate an abuse of such discretion when petitioner's motion for severance was overruled. The trial judge here made clear and repeated admonitions to the jury at appropriate times that Hollifield's incriminatory statements were not to be considered in establishing the guilt of the petitioner. To say that the jury might have been confused amounts to nothing more than an unfounded speculation that the jurors disregarded clear instructions of the court in arriving at their verdict. Our theory of trial relies upon the ability of a jury to follow instructions. There is nothing in this record to call for reversal because of any confusion or injustice arising from the joint trial."

See also Note and cases cited in 70 A. L. R. 1172.

In this case, the court repeatedly throughout the trial admonished the jury that certain evidence received was not applicable to Sees and carefully charged the jury that Sees could be held responsible only for acts performed by him or under his direction. The fact that the jury returned a verdict of not guilty on the second count as to Sees but nevertheless found The Star guilty shows they gave individual treatment to each and lends impetus to the statement that "our theory of trial relies upon the abiltiy of a jury to follow instructions." The refusal of the trial court to grant Sees' motion for severance was a valid exercise of discretion and in the absence of a showing that such discretion was abused is not reversible here. No error was committed in denying Sees' motion for severance.

EVIDENCE, TRIAL RULINGS AND INSTRUCTIONS
[Competitive Position]

The Kansas City Star was founded in 1880. Among its competitors at that time were the Kansas City Journal, founded in 1854, and The Kansas City Times, founded in 1867. In 1894 The Sunday Star was established. In 1901 the owner of The Kansas City Star acquired The Times and thereafter published The Kansas City Times (morning), The Kansas City Star (evening) and The Sunday Star. In 1905 the Kansas City Post was established. The Journal and the Post were merged in 1922. The Kansas City Star Company (the present appellant) was incorporated in 1926, at which time it commenced operation of radio station WDAF, later owning and operating television station WDAF-TV. In 1928 the morning Journal discontinued publication. The Sunday Journal discontinued in 1941 and the evening Journal discontinued in March, 1942.

The metropolitan Kansas City area in which the appellants were charged with attempting to monopolize and monopolization of interstate trade and commerce in the dissemination of news and advertising is made up of four counties: Jackson and Clay in the State of Missouri and Wyandotte and Johnson in the State of Kansas. Within this area there are located four major urban communities: Kansas City, Missouri; Kansas City, Kansas; North Kansas City, Missouri; and Independence, Missouri. This metropolitan area contains a population of approximately 854,000 persons. During the indictment years The Star advertised and the evidence justified the conclusion that it possessed 95% coverage of all households in the four counties referred to. In 1952, one of the indictment years, there were seven daily newspapers published in the four-county area in addition to those published by The Star. These daily newspapers were The Kansas City Kansan, The Independence Examiner, The Excelsior Springs Standard, The Independence Daily News, The Daily Record, The Kansas City News-Press, and The Daily Drovers Telegram.[x] The Star's dominance in the area is evidenced by circulation figures.

	"1951 [1]		1952 [1]
	Average Daily Circulation	Per Cent of Total	Average Daily Circulation	Per Cent of Total
1. Kansas City Star Company
Kansas City Times (M)	351,126 [2]	46.58	350,206 [2]	46.74
Kansas City Star (E)	360,143 [2]	47.78	358,231 [2]	47.81
Total Times and Star	711,269 [2]	94.36	708,437 [2]	94.56
2. Kansas City Kansan (E)	29,084 [2]	3.86	27,873 [2]	3.69
3. Independence Examiner (E)	7,754 [3]	1.03	7,862 [3]	1.05
4. Excelsior Springs Standard (E*)	3,189 [3]	.42	3,283 [3]	.44
5. Independence Daily News (E ex. Sat.)	1,448 [3]	.19	550 [3]	.07
6. Daily Record (D)	1,015 [3]	.14	1,004 [3]	.13
7. Daily News Press (D)	Not published		445 [3]	.06
Total Kansas City	753,759	100.00	749,454	100.00

x A trade journal limited to livestock reports.
[1] Figures refer to twelve-month period ended September 30 of each year.
[2] Source: Audit Bureau of Circulations, Audit Reports.
[3] Source: Statement of ownership, management and circulation required by Act of Congress of August 24, 1912 (Title 39, U. S. Code, Sec. 233).
* Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.
 Three months preceding October 1, 1952.
M—Morning
E—Evening
D—Daily."

Evidence reflecting the advertising revenue of daily newspapers in the Kansas City area for 1951 and 1952 discloses that in 1951 the appellant Star received a net advertising revenue of $17,774,581.17 or 94.11% of the total. The Kansas City Kansan received $716,556.79 or 3.79% of the total. The other newspapers received lesser percentages. In 1952, the appellant Star received a net advertising revenue of $18,655,629.64 or 94.08% of the total. The Kansas City Kansan received $739,509.36 or 3.73% of the total. Other daily newspapers received smaller percentages. A tabulation of advertising revenue from daily newspapers, radio and television stations located in the area for the years 1951 and 1952 indicates that the appellant Star in 1951 received $19,938,484.68, or 84.24% of the total. Its nearest competitor, The Kansas City Kansan, received in 1951 a total of $1,022,003.71, or 4.32% of the total, with other competitors having smaller percentages. In 1952, The Star received of such advertising revenue $21,350,721.97, or 85.40% of the total. Its nearest competitor, The Kansas City Kansan, received $1,044,302.75, or 4.18% of the total, with other competitors having lesser percentages.

The Star's "dominant" position as to both circulation and advertising in the daily newspaper field in metropolitan Kansas City becomes apparent.

[Exclusion of Competition—Advertising]

The government sought to show that The Star's dominant position gave it the power to exclude competition and that it, through appellant Sees and others, exercised such power for the purpose and with the intent of excluding competition. Evidence tended to show and the jury was justified in concluding that The Star was an indispensable advertising medium for many advertisers and that it threatened advertisers with refusal to take their ads if they advertised in competitive publications. As an example, the manager of three theaters in Kansas City, Missouri, was told that his ad should be taken out of the Journal-Post and that if he didn't do so, his advertising would be left out of The Kansas City Star and Times. The manager of a store in Kansas City who had been advertising in the Journal-Post and who wanted to get his ads back into The Star was given to understand that it would be on an exclusive basis only. The then advertising manager of The Star instructed a Star solicitor to see one of The Star's regular advertisers who was also using the Journal-Post, "* * * to go over there and either get him out of the Journal or get him out of The Star." Appellant Sees instructed solicitors to get advertisers out of the Journal-Post. The local advertising manager for Sears, Roebuck was told by a Star solicitor that The Star did not like to see ads running in the News Press and stated, "If you don't desist, you will either injure your position in the Kansas City Star or if we have additional newsprint to allocate you may not get your share." Appellant Sees, speaking in behalf of the appellant Star, told an advertiser, "That is all right, you can go ahead and advertise in that medium if you want to, but if you have other mediums to advertise in, then you don't need the Kansas City Star." During the newsprint shortage of 1946-1947 an advertiser who planned on using other advertising publications was told by a Star solicitor that if he continued to use other media "the chances were that the space in the Star would no longer be available * * *." These are but some of the instances shown in the record of the use of threats and coercion on the part of The Star and Sees to destroy competition.

Other evidence is disclosed in the record whereby the jury could have concluded that advertisers were threatened with loss of desirable position in The Star papers if they placed ads in competitive publications. The evidence indicated The Star extended its discipline to potential competitors. When several Kansas City merchants had made short term contracts with Prom, a new monthly magazine for children of school age, Star solicitors informed them as to the merits of terminating their use of Prom. As the merchants began to receive poor positions in The Star, they got the hint and at least two withdrew the Prom advertisements.

The course of conduct of The Star and Sees continued on through the preliminary period subsequent to 1936 into the indictment years extending from January 7, 1950, through January 6, 1953. A store manager testified that in 1952 and prior years he would receive from The Star clippings of ads he had placed in other media. A solicitor told him that his other ads were looked upon unfavorably and that if he wished a more favorable position in The Star it would be better if he confined his advertising only to The Star. As a result, the manager discontinued his use of a rival paper, the News Press. A dance studio manager testified that in 1952 he found the studio's ad missing from the usual position in The Sunday Star. One of the studio owners said that she had spent considerable time in search for it and then complained to The Star. In explanation of the change of position, a solicitor told her, "Well, I assumed that you didn't appreciate the place which you have been getting because I notice you have an ad in the News Press." The ad was withdrawn from the News Press and the following week the studio ad reappeared in the customary position in The Sunday Star. A patron of 18 years discovered in July of 1952 that his ad was much further back than usual. The reason, as Sees explained while pointing to a rival paper was, "Do you have to advertise, do you have to run such a large size ad in that particular paper?"

It may well have been, as The Star suggests, that innocent motives dictated the placing of ads in one position or another but the jury decided, as was their prerogative, that the motive was otherwise.

Evidence in the record would have justified the jury in finding that with some advertisers The Star threatened to discontinue their ads unless The Star was given "equal space" with competitive publications, regardless of how limited their circulation and the fact that "equal space" in a large publication such as The Star would cost a great deal more than the same space in one of its small competitors. The record further justifies the conclusion that some advertisers were threatened with having their credit cut off where they also used competitive publications for advertising.

[Dissemination of News]

An example of the use of the dissemination of news to control advertising is illustrated in the instance of a big league baseball player who was a partner in a florist's shop in Kansas City. The florist shop also advertised in the Journal-Post. A Star solicitor informed one of the partners that The Star would discontinue publicizing the baseball player if the florist shop continued using the Journal-Post for advertising, Sees instrucing a Star solicitor to tell them, "* * * to get out of the Journal-Post or he wouldn't get any sports, that he wouldn't get any cooperation from the sports desk on anything that he did in organized baseball.' Sees instructed the solicitor, "* * * Sees told me that if, that if I didn't get the ad in the Post to go out and tell Gleeson that if he knocked 100 home runs in the year his name would never appear in the paper outside of the box score and it got so hot to me that I told Gleeson to come down to The Star to get me off the hook with Mr. Sees," and the solictor for The Star then told the advertiser, "I told him that they wanted him out of the Post and that if he didn't get out of the Post that he wouldn't get much sport write-up from the sport desks."

[Advertising Quota]

The record discloses instances of the appellants using the dominant position of The Star to dictate to advertisers how much of their advertising quota would have to be spent with The Star. An instance in 1950 is illustrative: The representative of an advertising agency which had charge of advertising a forthcoming auto show talked with appellant Sees and was told, "Well, we can make or break your show," and was told what portion of their budget was to be spent in The Star papers. Sometimes the threat to close an account was enough to curtail use of other media. In 1951, a cloth supplier to The Star who placed ads in The Star also placed another ad in the News Press. A Star solicitor subtly suggested that it was not "right" to run an ad elsewhere than in The Star. To this the firm agreed. The ad in the News Press was promptly and permanently withdrawn because they "appreciated the business * * * from The Star."

[Radio and Television Stations]

From 1949 to the date of the return of the indictment The Star owned WDAF-TV, the only television station in the metropolitan Kansas City area. In addition, it owned radio station WDAF. The evidence in the record would justify the jury in concluding that The Star used its dominant position to aid in the newspaper advertising, making it clear in some instances that advertisers could not buy time on WDAF-TV unless they also advertised in The Star papers. For example, in 1952 The Star refused time on WDAF-TV to a furniture company. A Star solicitor called attention to the fact that the company did not use The Star columns. When the solicitor was told that they had no need for newspaper advertising, he then in effect told them that if that were the case the company had no need for television and refused the request for time.

Another instance of using television as a weapon to exclude competition was related by a part owner of Television Preview magazine. In 1952, one Dean Fitzer, general manager of WDAF-TV and a director of The Star, told the part owner, in response to a request for television time, "We won't tell you that we can't sell you time, but just don't ask me for it, because I won't have any." And if this was not quite clear enough, he added, "I don't want to see this magazine on television." The Star having the only television outlet available in the area, Television Preview was unable to advertise in the most logical medium—television.

These and other instances indicate that the television and radio facilities of The Star were being used more as appendages to the successful operation of The Star than they were being used as independent entities.

[Joint Subscriptions]

It was The Star's practice to sell its daily newspapers to its subscribers in combination only. Subscribers were required to subscribe to the morning Times and the evening Star in combination with The Sunday Star for a total of thirteen papers per week for a single price (all papers could be individually purchased at newsstands). This joint subscription was an invariable policy and insisted upon under any circumstances.

[Unit Advertising Rates]

With reference to classified advertisers and general advertisers, The Star required that they run their advertisements in both the morning Times and the evening Star, regardless of the desire of the advertisers to use only one of the papers. The evidence indicated that The Star used its dominant position to force advertisers to advertise in both the morning Times and the evening Star regardless of their wishes and regardless of the fact that some of them felt that because of their particular type of business either the morning issue of The Times or the evening issue of The Star was the only advertising vehicle from which they derived benefit. It was the government's claim that such forced combination of The Times and Star advertising had the effect of foreclosing competition in that advertisers who had of necessity to depend upon either The Times or The Star and were forced to use both could not advertise in competing publications because of their unnecessary expenditures in the forced combination.

The Star contends that it publishes but one newspaper of thirteen issues per week; that these issues are sold in combination in order that the reader may obtain a complete round-the-clock news report, thus enabling The Star's readers to get news more frequently than is possible in a 24-hour newspaper. The morning paper is designated "The Kansas City Times" but nevertheless carries in parentheses over its name "The Morning Kansas City Star."

It was the position of the government that the morning Times and the evening Star constituted two separate and distinct newspapers owned by The Star and that it was the intention of The Star to exclude competition by means of a forced combination subscription policy and unit advertising rate; that it maintained the subscription rate at an arbitrarily and unreasonably low level during the period when the most serious competition existed, that is, while the Journal-Post was still being published, and that in April, 1942, a month after the Journal-Post ceased publication The Star raised its subscription rates. The government points out that from 1938 to 1941 The Star's total revenue remained relatively constant, whereas starting with the demise of the Journal-Post and the increase in subscription rates immediately thereafter The Star's revenue went from $7,924,516.66 in 1941 to $10,231,883.47 in 1943, while its operation expenses declined from $6,530,757.24 to $6,497,837.31 during the same period.

It is The Star's claim that its survival and present position of dominance were entirely the result of superior skill, foresight and industry; that its continuous growth and expansion were the result of efficient management and public acceptance; that its thirteen issues per week were published in such a manner as to fully and efficiently utilize its plant equipment and personnel; that its advertising and subscription rate structures were to enable it to increase its efficiency and to better serve its customers, both advertisers and subscribers. It asserts that its unit advertising rates are legal and that the court erred in charging that the use thereof could constitute a monopolization.

[Separate Newspapers]

In the first place, appellants' contention is prefaced with the assumption that The Star published but one newspaper of thirteen issues per week and not two newspapers, the morning Times and the evening Star, as contended by the government. On this point, the trial court commented to the jury:

"The papers apparently are distinct in appearance, except that the morning paper carries the parenthetical heading stated aforesaid, that it is the morning edition of The Kansas City Star and it carried entirely different news, different syndicated columns, different comics," but stated:

"* * * you must consider whether The Kansas City Times and The Kansas City Star are separate and distinct newspapers, for obviously the forced combination could operate only between two newspapers and not between editions of the same paper."

We think a question of fact was raised and that it was properly left for the determination of the jury. In contending that the unit advertising plan was legal, appellants place substantial reliance upon Times-Picayune Publishing Co., et al. v. United States, supra, 1953 [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, wherein the United States Supreme Court reversed the trial court and held that the unit advertising rate therein involved was not a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The Times-Picayune case was, in the last analysis, determined on the basis of a failure of proof. Tying arrangements in advertising may be in violation of the Sherman Act, but the Supreme Court found in the Times-Picayune case that the record there did not justify that conclusion. The Supreme Court has said that tying or unit arrangements are not of themselves unlawful, but also makes it manifest that neither are they of themselves lawful. As with most cases, tying arrangements must be judged amidst the circumstances and surroundings in which they operate. The Supreme Court thus concludes, 345 U. S. 594, 627:

"* * * this record does not establish the charged violations of § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. We do not determine that unit advertising arrangements are lawful in other circumstances or in other proceedings. Our decision adjudicates solely that this record cannot substantiate the Government's view of this case." (Emphasis supplied.)

Unlike Times-Picayune, but comparable to the situation presented in the Lorain Journal Co., et al. v. United States, supra, 1951 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, we think the record here could justify the jurors' conclusion that the morning Times and evening Star were two separate newspapers with distinct and separate uses for advertisers; that each was dominant in its own field; that together they dominated the market both morning and evening; and that the unit advertising method was used, notwithstanding the protests of advertisers, with the intent and effect of excluding competition. As to the forced combination rate, we think the jurors could properly conclude that the effect upon the average subscriber who must take thirteen papers a week is to foreclose the likelihood he will purchase other competing papers. The result on circulation of smaller papers in the area is self-evident. We find no error in the court's submission of these issues to the jury.

[Monopolization]

The Star argues that the court prejudicially erred in overruling its motion for judgment of acquittal for the reason that the evidence was insufficient as a matter of law to establish that it possessed a monopoly of the dissemination of news and advertising in Kansas City and in the surrounding territory. The Star claims that it did not have a monopoly of the dissemination of news and advertising and that effective competition existed in the dissemination of each. Size in itself does not create an unlawful monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, nor does that Act place a premium upon successful business operation. "The purpose of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act is the preservation of a system of free competitive economic enterprise and the protection of the public against the evils incident to monopolies * * * tending directly toward unreasonable suppression or restraints of interstate trade or commerce." 58 C. J. S. Monopolies § 17, p. 972. The Act aims to secure equality of opportunity and the protection of the public against the evils incident to monopolistic practices. If The Star here enjoyed a substantial monopoly in the dissemination of news and advertising, and used power therefrom to effectively harm or destroy free competition and did so with the intent to achieve that end, the statute has been violated. There need be no showing of absolutism. If the dominance of The Star in the news and advertising fields gave it the power to thereby effectively destroy competition and it acted with that intent, then monopolization within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act has been established. As pointed out by Judge Learned Hand in United States v. Associated Press, et al., D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1943, 52 F. Supp. 362, 371, and quoted approvingly by the Supreme Court in affirming that decision, Associated Press, et al. v. United States, supra, 1945 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,384], 326 U. S. 1, 17:

> "* * * monopoly is a relative word. If one means by it the possession of something absolutely necessary to the conduct of an activity, there are few except the exclusive possession of some natural resource without which the activity is impossible. Most monopolies, like most patents, given control over only some means of production for which there is a substitute; the possessor enjoys an advantage over his competitors, but he can seldom shut them out altogether; his monopoly is measured by the handicap he can impose." (Emphasis supplied.)

[Relevant Market]

The Star claims that it is in direct and vigorous competition with other mass media engaged in the dissemination of news and advertising and that it could not exclude them from the market or control their prices.

The indictment makes it clear that the appellants were charged with attempting to monopolize and monopolizing the dissemination of news and advertising in newspapers and on radio and television broadcasting stations in the four-county area referred to. In other words, the appellants were charged with attempting to monopolize and monopolizing trade in the media in which they did business. The Star refers to the other daily newspapers in the area and to the fact that in 1952 there were 78 weekly newspapers and suburban papers published in the four-county area which it claims disseminated news and advertising in competition with the appellant. The Star also claims that it received competition from radio and television stations, magazines, both monthly and weekly, newsreels, topical books, etc., from which it argues that the evidence was wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict that it had monopolized in the dissemination of news and advertising. What was The Star's market control and who were its competitors? In searching for the answer to that question the appellants rely strongly on the case of United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 1956 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377. In that case it was shown that du Pont produced approximately 75% of the cellophane sold in the United States, but that cellophane constituted less than 20% of all flexible packaging materials sold in the United States. The trial court found that the relevant market for determining the extent of du Pont's market control was the market for flexible packaging materials and that competition from other materials in that market prevented du Pont from possessing monopoly powers in its sales of cellophane. The Supreme Court sustained. In so doing, it stated at page 394:

> "When a product is controlled by one interest, without substitutes available in the market, there is monoply power. Because most products have possible substitutes, we cannot, as we said in Times-Picayune Co. v. United States, 345 U. S. 594, 612, give 'that infinite range' to the definition of substitutes. * * *
>
> "But where there are market alternatives that buyers may readily use for their purposes, illegal monopoly does not exist merely because the product said to be monopolized differs from others. * * * (page 395) In considering what is the relevant market for determining the control of price and competition, no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." (Emphasis supplied.)

In this case we do not think that radio stations and television stations located outside the metropolitan area herein described, magazines, newsreels, topical books, specialty publications, etc., are "market alternatives" or effective substitutes such as was meant by the Supreme Court in the du Pont case. In that case, the Supreme Court also made clear that the market which must be examined to determine the existence of monopoly power will vary with the part of commerce under study. The considerations that go to determine The Star's relevant market must be with due regard to the realities of newspaper advertising. That is what is meant when the Supreme Court speaks about narrowing the infinite range that market substitutes could encompass. Times-Picayune v. United States, supra, at page 612. In footnote 31, at page 612 of the Times-Picayune case, the Supreme Court makes specific reference to the kind of market with which we are here concerned:

> "The advertising industry and its customers, for example, markedly differentiate between advertising in newspapers and in other mass media. See, e. g., Frey, Advertising (2d ed. 1953), cc. 12, 15; Duffy, Advertising Media and Markets (2d ed. 1951), cc. 3, 4; Hepner, Effective Advertising, c. 20 (1949); Borden, Taylor and Hovde, National Advertising in Newspapers, passim (1946); Sandage, Advertising Theory and Practice (3d ed. 1948), cc. XX, XXI."

The other media mentioned by appellants were not competitors in the real sense of the word and this is true in both advertising and news. Magazines are not effective alternatives for the daily newspapers and certainly the grocer who desires to advertise a specialty in some of his items and has only The Star publications for daily use would hardly find a monthly or weekly magazine an effective substitute. In view of the dominant position The Star enjoyed in the field of advertising and news, the court's instructions on this point were nevertheless eminently fair. The court instructed the jurors that they could take into consideration the existence of a wide range of competing media to determine if The Star was in a monopolistic position, (although the relevant market was restricted to metropolitan Kansas City throughout the trial). While the court commented that weekly and neighborhood newspapers could scarcely be considered sizeable competitors, it nonetheless ended these expressions of opinion by cautioning the jurors that such statements did not imply guilt or innocence, and that the jurors would be the final judges as to what was or was not competition. From these instructions, it is quite clear that the jurors could have considered as sizeable competitors those which the court thought were not, and that other media, with a small field of circulation compared to that of The Star, were actually a bar to monopoly.

[Acquisition of Power—Legality]

As to The Star's claim that its position was legally acquired and was the result of superior skill, foresight and industry, we have already stated that size alone does not spell out an unlawful monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman Act. See United States v. International Harvester Co., 1927, 274 U. S. 693, 708. It has, however, been noted that size often affords an opportunity for abuse. United States v. Swift & Co., 1932 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,005], 286 U. S. 106, 116. There are instances innumerable where skill, foresight and industry as well as happenstance created dominance and no charge of an illegal monopoly could be predicated thereon. If the evidence here disclosed nothing more than that The Star held a position of dominance as the result of the undoubted ability, ingenuity, intelligence and industry of those who directed its activities, this case should fall. It is with the power created by that monopolistic or dominant position, the exercise of that power and the intent with which it is exercised to destroy competion with which we are here concerned. Whether there existed monopolistic power, the intent to destroy competition and the exercise of the power so to do were questions of fact for the jurors, whose province and prerogative to so determine are too often lost sight of in prosecutions of appeals from their judgments. In the last analysis, it was for the jurors to say whether The Star possessed an unlawful monopoly and whether it exercised monopolistic power with the intent and for the purpose of destroying competition. The role of the trial judge was to see that all competent evidence that was offered came before the jury, that incompetent evidence was excluded, and that the jurors were fully instructed on the applicable law. The role that this as an appellate court has is to determine whether the trial judge committed prejudicial error in his rulings or charge and whether there was substantial evidence from which the jury might have concluded that the appellants were guilty.

[Substantial Evidence]

In considering the question of whether or not there is substantial evidence in the record to sustain the verdicts of guilty, we bear in mind that it is not for us to weigh the evidence nor to judge the credibility of the witnesses. If there is substantial evidence in the record viewed in the light most favorable to the government, the verdicts of the jury must be sustained. Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U. S. 60, 80. In Myres v. United States, 8 Cir., 1949, 174 F. 2d 329, 332, cert. den. 338 U. S. 849, this court said:

> "In determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury, this Court must take that view of the evidence which is most favorable to the government, and give to the government the benefit of all inferences which reasonably may be drawn in its favor. Affronti v. United States, 8 Cir., 145 F. 2d 3, 5, and cases cited."

From an examination of the voluminous record, which by leave of court was printed in its entirety and submitted here, we think it perfectly clear that The Star's position in metropolitan Kansas City was of such dominance in the field in which it did business during the indictment years that it could be found by the jury that it possessed monopoly power, that it was an indispensable medium of advertising for some advertisers (See Lorain Journal, et al. v. United States, supra, 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 152), that its position gave it the power to exclude competition, and that it exercised such power for the purpose and with the intent so to do, within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The Star's motion for judgment of acquittal was properly denied.

[Failure of Competitor]

It is strenuously urged on this appeal by The Star that it was not responsible for the bankruptcy and suspension of the Journal-Post and that the trial court prejudicially erred in excluding evidence offered by The Star as to the operation of the Journal-Post and the economic and other causes for the Journal-Post's suspension and bankruptcy. The Journal-Post suspended publication during the preliminary period prior to the indictment years. The government introduced evidence with respect to appellant's coercion of advertisers who used the Journal-Post. The purpose of this evidence was to show intent and a course of conduct engaged in by The Star and by Sees that continued into the indictment period. We think the trial court was correct in excluding the proffered testimony. The reason for the failure of the Journal-Post was not an issue in this case. That failure may have been due to mismanagement, lack of skill and industry or a variety of other reasons, but whatever they were, they would not excuse the appellants' actions if such actions were a violation of the law. If The Star here was guilty of attempting to monopolize and monopolizing and Sees was guilty of attempting to monopolize, then the acts of the Journal-Post and the reasons for its demise are not a defense. To have allowed the offered testimony would have set the jurors off on a determination of an issue foreign to the real problems before them. On the other hand, the actions of the two appellants in dealing with the advertisers in the Journal-Post were competent to show intent and course of conduct. This case was not concerned with the activities of the Journal-Post but with those of the appellants and with the preservation of free competitive enterprise and whether or not there was unlawful exercise of monopoly power.

[Purchase of Assets]

The Star also contends that the trial court erred in allowing the evidence to go to the jury concerning The Star's purchase of the assets of the Journal-Post, consisting of presses, names and its newspaper morgue or library. We think the assertion is without merit and that the jurors, under the instructions of the trial court, had the right to consider whether or not the purchase of such assets (some of which were indispensable to anyone contemplating the starting of a newspaper in that area) indicated intent, design or course of conduct on the part of The Star. We find no error in allowing the evidence to go to the jury.

[Attempt To Monopolize]

As already indicated, the evidence as to Sees' attempts to monopolize in the dissemination of advertising is substantial. Sees lays particular stress on the fact that the evidence indicates and the court charged:

> "The evidence shows that the extent of his (Sees') activities was confined to the Advertising Department and the dissemination of advertising."

In the indictment he was charged in Count 1 with attempting to monopolize the dissemination of news and advertising, and he argues therefore that the government has failed to prove every element of the offense charged against him. Sees was director of advertising, treasurer and a member of the board of directors of The Kansas City Star Company. Advertising revenues for which he was responsible made up a vast percentage of the total income of The Star, thus supporting its news dissemination. In 1952 its revenues from advertising alone in daily newspapers, radio and television totalled $22,152,291.68,[2] with revenue from both advertising and circulation for the same year totalling $25,963,271.86.[2] Reliance in the dissemination of news upon advertising revenue is apparent. In fact, each was dependent upon the other and each without the other would fall. But aside from this, the fact that Sees meddled or attempted to meddle in the news department is borne out by the record. His threat to see that a certain baseball player's name never again appeared on the sport sheets of The Star unless certain advertising was taken out of a competitor's publication, this occurring during the preliminary period, is evidence of Sees' intent and design. The fact that that intent and design were carried over into the indictment period is justified by his threat to make or break a certain show unless a named amount was spent for advertising with The Star.

Aside from such direct instances, monopolistic control of advertising strikes at the very heart of a competitor's dissemination of news. The Supreme Court, in the Lorain Journal case, supra, 342 U. S. at 149, gave approval to the lower court's statement in United States v. Lorain Journal Co., et al., E. D. Ohio 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,685], 92 F. Supp. 794, 798, 799, as follows:

> "Having the plan and desire to injure the radio station, no more effective and more direct device to impede the operations and to restrain the commerce of WEOL could be found by the Journal than to cut off its bloodstream of existence—the advertising revenues which control its life or demise.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> * * * the very existence of WEOL is imperiled by this attack upon one of its principal sources of business and income."

In the last analysis, Sees' claim of innocence with reference to attempting to monopolize the dissemination of news is not sustained. If Sees, as the advertising director and chief person responsible for the advertising methods of The Star, so handled and manipulated the advertising as to destroy competition from the disseminators of news, it can hardly be said that he was not attempting to monopolize the dissemination of news. The effect of his advertising methods was to destroy news publications for whom advertising was their life blood.

We think this interdependence of news and advertising plus Sees' position, in addition to the instances referred to, justified the jury's verdict against him under Count 1. Denial of Sees' motion for judgment of acquittal was not error.

[Definitions of Offenses]

Complaint is made that the court's instructions to the jury misdefined the offenses of monopolization and attempting to monopolize as charged in the indictment. The jurors were told that if The Star occupied a monopoly position and that within the statutory period it committed the acts charged in the indictment with the intent to maintain is [its] monopoly or to eliminate competition, then The Star was guilty of monopolization. They were instructed that monopolization "* * * means the possession of monopoly power by a party or parties through which power it is possible to exclude actual or potential competitors from any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, provided that he or they have the intent or purpose to exercise that power." In considering the charge as a whole, we find no fault with the court's definition.

As to the claim that the court erred in defining the offense of attempting to monopolize, Sees asserts that the essential elements of an attempt to monopolize are a specific intent to monopolize coupled with overt acts which, though not successfully monopolizing, approach so near as to create a dangerous probability of successful monopolization. Reliance is had on American Tobacco Co., et al. v. United States, 1946 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 785, wherein the Supreme Court approved the trial court's definitions of the term "monopolize" and the phrase "attempt to monopolize." The approved instruction there as to "attempt to monopolize" was as follows, page 785:

[2] Including $801,569.71 income from weekly Star Farmer not included in former figures.

> "The phrase 'attempt to monopolize' means the employment of methods, means and practices which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, though falling short, nevertheless approach so close as to create a dangerous probability of it, * * *."

In the instant case, the trial court told the jury that an attempt to monopolize "* * * means the employment of methods and practices which are utilized for the specific purpose and with the specific intent to achieve or build a monopoly, and which, if successful, would be likely to accomplish such monopolization." In place of "dangerous probability" the trial court used the words "would be likely to accomplish." We do not think that the court's charge here placed a lesser burden on the government than that contained in the definition approved by the Supreme Court in the American Tobacco Co. case. The phrase "dangerous probability" carries with it no substantially different meaning to the average person than the phrase "likely to accomplish." Trial courts are not bound to use the specific language contained in requested instructions or in instructions approved by appellate courts, but may use their own language so long as it conveys to the jurors proper understanding and meaning. Attempts to commit crime have been defined by many courts in many ways. An attempt to monopolize has been defined as an attempt to gain control of an industry by means which prevent other men from engaging in fair competition. United States v. Whiting, 1914, 212 F. 466, 478; United States v. Klearflax Linen Looms, Inc., 1945, D. C. Minn. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,407] 63 F. Supp. 32, 41. Here the trial court's requirement of a finding of "specific intent" plus likelihood of accomplishment is certainly tantamount to the "dangerous probability" in the definition relied on by Sees. In the American Tobacco Co. case, the Supreme Court was merely approving the trial court's definition but was not saying that that exact language had to be used in all such instruments. In the American Tobacco Co. case, containing the definition relied on by Sees, the Supreme Court specifically stated at page 811:

> "The authorities support the view that the material consideration in determining whether a monopoly exists is not that prices are raised and that competition actually is excluded but that power exists to raise prices or to exclude competition when it is desired to do so." (Italics supplied.)

Where the charge is that of monopolization, it is necessary only to establish the existence of an intent to monopolize coupled with monopoly power. In United States v. Griffith, 1948 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100, the Supreme Court stated at page 106:

> "Section 2 is not restricted to conspiracies or combinations to monopolize but also makes it a crime for any person to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize any part of interstate or foreign trade or commerce. So it is that monopoly power, whether lawfully or unlawfully acquired, may itself constitute an evil and stand condemned under § 2 even though it remains unexercised. For § 2 of the Act is aimed, inter alia, at the acquisition or retention of effective market control. See United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 428, 429. Hence the existence of power 'to exclude competition when it is desired to do so' is itself a violation of § 2, provided it is coupled with the purpose or intent to exercise that power. American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, 809, 811, 814. It is indeed 'unreasonable, per se, to foreclose competitors from any substantial market'. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392, 396. The anti-trust laws are as much violated by the prevention of competition as by its destruction. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra. It follows a fortiori that the use of monopoly power, however lawfully acquired, to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor is unlawful." (Italics supplied.)

See also Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., et al. v. United States, 1948 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110, 130; United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al., 1948 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 174; United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 1953 [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,436] 110 F. Supp. 295, aff'd [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,755] 347 U. S. 521.

Appellants claim that the Griffith case and other cases relied on by the government do not support the government's contention here in that those cases are conspiracy cases. That is but to argue that the cases cited place an individual monopolist in a much more favorable position than several who act together in a conspiracy. If the essential elements of the offense of monopoly are present, the law applies, whether the prosecution is against one or several acting in concert. We think that is made clear by the Supreme Court's language in the Griffith case. Therein the Supreme Court specifically points out that Section 2 of the Sherman Act is not restricted to conspiracies but makes it a crime for any person to monopolize or attempt to monopolize, and in the next sentence states, at page 107:

> "* * * monopoly power, whether lawfully or unlawfully acquired, may itself constitute an evil and stand condemned under § 2 even though it remains unexercised."

But be that as it may, the trial court here went farther and required the jury, before a verdict of guilty could be returned, to find three elements: 1, Existence of monopoly power; 2, intent to monopolize; 3, performance of the acts charged in the indictment within the three-year period. We think the charge was eminently fair to both appellants.

[Comments of Trial Court]

It is claimed that the trial court made prejudicial comments in his charge to the jury. We find no justification for that assertion. A federal judge has a right to fairly comment upon the evidence and even to express his opinion thereon, provided he makes clear that the ultimate fact determinations are for the jurors. Quercia v. United States, 1933, 289 U. S. 466, 469. In Buchanan v. United States, 8 Cir., 1926, 15 F. 2d 496, 498, this court clearly set out the limitations on judicial comment in jury instructions:

> "Under the rule, as stated and applied by the Supreme Court, it seems that, when a judge expresses his opinion as to the facts to the jury, making it clear that it is nothing but his opinion, and not binding upon them in any way, and that it is their duty and responsibility to determine all of the facts, he is within his rights, and that he is only subject to reversal when his comments upon the evidence or opinion as to the facts amount to partisan argument or advocacy, or constitute an appeal to passion or prejudice."

We believe that the charge here, examined in its entirety, which is as it should be, fairly and fully apprised the jury of the applicable law and that the trial court's comments on the evidence were sufficiently guarded to come within the limitations referred to. The jurors were told that they were supreme in determining the facts and that their determinations were binding upon the court. As if to doubly impress them with the idea that their responsibility was to be exercised without restraint and to make the point clear beyond cavil, the court explained further:

> "In the Federal Courts, as distinguished from the State Courts, in charging the jury as to the law, the Court has the right to express an opinion with respect to or comment upon the evidence. It is the duty of the Court to charge the jury as to the law and the Court may advise the jury as to the facts. There may be instances during this charge when the Court may make some comment upon the evidence, or express some opinion in regard to it, or you may infer from the Court's language that the Court may have some view relating to the evidence, but I have stated to you heretofore that you are the finders of the facts; you are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight and value you will place upon their testimony, and I charge and admonish you that if there is any expression of opinion or comment upon the evidence by the Court, it is not binding upon you in a determination of such facts. It is simply the expression of the Judge, and it is not meant to invade your province as the finders of the facts."

We find no error in the court's comments.

CONCLUSION

[Freedom of the Press]

Finally, it is contended that this prosecution endangers the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment, and that "* * * A newspaper is intimidated if it is subject at any moment to prosecution under the Sherman Act whenever it opposes or antagonizes those public officials in power." The suggestion that freedom of the press requires immunity from law to which the general public is not exempt is not new. The Supreme Court, in Associated Press v. N. L. R. B., 301 U. S. 103, 132-133, said:

> "The business of the Associated Press is not immune from regulation because it is an agency of the press. The publisher of a newspaper has no special immunity from the application of general laws. He has no special privilege to invade the rights and liberties of others.

He must answer for libel. He may be punished for contempt of court. He is subject to the anti-trust laws" (Citing Indiana Farmer's Guide Publishing Co. v. Prairie Farmer Publishing Co., et al., 1934, 293 U. S. 268.) (Italics supplied.)

The words of Mr. Justice Black eloquently answered a similar contention in Associated Press, et al. v. United States, supra, 1944 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,384], 326 U. S. 1, 20:

"It would be strange indeed, however, if the grave concern for freedom of the press which prompted adoption of the First Amendment should be read as a command that the government was without power to protect that freedom. The First Amendment, far from providing an argument against application of the Sherman Act, here provides powerful reasons to the contrary. That Amendment rests on the assumption that the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public, that a free press is a condition of a free society. Surely a command that the government itself shall not impede the free flow of ideas does not afford non-governmental combinations a refuge if they impose restraints upon that constitutionally guaranteed freedom. Freedom to publish means freedom for all and not for some. Freedom to publish is guaranteed by the Constitution, but freedom to combine to keep others from publishing is not. Freedom of the press from governmental interference under the First Amendment does not sanction repression of that freedom by private interests. The First Amendment affords not the slightest support for the contention that a combination to restrain trade in news and views has any constitutional immunity."

The theory of equal justice under law does not admit to the proposition that there is one brand of justice for some people and a different brand for others. Publishers of newspapers must answer for their actions in the same manner as anyone else. A monopolistic press could attain in tremendous measure the evils sought to be prevented by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Freedom to print does not mean freedom to destroy. To use the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment to destroy competition would defeat its own ends, for freedom to print news and express opinions as one chooses is not tantamount to having freedom to monopolize. To monopolize freedom is to destroy it.

[Affirmed]

We have considered the many other claims of error presented by the appellants and find them to be repetitious or without substantial merit.

Affirmed.

[¶ 68,602] Snow Crest Beverages, Inc., et al. v. Recipe Foods, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 55-770-W. Dated December 19, 1956.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Person Who May Bring Suit—Supplier of Party Injured—Stock Related Company.—A manufacturer of extracts used in the manufacture of beverage syrups could not maintain a treble damage action against a manufacturer of beverage syrups, which allegedly violated the antitrust laws to the direct injury of a competing manufacturer of beverage syrups to whom the extract manufacturer sold almost all of its extract production. The extract manufacturer alleged that approximately 97 per cent of its extract production was sold to the injured manufacturer and that the losses of such manufacturer by reason of the violations have caused it similar financial injury. The extract manufacturer was not a person injured in its business or property within the meaning of Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which does not give a private cause of action to a person whose losses result only from an interruption or diminution of profitable relationships with the party directly affected by alleged violations of the antitrust laws. Also, the fact that an individual owned stock in the injured beverage syrup manufacturer and in the extract manufacturer did not entitle the extract manufacturer to maintain the action. The extract manufacturer and the beverage syrup manufacturer were separate legal entities, although it was claimed that they were commonly operated as an integrated business unit.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.55.

For the plaintiffs: A. Morris Kobrick, of Mintz, Levin and Cohn, Boston, Mass., and James D. St. Clair, of Hale & Dorr, Boston, Mass.

For the defendant: John R. Hally and Robert W. Meserve, of Nutter, McClennen & Fish, Boston, Mass.

Opinion

[Motion for Summary Judgment]

WYZANSKI, District Judge [In full text]: Under Rule 56b, defendant moves for summary judgment on the claim of plaintiff, Polar Cola of America, Inc., (not the claim of Snow Crest Beverages, Inc.,) on the ground that the complaint does not show that it is a "person injured in his business or property" within § 4 of the Clayton Act 15 U. S. § 15.

[Complaint]

The complaint is in two parts, part one being the statement of Snow Crest Beverages, Inc. and part two being the statement of Polar Cola Company of America, Inc. Part one alleges that Snow Crest is a bottler whose principal business was the sale in bottles of various flavors of a syrup, sold under the trade name "Snow Crest" and designed to be mixed with water to yield a soft drink. Defendant Recipe Foods, Inc. is a competitor of Snow Crest, manufacturing and selling in the same markets similar syrups. It is further alleged that, with the effect of restraining commerce, substantially lessening commerce, and attempting to monopolize commerce, defendant damaged Snow Crest by inducing dealers to enter into exclusive purchasing contracts for syrup, and in connection therewith to sell such Snow Crest syrup as they had on hand. Other allegations respecting defendant's selling practices are set forth; but no allegations refer to its manufacturing activities. Defendant's alleged selling activities are said to be unlawful as contracts in restraint of trade (see § 1 of the Sherman Act), an attempt to monopolize (see § 2 of the Sherman Act), and as tieing agreements (see § 5 [3] of the Clayton Act). Thus the gist of the complaint turns on competitive practices in the market for the sale of syrup.

Part two alleges the same conduct of defendant but describes Polar Cola's business as consisting "solely of the manufacture and sale (apparently only to bottlers and not to dealers) of extracts which are used as a major ingredient in the manufacture of beverage syrup." It is alleged that there is "common operating control with Snow Crest the two together being conducted substantially as an integrated business unit." "Polar Cola's primary function is to supply Snow Crest its full requirement of extracts." "More than 90% of Polar Cola's product goes to Snow Crest. Of this quantity, purchased by Snow Crest, more than 90% is used by Snow Crest in the manufacture of syrups." Polar Cola claims that it is "intimately tied in with Snow Crest" and that the latter's losses have "directly caused similar financial injury to Polar Cola."

[Stock Ownership]

From affidavits of Polar Cola's treasurer, Edward Rachins, and a deposition taken of him it appears that at all relevant times he has been the sole owner of all the stock of Snow Crest Beverages, Inc., and that the stock of Polar Cola Company has been so divided that he continuously held 50 per cent of the outstanding capital stock and the other 50 per cent was held until her death in September 1954 by his wife, and thereafter by her administrator for the benefit of Mr. Rachins and his 14 year old son.

[Dealings Between Plaintiffs]

From the same affidavits it appears that in each of the years 1952, 1953, and 1954 over 97 per cent of Polar Cola's extract was sold to Snow Crest and 92 per cent or over of Polar Cola's extract was used by Snow Crest for syrup.

[Persons Who May Recover]

It is well settled that despite its broad language § 4 of the Clayton Act does not give a private cause of action to a person whose losses result only from an interruption or diminution of profitable relationships with the party directly affected by alleged violations of the anti-trust laws. Recovery under that section has been denied to a landlord of a competitor injured by the defendant although the landlord had a percentage rental. Melrose Realty Co. v. Loew's Inc. et al (3rd Cir. 1956) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,358, 68,423] 234 F. (2d) 518, 519, cert. den. 25 U. S. L. W., p. 3137 (1956). Likewise, recovery was denied to a patent licensor who would have received royalties from one of the defendant's competitors injured by the defendant's violations of the anti-trust laws. Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp., (2d Cir. 1955) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,104] 224 F. (2d) 678, cert. den. 350 U. S. 936 (1955). The same attitude has precluded employees of an injured competitor from recovering under the anti-trust acts. Corey v. Boston Ice Co., (D. Mass. 1913) 207 Fed. 465, 466; Gerli v. Silk Association of America, (S. D. N. Y. 1929) 36 F. (2d) 959; Walder v. Paramount Publix (S. D. N. Y. 1955 [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,097] 132 F. Supp. 912, 916. Without trying to spell out in detail the justification for these decisions, it may be noted that if they had gone the other way, there would as a result of the treble damage provisions of the anti-trust acts have been given in each case to the plaintiff what has sometimes been called a "windfall." Conference of Studio Unions v. Loews, Inc., C. C. A. 9 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,953], 193 F. (2d) 51, 55. In effect, businessmen would be subjected to liabilities of indefinable scope for conduct already subject to drastic private remedies. Courts aware of these considerations have been reluctant to allow those who were not in direct competition with the defendant to have a private action even though as a matter of logic their losses were foreseeable. Congress has failed to amend the anti-trust laws on this point in the face of repeated decisions. It seems to have been content for the judiciary to take a position narrower than that often applied in non-statutory tort cases and in cases where plaintiffs are not allowed a multiple recovery.

The policy considerations which have led to a narrow construction of § 4 of the Clayton Act are not overborne by any fact alleged in the complaint, or shown in the affidavits or deposition.

[Separate Legal Personalities]

It is not sufficient to show that Mr. Rachins owns all the stock of Polar Cola, and that he owns half, and an estate of which he and his minor son are the beneficiaries owns the other half, of the stock of Snow Crest. First, there is not identity of equitable ownership. Second, if there were identity it would be immaterial. Those who organized the corporations chose to take the advantages and disadvantages which flow from separate legal personalities. Cf. Timken Co. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,837], 341 U. S. 593. They placed only one of the two corporations in direct competition with defendant. And their choice limits their potential recovery. A possible further reason for this conclusion is that in this particular case the organizers of these two corporations have so divided the business functions between the two corporations that it is easy to allocate economic losses occurring at three separate stages: (1) manufacturing, (2) sales from the manufacturer to the bottler, and (3) sales from the bottler to the dealer. If the complainants had not made such an allocation, probably a tribunal would not make it no matter how logical, because of its inherent difficulty of proof. But the allocation having been made, and the losses at the third stage being the only ones occurring in the field of the alleged unlawful competition, limitation of recovery to losses in that field coincides with the policy considerations which have led to a narrow construction of Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

[Business Relations]

Nor is it sufficient to show that plaintiff Polar Cola supplies virtually all its extract to plaintiff Snow Crest. This is the plain teaching of the already cited cases involving landlords and employees. In the employee and presumably in the landlord situation plaintiff who was denied recovery was supplying to the competitor directly injured all his services or all his property.

[Summary Judgment Granted]

The motion for summary judgment should be granted. If plaintiff Polar Cola desires to appeal this ruling, the appeal should be finally adjudicated before part one of the complaint is tried. If a reversal is in order, and Polar Cola's claim is appropriate for trial, it would be advantageous to have Polar Cola's claim heard simultaneously and not subsequent to Snow Crest's. There being no just reason for delay, a final judgment on Polar Cola's claim will be entered, after its form is submitted to me and duly executed pursuant to Rule 54b.

[¶ 68,603] Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company v. Masters Mail Order Company of Washington, D. C., Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7250. Argued November 12, 1956. Decided January 7, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore. R. DORSEY WATKINS, District Judge.

Maryland Fair Trade Act and McGuire Act

Fair Trade—Advertising of Sales Below Fair Trade Prices—Noncontracting Dealers—Sales from Non-Fair Trade Jurisdiction to Fair Trade Jurisdiction—Applicability of State Fair Trade Act—McGuire Act.—The Maryland Fair Trade Act does not prohibit a District of Columbia mail order company from advertising in Maryland that a fair trader's products can be purchased in the District of Columbia at less than their established Maryland fair trade prices. The advertisements originated in the District of Columbia and were directed to residents of Maryland, and the sales of the fair traded products took place in the District of Columbia and not in Maryland. Such advertisements must relate to a sale of products within Maryland in order to fall within the Maryland Fair Trade Act. Since the prohibition of the Act against selling below fair trade prices is of necessity confined to Maryland sales, the associated prohibited acts of advertising or offering for sale must likewise be concerned with sales within the state. The contention that the Act prohibits advertising of discount prices in Maryland no matter where the sales actually take effect was rejected. An attempt to effectuate the purposes of the Act by controlling the activities of persons beyond the jurisdiction of the state would raise serious constitutional questions.

The provisions of the McGuire Act do not broaden the scope of the Maryland statute insofar as the advertisement of sales of commodities at less than fair trade prices is concerned. The purpose of the McGuire Act was served by the grant of the authority to the states to pass fair trade statutes and make violations of price agreements unfair competition; therefore, controversies as to the rights of sellers and buyers under these acts must be resolved by reference to the state statutes themselves.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3258.22, 3258.80, 3262, 3262.80.

For the appellant: J. Cookman Boyd, Jr., and Gilbert H. Weil (Alfred T. Lee on brief).

For the appellee: Norman Diamond (Thurman Arnold, James Robert Miller, H. R. & J. R. Miller, and Arnold, Fortas & Porter on brief).

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Maryland, at Baltimore, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,326.

Before PARKER, Chief Judge, SOPER, Circuit Judge, and HOFFMAN, District Judge.

[Issue]

SOPER, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The question for decision on this appeal is whether the Maryland Fair Trade Act is violated by the advertisement in Maryland of goods sold below fair trade prices in the District of Columbia, which is a free trade jurisdiction.

[Fair Trader]

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company is a Michigan corporation and is engaged throughout the United States in the business of manufacturing, selling and distributing carpet sweepers. All of its merchandise bears the company's trademarks for which it has established a valuable name, reputation and good will by the expenditure of large sums of money. Its goods are in free and open competition with carpet sweepers of the same general class manufactured by others. The company has entered into written agreements with dealers and distributors in Maryland and in all other States which have fair trade laws under which the dealers agree not to resell certain merchandise at less than certain specified prices.

[Mail Order Sales]

Master Mail Order Company of Washington, D. C., Inc., the defendant in the District Court, was a Maryland corporation when the suit was instituted and process was served, but later it was reincorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia. It operates only one business establishment, which consists of a single retail store in the city of Washington where it maintains a stock of merchandise which it offers for sale over the counter and by mail. More than two-thirds of its sales are made over the counter. It advertises and offers for sale Bissell carpet sweepers at prices substantially lower than those specified in the fair trade agreements between Bissell and the dealers and distributors who sell the goods in Maryland and other States. All of the defendant's sales by mail, including sales of Bissell carpet sweepers, have been made to consumers pursuant to orders received directly from them at its Washington store, and all such orders have been filled by direct shipment to purchasers either by mail or by other carriers. It has not advertised or offered carpet sweepers for sale except by mail from or over the counter at its place of business in Washington.

[Complaint]

The complaint stated that Masters' advertisement of carpet sweepers for sale at less than fair trade prices was in violation of the Maryland statute and was causing irreparable damage to the plaintiff, in that it tended to impair and destroy the plaintiff's good will; and, accordingly, the complaint prayed the Court to enjoin Masters from advertising, offering for sale, or selling any commodity bearing the plaintiff's name or trademarks at prices less than those stipulated in agreements between Bissell and the retail dealers in Maryland and other fair trade States.

[Summary Judgment]

Upon these undisputed facts Masters filed a motion for summary judgment supported by affidavit and the motion was granted by the District Judge on the ground that the activities described do not violate the Maryland statute. See [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,326] 140 F. Supp. 165. The pleadings and affidavit do not explicitly state that the defendant advertised the goods in the State of Maryland, but it was conceded by both parties that such advertisement took place and that the pleadings were intentionally framed to present the question as to whether or not advertising originating in the District of Columbia directed to residents of Maryland and other fair trade States, either by newspaper or by direct mail, offering goods for sale at discount prices only in the District of Columbia is a violation of the Maryland statute, and if so, whether the application of the Maryland statute to such advertising is authorized by the McGuire Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a) (1)-(5). The factual situation is stated as follows in the appellant's brief:

> "Defendant conducts an over-the-counter and mail order business in Washington, D. C., from which it purposefully sends into Maryland advertising materials quoting plaintiff's products at prices less than those which have been duly established by plaintiff in Maryland, and which are observed by retail dealers therein pursuant to that state's fair trade law. In response to such solicitations, Maryland residents are induced, as defendant intends them to be, to order the products by letter addressed to defendant at its place of business in the District. Defendant, in turn, fills such orders by mail, taking particular pains to assure that legal title technically passes in The District of Columbia where no fair trade law exists."

[Maryland Act]

Bissell relies upon the provisions of the Maryland Fair Trade Act, Annotated Code of Maryland, 1951, Article 83, §§ 102 to 110, and particularly upon §§ 102D, 103 and 107 thereof.

> "The applicable portions of the Maryland Fair Trade Act, Annotated Code of Maryland, 1951 Edition, Article 83, are Sections 102(D), 103 and 107, reading as follows:
>
> 'Sec. 102(D) 'Retailer' means any person selling a commodity to consumers for use.

'Sec. 103. No contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, or the vending equipment from which a commodity is sold to consumer bears the trademark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which commodity is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others shall be deemed in violation of any law of the State of Maryland by reason of any of the following provisions which may be contained in such contract:

'(A) That the buyer will not resell such commodity at less than the minimum price stipulated by the seller.

'(B) That the buyer will require of any dealer to whom he may resell such commodity an agreement that he will not, in turn, resell at less than the minimum price stipulated by the seller.

'(C) That the seller will not sell such commodity:

'(1) to any wholesaler, unless such wholesaler will agree not to resell the same to any retailer unless the retailer will in turn agree not to resell the same except to consumers for use and at not less than the stipulated minimum price, and such wholesaler will likewise agree not to resell the same to any other wholesaler unless such other wholesaler will make the same agreement with any wholesaler or retailer to whom he may resell; or

'(2) to any retailer, unless the retailer will agree not to resell the same except to consumers for use at not less than the stipulated minimum price.

'Sec. 107. Willfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of Sections 102-110, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby.' "

The purpose of the Act, as stated in the preamble, Laws of Maryland, 1937, Chapter 239, was to protect trademark owners, producers, distributors and the general public against injurious practices in the distribution of competitive commodities bearing a distinguishing trademark or name through the use of volunteer contracts establishing minimum resale prices. Under § 103 it becomes lawful to make contracts between a producer or distributor and a buyer of trademarked goods, which are in competition with similar commodities produced by others, wherein the buyer agrees not to resell the goods at less than a stipulated minimum price and the seller agrees that he will not sell the goods to any wholesaler unless the wholesaler exacts a similar price agreement from any dealer to whom he resells the goods, and the seller also agrees not to sell the goods to any retailer without a similar price agreement.

The case turns on the interpretation of § 107, which provides that wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in a fair trade contract is unfair competition, whether or not the advertiser or seller is a party to the contract.

[Legality of Advertising]

The specific question is whether Masters has been guilty of "advertising" goods for less than the minimum price within the meaning of this Act. It is conceded that all of Masters' sales of carpet sweepers took place in Washington and none of them took place in Maryland. It is also conceded that the phrase in § 107, which denounces, as unfair competition, "selling" any commodity for less than the price stipulated in any contract, must refer to sales in Maryland since Maryland would have no right to prohibit a sale at less than fair trade prices outside the State. Nevertheless, it is argued that the statute condemns advertising of discount prices in Maryland no matter where the sales actually take effect. Much is said, much indeed may fairly be said, as to the injury to the business of the producer in the debasement of the trademark by advertising to buyers in Maryland that a few miles away across the border the same goods may be purchased for much less than in their home State. Moreover, it is emphasized that the statute is phrased in the disjunctive, so that it is not necessary to show both sale and advertisement, but only one or the other, in order to establish unfair competition in the State. To construe the Act otherwise, it is said, would render ineffective the policy expressed in the fair trade law of the State which has been approved by the decisions of its higher Court in such cases as Goldsmith v. Mead Johnson & Co., [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,232], 176 Md. 682; Schill v. Remington Putnam Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,095, 56,117], 179 Md. 83; Don- ner v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,740], 196 Md. 475.

We agree with the appellant that advertising the sale of a commodity at less than the stipulated fair price is of itself unfair competition within the meaning of § 107 of the Maryland statute, whether or not a sale takes place; but we are satisfied that the advertisement must relate to a sale of goods within the State in order to fall within the condemnation of the statute. All advertisements of merchandise are aimed at the sale of commodities; and so we find, in this instance, that the prohibited acts are listed in a single phrase as "advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity," and since the prohibition against selling is of necessity confined to Maryland sales, the associated acts of advertising or offering for sale must likewise be concerned with sales within the State. The appellant interprets the statute as if the phrase were modified so as to read "advertising or offering for sale any commodity at any place or selling it in the State of Maryland." In our view it is far more reasonable, when construing a statute which was enacted to authorize the formation and enforcement of fair trade agreements in the State of Maryland, to interpret the disputed phrase as if it read "advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity within the State."

[Supporting Rulings]

In reaching this conclusion we are aided by the admonition of the Court of Appeals of Maryland in Venable v. J. Engel & Co., Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,523], 193 Md. 544, where an injunction against a seller was refused who had advertised a fair traded article in such a way that the public might be led to believe that he had cut the price although he had not actually done so. The court said, p. 549:

> ". . . . . The Fair Trade Act is in derogation of the general rule of the common law that any person has the right to sell his property at any price that he and the purchaser may agree upon, and the courts should accordingly construe the Act strictly and should not infer that the Legislature intended to change any common-law principle beyond what the Act explicitly provides."

The same interpretation was given to the statute not only in the decision of Judge R. Dorsey Watkins in the District Court, but also by Judge Chesnut in Revere Camera Co. v. Masters Mail Order Co., D. C. Md. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,981], 128 F. Supp. 457, 461 and 462.

This conclusion is also fortified by the doubt which arises as to the constitutionality of a statute which seeks to regulate the interstate commerce, which is inherent in advertising on a national scale. See Lorain Journal v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 151. This doubt is not allayed by the fact that a prohibition of the advertisement of discount prices in Maryland would undoubtedly aid in the protection of the trademark on fair traded commodities. There are many instances in which extraterritorial activities injuriously affect the internal business of a State, but under our system of government it is not always possible for the State to find the remedy. Such a situation was considered by the Supreme Court in Miller Bros. Co. v. Maryland, 347 U. S. 340, in which an attempt was made to enforce a Maryland excise tax on the use in the State of articles which had been purchased in Delaware. The tax was designed to support a Maryland sales tax; and it was brought out that vendors in Delaware reached Maryland inhabitants and induced them to purchase commodities in Delaware for delivery in Maryland whereby the sales tax was avoided. The Court held that the Maryland statute violated the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment in so far as it sought to make the Delaware vendor an agent for the collection of the use tax from Maryland purchasers. The situation resembles that now before the Court, in that it involved an attempt to effectuate the purposes of a Maryland statute by controlling the activities of persons beyond the jurisdiction of the State, so that a serious constitutional question cannot be avoided.

[McGuire Act]

The provisions of the McGuire Act do not broaden the scope of the Maryland statute in so far as the advertisement of sales of commodities at less than fair trade prices is concerned. The purpose of the McGuire Act, as stated in 15 U. S. C. 45(a), was to protect the rights of the States to regulate their internal affairs and to enable them to enact laws authorizing contracts prescribing minimum prices for the resale of commodities, and to extend the stipulated prices to persons who are not parties to the contracts. To this extent the States were relieved from the prohibitions of the antitrust Acts. To effectuate this purpose § 45 (3) of the statute was passed. It furnishes the basis of § 107 of the Maryland Act, in that it makes it lawful for a State to pass a statute which, in substance, provides that wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the prescribed prices is unfair competition and actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby. The purpose of the Federal statute was served by this grant of authority of the States to pass fair trade statutes and make violations of price agreements unfair competition, and hence it follows that controversies as to the rights of sellers and buyers under these statutes must be resolved by reference to the State statutes themselves. Here again the principle of strict construction applies, for it was held in United States v. McKesson & Robbins [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305, 316, that Congress has marked the limitations beyond which price fixing cannot go and these limitataions must be construed strictly since resale price maintenance is a privilege restrictive of a free economy.

[Affirmed]

The issue in the pending case therefore reverts to the meaning of the Maryland statute which, in our opinion, was correctly interpreted by the Court below.

Affirmed.

[¶ 68,604] United States v. Logan Co., Mathews Conveyer Company, Mesta Machine Company, Palmer-Bee Company, Standard Conveyor Company, and United Engineering and Foundry Company.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 9658. Dated January 4, 1957.

Case No. 1093 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Mootness.—An action to enjoin manufacturers of sheet chargers from conspiring to fix and maintain minimum prices for patented sheet chargers by means of uniform patent license agreements was dismissed, without prejudice, on the ground that the action was rendered moot by the expiration of the patent (subsequent to the commencement of the action) covering the sheet chargers. Since the patent had expired and it affirmatively appeared that the alleged illegal license agreements could survive no longer than the patent, there remained no subject matter upon which the conspiracy charged against the manufacturers could operate. Summary judgment for the manufacturers was not precluded by the Government's allegation of a continuing conspiracy, since the allegation did not create an issue of fact as to whether there was a "reasonable expectation" of a resumption of the manufacturers' activities upon which evidence should be adduced. There could be no reasonable expectation of a resumption of illegal acts with respect to sheet chargers licensed under a patent which had expired. In the absence of a reasonable expectation that the wrong alleged against the manufacturers would be repeated, the court cannot exceed its jurisdiction in determining issues for the Government in future cases.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.675.

For the plaintiff: D. Malcolm Anderson, U. S. Attorney, Pittsburgh, Pa., and William L. Maher, Department of Justice, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendants: Robert E. Hatton, Louisville, Ky., Samuel McCune of Kirkpatrick, Pomeroy, Lockhart & Johnson; Edmund K. Trent of Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay; G. Harold Blaxter of Blaxter, O'Neill & Houston; Alexander Unkovic of Kountz, Fry & Meyer; Robert F. Patton of Smith, Buchanan, Ingersoll, Rodewald & Eckert; and Walter J. Blenko of Blenko, Hoopes, Leonard & Buell, all of Pittsburgh, Pa.

For a consent decree entered in the U. S. District Court, Western District of Pennsylvania, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,375, and for a prior opinion of the Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,946.

Opinion

[Summary Judgment Motion]

MILLER, District Judge [In full text]: This action was commenced by the government to "prevent and restrain continuing violations by defendants" of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, upon a charge that defendants illegally conspired to fix and maintain minimum prices of patented sheet chargers by means of uniform patent license agreements. The question before the court is whether the action should now be dismissed upon the motion of defendants under federal procedural rule 56, inasmuch as the patent underlying the agreements has expired.

Rule 56(c) provides that "[t]he judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law."

[Patent Licensing Agreements]

Defendant Mesta Machine Company (Mesta) was the assignee of patent No. 2,141,394 which issued to Iversen on December 27, 1938, covering his inventions embodied in a sheet charger device, useful to the steel industry, in the process of feeding individual sheets of steel into rolling mills. Between 1939 and 1941, Mesta entered into patent license agreements with each of the other defendants, authorizing the other defendants to manufacture and vend sheet chargers covered by the Iversen patent. The agreements were substantially identical and provided for the payment of identical royalties and for the observance by the licensees and Mesta of minimum sales prices to be fixed from time to time by Mesta, which prices were to be the same for Mesta and all parties licensed. As alleged in the complaint, each agreement was to expire at the end of the life of the patent.

[Offense Charged]

Paragraph 13 of the complaint alleged as follows:

> "Beginning in or about the year 1939, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of the filing of this complaint, the defendants have entered into unlawful contracts and have engaged in and are now engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in the manufacture and sale of sheet chargers among the several states of the United States, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The defendants are continuing, and threaten to, and will continue the aforesaid offense, unless the relief hereinafter prayed for in this Complaint is granted.
>
> "Certain of the specific agreements, licenses, arrangements, understandings and acts which formed a part of said offense and which were used in effectuation thereof are hereinafter more fully set forth and described."

Thereafter plaintiff details the alleged conspiratorial transactions, understandings and agreements between defendants, all of which relate to the patent licenses granted by Mesta under the Iversen patent, and prays that the agreements be declared illegal and canceled; that injunctive relief be granted to enjoin defendants from further operations under the license agreements described; that defendants be perpetually enjoined from entering into any agreements or arrangements, or performing any acts having the purpose or effect "of continuing, reviving, or renewing the hereinabove alleged violation of the Sherman Act;" and that other relief be granted as the nature of the case may require. Defendants deny the allegations of illegality and conspiracy.*

[Affidavits]

The motion to dismiss proceeds upon the fact, not disputed, that the Iversen patent expired on December 27, 1955. Each of the defendants has submitted two affidavits in support of the motion. The first group of affidavits is intended to demonstrate that defendants made relatively few sales under the patent license agreements and that the minimum sales provision was a dead letter almost from the outset. The second group of affidavits is intended to show that except for defendant United Engineering and Foundry Company (United) none of the defendants owns or contemplates acquiring patents relating to sheet chargers and that none of the defendants is licensed or intends to become licensed under patents relating to sheet chargers. In an opposing affidavit, counsel for the government sets forth numerous recitals from the answers of the defendants to the complaint, responses to interrogatories and requests for admissions along with certain informal remarks of counsel for defendant Mesta and contends, principally, that the foregoing establish that there are genuine issues as to material facts which must be resolved at trial; that there is a reasonable probability that the practices charged will be resumed or repeated; and that adjudication of the legality of the questioned practices is required as a guide to future action, thus precluding a holding of mootness.

* After the oral argument upon the present motion, defendant Logan Company consented to the entry of a final judgment against it.

[Summary Judgment]

Summary judgment may not be granted upon the basis of evidence which a jury would be free to disbelieve, Sartor v. Arkansas Natural Gas Corp., 1944, 321 U. S. 620, 624, and affidavits in support thereof may be considered only in determining whether an issue of fact is presented. Frederick Hart v. Recordgraph Corp., 3 Cir., 1948, 169 F. 2d 580, 581. Where material facts averred in an affidavit are peculiarly within the knowledge of the moving party, the cause must proceed to trial in order that the opponent may be allowed to disprove such facts by cross-examination and by the demeanor of the moving party while testifying. Subin v. Goldsmith, 2 Cir., 1955, 224 F. 2d 753, 758-760.

[Issue of Fact]

The court agrees with plaintiff that the pleadings, admissions and affidavits on file indicate that an issue of fact is presented as to whether defendants engaged in an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade which continued up until the date of the filing of the complaint. However, if the controversy has become moot, the legality of defendants' conduct is the very question which the court is forbidden to consider.

[Moot Controversy]

The court has previously held, in refusing a motion for judgment on the pleadings filed by the defendant United, that the described licensing agreements did not constitute the sole illegality alleged in Paragraph 13, supra, in view of plaintiff's allegations that a conspiracy existed among the defendants. The court adheres to the view that a conspiracy in restraint of trade is broader and more than a contract in restraint of trade, United States v. Kissel, 1910, 218 U. S. 601, 608, but nevertheless is satisfied that the present controvery is moot.

While the allegations of Paragraph 13 are very broad, the only illegal acts charged against defendants in the complaint are those by which they allegedly conspired in restraint of trade to fix and maintain minimum prices at which sheet chargers covered by Mesta's patent would be sold. Such interpretation of the complaint becomes obligatory, moreover, in light of the express stipulation by counsel for plaintiff during the course of a pre-trial conference held in these proceedings that for the purpose of the present action "the conspiracy alleged relates only to sheet chargers licensed under the Iversen patent." * Since the Iversen patent has expired and it affirmatively appears that the alleged illegal license agreements could survive no longer than the patent, there remains no subject matter upon which the conspiracy charged against defendants could operate. The court is therefore of the opinion that the question as to the actuality of any presently existing controversy between the parties is ruled by United States v. Hamburg-American Co., 1915, 239 U. S. 466. In that case, the legality of a contract between steamship companies in alleged violation of the Sherman Act was held to be moot because World War I automatically dissolved it and made continued relationship between the companies impossible. Inasmuch as the controversy between the parties had no present actuality, the court dismissed the action, saying:

> "The legal proposition is not in substance controverted, but it is urged in view of the character of the questions and the possibility or probability that on the cessation of war the parties will resume or recreate their asserted illegal combination, we should now decide the controversies in order that by operation of the rule to be established any attempt at renewal of or creation of the combination in the future will be rendered impossible. But this merely upon a prophecy as to future conditions invokes the exercise of judicial power not to decide an existing controversy, but to establish a rule for controlling predicted future conduct, contrary to the elementary principle which was thus stated in California v. San Pablo

* Pre-trial Record, pp. 7, 34.

& Tulare R. R., 149 U. S. 308, 314: 'The duty of this court, as of every judicial tribunal, is limited to determining rights of persons or of property, which are actually controverted in the particular case before it. When, in determining such rights, it becomes necessary to give an opinion upon a question of law, that opinion may have weight as a precedent for future decisions. But the court is not empowered to decide moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare, for the government of future cases, principles or rules of law which cannot affect the result as to the thing in issue in the case before it. No stipulation of parties or counsel, whether in the case before the court or in any other case, can enlarge the power, or affect the duty, of the court in this regard.'" (239 U. S. at 475)

In the Hamburg-American case, the court notes that mere discontinuance of an unlawful practice by the parties charged with violating the law does not relieve the court of the duty to pass on the question of legality where at the will of the parties the illegal practice may be resumed. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 1897, 166 U. S. 290; Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 1911, 219 U. S. 498. However, the court distinguishes such cases, saying:

"But if the intervening event is owing to the plaintiff's own act or to a power beyond the control of either party, the court will stay its hand." (p. 477)

United States v. American Asiatic Steamship Co., 1917, 242 U. S. 537; cf. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 1931, 283 U. S. 163, 181; United States v. Alaska S. S. Co., 253 U. S. 113, 115-116.

Termination of defendant Mesta's patent rights was brought about by operation of law, a force over which the present parties had no control, and further relations between defendants are impossible with respect to the subject matter of the alleged conspiracy, i. e., sheet chargers licensed under the Iversen patent. Although plaintiff contends the case is not moot because it has alleged a continuing conspiracy against defendants, nothing remains in the record save the accusation of past wrongdoing to sustain the foregoing averment. Plaintiff has made it evident both in the complaint and at the pre-trial conference that it does not allege a conspiracy to fix prices of sheet chargers generally but only in the framework of defendants' patent license agreements. It has indicated throughout the pre-trial conference that its proof at trial will be so confined.

The parties have submitted separate briefs on the question of authority of the court to award injunctive relief with respect to unpatented as well as patented sheet chargers. The court is agreed that if authority to retain jurisdiction of the present action existed, a decree entered could regulate practices connected with acts found to be illegal and could "close all roads to the prohibited goal." International Salt Co. v. United States, 1947 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392; United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 1950 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,729], 340 U. S. 76. Such eventual considerations do not alter the circumstance that the conspiracy upon which the decree of the court may operate is that which has been defined by the complaint. United States v. National City Lines, 1955 [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,158], 134 F. Supp. 350, 355; United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 1953 [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,493], 345 U. S. 629, 635.

[Resumption of Illegal Activity]

Numerous authorities hold that voluntary discontinuance of illegal practices does not render a controversy moot where the defendant is free to return to his old ways, unless it can be demonstrated that "there is no reasonable expectation that the wrong will be repeated." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 1945 [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,342], 148 F. 2d 416, 448; United States v. W. T. Grant Co., supra, 345 U. S. at 632; cf. Walling v. Helmerich & Payne, 1944, 323 U. S. 37, 43; United States v. Imperial Chemical Industries, 1951 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,923], 100 F. Supp. 504, 591-593, decree entered [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,282], 105 F. Supp. 215; United States v. United States Alkali Export Assn., 1949 [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,474], 86 F. Supp. 59, 79-80; United States v. National City Lines, 1953 [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,654], 118 F. Supp. 465, 467. It is argued that the allegation of a continuing conspiracy creates an issue of fact whether there is a "reasonable expectation" of resumption of defendants' activities upon which evidence should be adduced. Cf. United States v. Standard Register Co., 1947 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,613], 7 F. R. D. 287. There could be no reasonable expectation of a resumption of illegal acts with respect to sheet chargers licensed under the Iversen patent. Plaintiff's argument therefore requires the court to give to the conspiracy described in the complaint broader scope than accorded by plaintiff itself, but even so must be rejected.

Neither the answers filed by defendants, their responses to requests for admissions or interrogatories, nor the affidavits filed in support of or in opposition to the motion reveal the existence of a genuine issue of fact on the question of the threat of future violations. Plaintiff's fear that defendants will revive their agreements with respect to other patents in the future is based only on the fact that defendants continue to maintain the legality of their conduct under the principle of United States v. General Electric Co., 1926, 272 U. S. 476. No statement of counsel for defendant Mesta brought to the attention of the court can be regarded as evidence that Mesta intends to enter into "similar agreements in the future if the occasion arose" as argued; and in the absence of a judgment for plaintiff, no evidence of Mesta's alleged illegal proclivities may be found in the fact that other anti-trust proceedings have been instituted against it. The plaintiff has throughout argued that defendants may resume their alleged illegal agreements at will, but in so doing, has overlooked the fact that ownership or control of valuable patents relating to sheet chargers is a prerequisite to revival of agreements like those described in the complaint. But it may be taken as established by uncontroverted averments of defendants' affidavits that neither defendant Mesta nor any defendant except United has such ownership or control.* There is a possibility that defendants may in the future violate the anti-trust laws, but as the court says in United States v. W. T. Grant Co., supra, 345 U. S. at 633:

> "The purpose of an injunction is to prevent future violations, . . . and, of course, it can be utilized even without a showing of past wrongs. But the moving party must satisfy the court that relief is needed. The necessary determination is that there exists some cognizable danger of recurrent violation, something more than the mere possibility which serves to keep the case alive."

[Decision As Guide]

The plaintiff's final contention is that the case is saved from being moot because the applicability of the General Electric case to factual situations like that presented here "must be finally determined so that all parties might be guided thereby." However, even though the exact limits of the General Electric case may be undefined, there could be no dispute that a patent owner may not by confederation, combination, or conspiracy, unite with others in restraint of trade in connection with his patent. United States v. L. D. Caulk Co., 1954 [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,919], 126 F. Supp. 693, 708; see United States v. Masonite Corp., 1942 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,209], 316 U. S. 265, 277.

Cases cited by plaintiff support the principle that where public agencies are involved, termination of alleged illegal practices does not necessarily render the controversy moot, when the situation presents a need for decision as a guide to the public agency in future similar situations. Walling v. Mutual Wholesale Food & Supply Co., 8 Cir., 1944, 141 F. 2d 331, 334-335; Walling v. Haile Gold Mines, Inc., 4 Cir., 1943, 136 F. 2d 102, 105-106; Gay Union Corp., Inc. v. Wallace, C. A. D. C., 1940, 112 F. 2d 192, 195. But in none of the cases cited or in others examined by the court was the need for guidance to the public agency the only basis for the decision. In the absence of a reasonable expectation that the wrong alleged against the present defendants will be repeated, this court may not exceed its jurisdiction in determining issues for the government of future cases.

[Dismissed Without Prejudice]

In accordance with established practice, the action will be dismissed without prejudice. United States v. Munsingwear, 1950, 340 U. S. 36, 39; United States v. Aluminum Co., supra; United States v. W. T. Grant Co., supra. When, and if, defendants attempt to resume or enter into similar alleged conspiracies and agreements, it will be time enough for the government to commence new litigation against them. Such course is preferable, in the view of the court, to entering into a protracted trial of issues without present vitality.

---

* United is the owner by assignment of patent No. 2,278,140 issued to M. P. Sieger on March 31, 1942. United avers under oath it has never discussed the possible granting of licenses thereunder with other manufacturers and "does not now intend or contemplate the granting of any such right to anyone."

[¶ 68,605] United States v. National Screen Service Corporation; Paramount Pictures Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Coporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; United Artists Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; and Universal Pictures Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 75-138. Filed January 3, 1957.

Case No. 1128 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Additional Parties Defendant.—A Government motion for an order joining two corporations as additional parties defendant was granted over the objections of the corporations that (1) they were not guilty of the charges made against them in the proposed supplemental complaint, (2) the Government had failed to establish any need to join them since a decree against the present parties would effectively bind their successors (the corporations), and (3) the application of the Government was made on the very eve of trial. The court ruled that only a trial can resolve the issue of whether or not they are guilty; that the proposed supplemental complaint alleges that the corporations have participated in unlawful activities, independently of any vicarious liability for the conduct of their respective predecessor corporations; and that no trial date had been fixed and no prejudice to any person had been shown. Also, the court ruled that the exercise of the extra-territorial jurisdiction of the court, conferred by Section 5 of the Sherman Act, was unnecessary since the corporations had principal offices and places of business in the district in which the action was brought.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8221.

For the plaintiff: Walter W. K. Bennett, E. Winslow Turner, and Elliott H. Feldman (Richard B. O'Donnell, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim, for National Screen Service Corporation; Louis Phillips for Paramount Pictures Corporation; R. W. Perkins for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and Warner Bros. Distributing Corporation; Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; J. Miller Walker for RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery for United Artists Corporation; Schwartz & Frohlich for Columbia Pictures Corporation; and Aldolph Schimel for Universal Pictures Company, Inc.; all of New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Additional Parties]

SUGARMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, moves "for an order, pursuant to 15 U. S. C. § 5, that the ends of justice require that plaintiff be granted leave to:

"(1) join Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation as additional parties defendant herein; and

"(2) cause them to be summoned and served with a supplemental complaint in the form hereto annexed."

[Objections Rejected]

In opposition to granting the relief sought, the proposed new parties are heard to argue,[1] in substance: (1) they are not guilty of the charges leveled against them in the proposed supplemental pleading, (2) plaintiff has failed to establish any need to join the proposed new parties, since a decree against present parties will effectively bind their successors "New Warner" and "New Fox" and (3) the application of the plaintiff is made on the very eve of trial.

The short answer to (1) supra is that only a trial can resolve the issue.

As to (2) supra, the argument ignores the allegations of the proposed supplemental complaint, wherein it is alleged that "New Warner" and "New Fox" have participated in unlawful activities, independently of any vicarious liability for the conduct of their respective predecessor corporations.

[1] 3 Moore's Fed. Prac., 2d Ed., para. 21.05, p. 2909.

Plaintiff does not seek a substitution of parties under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 25(c); it seeks to add new parties who must answer for their own deeds. Authority for the motion is found in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 21 [2] and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(d). Exercise of the extra-territorial jurisdiction of the court, conferred by 15 U. S. C. A. § 5, is unnecessary since both "New Warner" and "New Fox" have principal offices and places of business in New York City, according to the proposed supplemental complaint.

As to (3) supra, no trial date has been fixed in the instant action. No prejudice is shown to result to any person, including the proposed new parties, by reason of any undue delay on the plaintiff's part. This objection, too, is without merit.

[Motion Granted]

Oral argument appearing to be unnecessary, the motion of the plaintiff is granted. Settle an appropriate order on notice.

[¶ 68,606] Music Merchants, Inc. v. Capitol Records, Inc., Capitol Records Distributing Corp., Decca Records Inc., Decca Distributing Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil No. 14596. Dated January 4, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Joinder of Claims and Parties—Motion To Sever.—A motion to sever from a complaint different causes of action against different defendants was denied where the causes of action charged, in effect, that all of the defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices. The plaintiff asserted against the defendants a right to relief "in respect of or arising out of the same * * * series of transactions or occurrences," namely, arising out of an alleged conspiracy by and among all of the defendants. Furthermore, the principal question of law involved was whether the alleged price fixing conspiracy violated the Sherman Act. Rule 20(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for permissive joinder of defendants if there is any question of law or fact common to all, and the rule does not require that all facts to be adduced be common to all. However, the motion was granted with respect to causes of action charging discriminatory pricing practices since it was not claimed that the practices of one of the defendants arose out of the same series of transactions as the practices of another defendant. In asserting a right to relief against multiple parties, the right to relief must arise out of the same series of transactions and there must be a common question of law or fact.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.275.

For the plaintiff: Socolow, Stein & Seton, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Young, Kaplan & Edelstein, and Cohen & Bingham, New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Joinder of Claims and Parties]

GALSTON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion by defendants Capitol Records, Inc. and Capitol Records Distributing Corp. to sever from the complaint the second and fifth causes of action against defendants Decca Records, Inc., and Decca Distributing Corporation, to drop the latter defendants from the third cause of action and to direct plaintiff to amend its present complaint accordingly and to proceed solely against defendants Capitol Records and Capitol Distributing on the first, third and fourth causes of action, on the ground that the requirements of Rules 18(a) and 20(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28

[2] 3 Moore's Fed. Prac., 2d Ed., para. 21.04, p. 2906.

U. S. C. A., with respect to permissive joinder of claims and of parties have not been satisfied.

[Complaint]

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Pennsylvania, and has a place of business in the Eastern District of New York. The action is brought pursuant to provisions of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 1-7, the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 12-17, and the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13.

[Causes of Action]

In the first cause of action it is alleged that Capitol Records and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Capitol Distributing Corp., have contracted, combined and conspired with others and with each other to restrain trade in the distribution of popular records. It further alleges that in furtherance of this "illegal conspiracy" Capitol Records has established distributors, including Capitol Distributing, each of which in its particular territory has an exclusive franchise; that as a condition to the maintenance of such franchise, Capitol Records has insisted that all its distributors agree to sell records at a price fixed by Capitol Records; and that all of such distributors have agreed with Capitol Records to sell all records produced by it throughout the entire United States at the uniform prices fixed by Capitol Records.

The second cause of action contains substantially the same allegations with respect to the formation and maintenance of a resale price-fixing conspiracy by Decca Records, Inc., and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Decca Distributing Corp. and "others."

The third cause of action incorporates by reference all of the paragraphs of the first and the second causes of action. It then alleges that the maintenance of nationally uniform prices at the wholesale distributors' level on records produced by Capitol Records and Decca Records has been the result of an agreement and arrangement among the four defendants, the terms of which were that Capitol Records and Decca Records would require each of its distributors to maintain throughout the United States a uniform price scale, and that the price scale for both of said defendants would be identical. Capitol Distributing and Decca Distributing were alleged to have joined in the agreements and to have acted in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. The effect of the foregoing arrangement and agreement, it is alleged, has been to restrain trade and commerce in the distribution of phonograph records among the several states. By reason of the facts complained of in the first, second and third causes of action, plaintiff claims it has been damaged in the amount of $200,000.

The fourth cause of action alleges that Capitol Distributing has discriminated against plaintiff and in favor of certain others purchasing from said defendant by selling at a lower price, by giving greater discounts, rebates and return privileges, and by granting certain allowances to such other purchasers. It is further alleged that these acts of Capitol Distributing were taken at the insistence and demand of Capitol Records, which ordered Capitol Distributing to carry out these practices as a condition to the continuance of its franchise. Damages are alleged in the amount of $50,000.

The fifth cause of action contains similar allegations with respect to alleged discriminatory practices by Decca Distributing at the instance and demand of Decca Records. It also alleges damages of $50,000.

[Rules of Civil Procedure]

Rule 18(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides, in pertinent part,

> "* * * There may be a like joinder of claims when there are multiple parties if the requirements of Rules 19, 20, and 22 are satisfied."

Rule 20(a) of the Federal Rules states, in pertinent part,

> "* * * All persons may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all of them will arise in the action."

Rule 19, dealing with necessary joinder of parties, and Rule 22, dealing with interpleader, are not material on this motion.

[Common Questions]

The allegations of the third cause of action incorporating the allegations of the first and second causes of action, in effect charge that Capitol Records entered into a price fixing agreement with Capitol Distributing and others, and that Decca Records entered into an identical price fixing agreement with Decca Distributing and others as a result of a combination and conspiracy of the four defendants to fix and maintain uniform prices at the wholesale distributors' level. It appears, therefore, that there is asserted against the defendants a right to relief "in respect of or arising out of the same * * * series of transactions or occurrences," namely, arising out of an alleged conspiracy by and among the four defendants. Moreover, the principal question of law involved is whether the alleged price fixing conspiracy is a violation of the Sherman Act.

It may be, as the moving parties contend, that facts evidencing any agreement between Capitol Records and Capitol Distributing will be different from the facts with respect to an agreement between Decca Records and Decca Distributing. However, Rule 20(a) provides for permissive joinder if "any" fact is common to all defendants; it does not require that all facts to be adduced be common to all. The facts to determine a conspiracy among all four defendants which resulted in their entering into the alleged illegal uniform price fixing arrangements will be common to them all. In any event, Rule 20(a) provides for a joinder of defendants if there is any question of law or fact common to all.

[Claims Severed]

With respect to the fourth and fifth causes of action alleging discriminatory pricing practices, it is not claimed in the allegations set forth therein that the practices of Capitol Distributing arose out of the same transaction, occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences as the practices of Decca Distributing. Moreover, it is not alleged in either the fourth or fifth causes of action that the acts complained of therein arose out of the conspiracy alleged in the first three causes of action. There appears to be a common question of law involved in the fourth and fifth causes of action, namely, whether the price discrimination practices alleged violated the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act. In Rule 20(a), however, the conjunctive "and" rather than the disjunctive "or" is employed in requiring that in asserting a right to relief against multiple parties such right arise out of the same transactions or occurrences and there be a common question of law or fact. Therefore, the provisions of Rule 20(a) are not satisfied, and the fourth and fifth causes of action should be severed from the complaint.

[Ruling]

It appears that for the purposes of this motion, Capitol Records and Capitol Distributing do not object to combining in one complaint the causes of action against Capitol Records and Capitol Distributing. Consequently, plaintiff may proceed against these two defendants in one complaint on the first and fourth causes of action in the manner alleged therein, and on the third cause of action as against all defendants.

The plaintiff is directed to amend its complaint as indicated herein within twenty days from the entry of the order.

Settle order.

[¶ 68,607] TCF Film Corporation, Paramount Pictures, Inc., United Artists Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation, Loew's Incorporated, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Monogram Pictures Inc., Alexander Theatre Supply Inc. and RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc., Petitioners v. The Honorable Wallace S. Gourley, Chief Judge of the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, Respondent, and United Exhibitors Inc., Penn State Theatre, Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation, Warner Theatres, Inc., Erie Amusement Company, Intervenor-Respondents.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 11,937. Argued January 9, 1957. Filed January 22, 1957.

Petition for Writ of Mandamus and Prohibition.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Denial of Motion to Amend Complaint—Power of District Judge to Overrule Decision of Another District

Judge.—Where a District Court Judge denied a motion for leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint, and, subsequently, on a motion for rehearing, another District Court Judge vacated the order denying the motion and entered an order permitting the filing of an amended and supplemental complaint, a petition for a writ of mandamus directing the second judge to vacate his order was denied. Although the general rule is that judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction sitting in the same court and in the same case should not overrule the decisions of each other, an exception to the rule exists where the judge who made the original decision is not available to consider an application to rehear and reverse his decision. In the present case, the assignment of the original judge to the court was terminated and he was no longer available to entertain the application for rehearing.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9007.

Before BIGGS, Chief Judge and MARIS, GOODRICH, McLAUGHLIN, KALODNER, STALEY and HASTIE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Writ of Mandamus Sought]

By MARIS, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is a petition for a writ of mandamus and prohibition directed to Chief Judge Wallace S. Gourley of the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania requiring him to vacate an order made by him on April 24, 1956 and restraining him from taking any further action or proceedings pursuant to the provisions of that order which was entered in a civil action pending in that court entitled "United Exhibitors Inc., et al. v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, et al.," No. 14, Erie. The petitioners are defendants in that action and all the other defendants therein have joined in the petition. The plaintiffs in the action have intervened in the present proceeding as respondents.

[Complaint—Motion]

The original complaint in the United Exhibitors action was filed in the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania on September 8, 1939 and alleged a conspiracy, in violation of the federal antitrust laws, to restrain the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in Erie, Pennsylvania, to the damage of the plaintiffs. On May 3, 1955 the plaintiffs in that action filed a motion for leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint which would eliminate certain parties plaintiff and defendant, exclude the eliminated defendants, who were certain local motion picture exhibitors, from the alleged group of conspirators, and extend the scope of the action to include the period running from 1939 to the date of the motion.

[Ruling on Motion]

Prior to May 31, 1955 Judge Frederick V. Follmer was one of the judges of the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, having been commissioned as a district judge for the Eastern, Middle and Western Districts of Pennsylvania, and the United Exhibitors action had been assigned to him. On May 31, 1955 upon the retirement of Judge Albert L. Watson of the Middle District of Pennsylvania, Judge Follmer, pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the Act of February 10, 1954, 68 Stat. 14, ceased to be a judge of the Eastern and Western Districts of Pennsylvania and became a judge of only one district, the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Shortly thereafter Judge Follmer was specially assigned by the chief judge of the circuit to the Western District of Pennsylvania to hear the United Exhibitors action and on June 10, 1955 he heard argument on the pending motion of the plaintiffs for leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint. On February 3, 1956 he filed an opinion, 18 F. R. D. 469, and entered an order denying the motion. On February 23, 1956 the plaintiffs filed a motion for rehearing and reconsideration of their motion for leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint.

[Motion for Rehearing]

On April 13, 1956 the motion for rehearing and reconsideration came on for argument before Chief Judge Gourley. At that hearing counsel for the defendants urged that the established rule of this circuit provides that one judge of a district court may not overrule a prior decision of another judge of the same court in the same case and that Chief Judge Gourley, therefore, did not have power to reverse on rehearing the order which Judge Follmer had previously made in the case. It then was discovered by Chief Judge Gourley that Judge Follmer had been specially assigned to the case by the chief judge of the circuit. Chief Judge Gourley accordingly communicated with the chief judge of the circuit who informed him that for reasons personal to Judge Follmer it would not be possible for the latter to dispose of the motion for rehearing. The chief judge of the circuit accordingly on April 18, 1956 terminated the assignment of Judge Follmer to the Western District of Pennsylvania for the consideration of the United Exhibitors case and informed Chief Judge Gourley that he was at liberty to proceed with it. Thereafter on April 24, 1956 Chief Judge Gourley entered an order in the case vacating and setting aside Judge Follmer's prior order and granting plaintiff's motion to file the amended and supplemental complaint nunc pro tunc as of May 3, 1955. Shortly thereafter the petitioners filed the present petition asking this court to issue a writ of mandamus and prohibition directed to Chief Judge Gourley to cause him to vacate the order entered on April 24, 1956 and to restrain him from any further proceedings thereunder.

[Contentions]

The petitioners base their claim for relief by way of mandamus and prohibition upon the rule that judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction sitting in the same court and in the same case should not overrule the decisions of each other, a rule which this court followed in Jurgenson v. National Oil & Supply Co., 1933, 63 F. 2d 727, 729, and Price v. Greenway, 1948, 167 F. 2d 196, 199-200, and which has been applied in many other cases in this circuit [1] as well as elsewhere.[2] The respondents on the other hand contend that the rule, which is perhaps best exemplified by the opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in the case of Commercial Union of America v. Anglo-South American Bank, 1925, 10 F. 2d 937, has been deprived of its authoritative basis by the recent decision of that court in Dictograph Products Company v. Sanotone Corporation, 1956, 230 F. 2d 131.

[Exception to General Rule]

It is true that the Dictograph case indicates that the rule under discussion is not absolute and all-embracing in its scope. There are, as that case illustrates, exceptional circumstances under which courts have held that one judge of a district court may overrule a decision by another judge of his court in the same case. Nonetheless we think that the rule is a most salutary one. We adhere to it and hold that except under the most extraordinary circumstances it should be followed by the district judges of this circuit. The reasons for the rule have been reiterated in the many cases in which it has been applied and need not be repeated here in detail. It is sufficient to say that we regard it as a necessary rule of judicial comity to preserve the orderly functioning of the judicial process.

[1] Wright v. Barnard, D. C. Del. 1919, 264 F. 582, 584; United States v. Parker, D. C. N. J. 1938, 23 F. Supp. 880, 889; Etten v. Lovell Mfg. Co., D. C. W. D. Pa. 1949, 83 F. Supp. 178, 187; McArthur v. Rosenbaum Co. of Pittsburgh, D. C. W. D. Pa. 1949, 85 F. Supp. 5, 6; Dionne v. Erie Concrete & Steel Supply Co., D. C. W. D. Pa. 1951, 97 F. Supp. 441; United States v. Firman, D. C. W. D. Pa. 1951, 98 F. Supp. 944, 946; Dow v. Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., D. C. W. D. Pa. 1952, 108 F. Supp. 88, 89; United States v. Ginn, D. C. E. D. Pa. 1954, 124 F. Supp. 658, 660; United States v. Skurla, D. C. W. D. Pa. 1954, 126 F. Supp. 713, 716; Fried v. Feola, D. C. W. D. Pa. 1954, 129 F. Supp. 699, 701.

[2] Appleton v. Smith, C. C. Ark. 1870, Case No. 498, 1 Fed. Cas. 1075; Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co., C. C. Nev. 1871, Case No. 2,990, 6 Fed. Cas. 72, 74; Reynolds v. Iron Silver Min. Co., C. C. Colo. 1888, 33 F. 354, 355; Shreve v. Cheesman, 8 Cir. 1895, 69 F. 785, 791; Commercial Union of America v. Anglo-South American Bank, 2 Cir. 1925, 10 F. 2d 937; Hardy v. North Butte Mining Co., 9 Cir. 1927, 22 F. 2d 62; Humphrey v. Bankers Mortg. Co. of Topeka, Kan., 10 Cir. 1935, 79 F. 2d 345, 352; National Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Shaw-Walker Co., D. C. Cir. 1940, 111 F. 2d 497, 508; Donnelly Garment Co. v. National Labor Relations Bd., 8 Cir. 1942, 123 F. 2d 215, 220; In Re Joslyn's Estate, 7 Cir. 1948, 171 F. 2d 159, 164; The Material Service D. C. Ill. 1934, 11 F. Supp. 1006, 1007; United States v. Thomas Steel Corporation, D. C. Ohio 1952, 107 F. Supp. 418, 423. See also annotation 132 A. L. R. 14; 33 C. J., Judges § 99; 21 C. J. S., Courts, § 501.

As we have said, there may be exceptional circumstances under which the rule is not to be applied. Such circumstances exist when the judge who made the original decision is not available to consider the application to rehear and reverse his decision. If the judge who made the decision dies[3] or resigns from the court he obviously is no longer available to reconsider it and such reconsideration must perforce be by another judge if it is to be had at all. Likewise if the decision has been made by a judge temporarily assigned to the court for the hearing of a specified case and his assignment is terminated he is no longer available to entertain an application for rehearing and it must accordingly be considered by another judge. That was the situation in the present case. Judge Follmer's power to act as a permanent judge of the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania ended on May 31, 1955 and his power to act temporarily as judge assigned to the court for purposes of this case ended on April 18, 1956. We conclude that it was entirely within the competence of Chief Judge Gourley after April 18, 1956 to decide the motion for rehearing and reconsideration as he did. Whether his decision upon that motion was within his discretionary power or amounted to an abuse of it is not now before us and we intimate no opinion upon that subject. It is a matter which may be considered upon appeal after a final judgment has been rendered in the case.[4] However this may be we are clear that Chief Judge Gourley had the power to hear and decide the motion and that accordingly the issuance of a writ of mandamus and prohibition would be wholly unwarranted.[5]

In conclusion we think it useful to point out that the rule here under consideration likewise does not apply to rehearing by the full court of a decision by a single judge of the court. Every district court has the power to review in banc a decision rendered by one of its individual members and upon such reconsideration by the full bench to overrule the prior decision of the single judge. Such power is necessary in order to enable a court to preserve its integrity of decision by itself eliminating conflicting rulings by its own members without having to wait for the resolution of such conflicts through the appellate process.[6]

[Petition Denied]

The petition for a writ of mandamus and prohibition will be denied.

[¶ 68,608] Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc., et al. v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, et al.

In the California District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One. Civ. No. 22090. Dated December 31, 1956.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. PHILIP H. RICHARDS, Judge. Affirmed.

California Cartwright Act and Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under Federal and State Laws—Labor Unions—Collective Bargaining Agreement—Restriction on Preparation and Sale of Prepackaged Meats and Fish—Legality.—A provision of a collective bargaining agreement between retail market operators and unions of meat cutters which provided that all fresh meats,

[3] See Magee v. General Motors Corp., 3 Cir. 1954, 213 F. 2d 899.

[4] See, for example, Sutherland Paper Co. v. Grant Paper Box Co., 3 Cir. 1950, 183 F. 2d 926. 931, cert. den. 340 U. S. 906, reversing Sutherland Paper Co. v. Grant Paper Box Co., D. C. W. D. Pa. 1949, 9 F. R. D. 422.

[5] We accordingly need not consider the question whether mandamus and prohibition would lie to correct a departure from the rule under discussion in a case to which it properly applied. But see Gulf Research & Development Co. v. Leahy, 3 Cir. 1951, 193 F. 2d 302, affirmed by an equally divided court, 344 U. S. 861, and compare La Buy v. Howes Leather Co., 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,585], — U. S. —.

[6] For illustrations of the useful exercise of this power see In re Stein, D. C. E. D. Pa. 1936, 17 F. Supp. 587; United States v. Warden of Philadelphia County Prison, D. C. E. D. Pa. 1949, 87 F. Supp. 339; United States v. Baldi, D. C. E. D. Pa. 1951, 96 F. Supp. 100. And for a discussion of the employment of this power by this court to preserve uniformity in its decisions see Maris, Hearing and Rehearing Cases in Banc, 1953, 14 F. R. D. 91.

poultry, fish, and rabbits should be cut, prepared, and packaged on the premises of such markets by members of the unions was held illegal and void under the California Cartwright Act and the Sherman Antitrust Act. Frozen prepackaged products are competitive to fresh meat, fish, and poultry, which are regularly cut and wrapped in retail stores. The enforcement of the provision would have the effect of prohibiting the handling and sale of the prepackaged frozen products in the retail markets. The unions' contention that they are seeking only that to which organized labor is entitled, and, therefore, there could be no violation of the antitrust laws, was rejected. The provision was held to constitute a conspiracy, a combination, and an unlawful agreement under the Sherman Act. Under the provision, the sale of such products would be restrained, and the means for marketing such products would be destroyed with the result that the sale and distribution of the products would be for all intents and purposes an impossibility.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063, 2449.05.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Declaratory Judgment Action in State Court—Legality of Collective Bargaining Agreement—Jurisdiction of State Court.—In a state court declaratory judgment action to determine the legality of a provision of a collective bargaining agreement under the California and Federal antitrust laws, contention that jurisdiction of the matter is in the National Labor Relations Board or in the Federal courts, rather than in the California courts, was rejected. The agreement was executed in California and was performable in the state. The California courts have jurisdiction to determine whether the provision violates the law of the state as well as the federal law. This was not an action to enforce compliance with the National Labor Relations Act, and the pleadings did not show any unfair labor practice under the Act. Furthermore, there was no labor dispute. The National Labor Relations Board has no jurisdiction over laws relating to monopolies and restraints of trade. Also, the legality of the provision was not a proper subject of arbitration.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2441.05; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9047.

For the appellants: David Sokol.

For the respondents: Musick, Peeler & Garrett; Harold F. Collins; McLaughlin & Casey; and James A. McLaughlin.

Affirming a decision of the California Superior Court, County of Los Angeles, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,357.

Action for declaratory relief to secure a ruling as to whether certain language in a collective bargaining agreement evidences an unlawful conspiracy between employers and unions to restrict and prohibit the sale of certain commodities. Judgment determining such contractual language void and invalid, affirmed.

[Declaratory Relief]

FOURT, Justice [In full text]: This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment in a declaratory relief action wherein the court determined that certain controversial provisions of a collective bargaining agreement were void and invalid in that such provisions violated the laws of the United States and the laws of the State of California.

[Collective Bargaining Agreement]

The facts are substantially as follows: The action was instituted by 12 retail market operators doing business in various localities in Southern California. The four appellant unions represent the employees who are employed in the various markets of the respondents. Each union represents certain employees in a distinct geographical area in which one or more of the respondents operate markets. Agreements were entered into between the respondents and appellants and in each instance the agreement contained substantially the following language: Self-Service Markets: All fresh meats, fresh poultry, fresh fish, fresh rabbits, shall be cut, prepared and packaged on the premises and dispensed by members of Meat Cutters Local.

The agreements with which we are concerned were negotiated during November and December of 1955, and were signed as of about December 10, 1955. The same, or substantially the same language as above set fourth was in earlier agreements between the parties hereto for several years immediately prior to December 10, 1955. During the immediate previous years the practice of freezing and packaging frozen meats, fish and poultry had become more widespread, whereas at the time of the agreements were first entered into, there apparently was little if any prepackaged frozen meat available at retail markets. During the latter part of 1955, and the early part of 1956, large meat packers greatly expanded their business of precutting, prepackaging and freezing all of the usual types and cuts of meat. In this new procedure, there were utilized new types of wrapping materials which were more adaptable to the continued preservation of frozen foods whereby such products could be kept substantially fresh for indefinite periods of time in self-service freezers such as were used in the respondents' markets. The process used by the large meat packers was essentially an assembly-line system where the bones and fat were removed before the cuts were packaged and frozen. The products are quickly frozen to prevent destruction of the meats and to enable them to keep fresh for an extended period of time. They are machine wrapped and packaged with special materials which tend to keep out oxygen and moisture and thereby prevent deterioration.

About January 20, 1956, each of the appellant unions directed a notice to the respondents demanding that the sale of such prepackaged frozen meat products be discontinued until the disputed provisions of the collective bargaining agreements could be arbitrated. The respondents declined to arbitrate because they contended it was not subject to arbitration. The action here was in declaratory relief to have it determined whether the provisions of the agreement in question were illegal and void as constituting unlawful restraints of trade under both federal and state laws.

[Injunction Denied]

The respondents sought an injunction against the unions to restrain a threatened strike. However, the trial court denied any such injunction upon the ground, apparently, that the unions had not, in fact, called any strike.

[Issue]

The sole question involved here, therefore, is whether a union or a group of unions can combine or conspire with an employer or group of employers, by means of a collective bargaining agreement, to restrain and prevent the manufacture and sale of commodities, such as frozen meats, poultry and fish, even though the objective of the union or unions may be to monopolize the work on such meat products for their own members to the exclusion of workmen employed in the plants of the processors or packers of such products, and regardless of whether such workmen are union members.

We are of the opinion that such provisions in such a contract are illegal and void as being in violation of the federal and state antitrust laws.

[California Antitrust Law]

The frozen prepackaged products are competitive to fresh meat, fish and poultry, which are regularly cut and wrapped in retail stores, and to enforce the terms of the agreement in question would obviously result in prohibiting the handling and sale of the prepackaged frozen products in the retail markets. There is set forth in a footnote hereto the provisions of sections 16720 and 16722 of the Business and Professions Code.[1]

[1] "§ 16720. Trust defined: Purposes. A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes:

"(a) To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"(b) To limit or reduce the production, or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity.

"(c) To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"(d) To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this State.

"(e) To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they do all or any combination of any of the following:

"(1) Bind themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure, or fixed value.

"(2) Agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure.

"(3) Establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any pur-

Section 16750 of the same code provides a remedy to a person injured as a result of any combination or conspiracy, and section 16755 provides for criminal penalties for participating in any such violation.

[Kold Kist Decision]

In the case of Kold Kist, Inc. v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,695], 99 Cal. App. 2d 191 [221 P. 2d 724], the defendants caused a provision to be placed in a collective bargaining agreement which prohibited the sale of frozen meat products after 6 o'clock p. m. from the refrigerated display cases in the retail markets. The court said, among other things, in deciding the case the following (at page 197):

> "While combined action which is in restraint of trade, as the term is commonly used, is illegal, regardless of the objective of the parties, it is also illegal if it is entered into for the purpose of restraining trade. Even though it appeared to be the purpose of the unions to improve the status of their members by limiting hours of work it was a proper inquiry whether it was intended to accomplish this purpose by placing restrictions upon the trade in plaintiffs' products through the prevention of the sale thereof except through union members."

Further, in answer to the contention of the appellants that as long as they are seeking only that to which organized labor is entitled, there can be no violation of the antitrust laws, the court in the Kold Kist case (supra), at pages 200-201 stated:

> "As we have heretofore pointed out, defendants have not denied that detriment has resulted and will continue to result to plaintiffs' business in the manner and to the extent alleged in the complaint and supporting affidavit. Nevertheless they argue that even though there has been and will be restraint there is no remedy available to plaintiffs for the reason that they, the unions, are seeking only to obtain uniform working hours for all employees. They say that it must be demonstrated from the face of the contract or from the pleadings of plaintiffs that the purpose of the provisions of the contract is to 'directly, intentionally and specifically' unreasonably and illegally restrain trade in a way which is unconcerned with the accomplishment of a legitimate labor objective or the contract cannot be deemed an illegal restraint of trade. This is to claim, in effect, that whenever their efforts are calculated to advance the interests of their members the effect upon others is not to be considered. This contention has frequently been advanced and rejected. If we were to agree with it, the result would be that the assertion of any lawful labor objective, regardless of the means proposed for the accomplishment thereof, would preclude the courts from making inquiry to determine whether the objective was indeed lawful.
>
> "In Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U. S. 490 [69 S. Ct. 684, 93 L. Ed. 834], the union argued that the primary objective of their combination and picketing was to improve wage and working conditions, admittedly a lawful purpose, and that 'their violation of the state antitrade restraint laws must be dismissed as merely incidental to this lawful purpose.' The court said, quoting from International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199, 209 [34 S. Ct. 859, 58 L. Ed. 1276], ' "It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions. . . ." ' It was also said that 'To exalt all labor union conduct in restraint of trade above all state control would greatly reduce the traditional powers of states over their domestic economy and might conceivably make it impossible for them to enforce their antitrade restraint laws.' The courts of this state have held that the letter and paramount object of the law (Cartwright Act) is satisfied if the tendency of the action or proposed action is to restrain trade. (Citing cases.)
>
> "Defendants also argue that only those combinations are in unlawful restraint of trade which seek to control prices and create a monopoly. A complete answer to this contention is found in the statute itself. Under subdivisions (a), (b) and (c), of section 16720, Business and Professions Code, it is unlawful for two or more persons to combine to create or chasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity.

---

"(4) Agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected."

"§ 16722. Contracts void. Any contract or agreement in violation of this chapter is absolutely void and is not enforceable at law or in equity."

carry out restrictions in trade or commerce; to limit or reduce the production of any commodity; or to prevent competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. These enactments are distinct from the remainder of the section which has to do with price fixing. Although price fixing and monopolistic practices tend to affect competition, production and restrictions in trade, the Legislature has not limited illegal combinations in restraint of trade to those which involve price fixing or monopoly. (People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Assn., 12 Cal. App. 471 [107 P. 712]; Overland Pub. Co. v. H. S. Crocker Co., 193 Cal. 109 [222 P. 812].)"

[Similar Rulings]

Similar statutes in other states have been similarly interpreted, as in Austin v. Painters' Dist. Council No. 22, 339 Mich. 462 [64 N. W. 2d 550]; Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,391], 336 U. S. 490 [69 S. Ct. 684, 93 L. Ed. 834]; Foust v. Truck Drivers Union, (Ohio Court of Common Pleas, April 3, 1956), 38 L. R. R. M. 2645; Commonwealth v. McHugh [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,678], 326 Mass. 249 [93 N. E. 2d 751].

Appellants have cited three California cases in an effort to support the last mentioned contention, namely, that the provisions of the agreements do not violate the state antitrust laws. One is a superior court decision, namely McDonnell v. Meat Drivers Local [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,202], 29 L. R. R. M. 2176; and the other two are Los Angeles Pie Bakers Assn. v. Bakery Drivers [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,657], 122 Cal. App. 2d 237 [264 P. 2d 615], and Schweizer v. Local Joint Executive Board [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,620], 121 Cal. App. 2d 45 [262 P. 2d 568]. None of the cases cited are in our opinion, in point.

[Federal Antitrust Laws]

Coming now to the question whether the prohibitions in the agreement violated the federal antitrust laws: We are of the belief that such language does so violate the federal law. Section 1, title 15, U. S. C. A. specifies that contracts and combinations in restraint of trade are illegal. Section 2, title 15, U. S. C. A., specifies that every person who shall participate in such unlawful acts is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine or imprisonment or both.

In Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797, 808-810 [65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939], the unions and employers contracted to exclude electrical equipment from use unless purchased from local manufacturers, and in determining the case the court said:

"We have been pointed to no language in any act of Congress or in its reports or debates, nor have we found any, which indicates that it was ever suggested, considered, or legislatively determined that labor unions should be granted an immunity such as is sought in the present case. . . . But when the unions participated with a combination of business men who had complete power to eliminate all competition among themselves and to prevent all competition from others, a situation was created not included within the exemptions of the Clayton and Norris-La Guardia Acts.

"It must be remembered that the exemptions granted the unions were special exceptions to a general legislative plan. The primary objective of all the antitrust legislation has been to preserve business competition and to proscribe business monopoly. It would be a surprising thing if Congress, in order to prevent a misapplication of that legislation to labor unions, had bestowed upon such unions complete and unreviewable authority to aid business groups to frustrate its primary objective. For if business groups, by combining with labor unions, can fix prices and divide up markets, it was little more than a futile gesture for Congress to prohibit price fixing by business groups themselves. . . .

"Our holding means that the same labor union activities may or may not be in violation of the Sherman Act, dependent upon whether the union acts alone or in combination with business groups."

Also see Anderson-Friberg, Inc. v. Justin R. Clary & Son, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,852], 98 F. Supp. 75; Manaka v. Monterey Sardine Industries, Inc., 41 F. Supp. 531; Gulf Coast Shrimpers & Oystermans Assn. v. United States [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,469], 236 F. 2d 658; United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186 [74 S. Ct. 452, 455, 98 L. Ed. 618, 627]; Lystad v. Local Union No. 223 [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,182], 135 F. Supp. 337.

In our opinion the terms of the agreement in the instant case evidence a conspiracy, combination and unlawful agreement.

The effect of the agreement is to bar from the markets any such frozen, prepackaged products. To comply with the agreement would not only mean, among other things, that the sale of the products is restrained, but that the means for marketing such products are destroyed with the result that the sale and distribution of the products would be for all intents and purposes an impossibility in this area.

[Arbitration]

The appellants contend that the matter should have been submitted to arbitration, under the arbitration provisions of the agreement. In the first place, the arbitration provisions relate only to "controversies involving the interpretation of any provisions of" the agreement. The controversy here is as to the legality of the terms of the agreement. Questions of legality are not arbitrable by arbitrators.

In Loving & Evans v. Blick, 33 Cal. 2d 603, 610-611 [204 P. 2d 23], the court held that a claim arising out of an illegal provision in a contract was not subject to arbitration, saying, among other things:

> "Section 1281 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for submission to arbitration of 'any controversy . . . which arises out of a contract,' does not contemplate that the parties may provide for the arbitration of controversies arising out of contracts which are expressly declared by law to be illegal and against the public policy of the state. So it is generally held that 'a claim arising out of an illegal transaction is not a proper subject matter for submission to arbitration, and that an award springing out of an illegal contract, which no court can enforce, cannot stand on any higher ground than the contract itself.' (6 C. J. S., § 12, p. 160.) Aptly illustrative of this well-settled principle is the fairly recent case of Smith v. Gladney, 128 Tex. 354 [98 S. W. 2d 351], where a dispute arose between the parties as a result of trading in 'futures' upon the Chicago Board of Trade. The matter was submitted to arbitration. When suit was brought upon the award and it was affirmed 'on the theory that [it] was final,' the appellate court, in reversing the judgment, said at pages 351-352 [98 S. W. 2d]: 'It appears to be almost universally recognized that a claim arising out of an illegal transaction, such as a speculation in futures, is not a legitimate subject of arbitration, and an award based thereon is void and unenforceable in courts of the country. (Citing cases.)' "

[Jurisdiction of Court]

The appellants further contend that jurisdiction in this matter is either in the National Labor Relations Board because an unfair labor practice is involved, or in the federal courts because the enforcement of federal antitrust laws is involved and that therefore the state court has no jurisdiction. This is merely an action for declaratory relief to secure a ruling as to whether certain language evidences an unlawful conspiracy between employers and unions to restrict and prohibit the sale of certain commodities. The agreement was executed in California and is performable here. We believe the state court has jurisdiction to determine whether the agreement violates the law of this state as well as the federal law. (Morey v. Paladini, 187 Cal. 727, 736 [203 P. 760]; Building Contractors v. Gugliemelli, N. Y. Supreme Ct. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,310], 30 L. R. R. M. 2439; Commonwealth v. McHugh [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,678], 326 Mass. 249 [93 N. E. 2d 751]; Hunt v. Plavsa, 103 Cal. App. 2d 222 [229 P. 2d 482]; Code Civ. Proc., § 1060; Ralphs Grocery Co. v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, 98 Cal. App. 2d 539 [220 P. 2d 802]; Harvey Machine Co. Inc. v. Western etc. Union, 76 Cal. App. 2d 421 [173 P. 2d 330]; Harvey Machine Co., Inc. v. Alvarez, 76 Cal. App. 2d 427 [173 P. 2d 65].)

This is not an action to enforce compliance with any provisions of the Labor Management Relations Act. The pleadings do not show any unfair labor practices, as defined by that Act. There is no labor dispute with any employee who manufactures the products with which we are concerned. The laws which are violated relate to monopolies and restraints of trade and the National Labor Relations Board has no jurisdiction over such matters.

There was no allegation in the complaint in this instance to the effect that the Unions had used any coercion against any employees of the markets. In this case there is no question of any "hot cargo," or any secondary boycott. It was stated by counsel for respondent in the oral argument, and apparently concurred in by counsel for the appellants, that the products in question are processed and packaged by union labor in the first instance Subsequent to the filing of the briefs in this cause, the parties filed a stipulation in this court to the effect that a new collective bargaining agreement between the parties hereto, effective from November 5, 1956, to November 5, 1959, had been executed, which new agreement contains certain language in lieu of the disputed language in the contract now before us. The appellants state, "it would therefore appear that the entire matter is now moot." At the same time, appellants assert that they are confronted with the judgment of the trial court, and that they cannot dismiss the appeal, thus leaving as res judicata the judgment of the trial court.

As we view it, the matter of the new agreement is not before us for any determination, and it obviously was not before the trial court. Under the circumstances, the new agreement can have no bearing on the issue which is to be decided here. It might well be that the provisions of the new agreement are legal and proper, and at least counsel for each of the parties seemed to entertain the belief that such is the case. However, we are not called upon here to decide that question. It is also true that apparently the parties have reconciled their main differences, and there appears to be no controversy over the new agreement; nevertheless, as heretofore indicated, that can have no effect upon the questions submitted to this court.

For the reasons heretofore given, the judgment is affirmed.

White, P. J., and Doran, J., concurred.

[¶ 68,609] J. Thomas Miley v. John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, Boston Mutual Life Insurance Company, Columbian National Life Insurance Company, Loyal Protective Life Insurance Company, Monarch Life Insurance Company, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Paul Revere Life Insurance Company, State Mutual Life Assurance Company of Worcester, Clarence W. Wyatt, Edward A. Green, Alan R. Willison, John Hill, Theodore W. Fabisak, Joseph A. Humphreys, John M. Deely, Horace Gooch, Jr., and Carl A. Sheridan.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 56-682-F. Dated January 18, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Construction of Sherman Act—Applicability to Insurance Business Under McCarran-Ferguson Act.—An insurance broker's treble damage action charging that certain Massachusetts insurance companies, members of the Massachusetts employee group insurance commission, and others unlawfully conspired to award an insurance contract to a specified insurance company, and thereby deprived him of compensation he would have received if the contract had been awarded to the insurance company which he had represented, was dismissed on the ground that the transactions complained of were not subject to the Sherman Act. Under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Sherman Act is applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by state law. Even assuming that what was done by the defendants would under other circumstances constitute a conspiracy violative of the Sherman Act, it was nevertheless done in the course of negotiation authorized and regulated by Massachusetts law, and as to such transactions, Congress has expressly provided that the Sherman Act shall not apply. Furthermore, the Massachusetts laws regulate trade practices in the business of insurance, and such regulation is an additional ground for holding that the activity of the defendants is regulated by the law of Massachusetts and hence removed from the application of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2263.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Injury to Business or Property.—An insurance broker's treble damage action charging that certain Massachusetts insurance companies, members of the Massachusetts employee group insurance commission, and others unlawfully conspired to award an insurance contract to a specified insurance company, and thereby deprived him of compensation, commissions, and fees on future business he would have received if the insurance contract had been awarded to the insurance company which he had represented, was dismissed on the ground that the broker failed to allege any injury to his business or property sufficient to entitle him to maintain the action. The injuries alleged by the broker were remote and speculative. Under the allegations of the broker's complaint, only the insurance company which he had represented was directly injured by the alleged conspiracy since it lost a potential contract. However, it cannot be said that it lost anything to which it was legally entitled. Any loss allegedly suffered by the broker was not a loss directly due to the acts of the defendants, but an indirect loss flowing from the failure to award the contract to the company which he had represented.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Persons Who May Be Liable—State Officers.—In an insurance broker's action charging that certain insurance companies, members of the Massachusetts employee group insurance commission, and others unlawfully conspired to award an insurance contract to a specified insurance company in violation of the Sherman Act, the court held that the Sherman Act did not apply to the activities of a state or to the activities of its officers directed by the state legislature. Even though the Commonwealth of Massachusetts itself was not named as a defendant, the action against its official agents, based on their official acts in carrying out their duties under a statute, is in substance an action against the Commonwealth itself, and, therefore, one to which the jurisdiction of the court, in the absence of any waiver by the Commonwealth of its immunity, does not extend.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9006.70.

For the plaintiff: Devine, York & Volpe, Boston, Mass.

For the defendants: Charles K. Dunn, Boston, Mass., for Theodore W. Fabisak; Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston, Mass., for New England Mutual Life Ins. Co., Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., Monarch Life Ins. Co., and John Hill; Ropes, Gray, Best, Coolidge & Rugg, Boston, Mass., for State Mutual Life Assurance Co. and Alan R. Willison; Lyne, Woodworth & Evarts, Boston, Mass., for John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co., Monarch Life Insurance Co., Boston Mutual Life Ins. Co., Clarence W. Wyatt, and Edward A. Green; Withington, Cross, Park & McCann, Boston, Mass., for Columbian Natl. Life Ins. Co. and Loyal Protective Life Ins. Co.; Attorney General of Massachusetts, Boston, Mass., and Joseph H. Elcock, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, Boston, Mass., for Theodore W. Fabisak, Joseph A. Humphreys, J. A. Deely, Horace Gooch, Jr., and Carl A. Sheridan; and Warren C. Lane, Jr., Worcester, Mass., for Horace Gooch, Jr.

Memorandum of Decision on Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

[Parties]

FORD, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action brought under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1 and 15. Plaintiff is an insurance broker licensed in Massachusetts. Defendants are eight Massachusetts insurance companies, four individual officers of such companies, and the five members of the state employees' group insurance commission established by Mass. G. L. Ch. 32A (hereinafter called the commission).

[Complaint]

The allegations of the complaint may be summarized as follows. The members of the commission invited life insurance companies doing business in Massachusetts to submit by December 1, 1955, bids or proposals for group life, accidental death and dismemberment insurance, and group hospital, surgical and medical coverage for employees of the Commonwealth in accordance with specifications established by the commission. Miley arranged for submission of a joint bid by Minnesota Mutual Life Insurance Company (hereinafter called Minnesota), a Minnesota corporation licensed to do business in Massachusetts, and Blue Cross and Blue Shield. Minnesota under this proposal offered a rate of 90 cents per month per thousand dollars on the life, accidental death and dismemberment portions of the plan. Among the other proposals submitted was a joint bid by the insurance company defendants (except Boston Mutual Life Insurance Company hereinafter called Boston), which included a rate of $1.20 for that portion of the insurance covered by Minnesota's 90 cent rate.

It is alleged that thereupon the members of the commission ascertained that Blue Cross and Blue Shield would provide the same medical, surgical and hospital coverage included in its offer with Minnesota in conjunction with any insurance company offering a rate as low as Minnesota's for the life, accidental death and dismemberment coverage. It is then charged that the defendants (except Boston) entered into a combination or conspiracy to equal or better Minnesota's offer and deprive Minnesota of the contract, that the various insurance companies involved could not offer a rate below the $1.20 rate they had filed with the insurance commissioner of New York without jeopardizing their right to do business in that state, that thereupon Boston, which did not do business in New York, was brought into the combination, that Boston submitted an offer at the 90 cent rate and was awarded the contract by the members of the commission, and thereupon allotted 95 per cent of the insurance to the other defendant companies by way of reinsurance.

Plaintiff alleges that he suffered injury because as a result of this combination or conspiracy Minnesota failed to receive the contract and as a result plaintiff was deprived of compensation he would have received for servicing this contract and of commissions and service fees for new business which would have resulted had said contract been awarded to Minnesota.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Defendants move to dismiss, urging several grounds in support of their contention that complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under the Sherman Act.

[McCarran-Ferguson Act]

The first issue is as to the effect of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1011-1015, providing for continued regulation and taxation of the insurance business by the states. Under § 1012(b) it is provided that the Sherman Act "shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law."

[Massachusetts Laws]

Mass. G. L. Ch. 32A establishes a program of group insurance for the benefit of employees of the Commonwealth. It establishes the state employees group insurance commission with authority to establish such reasonable rules and regulations as may be necessary for the administration of the act. The chapter provides that the state commissioner of insurance, the official charged by statute with the administration of the state laws regulating the insurance business, shall be one of the five members of this commission. It provides in § 4 that the commission shall negotiate with and purchase, on such terms as it deems in the best interest of the Commonwealth and its employees, from one or more insurers a policy or policies for the insurance coverages provided by the chapter. This chapter thus provides a statutory scheme of regulation covering the very transaction complained of here. The commission was not required to invite bids or to award contracts to the lowest bidder. It was required to negotiate with one or more prospective insurers before purchasing insurance, and was given broad discretion to purchase insurance on such terms as it deemed to be in the best interest of the Commonwealth and its employees. Assuming that what was done here by the defendants would under other circumstances constitute a conspiracy or combination violative of the Sherman Act, it was nevertheless done in the course of negotiation authorized and regulated by an applicable state law, and as to such transactions Congress has expressly provided that the Sherman Act shall not apply.

Further, Massachusetts not only provides a comprehensive statutory scheme for the regulation of all phases of the insurance business, Mass. G. L. Ch. 174A through 178, but has specifically included therein Ch. 176D, whose purpose is set forth in § 1 thereof as the regulation of trade practices in the business of insurance in accordance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the act of March 9, 1945 (Public Law 15, 79th Congress)—the McCarran-Ferguson Act, supra. The chapter defines certain unfair methods of competition including some acts tending to unreasonable restraint or monopolizing of the insurance business, and sets up a procedure for the determination that any other act or practice in the business not specifically so defined is unfair or deceptive and hence forbidden. This chapter is an additional ground for holding that the transaction set forth in the complaint is one regulated by the law of Massachusetts and hence removed from the application of the Sherman Act.

There is no allegation that the defendants violated any Massachusetts law regulating this transaction (except for a charge that Boston under its charter could not legally enter into a contract for this type of insurance) or that the contract was not fully as advantageous to the Commonwealth or its employees as any other that could have been negotiated. In any event the fact that the transaction was regulated by Massachusetts law removes it from the scope of the Sherman Act, and any violation of the state regulations is a matter solely of state law. Since diversity of citizenship is lacking, any relief to which plaintiff might be entitled under state law must be sought in the Massachusetts courts.

[Injury to Business or Property]

Moreover, it does not appear that plaintiff has alleged any injury to his business or property sufficient to entitle him to bring this action. The injuries alleged are remote and speculative. On the allegations of the complaint it was only Minnesota which was directly injured by the alleged conspiracy, since it lost a potential contract. It cannot be said, however, that it lost anything to which it was legally entitled. The commission was not required to award the contract to Minnesota on the basis of its low bid. It was clearly free to negotiate with other companies to get an equally low offer from some competitor. And even if the best rate it could get from any other company had been higher than that proposed by Minnesota, it could still have considered other factors than the rate in determining what would be in the best interest of the Commonwealth and its employees. For various reasons it could have preferred to deal with a Massachusetts company rather than one from another state.

Any loss which plaintiff says that he himself suffered is not a loss directly due to the acts of the defendants, but an indirect loss flowing from the failure to award the contract to Minnesota. He makes no claim to have been entitled to any commission for securing the contract itself. He does say that he lost fees which he would have received for servicing the policy. Moreover, he makes no allegation that he had any contract with Minnesota which would have given him a legal right to such fees rather than a mere hope that he would be hired by Minnesota to service the policies and thus given a chance to earn the fees. The remaining item of loss of commissions and fees on future business to be done by Minnesota is even more speculative since it seems to be based only on the expectation that if Minnesota secured this contract with the Commonwealth, its prestige would be increased which might lead to an increase in its business here on which plaintiff might become entitled to fees and commissions. The injuries set forth thus seem to fall within the class of indirect and speculative injuries for which plaintiff cannot recover under 15 U. S. C. A. § 15. Melrose Realty Co., Inc. v. Loew's, Inc. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,358, 68,423], 234 F. 2d 518; Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,104], 224 F. 2d 678.

[State Activity]

Certain further considerations are applicable only to the five defendants who are members of the commission. They are described as such in the complaint and the only actions by them which are set forth therein are actions taken in the carrying out of their official duties as agents of the Commonwealth for the negotiation of contracts under Mass. G. L. Ch. 32A. It is not contended that Ch. 32A, under which they acted, is invalid, or that their actions invade any constitutional rights of plaintiff. Even though Massachusetts itself is not named, the action against its official agents, based on their official acts in carrying out their duties under the statute is in substance an action against the state itself, and hence one to which the jurisdiction of this court, in the absence of any waiver by the state of its immunity, does not extend. Worcester County Trust Co. v. Riley, 302 U. S. 292, 296; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1. In any event the Sherman Act does not apply to the activities of a state or to the activities of its officers directed by the state legislature. Parker v. Brown [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,250], 317 U. S. 341, 350, 351.

[Motions Granted]

Defendants' motions to dismiss are allowed.

[¶ 68,610] Federal Trade Commission v. International Paper Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1956. Docket No. 24409. Petition argued December 14, 1956. Decided December 14, 1956.

Petition by Federal Trade Commission for injunctive relief against International Paper Company until final determination by the Commission of a pending administrative proceeding initiated by its complaint which charges the respondent company with violating Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. § 18.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Acquisitions of Stock or Assets—Enforcement of Clayton Act, Section 7—Federal Trade Commission—Petition to Stay Merger Until Administrative Proceedings Terminated.—In a Federal Trade Commission action charging that a paper company violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act when it merged with two other companies, a Commission petition requesting a United States Court of Appeals to issue injunctive relief maintaining the present status of the merger until the conclusion of its administrative proceeding was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. The Commission had argued that if it should find that the paper company violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act and should order the company to divest itself of the stock and assets it acquired, it would be impossible to separate the assets of the various companies. The Clayton Act does not authorize the Federal Trade Commission to enforce Section 7 of the Act by obtaining an injunction in a court of equity. Furthermore, a United States Court of Appeals does not have the power under the Clayton Act to issue such an injunction. Also, the Clayton Act did not contemplate applications by the Commission for interlocutory relief by way of injunction to maintain the status quo during the pendency of a proceeding before the Commission. Furthermore, the authority for the Commission to seek an injunction cannot be implied from the "all writs" statute, which authorizes Courts of Appeal to issue any writ necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4206.450, 4208.15, 4208.25.

For the petitioner: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission; Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel; John T. Loughlin, Assistant to the General Counsel; and James E. Corkey, Attorney.

For the respondent: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland and Kiendl (Theodore Kiendl, George A. Brownell, John F. Collins, and Edward F. Howrey, of counsel).

Dismissing a petition for injunctive relief in Federal Trade Commission Dkt. 6676.

Before: SWAN, MEDINA and WATERMAN, Circuit Judges.

[Merger—Injunction Sought]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: When this petition came on for oral argument on December 14, 1956, it was dismissed from the bench for lack of jurisdiction, with the statement that a written opinion would be handed down later.

The petition was filed November 27, 1956 and the respondent's answer on December 11. Without going into greater detail it will suffice to say that the petition alleges in substance that on November 5, 1956 the stockholders of International Paper Company, a New York corporation, and the the stockholders of two Missouri corporations, Long-Bell Lumber Corporation and Long-Bell Lumber Company, voted upon and approved a plan of merger; that on November 6, 1956 the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint charging that International by acquisition of the two Long-Bell companies had violated section 7 of the amended Clayton Act, in that such acquisition may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly as more particularly specified in the complaint; and that if the Commission, after hearings, should find that section 7 has been violated and should order International to divest itself of stock and assets acquired, "It will be impossible to separate the acquired assets from those which are the joint result of the combined operations and the assets of International," if action contemplated by the respondent with respect to the acquired companies is allowed to occur. The prayer for injunctive relief in substance asks that the status quo be maintained until conclusion of the administrative proceeding.

[Scope of Clayton Act]

The Clayton Act contains a scheme of dual enforcement. United States v. W. T. Grant Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,493], 345 U. S. 629, 632. Section 7 of the Act, and certain other sections not here relevant, may be enforced either by cease and desist orders of the Commission, 15 U. S. C. A. § 21, or by suits in equity instituted by the several district attorneys in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, 15 U. S. C. A. § 25. U. S. Alkali Export Assn. v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,372], 325 U. S. 196, 208. Individuals may also have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the anti-trust laws under the same conditions and principles as govern the granting of injunctions by courts of equity, that is to say, district courts, 15 U. S. C. A. § 26. These specific provisions as to who may seek injunctive relief, and in what courts, imply that the Commission itself is not authorized to do so. This implication is required by the statutory provisions of 15 U. S. C. A. § 21, under which a court of appeals acquires jurisdiction to review an order of the Commission only after the administrative proceeding has been concluded and a transcript of the record therein filed with the court.[1] The Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive upon the court, and if either party shows grounds for adducing additional evidence, the court may order it to be taken before the Commission. The Clayton Act clearly recognizes that a court of appeals has no fact finding powers, and that if an injunction is to be obtained by a United States Attorney or a private litigant it must be sought in a U. S. District Court under sections 25 or 26 of Title 15, U. S. C. A. Nor did this legislation contemplate applications by the Commission for interlocutory relief by way of injunction to maintain the status quo during the pendency of a proceeding before the Commission.

[All Writs Statute]

Relying upon Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., 9 Cir., 184 F. 2d 311, the Commission argues that authority for it to seek an injunction here may be implied from the "all writs" section, 28 U. S. C. section 1651(a), which authorizes the Courts of Appeals to issue any writ "necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions." But, since the pattern of enforcement adopted by the Congress in the Clayton Act makes clear that the Commission was not intended to have such authority, the "all writs" section cannot be invoked to circumvent this limitation. And, if the Commission has no authority to seek an injunction, it is clear we have no power to grant it such relief. With all due respect to our brethren of the Ninth Circuit, we are therefore constrained to disagree with the conclusion arrived at in the Transamerica case.[2]

Action dismissed.

[¶ 68,611] United States v. The Torrington Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut. Civil Action No. 4840. Filed January 29, 1957.

Case No. 1189 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Refusal To Deal—Sewing Machine Needles.—A manufacturer of sewing, knitting, and shoe machine needles was prohibited by a consent decree from engaging in any understanding with any sewing machine manufacturer or seller or shoe machine manufacturer or seller to refrain from selling or otherwise supplying sewing or shoe machine needles to any person.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785.

---

[1] Cf. Fed. Power Comm'n v. Edison Co., 304 U. S. 375; In re Matter of the National Labor Relations Board, 304 U. S. 486.

[2] It may well be that the Third Circuit in the recent Farm Journal case, D. 6388, also disagreed with the Transamerica case, but, as no opinion was written, the precise ground on which the Third Circuit refused to grant the requested injunction does not appear.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Resale Price Fixing.—A manufacturer of sewing, knitting, and shoe machine needles was prohibited by a consent decree from suggesting or recommending to any person or attempting to enforce the price or prices, discounts, or conditions for the resale of sewing or shoe machine needles.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Acquisition of Stock or Assets.—A manufacturer of sewing, knitting, and shoe machine needles was prohibited by a consent decree from acquiring the business, physical assets or good will, or any capital stock of any person engaged in the manufacture, distribution, or sale of sewing machine needles, knitting machine needles, or shoe machine needles, unless the manufacturer establishes that the effect of such an acquisition may not be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any section of the country.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.833; Monpolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.120.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Sales and Production.—A manufacturer of sewing, knitting, and shoe machine needles was required by a consent decree to sell to all prospective purchasers all of the types of sewing and shoe machine needles manufactured by it, without discrimination. However, with respect to sewing machine needles now made by the manufacturer pursuant to plans or specifications furnished to it by others, the manufacturer could provide in lieu thereof equivalent needles which are in all respects interchangeable, and with respect to such equivalent needles, the manufacturer was required to establish a stock on hand of those types of needles corresponding to 70 per cent of the volume customarily supplied each sewing machine builder. Also, the manufacturer was required to manufacture sewing machine needles (or equivalent thereof) and shoe machine needles, customarily manufactured by it but which are not in stock at any particular time, for all prospective purchasers, without discrimination, and to manufacture sewing machine needles or shoe machine needles, which are of a special design and which it is equipped to make, without discrimination. However, under certain circumstances, the manufacturer was not required to sell its needles.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8301.60, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Decree.—A manufacturer of sewing and shoe machine needles was required by a consent decree to serve a copy of the decree upon each sewing and shoe machine builder for whom it had produced sewing or shoe machine needles within the five year period preceding the date of the decree. Also, the manufacturer was required to advertise in two trade journals or papers that sewing or shoe machine needles are available to all persons pursuant to the decree.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Functional Discounts.—A consent decree entered against a manufacturer of sewing, knitting, and shoe machine needles provided that nothing contained in the decree should be deemed to prevent the manufacturer from giving to any person purchasing needles for resale functional discounts otherwise lawful or from requiring that such persons, in order to qualify as jobbers or dealers, perform the regular functions of jobbers and dealers.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Enforcement—Proof of Compliance.—A consent decree entered against a manufacturer of sewing and shoe machine needles provided that the burden of proof should be upon the manufacturer to establish that it has complied with the provisions of the decree in any proceeding in which the manufacturer's compliance or non-compliance with such provisions is in issue.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8401.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, John D. Swartz, Lawrence Gochberg, Edward F. Corcoran, Richard B. O'Donnell, Attorneys, Department of Justice; and Simon S. Cohen, United States Attorney, Hartford, Conn.

For the defendant: Gumbart, Corbin, Tyler & Cooper, by Morris Tyler, New Haven, Conn., and Chadbourne, Parke, Whiteside & Wolff, by Horace G. Hitchcock, New York, N. Y.

Final Judgment

ROBERT P. ANDERSON, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on March 30, 1954; defendant, having appeared and filed its answer to such complaint, denying the substantive allegations thereof; and plaintiff and defendant by their attorneys herein, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party in respect of any such issue;

Now, therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a cause of action against defendant under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Sewing machine needles" means all needles used in any type of sewing machine;

(B) "Shoe machine needles" means all needles and awls used in any type of shoe manufacturing or repairing machine;

(C) "Knitting machine needles" means all needles used in any type of knitting machine;

(D) "Subsidiary" means a corporation owned or controlled by the defendant and engaged in the production or marketing of sewing machine needles, shoe machine needles or knitting machine needles in the United States;

(E) "Person" means an individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation, other than a subsidiary, or any other business or legal entity.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to the defendant and its subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys, and to those persons in active concert or participation with the defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Restrictive Contracts—Prices]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained:

(A) From engaging in, participating in, maintaining or carrying out any contract, agreement, arrangement or understanding with any sewing machine manufacturer or seller or shoe machine manufacturer or seller or any other person to refrain from selling or otherwise supplying sewing machine needles or shoe machine needles to any person;

(B) From suggesting or recommending to any person or attempting to enforce the price or prices, discounts or terms or conditions for the resale of shoe machine and sewing machine needles.

V

[Required Sales and Production]

Defendant is ordered and directed:

(A) To sell to all prospective purchasers in the United States all of the types, sizes and kinds of sewing machine and shoe machine needles manufactured by it, without discrimination as to availability, price or terms and conditions of sale and payment as it may from time to time lawfully establish, provided that with respect to sewing machine needles now made by defendant pursuant to plans or specifications furnished to it by others, it may provide in lieu thereof, equivalent needles which are in all respects interchangeable therewith and of equivalent dimensions, characteristics, purpose and quality.

With respect to such equivalent needles, it shall, within ninety days after the entry of this Final Judgment, establish a stock on hand of those types and sizes of needles corresponding to 70% of the volume customarily supplied each sewing machine builder. This stock shall be established in quantities of types and sizes equal to a minimum of 10% of those of the corresponding needles supplied each machine builder and shall be maintained in quantities sufficient to meet orders which it might reasonably anticipate on the basis of experience;

(B) To manufacture sewing machine needles, or equivalents thereof as defined in (A) above, and shoe machine needles, customarily manufactured by it but which are not in stock at any particular time, for all prospective purchasers without discrimination as to availability, price or terms and conditions of sale and payment as it may from time to time lawfully establish;

(C) To manufacture sewing machine needles or shoe machine needles, which are of a special design, i. e., not already manufactured by defendant, which it is equipped to make, when ordered in quantities sufficient to permit profitable production, without discrimination as to availability, price or terms and conditions of sale and payment as it may from time to time lawfully establish. Provided, however, that during any period of time defendant may refuse all orders for needles of a special design.

VI

[Functional Discounts]

Nothing contained in paragraphs V(A) and (B) above, shall be interpreted to prevent the defendant from giving to any person purchasing needles for resale, functional discounts otherwise lawful or from requiring that such persons, in order to qualify as jobbers or dealers, perform the regular functions of jobbers and dealers such as purchasing a specified number of needles per month, carrying adequate stocks to serve their customers, and, in the case of jobbers, employing a sales force and extending credit to customers.

VII

[Scope of Required Sales]

Nothing contained in Section V of this Final Judgment shall be deemed to require defendant:

(A) To sell to any person needles manufactured by defendant bearing the trademark or trade name of any other person; or

(B) To sell to any person needles in a package or container bearing the trademark or trade name of any other person, or the design or label of which is covered by a copyright owned or controlled by any other person;

(C) To sell to any person sewing machine needles or equivalents thereof, manufactured at the present time by defendant with special tools or machines now supplied by any other person, except that defendant shall sell like needles upon being supplied with such tools and machines by the prospective purchaser. Provided, however, that defendant shall not agree to manufacture sewing machine needles exclusively for any person with tools or machines supplied to it after the date of this Final Judgment.

As used above, special tools and machines include only that equipment used in the actual manufacturing of sewing machine needles and not gauges or other equipment used for the testing of sewing machine needles.

VIII

[Proof of Compliance]

In any civil suit or proceeding instituted by the plaintiff after the entry of this Final Judgment, in which defendant's compliance or non-compliance with the provisions of Section V shall be an issue, the burden of proof shall be upon the defendant to establish that it has complied with the provisions of Section V.

IX

[Acquisition of Stock or Assets]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from acquiring, directly or indirectly, the business, physical assets or good will, or any capital stock of any person engaged in the manufacture, distribution or sale of sewing machine needles, shoe machine needles or knitting machine needles in the United States unless the defendant has, upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General with an opportunity on the part of the latter to be heard, shown to this Court that the effect of such acquisition may not be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, in any section of the country, in the manufacture, sale or distribution of sewing machine needles, shoe machine needles or knitting machine needles; provided, however, that this paragraph shall not apply to transactions between the defendant and its subsidiaries.

X

[Copy of Final Judgment]

Defendant is ordered and directed within 60 days after the entry of this Final Judgment to serve a copy thereof upon each sewing machine builder and shoe machine builder for whom defendant has manufactured sewing machine needles or shoe machine needles within the five-year period preceding the date of this Final Judgment.

XI

[Advertisement]

Defendant is ordered and directed within 90 days from the date of this Final Judgment to advertise in a conspicuous manner in two trade papers or journals—one of which shall have a general circulation in the shoe manufacturing industry and the other of which shall have a general circulalation in the garment industry—that pursuant to this Final Judgment, sewing machine and shoe machine needles are available as provided herein to all purchasers without discrimination as to availability, price or other terms or conditions of sale.

The substance and size of such advertisements shall be in a form satisfactory to the plaintiff.

XII

[Prohibited Agreements]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into, performing, adhering to, maintaining or furthering directly or indirectly or claiming any rights under, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any person which is inconsistent with the provisions of this Final Judgment.

XIII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division and on reasonable notice to defendant made to the principal office of defendant, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege when determined by this Court, (1) access, during the office hours of defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession of or under the control of defendant, relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of defendant but without restraint or interference from defendant, to interview officers or employees of defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be reasonably necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. Information obtained by the means permitted in this Section XIII shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment in which the United States is a party or as otherwise required by law.

XIV

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling either of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,612] Samuel Freedman, et al. v. Philadelphia Terminals Auction Co.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 19847. Filed October 30, 1956.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act and Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action Under Section 2(c), Clayton Act—Unlawful Brokerage Commissions.—Wholesale fruit merchants sufficiently charged a violation of Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act, as amended, when they alleged (1) that they purchase their fruit through an auction company, (2) that the sellers of the fruit pay the auction company a commission for its services, (3) that the auction company levied against, and accepted from, them, as buyers, a separate charge, and (4) that the auction company renders no services to them, but renders all of its services to the sellers of the fruit. The allegations, if true, constituted a violation of Section 2(c) of the Act since they show that the auction company was not performing its services for the wholesalers as buyers at the auction.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3520.150; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.850.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action Under Sherman Act.—A motion to dismiss a complaint charging (1) that an auction company sells substantially all of the fresh fruit arriving in Philadelphia by rail in less than carload lots, (2) that the company controls the free flow of commerce in fruits and monopolizes the market, and (3) that therefore the company is enabled to exact an unlawful commission from wholesale buyers of fruit was denied, although the court noted that it was unlikely that there has been any violation of Section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.575; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.800.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce.—A complaint charging that an auction company operating in Philadelphia unlawfully levied commissions against wholesale fruit merchants sufficiently alleged the interstate character of the auction company's business. The complaint alleged that the fruit comes from all over the United States to Philadelphia, and that the fruit passes through the facilities of the auction company to several states on the eastern seaboard.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.600.

For the plaintiffs: Berger and Gelman, by Frank H. Gelman and David Berger, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendant: T. Ewing Montgomery and C. Brewster Rhoads, Philadelphia, Pa.

Opinion

[Motion to Dismiss]

VAN DUSEN, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: This case, currently before the court on defendant's Motion to Dismiss under Rule 12(b), involves a suit by plaintiffs, members of an unincorporated association of Philadelphia wholesale fruit merchants, against defendant, a New Jersey corporation engaged in the business of auctioning such fruit in Philadelphia. The complaint is founded on certain provisions of the federal anti-trust laws and also on general provisions of the law of fraudulent misrepresentation and restitution as they relate to business transactions, particularly where there is business coercion.

Under the provisions of Rule 12(b), all well pleaded facts averred in the complaint must be taken as admitted for the purposes of the disposition of defendant's motion.[1] In addition, an affidavit and depositions with exhibits have been filed by the parties, and will also be considered by the court in the decision of the matter at hand.[2] The complaint in this action is divided into three "Counts," which will be considered separately.

[1] United States v. Geisler, 174 F. 2d 992 (7th Cir. 1949).

Count I

[Antitrust Claims]

Count I alleges certain violations by the defendant of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act[3] and of the Robinson-Patman Act's amendment to Section 3 [Section 2] of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act.[4] Factually, this count alleges that plaintiffs' members purchase fruit coming to Philadelphia from other states through defendant; that the defendant is engaged in the fruit auction business in Philadelphia and handles fruit coming from other states;[5] that defendant handles almost all fresh fruit coming to the Philadelphia market, which includes areas in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware,[6] in less than carload lots; that these sales are made by defendant by arrangement with the growers, shippers and consignees of said fruit; and that defendant is paid a commission by these sellers for its services[7] (Complaint, paragraphs 1 through 3).

[Interstate Commerce]

The fruit allegedly comes from all over the United States to a point of distribution in Philadelphia and the depositions show that it passes through the facilities of the defendant to several states on the eastern seaboard (D. 63 ff.). The defendant's operation, if as asserted, is an important link in a chain of commerce. Thus, under the notice type pleading prevailing in federal practice, these paragraphs of the complaint contain satisfactory allegations of the interstate character of the defendant's business.[8]

[Robinson-Patman Act]

Also, the record indicates that defendant, without the consent of plaintiffs, levied against, and accepted from, the plaintiffs as buyers a separate charge;[9] that defendant rendered no services to plaintiffs, but, on the contrary, rendered all its services to the growers, shippers and consignees for whom it sold (Complaint, paragraph 4).

---

[2] F. R. Civ. P. 12(b) provides, inter alia: "If, on a motion asserting the defense numbered (6) to dismiss for failure of the pleading to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56."

See, also, Lane Bryant, Inc. v. Maternity Lane, Ltd., 173 F. 2d 559 (9th Cir. 1949).

[3] Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1) provides:

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: . . . ."

Section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 2) provides:

"2. Monopolizing trade a misdemeanor; penalty

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, ..."

[4] 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(c) provides:

"Payment or Acceptance of Commission, Brokerage, or Other Compensation

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid."

[5] Deposition, pp. 18-25 (hereinafter designated as "D. 18-25").

[6] D. 62-63.

[7] D. 97-98.

[8] See United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186 (1954). But cf. Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 592, 595-6 & 598 (1898), where the court said, at pp. 595-6:

"It is possible that exorbitant charges for the use of these facilities might have similar effect as a burden on commerce that a charge upon commerce itself might have. In a case like that the remedy would probably be forthcoming."

[9] D. 96-106; Exhibits P-1 and P-2; and second paragraph starting on page 7 of defendant's affidavit filed 1/20/56, stating that a terminal charge is imposed on the buyer. (The fact that part of this terminal charge is paid to the railroad for unloading, pursuant to I. C. C. order, does not necessarily mean the buyer should bear this expense and, further, the record does not show whether or not the balance of the charge is limited to defendant's cost of collection.)

These allegations, if true, constitute a violation of the Robinson-Patman amendment to Section 3 [Section 2] of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act,[10] since they show that the defendant is not performing its services for the plaintiffs as buyers at auction.

[Sherman Act]

The complaint continues that defendant sells, by arrangements with growers, shippers and consignees,[11] substantially all fresh fruit arriving in Philadelphia by rail in less than carload lots; that by virtue of this fact, defendant controlled the free flow of commerce in such fruits, monopolized the market,[12] and was thus enabled to exact the aforementioned separate charge from plaintiffs; that such conduct contravened Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1 & 2); and that, by virtue of such conduct, plaintiffs sustained substantial damage.

The record now before the court makes it appear most unlikely that there has been any violation of 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1 & 2. Cf., for example, Standard Oil Co. v. F. T. C. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231, 248-9 (1951); Lawlor et al. v. National Screen Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,509], (opinion of 10/24/56, 3rd Cir., Nos. 11,818-11,831, incl.). However, the plaintiffs are entitled to go to trial on the alleged violation of 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(c), so that Count I may not be dismissed at this time.[13] At the time of the pre-trial conference or at the start of the trial, a motion may be made to limit Count I to the alleged violation of 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(c) on the basis of the record then before the court.

* * *

[¶ 68,613] United States v. J. P. Seeburg Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 56 C 419. Dated January 31, 1957.

Case No. 1271 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Allocation of Markets—Refusal to Sell—Coin Operated Phonographs.—A manufacturer of coin operated phonographs was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) limiting or restricting the persons to whom or the territory within which any distributor or operator may choose to sell such phonographs, (2) requiring any distributor to advise it of the name or address of any purchaser of such phonographs, or (3) limiting or restricting the right of any

---

[10] See 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(c), quoted in footnote 4 above. Exhibit P-19 makes clear that defendant accepts compensation from buyers and sellers even though the record presently before the court indicates that its primary function is as agent for the sellers, to whom it owes its primary loyalty. See, also, Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. F. T. C. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,242], 106 F. 2d 667 (3rd Cir. 1939), cf. 51 H. L. R. 1303 (1938); Quality Bakers of America v. F. T. C. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,060], 114 F. 2d 393, 398-9 (1st Cir. 1940); Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 37 F. Supp. 728, 734-5 (W. D. Ky. 1941), aff'd. 136 F. 2d 12 (6th Cir. 1943); 149 A. L. R. 657-677 (1944), and cases there cited. In the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. case, the court said at pp. 674-5:

"The phrase 'except for services rendered' is employed by Congress to indicate that if there be compensation to an agent it must be for bona fide brokerage, viz., for actual services rendered to his principal by the agent. The agent cannot serve two masters, simultaneously rendering service in an arm's length transaction to both. While the phrase, 'for services rendered', does not prohibit payment by the seller to his broker for bona fide brokerage services, it requires that such service be rendered by the broker to the person who has engaged him. In short, a buying and selling service cannot be combined in one person."

But cf. Allgair v. Glenmore Distilleries Co., Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,659], 91 F. Supp. 93 (S. D. N. Y. 1950), and Interborough News Co. v. Curtis Pub. Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,658], 10 F. R. D. 330, 332 (S. D. N. Y. 1950), pointing out that there must be such strong compulsion motivating the alleged improper payment by the buyers "as to amount to substantial economic coercion."

[11] Supra note 5; Exhibits P-10, P-11, P-12 & P-17.

[12] See D. 16.

[13] The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has recently emphasized that summary judgment should not be granted in cases arising under the anti-trust laws if there is "any doubt as to the existence of a genuine issue of fact." See Lawlor v. National Screen Corp., supra, pp. 12-13.

* * *

purchaser from any distributor to resell such phonographs after they have been paid for in full. Also, the manufacturer was prohibited from refusing to enter into or canceling any contract with a distributor because of such distributor's refusal to do any of the above acts and from maintaining any index or record of the names or addresses of any purchasers from distributors or the serial numbers of such phonographs. Distributors of such phonographs were prohibited from engaging in similar practices. Subject to the prohibitions of the decree, the manufacturer and distributors were permitted to exercise the right to select their customers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468, 2005.785.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Right To Choose Customers.—A consent decree entered against a manufacturer and distributors of coin operated phonographs provided that, subject to the prohibitions of the decree, (1) the manufacturer may exercise its right to choose and select its distributors and customers, to designate geographical areas in which such distributors shall respectively be primarily responsible for distributing its phonographs, and to terminate the franchises of such distributors who do not adequately represent the manufacturer and promote the sale of all coin operated phonographs manufactured by the manufacturer in areas so designated as their primary responsibility, and (2) each of the distributors may, individually, exercise its right to choose and select its customers and to fix the terms and conditions upon which it will make sales of coin operated phonographs.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Judgment.—A manufacturer of coin operated phonographs was required by a consent decree to serve upon each of its distributors a conformed copy of the decree. Also, each of the phonograph distributors which signed the decree was required to furnish a conformed copy of the decree to each of its customers regularly called upon or circularized by mail and required to advise such customers that it (1) is required not to impose any restrictions on the right of purchasers to resell such phonographs, (2) is free to sell such phonographs to any person, and (3) is required not to discriminate against a prospective customer because he may reside or do business outside of a particular territory.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and William D. Kilgore, Jr., Earl A. Jinkinson, Harold E. Baily, and James E. Mann, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Thomas M. Thomas and E. Houston Harsha for J. P. Seeburg Corp. Miller, Gorham, Wescott & Adams, by Edward R. Adams, for Ajax Michigan Corporation; American Steel Export Company, Inc.; Atlantic Connecticut Corporation; Atlantic New Jersey Corporation; Atlantic New York Corporation; S. L. London Music Co., Inc.; S. H. Lynch & Co., Inc.; Minthorne Music Company, Inc.; The Musical Sales Co.; Music Systems, Inc., an Ohio corporation; Music Systems, Inc. "Michigan," an Ohio corporation; Sparks Specialty Company; S. L. Stiebel Co.; W. B. Distributors, Inc.; W. B. Music Company, Inc.; and John H. Lynch and Adrian H. Zander, co-partners d.b.a. Lynch & Zander Co. Daniel D. Carmell for Shafer Music Co.; Dickson Distributing Company; Atlas Music Corporation, an Illinois corporation; Atlas Music Corporation, an Iowa corporation; Atlas Music Corporation, a corporation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; Davis Distributing Corporation; Wolfe Distributing Company, Inc., an Alabama corporation; Simon Wolfe and Gordon F. Williams, co-partners, d.b.a. Wolfe Distributing Company; Sammons-Pennington Co.; Trimount Automatic Sales Corp.; Atlantic Pennsylvania Corp.; R. F. Jones Co., a Utah corporation; R. F. Jones Co., a California corporation; R. F. Jones Co., a Delaware corporation; and Music Distributors, Inc.

Final Judgment

JULIUS J. HOFFMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on March 2, 1956, the defendants having filed their several answers denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the United States of America, the defendant J. P. Seeburg Corporation, and the distributor defendants signatory hereof, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party signatory hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, therefore, before the taking of any testimony, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties signatory hereto, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I.

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims for relief against the defendant J. P. Seeburg Corporation and the defendant distributors signatory hereto under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II.

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Seeburg" shall mean the defendant J. P. Seeburg Corporation, with its principal place of business in Chicago, Illinois;

(B) "Person" shall mean an individual, partnership, firm, corporation, or any other legal entity;

(C) "Distributor" shall mean any person (other than Seeburg and its subsidiaries) engaged in the purchase from Seeburg, for resale, of coin operated phonographs manufactured by it;

(D) "Operator" shall mean any person who owns coin operated phonographs and leases said machines to location owners;

(E) "Location owner" shall mean any person owning or operating a restaurant, tavern or other place of business in the Continental United States where coin operated phonographs are placed for use by the public;

(F) "Coin operated phonographs" shall mean new and used coin operated phonographs manufactured originally by Seeburg.

III.

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to Seeburg and to the distributor defendants signatory hereto and to each of their subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

This Final Judgment is not to be construed as relating to commerce outside the United States.

IV.

[Prohibited Practices—Manufacturer]

Defendant Seeburg is enjoined and restrained from:

(A)(1) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the persons to whom or the territory within which any distributor or operator may choose to sell coin operated phonographs;

(2) Requiring any distributor to advise Seeburg of the name or address of any purchaser from such distributor of any coin operated phonographs or the serial number or numbers of such phonographs, except where such name, address and serial number or numbers are necessary to fill an order for repair or maintenance parts, or for services, for maintenance or replacement of parts or components, or to resolve a complaint or inquiry involving loss or theft or the fulfillment or breach of a conditional sales agreement or other credit or collateral agreement;

(3) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the right of any purchaser from any distributor of coin operated phonographs to resell such phonograph or phonographs after they have been paid for in full.

(B) Entering into, adhering to or enforcing any contract, agreement, or understanding with any distributor:

(1) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the persons to whom or the territory within which any distributor or operator may choose to sell a coin operated phonograph or phonographs;

(2) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the right of any purchaser from any distributor of coin operated phonographs to resell such phonograph or phonographs after they have been paid for in full.

(C) Refusing to enter into or canceling any contract with a distributor for the distribution of coin operated phonographs because of such distributor's refusal to do any of the following acts:

(1) Limit or restrict, directly or indirectly, the persons to whom or the territory within which he sells coin operated phonographs;

(2) Advise Seeburg of the name or address of any purchaser from such distributor of any coin operated phonographs or the serial number or numbers of such phonographs, except where such name, address and serial number or numbers are necessary to fill an order for repair or maintenance parts, or for services, for maintenance or replacement of parts or components, or to resolve a complaint or inquiry involving loss or theft or the fulfillment or breach of a conditional sales agreement or other credit or collateral agreement;

(3) Limit or restrict, directly or indirectly, the right of any purchaser of coin operated phonographs to resell such phonographs after they have been paid for in full.

(D)(1) Maintaining any index, catalog or record of the names or addresses of any purchasers from distributors of coin operated phonographs or the serial numbers of such phonographs; provided, however, that any distributor may advise Seeburg and Seeburg may keep an alphabetical record of the names or addresses of any such purchasers of such phonographs and the serial numbers thereof in connection with an order for repair or maintenance parts, or for services, or in connection with a complaint or inquiry involving loss or theft or fulfillment or breach of a conditional sales agreement or other credit or collateral agreement involving such phonographs;

(2) Using any Seeburg file or record for any purpose contrary to any of the provisions of this Final Judgment.

(E) Subject to subsections (A), (B), (C) and (D) of this Section IV, Seeburg may exercise its right to choose and select its distributors and customers, to designate geographical areas in which such distributors shall respectively be primarily responsible for distributing coin operated phonographs, to terminate the franchises of such distributors who do not adequately represent Seeburg and promote the sale of all coin operated phonographs manufactured by Seeburg in areas so designated as their primary responsibility, and such designation of suggested geographical areas, standing alone, shall not be considered a violation of this Section IV.

V.

[Prohibited Practices—Distributors]

Defendant distributors signatory hereto are enjoined, individually and collectively, from:

(A)(1) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the person or persons to whom or the territory within which any operator or other purchaser may choose to resell coin operated phonographs after they have been paid for in full;

(2) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the right of any purchaser or any distributor of coin operated phonographs to resell such phonographs after they have been paid for in full;

(3) Refusing to sell to a person because such person may have resold a coin operated phonograph, after it had been paid for in full, to a person outside a particular territory or to a location owner.

(B) Entering into, adhering to or enforcing any contract, agreement or understanding with Seeburg, any distributor or distributors, or any operator or operators:

(1) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the persons to whom or the territory within which any distributor or operator may choose to sell coin operated phonographs;

(2) Limiting or restricting, directly or indirectly, the right of any purchaser from any distributor of coin operated phonographs to resell such phonographs after they have been paid for in full.

(C) Refusing to enter into or canceling any contract of sale of coin operated phonographs because of the purchaser's refusal to agree or adhere to any contract, agreement or understanding contrary to the provisions of subsection (B) of this Section V.

(D) Subject to subsections (A), (B) and (C) of this Section V, the distributor defendants signatory hereto may each, individually, exercise its right to choose and select its customers and to fix the terms and conditions upon which it will make sales of coin operated phonographs.

VI.

[Notice of Decree]

Defendant Seeburg is directed, within sixty (60) days after the entry of this Final Judgment, to serve by mail upon each Seeburg distributor a conformed copy thereof.

Defendant distributors signatory hereto, other than American Steel Export Company, Inc., are directed, within sixty (60) days after the entry of this Final Judgment, to furnish a conformed copy of this Final Judgment to each of the customers regularly called upon or circularized by mail by such distributor, and to advise such customers that such distributor:

(1) Is required not to impose any restrictions on the right of purchasers from such distributor to resell coin operated phonographs after they have been paid for in full;

(2) Is free to sell coin operated phonographs to any person;

(3) Is required not to discriminate against a prospective customer because he may reside or do business outside of a particular territory, subject, however, to the right of any distributor to discriminate between purchasers on the basis of their location as to terms and conditions with respect to service, maintenance, guarantees, warranties, credit, payment and delivery reasonably related to the territory or location in which a customer proposes to use or operate coin operated phonographs if acquired by such customer.

VII.

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the signatories hereto, made to the principal office of such signatories, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access, during regular office hours, to those parts of the books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such signatories which relate to any matters contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of the signatories hereto, and without restraint or interference from them, to interview their officers or employees, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, the signatories hereto shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

IX.

[Effective Date]

This Final Judgment shall become effective ninety (90) days after entry herein.

[¶ 68,614] Jack Loeks Enterprises, Inc. v. W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division. Civil Action No. 7839. Dated January 9, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Subpoenas Duces Tecum—Reasonableness.—Defendants' motion to quash a plaintiff's subpoenas duces tecum on the ground that they were unreasonable and oppressive was granted where the bulk of the documents covered by the subpoenas were previously produced by the defendants and a great number of the documents so furnished had been copied. A second production by the defendants, for the purpose of marking documents as exhibits, would be no less cumbersome to the defendants than the selection of pertinent documents by the plaintiff from those already copied, and a second request to do so by means of the subpoenas duces tecum is unreasonable and oppressive. A showing of good cause must be made prior to the production of documents sought by a subpoena duces tecum, and such a showing cannot be made or considered on a motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.975.

Order Granting Defendants' Motions To Quash Subpoenas Duces Tecum

[Subpoena Duces Tecum]

ARTHUR A. KOSCINSKI, District Judge [In full text]: In this anti-trust action plaintiff caused subpoenas duces tecum to be served on a number of persons commanding each of them to produce and have available, at the time of taking their depositions on November 19, 1956, records and documents of defendants consisting of some 28 separate categories. Defendants moved to quash the subpoenas as unreasonable and oppressive or, in the alternative, to grant them other relief under Rules 30(b), 45(b) and 45(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

[Prior Proceedings]

This action was commenced on December 14, 1948. Russell C. Ashmore was then counsel of record for plaintiff. On June 25, 1951 the firm of Lucking, Van Auken, Schumann & Greiner appeared as of counsel for plaintiff; on August 24, 1955 James O. Smith and Thomas C. McConnell were substituted for counsel of record; and on November 1, 1956 another substitution of counsel was made, Seymore F. Simon and Sheldon O. Collen appearing together with Mr. Ashmore as present counsel of record for plaintiff.

After institution of the suit other defendants were joined. Besides the complaint two amended complaints were filed. Extensive discovery was had on both sides consisting of depositions, motions to produce documents and stipulations of counsel for production, as well as interrogatories. Five amended motions for production under Rule 34 were filed by plaintiff and two orders were entered directing defendants to produce documents and records for inspection and copying.

Two pre-trials scheduled by the court during 1950 and 1953 were adjourned, without date, upon stipulation of counsel, pending disposition of preliminary proceedings instituted before dates of hearing. A third pre-trial set for January 31, 1956 was adjourned to March 27, 1956 because of absence from the country of counsel for some of the defendants and at the adjourned pre-trial hearing plaintiff was represented by attorney McConnell who informed the court that he entered the case only recently and asked for an extension of time for six months for the purpose of taking certain depositions. This request was granted and the hearing was adjourned to October 1, 1956, on which date the court was furnished an affidavit of McConnell's co-counsel, Smith, to the effect that McConnell suffered a coronary thrombosis two and a half months after his appearance in the case and because of his illness other counsel would be obtained by plaintiff to try the case. The hearing was again continued to November 1, 1956 and at this hearing plaintiff was represented by present counsel of record who informed the court that, to their knowledge, no resort was made on behalf of plaintiff for additional discovery. Counsel Simon further stated that if he had been instituting the action at this time he would take certain depositions but, being mindful of the elapse of time since suit was filed, he was willing to forego the taking of any additional depositions; he later reserved the right to take depositions if he did not succeed in securing certain admissions from defendants; he also requested production by defendants of certain documents to be marked as exhibits for the trial. The request also included documents not previously furnished, admittedly not because of any default on the part of defendants but because plaintiff, at some point, stopped with the examination of documents. Plaintiff was directed to proceed under the rules and time was extended for completion of discovery. The subpoenas now under attack were thereafter served.

[Documents Inspected]

Defendants contend that some 80,000 documents were submitted to plaintiff for inspection and copying, and plaintiff admits that some 44,000 documents furnished by defendants were microfilmed; defendants also acknowledge that they inspected some 22,000 documents furnished by plaintiff. According to defendants as many as 50 to 100 boxes of transfer files were placed in the Butterfield offices and plaintiff's counsel Ashmore admits that he spent the equivalent of at least 360 full days in those offices examining the records so furnished. Other defendants also claim that voluminous documents and records were transferred from offices in New York and Detroit and placed in the office of their counsel, in compliance with orders and stipulations for production; that documents were examined by plaintiff's counsel Ashmore, Schumann, and Smith and that defendants' attorney was then informed that all documents which plaintiff needed had been inspected and the documents could be returned to defendants and this was done; that many of the files had to be removed from storage in New York and Detroit and that the documents were located, assembled, and made available to plaintiff at considerable expense to defendants; and that the subpoenas duces tecum now request that the same documents be furnished.

Counsel for plaintiff, Simon, admits that approximately 90% of the documents covered by the subpoenas were intended primarily for marking as exhibits for trial and that the remaining documents constitute a new request; that he made no examination and proposes to make none of the microfilms of the documents previously submitted by defendants for inspection and copying as such procedure would be too cumbersome, if not physically impossible. Counsel Ashmore informed the court that he is familiar with the material which he microfilmed and knows what the films contain. Counsel Simon also indicated that he would not be interested in taking the depositions of the witnesses under subpoena unless the documents requested were produced at the same time, as he may desire to interrogate them with reference to such documents.

[Exhibits]

At previous hearings counsel for both parties were advised by the court that when the issues are formulated documents to be introduced in evidence on a particular issue should be, in advance of trial, segregated into separate categories according to issues presented on which the documentary evidence will be offered, and that the documents will then be marked as exhibits.

Since the last pre-trial hearing plaintiff filed a statement of issues involved. Defendants offered to file a counter-statement of issues upon the completion of all discovery. At the present stage of this litigation a request for production of documents for marking as exhibits is, at least, premature. Marking of all exhibits, proposed by both sides, at the proper time, and after elimination of all extraneous documents, will result in a more orderly preparation for trial than a piece-meal marking.

[Subpoenas Unreasonable]

The bulk of the documents covered by the subpoenas duces tecum, by plaintiff's admission, were previously produced by defendants and a great number of documents so furnished had been copied by means of the microfilms. A second production by defendant, for the purpose requested, would be no less cumbersome to defendants, in the court's view, than the selection of pertinent documents by plaintiff from those already copied and a second request to do so by means of the subpoenas duces tecum is unreasonable and oppressive. After resorting to considerable discovery plaintiff apparently now feels it previously copied too much, and by a method which it now finds impractical and cumbersome, and, by way of a request to produce documents for marking at the trial on discovery depositions, is attempting to initiate discovery proceedings all over again, although more than eight years elapsed since filing of the suit, and defendants apparently complied with all orders for discovery thus far made by the court and with all stipulations therefor entered into between counsel.

[Proper Procedure]

In Joseph L. Lee Inc. v. Margon Corporation [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,256], 18 F. R. D. 390, the court granted a motion to quash subpoenas duces tecum on the ground that they were unreasonable and oppressive. The court in that case criticizes a growing tendency to combine Rules 26(c) with Rule 45(d) as a substitute for the discovery and production of documents and things for inspection, copying or photographing "upon motion of any party showing good cause therefor," allowed by Rule 34. Rule 26(b) permits a litigant to ascertain upon a deposition the existence, description, nature, custody, condition and location of any books, documents, or other tangible things. Rule 45(d) permits the party noticing a deposition to obtain from the clerk, without order of court, a subpoena to produce designated books, papers, documents, or tangible things which constitute or contain evidence relating to any of the matters within the scope of the examination permitted by Rule 26(b). Rule 34 authorizes an order for production of documents and things for inspection, copying or photographing upon a motion of any party showing good cause therefor. The court states in its opinion that the rules did not intend to eliminate the original necessity for court order, pursuant to Rule 45(d)(1) before its amendment in 1948, permitting the use of a subpoena duces tecum. It notes the important distinction between the subpoena duces tecum and discovery and inspection—in case of the subpoena the one upon whom it is served may seek relief for unreasonableness or oppressiveness, whereas in case of discovery and inspection the one seeking it must establish good cause therefor. The court then held that even where the one upon whom the subpoena duces tecum is served does not attack it for unreasonableness or oppressiveness but complies and produces the identified document at a deposition, that still does not give the examiner the right to inspect or copy it without an independent order under Rule 34 upon a showing of good cause. It also holds that the assertions of the plaintiff in that case, in its answering papers to the motion to quash, tending to establish good cause for the production of the documents and its right to inspect them, are inapposite on the motion to quash its subpoena.

Other cases hold that a showing of good cause must be made prior to production of documents and records sought by a subpoena duces tecum. Worth v. Lehigh Valley Transit Co., 10 F. R. D. 38; Continental Distilling Corp. v. Humphrey, 17 F. R. D. 237; United States v. 6.82 Acres of Land, 18 F. R. D. 195.

Plaintiff in this case sought to justify the need for production of documents not previously furnished by defendants. According to the precedents cited, such showing is not one which should be made or considered on a motion to quash subpoenas duces tecum.

For reasons herein stated the motions to quash subpoenas duces tecum, filed by defendants, are hereby granted.

[¶ 68,615] Independent Productions Corporation and IPC Distributors, Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 110-304. Filed February 5, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—Conspiracy Action—Co-conspirators as Agents.— In a treble damage action filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, motions by corporate defendants to quash service of process and to dismiss the action for lack of venue were granted where the corporations were not incorporated or authorized to do business in New York, had no offices or agents there, and did not transact any business there. The complaint alleged a conspiracy in the district, and that each of the defendants acted in person or by their co-defendants in the consummation of the alleged conspiracy. The plaintiffs had contended that the corporations' disclaimer of commercial activities within the district was irrelevant and, that, irrespective of the situs of the corporations or of their ordinary commercial activities, the corporations were suable in the district since the corporations, through their co-defendants or their co-conspirators, participated in the alleged conspiracy. The mere allegation of a conspiracy does not make an alleged co-conspirator a foreign corporation's agent, for purposes of venue under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, in any district where such co-conspirator is amenable to suit. Under the Clayton Act, it cannot be said that venue is proper as to all conspirators in the district in which the impact of the conspiracy caused the damage to the plaintiff.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210, 9008.350.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Depositions—Priority—Expenses.—In a private treble damage action, it was held that the defendants who first served notices to examine the plaintiffs should be granted priority; that each defendant was entitled to separately conduct its own examination of the plaintiffs, but that such examinations should be scheduled so as to follow one another with reasonable promptness; and that the plaintiffs should not be required to pay the defendants' expenses in bringing their out-of-state officers to New York for examination by the plaintiffs, since the defendants had offices in the state which their officers visited regularly in the performance of their duties.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.775.

For the plaintiffs: Rosston, Hort & Brussel, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine for General Film Laboratories, Inc.; Schwartz & Frohlich for Columbia Pictures Corporation and Columbia Pictures International Corporation; Sidney Schreiber for Motion Picture Association of America, Inc. and Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc.; Benjamin Melniker for Loew's Incorporated and Loew's International Corporation; Meyer H. Lavenstein for Republic Pictures Corporation, Republic Pictures International Corporation, and Republic Productions, Inc.; Robert W. Perkins for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (1953) (Del.), Warner Bros. Pictures International Corporation, and Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation; Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (Del.), Twentieth Century-Fox International Corporation, and Twentieth Century-Fox Inter-America, Inc.; Louis Phillips for Paramount Pictures Corporation, Paramount International Films, Inc., and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Adolph Schimel for Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Universal International Films, Inc.; J. Miller Walker for RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc. (formerly known and referred to in the complaint as RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.); Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim for United Artists Corporation, Eagle Lion Classics, Inc., National Screen Service Corporation, and Comedia Enterprises, Inc.; Frederick W. R. Pride and Charles F. Young for Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation and Fox West Coast Agency; Wechsler & Solodar (McConnell, Van Hook & Paschen, Chicago, Ill., of counsel) for H. Schoenstadt & Sons, Inc.; Davis & Gilbert for Ryder Sound Services, Inc., Glen Glenn Sound Co. (a corporation), and Glen Glenn Sound Co. (a partnership); Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl for Radio Corporation of America; and Spivak & Kantor for Walsh and Francavilla; all of New York, N. Y., except as otherwise indicated.

[Motions]

JOHN F. X. MCGOHEY, District Judge [In full text]: Ten motions are here considered. One is by the plaintiffs. Nine are by various defendants. Of the latter six are to quash service and to dismiss for lack of venue under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act;[1] two are to stay depositions; one is to vacate a notice of deposition. The plaintiffs' motion seeks an order regulating the taking of depositions.

[Complaint]

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs are respectively corporations of California and New York engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. They seek treble damages of $7.5 million alleged to have been sustained by reason of a conspiracy in violation of the Anti-trust laws, carried on by 108 defendants consisting of corporations, partnerships, associations and individuals engaged in various branches of the motion picture industry. Of these 20 individuals and 18 corporations are designated merely as "Doe."

It is alleged that the defendants carried on activities in furtherance of the conspiracy in "the County of New York" and other places throughout the United States and foreign countries and that "each defendant [acted] in said places either in person or by and through their co-defendants and the co-conspirators as their agents in the effectuation and consummation of the conspiracy."

THE MOTIONS TO QUASH AND DISMISS

[Affidavits]

General Film Laboratories, Inc. and H. Schoenstadt & Sons, Inc. move to quash service and to dismiss for lack of venue. Ryder Sound Services, Inc., Glen Glenn Sound Company, a corporation, Glen Glenn Sound Co., a partnership, and Cinema Research Corporation move to dismiss for lack of venue.

The presidents of these defendants aver in separate affidavits that their respective corporations are not incorporated in or authorized to do business in New York, have no office or agents here and transact no business here of any kind. Moreover, the presidents of General Film Laboratories, Inc. and Ryder Sound Services, Inc. aver that process was not served on anyone authorized to accept service for those corporations. Glen Glenn and Harry Eckles filed affidavits asserting that, while they conducted business as co-partners during a period of seven months in 1937 (ten years before the initiation of the alleged conspiracy), they did not and never have conducted any partnership under the name of Glen Glenn Sound Co.

These affidavits stand uncontroverted. The plaintiffs submitted only their attorney's affidavit in opposition to these six motions. This affidavit, after summarizing the allegations of the complaint, merely states:

> "In the moving affidavits it is averred that movants are not engaged in the Southern District of New York in the pursuit of their ordinary commercial activities and that, for that reason, they are neither 'found' nor transacting business in this District within the meaning of Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. § 15 [sic]). For the reasons which will be urged in plaintiffs' memorandum of law, it is respectfully submitted that this premise is fallacious and that the motions to quash should, in all respects, be denied."

In the memorandum of law, it is asserted that the moving defendants' disclaimer of commercial activities within the Southern District of New York is "irrelevant" and that, "irrespective of the situs of their corporate residence or of their ordinary commercial activities, if movants through their co-defendants or their co-conspirators participated in the conspiracy alleged in the amended complaint, they were suable in the Southern District of New York."

[Issue]

The question thus presented is whether in a private anti-trust suit, the mere allegation of conspiracy makes an alleged co-conspirator, as such, a foreign corporation's "agent" for purposes of venue under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act [2] in any district where such co-conspirator is amenable to suit and the conspiracy is alleged to have had an impact, even though such corporation concededly is not an "inhabitant" of, or otherwise "found" in, the district of suit and has not at any material time carried on there any commercial activity in pursuit of its corporate objectives.[3] For the reasons hereafter set forth, I think the question must be answered in the negative.

[1] 15 U. S. C. A. 22.

[Dismissals—Transfers]

On the uncontroverted evidence I find that, under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act, venue as to each of the moving defendants is lacking in this district, and also that no valid service of process was effected on General Film Laboratories, Inc. or Ryder Sound Services, Inc., or Glen Glenn Sound Co., a partnership.

The action as to these three defendants will be ordered dismissed for lack of jurisdiction of the defendants and lack of venue.

The other movants as to venue have not challenged service of process. Accordingly, the action as against H. Schoenstadt & Sons, Inc. will be ordered transferred to the Northern District of Illinois; the action against Glen Glenn Sound Company, a corporation, and Cinema Research Corporation, will be ordered transferred to the Southern District of California.

[Co-conspirator as Agent]

Although, by enacting Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act, Congress substantially enlarged the former venue provisions of the Anti-trust laws as to corporations, it did not thereby "give plaintiffs free rein to haul defendants hither and yon at their caprice." [4] Congress has authorized prosecution by the Government of a criminal conspiracy in violation of the Anti-trust laws in any district where it was formed or effectuated or in which any overt act was performed. In civil actions, however, Congress has not given the Government similar latitude. The Government can bring parties residing outside the district into a civil action only if the Court shall determine that the ends of justice so require.[5] And it seems significant that Congress has made this procedure available only to the Government.[6] As former Chief Judge Knox of this court observed in Hansen Packing Co. v. Armour & Co.,[7] "the failure of Congress to make similar provisions for civil suits by private litigants implies an intent to withhold the privilege." Judge Knox rejected Hansen's contention that the mere allegation of conspiracy was sufficient to establish venue aganist a New Jersey corporation not shown by the plaintiff to have transacted business in this district.

Here, nevertheless, the plaintiffs contend that, since the decision in U. S. v. Scophony, supra, decided in 1948, "the rule that a conspiracy is to be likened to a copartnership in which each participant acts as the agent of the other has governed the application and interpretaion of Section 12 of the Clayton Act" and that, "it is now the settled rule in the 2nd, 4th, 5th and 9th Circuits that for the purpose of determining venue in an anti-trust conspiracy case, the situs of the acts of the conspirators and the place of impact of the conspiracy will control." (emphasis supplied) The only appellate court decision cited in support of this "rule" is Giusti v. Pyrotechnic Industries [8] by the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The other five decisions cited are by District Courts in California,[9] New York,[10] Virginia [11] and Louisiana.[12]

Whatever may be true elsewhere, there is certainly no such "settled rule" in the Second Circuit. The contrary decision in Hansen Packing Co. v. Armour, supra, has not been overruled.

[2] 15 U. S. C. A. 22.

[3] See U. S. v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795-812.

[4] U. S. v. Nat. City Lines [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,259], 334 U. S. 573-588.

[5] 15 U. S. C. A. 5.

[6] Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439-467.

[7] S. D. N. Y. (1936) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,127], 16 F. Supp. 784, 786-87, cited with approval in Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra.

[8] (1946) [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,504], 156 F. 2d 351.

[9] De Golia v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (N. D. Cal.) 140 F. Supp. 316; Steiner v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (S. D. Cal.) 140 F. Supp. 906.

[10] Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. (E. D. N. Y.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,308], 140 F. Supp. 909.

[11] Ross-Bart Port Theatre v. Eagle Lion Films (E. D. Va.), 140 F. Supp. 401.

[12] Don George, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,294] (W. D. La.), 111 F. Supp. 458.

[Giusti Decision]

The plaintiffs, in asserting that there is a "settled rule" in the Second Circuit, appear to rely on the decision in Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres, supra. The Court in that case reviewed the other four district court decisions referred to above and found them all to be in accord with what the Court called "the principle enunciated in the Giusti case . . . that venue is proper as to all conspirators in the district in which the impact of the conspiracy caused the damage to the plaintiff." [13] Those cases do indeed appear to be in accord with that view. But with the utmost deference, I cannot agree that the Giusti decision "enunciated" any such "principle" as to venue under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act. The Giusti case was an action for treble damages brought in the Northern District of California against domestic and foreign corporations. Process against one of the latter, Triumph Explosives, Inc., was served on the Secretary of State of California. Triumph had withdrawn from the state prior to suit though earlier it had been qualified and had transacted business there. It appeared specially to challenge the service. It also moved separately to dismiss for lack of venue under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act, on the ground that at the time of suit it was not "found" or "transacting business" in the California district. The District Court granted both motions and Giusti appealed.

The complaint alleged a conspiracy by the defendants to monopolize and fix prices in, the sale of fireworks, beginning in 1935 and continuing up to the commencement of suit in 1944.[14] Triumph conceded in its affidavits [15] and brief [16] that, prior to 1939 it had sold and shipped its products to dealers in California; in 1939 its Vice-President in charge of sales opened its office and warehouse in Oakland and thereafter transacted its business in California continuously until some unspecified date after the outbreak of World War II; in December, 1943 it filed a Certificate of Withdrawal from business in California for which, pursuant to California law, it had qualified in January, 1940. Under California law withdrawal was conditioned on the corporation's written consent to substituted service on the Secretary of State "in any action upon any liability or obligation incurred within this state prior to the filing of the Certificate of Withdrawal." The Circuit Court's opinion, except for the last paragraph, deals solely with whether the liability which Giusti sued on, met California's requirement for substituted service. The Court held it did. Although Triumph's concessions of qualification, actual presence and the regular transaction of business in the California district during four years of the alleged conspiracy's existence seem sufficient support for that holding, the Circuit Court rested it on a different ground. Noting and apparently accepting as true the allegation in the complaint that the conspirators initiated their restrictive agreements in 1935 and, in practical effect, had destroyed the plaintiff's business by the end of 1936 (before Triumph's admitted entrance into and transaction of business in the district), the Court said:

> "The California members of the conspiracy were agents of Triumph in the conspiracy's attempt to destroy appellant's business. Triumph was in California acting through such agents, just as it would have been if it had employed a group of agents there continuously to underbid on sales to [Giusti's] customers."

If the Court thereby enunciated any principle, that could only have related to the single subject the Court was then discussing, namely, the manner in which a foreign corporation might incur liability sufficient to support substituted service of process under California law in a suit brought in that state on such liability after withdrawal. The Court indeed declined to pass on the question of venue under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act, although Triumph urged the point strongly in its brief. On the contrary, the Court held that question to be moot on the ground that, in its Certificate of Withdrawal, Triumph had expressly consented to be sued in California.

[Bertha Building Case]

Moreover, even in the Bertha Building Corp. case, the Court did not rely solely on the so-called Giusti "principle." There, the plaintiff, a California corporation which owned and operated motion picture theatres in Los Angeles, charged that National Theatres, a foreign corporation, conspired [13] 140 F. Supp. at 913.

[14] See Transcript of Record on Appeal pp. 2-11.
[15] Id. p. 30, Bell affidavit; and pp. 31-38 Trempy affidavit.
[16] Brief for Appellee pp. 1, 2.

with others in and out of California to monopolize interstate trade in motion picture films throughout the United States and as a result, damaged the plaintiff's business in California. The claim concededly accrued there in 1935. The action in the Eastern District of New York was not commenced until 1951. This was prior to the effective date of the present four-year statute of limitations prescribed in Sec. 4B of the Clayton Act.[17] National, relying on California's three-year statute of limitations,[18] moved for judgment on the pleadings dismissing the complaint. The plaintiff contended the statute had been tolled because National was "out of the state when the cause of action accrue[d]" and had not returned.[19] The Court, after considering the four District Court decisions, which it said "reaffirmed" and were in accord with "the principle enunciated in the Giusti case," concluded that "on the basis of the allegation of the complaint, under Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act . . . the court sitting in California could have had jurisdiction over the defendant," and granted National's motion for judgment dismissing the complaint. The Court, however, did not let the matter rest there. It went further and found that National was both "parent and grandparent" of numerous subsidiaries in a "multi-corporate structure" whose managers actually "were present in California transacting business of the corporate structure and of direct interest to National." Accordingly, "as alternative grounds for dismissing the complaint as barred by the California statute of limitations," the Court found "as a matter of fact that within the interpretation given Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act . . . in United States v. Scophony Corp., 333 U. S. 795 . . . and Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Company, 273 U. S. 359 . . . National Theatres was transacting business in California."

[Scophony Decision]

The Scophony decision certainly does not accord with the so-called Giusti "principle." In that action, brought in this district, the Government sued Scophony, a British corporation, together with several American corporations and others, to restrain an alleged conspiracy in violation of the Anti-trust laws. Scophony, whose principal office was in London, challenged venue on the ground that it did not "transact business" and was not "found" in the Southern District of New York. The District Court agreed and dismissed the suit. The Supreme Court reversed; not however on the ground that the mere allegation of conspiracy made Scophony's alleged co-conspirators here its agents for purposes of venue, a theory the Court did not mention, but because on the facts of record it found that Scophony, through two of its officials who were served here, had at all material times carried on in the Southern District of New York "a continuous course of business" in furtherance of a fundamental part of Scophony's corporate objectives. If in a civil anti-trust conspiracy case the situs of a foreign corporation's "ordinary commercial activities" is irrelevant to the issue of venue, as the plaintiffs contend, it is surprising that the Supreme Court gave it so much attention. Application of the plaintiffs' theory would have rendered unnecessary the Court's extensive and detailed examination of Scophony's corporate purposes and the activities of its officials here in furtherance thereof.

[Eastman Ruling]

In Eastman the Court had to decide whether the foreign defendant had "transacted business" in Georgia within the meaning of Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act. To reach decision the Court did not rely on the mere allegations of the complaint. On the contrary, on the evidence adduced at the District Court hearing, the Supreme Court found that Eastman, "in a continuous course of business, was engaged, not only in selling and shipping its goods to dealers within the Georgia district, but also in soliciting orders therein through its salesmen and promoting the demand for its goods through its demonstrators for the purpose of increasing its sales . . . ."[20]

[Supreme Court]

Finally, although the plaintiffs' contention has never been directly ruled on by the Supreme Court, it is contrary to the views only recently expressed in strong dicta in both the majority and dissenting opinions in Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v.

[17] 15 U. S. C. A. 15b.

[18] California Code of Civil Procedure § 338.1.

[19] Id. § 351.

[20] 273 U. S. at 374.

Holland.[21] In that case, it is true, the Supreme Court decided only that mandamus was not an appropriate remedy to review the order of a District Judge in Florida severing and transferring to Georgia a treble damage suit, as to one of the defendants who was a resident and State official of Georgia. Nevertheless the Court noted the petitioner's (plaintiff's) contention that the District Judge was wrong because, since conspiracy was charged, the Georgia defendant's alleged co-conspirators in Florida were his "agents" for purposes of venue under Sec. 4 of the Clayton Act. Concerning this, Justice Clark observed in the Court's opinion:

> "Congress by 15 U. S. C. § 15 placed definite limits on venue in treble damage actions. Certainly Congress realized in so doing that many such cases would not lie in one district as to all defendants, unless venue was waived. It must, therefore, have contemplated that such proceedings might be severed and transferred or filed in separate districts originally. Thus petitioner's theory has all the earmarks of a frivolous albeit ingenious attempt to expand the statute."

Justice Frankfurter dissented in an opinion in which Justices Jackson and Minton joined. In his view, the plaintiff's claim being "frivolous," the writ of certiorari should have been dismissed as improvidently granted. He said:

> "If we now had to decide whether a co-conspirator as such is an 'agent' for purposes of venue under 15 U. S. C. § 15, it cannot be doubted that we would have to conclude that the district judge was right in finding that the Georgia Commissioner could not be kept in the suit."

The Motions Respecting Depositions

These motions deal with questions of priority, limitation of examination and expenses.

Several defendants served notices to examine the plaintiffs in New York by Simon M. Lazarus and David M. Grutman who are respectively the president and vice-president of both plaintiff corporations. Subsequently the plaintiffs served notices to examine many of the defendants in New York at times earlier than those fixed for the examinations of the plaintiffs.

Nearly all of the defendants' officers whom the plaintiffs propose to examine reside and customarily perform all or most of their corporate functions at places outside of New York.

The defendants ask that the plaintiffs be required to defray the expense of bringing out-of-state officers to New York or in the alternative the expense of sending local counsel to attend the examinations, if the plaintiffs prefer to conduct them in the districts where such officers are stationed. The plaintiffs ask that they be not required to pay the defendants' expenses regardless of the place of examination, which, on that condition, the plaintiffs are willing to have the defendants select.

The plaintiffs further ask that the examination of the plaintiffs be restricted in the following respects: that at this time only Simon M. Lazarus be examined in New York; that such examination be conducted jointly by all the defendants who have served notices, and that the examination continue from day to day until completed; that David Grutman's examination be deferred until after completion of the Lazarus deposition and if then taken this be done in the first instance on written interrogatories "without prejudice" to subsequent oral examination in California if the defendants insist and agree to pay their own expenses therefor.

The motions are disposed of as follows. The defendants who first served notices to examine the plaintiffs will be granted priority as is customary. Each defendant is entitled to and accordingly may separately conduct its own examination of the plaintiffs. However, such examinations should be scheduled so as to follow one another with reasonable promptness. The Court expects that all counsel will follow this direction and schedule the examinations accordingly.

The examination of David Grutman will not be stayed. It is to be held pursuant to the notices served.

Most of the defendants seeking expenses have offices in New York to which their officers who are to be examined come regularly in the performance of their duties. There has been no showing of hardship on these defendants if their officers are required to come here for examination. Accordingly, whether the examinations are conducted in New York or elsewhere as the parties may agree, each party will pay its own expenses.

[21] 346 U. S. 379 [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,626].

Orders in accordance with this opinion may be submitted on notice.

[¶ 68,616] United States v. New Orleans Insurance Exchange.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, New Orleans Division. Civil Action No. 4292. Dated February 5, 1957.

Case No. 1182 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Group Boycott—Legality.—The by-laws of an association of insurance agents and brokers (selling fire, casualty, and surety insurance) which required the members of the association to boycott any stock company which plants through any except association agents in the New Orleans area, to boycott any stock company which sells directly to the public, to boycott mutual companies irrespective of how or by whom the insurance is sold, and to boycott nonmember agencies so that the facilities of companies planting exclusively through association outlets are denied such agents constituted violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The group boycott had the potential to, and actually did, unreasonably restrain and control interstate commerce in insurance in the New Orleans area. Where, as in the instant case, "it is shown that the group boycott imposes unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a Section 2 violation is just a short step away, for most, if not all, unreasonable restraints have as their purpose the acquisition of at least a greater share of commerce than could otherwise be obtained in a free economy. Combinations indulging in group boycotts, then, must be put to proof to clear themselves of the predatory intent required for violation of Section 2 of the Act." In the instant case, there is no such proof, and the record "depicts a nascent, if not an accomplished, monopoly, nurtured by [a] group boycott."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.533; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Scope of Sherman Act—Applicability to Insurance Business Under McCarran-Ferguson Act.—In an action charging that the by-laws of an insurance exchange constitute a group boycott in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the exchange's contention that the McCarran-Ferguson Act excludes the business of insurance from the operation of the Federal antitrust laws was rejected. Although the McCarran-Ferguson Act provides that the Sherman Act shall not apply to the business of insurance, the Act further provides that the Act shall not render the Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2263.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Scope of Sherman Act—Interstate Commerce—Insurance Business.—In an action charging that the by-laws of an insurance exchange constitute a group boycott in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the exchange's contention that its members are not engaged in interstate commerce was rejected. The business of insurance, when conducted across state lines, is interstate commerce. Where, as in the instant case, "the challenged activity is at the local level, if it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Defenses—Motive and Intent.—Good intent is no defense under Section 1 of the Sherman Act except in non-per se violations of the Act where unreasonable restraints are not shown. Where unreasonable restraints are shown, the requisite intent is inferred from the unlawful effects.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.205.

For the plaintiff: M. Hepburn Many, Edward R. Kenney, William H. Rowan, and Charles McAleer.

For the defendant: Henican, James & Cleveland; Philip E. James; Murray F. Cleveland; Carlos G. Spaht; Byron R. Kantrow; and Malcolm McCorquodale.

For a prior decision of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Louisiana, New Orleans Division, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,935.

[Complaint]

WRIGHT, District Judge [In full text]: The New Orleans Insurance Exchange, a private association of 130 insurance agencies [1] which control approximately three-fourths [2] of the fire, casualty and surety [3] insurance business in the New Orleans area,[4] is charged in these proceedings with violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.[5] Specifically, the complaint charges that the Exchange and its members are engaging in an unlawful combination and conspiracy to restrain interstate commerce in insurance and to acquire a monopoly in its area of operations by maintaining a group boycott against all nonmember insurance agencies as well as against all insurance companies which do not plant exclusively through Exchange outlets or members.

[Defenses]

The defendant admits the boycott but denies that it unreasonably restrains trade or tends toward monopoly. It also denies that its members are engaged in interstate commerce. It asserts further that the McCarran Act [6] excludes the business of insurance from the operation of the federal antitrust laws.

[Boycott]

The group boycott is effected through a series of bylaws of the Exchange by which members thereof agree to boycott any stock company which plants through any except

[1] These independent agencies are part of what is called the American agency system, that is, they solicit insurance from the public and place it, at their election, with one or more of several companies represented by them. The agencies own what are called "expirations" on the policies handled by them. Expirations are the property right which inheres in having sold the existing policy and in knowing when it will expire, so that a renewal may be obtained. It is generally recognized in the trade that one who owns the expirations, generally speaking, controls renewals.

[2] The Exchange occupies a dominant position in the fire, casualty and surety insurance market in the New Orleans area. During the period 1951 through 1954, member agents wrote: (1) 65.1% of all multiple lines of insurance written by fire and casualty companies in the New Orleans area; (2) 71.6% of all lines of insurance written in the New Orleans area under the jurisdiction of the Exchange; (3) 81.3% of fire insurance written in the New Orleans area; (4) 67.4% of casualty insurance (excluding accident and health) in the New Orleans area; and (5) 98.1% of surety insurance in the New Orleans area. In addition, member agents represent over 90% of the stock fire and casualty companies in the United States which possess assets in excess of $50,000,000. The dollar volume of business written by Exchange members is substantial, amounting to approximately $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 in premiums annually.

[3] The complaint does not specifically cover contracts of surety although such contracts may be included in the term casualty insurance. In any event, no objection was made to the evidence concerning surety agreements when it was first offered and no prejudice is shown by the admission thereof. Rule 15(b), Fed. R. Civ. P.

[4] This area is composed of Orleans, Jefferson and St. Bernard Parishes.

[5] The relevant sections of the Sherman Act (Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended) provide in part as follows:

"Sec. 1. (26 Stat. 209; 50 Stat. 693; 15 U. S. C. § 1) Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal * * *

"Sec. 2. (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. § 2) Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, * * *

"Sec. 4. (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. § 4) The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * *"

[6] 15 U. S. C. § 1013(a) and (b).

Exchange agents in the New Orleans area,[7] to boycott any stock company which sells directly to the public,[8] to boycott mutual companies irrespective of how or by whom the insurance is sold,[9] and to boycott non-member agencies so that the facilities of companies planting exclusively through Exchange outlets are denied such agents.[10] These bylaws are rigidly enforced. All members are under obligation to police other members and to report violations. A member charged must make a full disclosure by presenting his books and records for examination by the Exchange, and any member found guilty of violation of bylaws is substantially fined or expelled from the Association. When a member is expelled from the Exchange, he is stripped of his representation of Exchange controlled companies and is thus required to operate outside the Exchange subject to the group boycott provided in the bylaws.

[Effect of Boycott]

The effect of the boycott, as shown by the evidence, is that practically all the major stock companies plant exclusively through Exchange outlets and deny their facilities to non-Exchange members, in spite of the fact that in other areas uncontrolled by similar boycott, the same insurance companies plant through agents representing all types of insurance companies, including mutuals. In fact, some of the stock companies whose method of operation is controlled by the boycott of the defendant Exchange sell directly to the public in uncontrolled areas. Moreover, by being denied the facilities of the large stock companies controlled by the Exchange, non-member agents operating in the area are relegated to handling risks which do not require the capacity of the controlled companies. Insurance companies such as mutuals and direct writers, who are not allowed to plant through Exchange outlets, are subjected to the group boycott and are thus excluded from the substantial market controlled by the Exchange. An additional effect of the group boycott is that part of the public which has placed its confidence concerning insurance matters with members of the Exchange is denied access to low cost insurance.

[Test of Legality]

The Government insists, with much support from the authorities, that the bylaws of the Exchange, rigorously enforced as they are, constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act. In fact, this case is remarkably close in many of its aspects to Fashion

[7] The bylaws read as follows:

Article X, Section 1:

"Active Members shall not accept or retain the agency of any company, including Underwriters of same, which has or whose General Agent or Manager has agents within the jurisdiction of this Exchange who are not Active Members of the Exchange."

Article X, Section 2:

"Active Members shall not accept or retain the agency of any insurance company, including its parent corporation, all underwriting agencies of such company, members of a group or fleet of companies, and all companies owned, either in whole or in part, managed, controlled, directly or indirectly, or reinsured by such company, unless all agents within the jurisdiction of this Exchange, of such insurance companies, are members of this Exchange."

[8] The bylaw reads as follows:

Article X, Section 3:

"Active or Associate Members of this Exchange may not represent or place business with a company, not a member of this Exchange, whose State Agent, Special Agent, Manager or salaried representative solicits from or issues policies or bonds direct to the public within the jurisdiction of this Exchange or accepts such business from a non-member of this Exchange."

[9] The bylaw reads as follows:

Article IX, Section 6:

"It shall not be permissible for Members to place business within the jurisdiction of the Exchange with non-member agents or with any type of non-stock carriers unless and until the facilities of all members of the Exchange have been exhausted and an affidavit to that effect has been filed with the Secretary of the Exchange within ten days of the binding of the risk."

[10] The bylaws read as follows:

Article IX, Section 6 (See Note 9).

Article IX, Section 7:

"It is permissible for Active Members to accept business from Non-Member Agents and Brokers domiciled in the territorial jurisdiction of the Exchange, provided no commission or other valuable consideration is paid directly or indirectly on such business; and, provided further, that the member immediately notify the Secretary of the Exchange in writing, giving the name of the Non-Member, character and location of the risk, amount of insurance and premiums, and further pays to the Exchange, promptly, an amount equal to 10% of the net premiums involved, which said amount so paid, shall go towards the cost of keeping a record of such transactions."

Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,101], 312 U. S. 457, where the Court held that evidence on the question of reasonableness of the boycott there in suit was immaterial, that, without more, the purpose and object of the unlawful combination, its tendency toward monopoly and the coercion practiced upon a rival method of competition brought it within the prohibition of the Sherman Act.

In the Fashion Guild case, the defendants were designers, manufacturers and distributors of women's clothes. In order to control what they considered to be piracy of their clothing designs, the members of the Guild devised a plan whereby they refused to sell to retailers who purchased and sold garments which were unauthorized copies of designs of Guild members. The Supreme Court held that the combination was "well within the inhibition of the policies declared by the Sherman Act itself." [11] The language used by the Court in denouncing the vices of the Guild's scheme is so pertinent here that it bears repeating.[12] The Supreme Court has also indicated in International Salt Co., Inc. v. United States,[13] 332 U. S. 392 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,635], and United States v. Columbia Steel Co.,[14] 334 U. S. 495 [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,260], that group boycotts are unreasonable per se and "clearly run afoul of Section 1" [15] of the Sherman Act.

But it is not necessary to decide this case on a per se basis. The rule of reason [16] dictates that this illegal combination must be destroyed. As shown above, the group boycott in suit not only had the potential unreasonably to coerce, restrain and control interstate commerce in insurance in the New Orleans area but it actually did. In fact, this defendant, through the dominant position of its membership, sits astride the stream of interstate commerce in insurance in the New Orleans area and directs its flow. It allows the large stock companies access to its outlets on condition that those companies participate in its group boycott of nonmember agencies. It refuses to allow any part of the 75 per cent of the insurance which it controls to move in the direction of mutuals or direct writers, and it relegates the numerically superior nonmember agencies to the discriminatory position of scrambling for the remaining 25% of the business while excluding them from placing it with the major stock companies controlled by the Exchange. Such unreasonable restraints are calculated to affect adversely the persons subjected to the discrimination, and this record confirms the calculation.

---

[11] Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, p. 465.

[12] In Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, at pp. 465 and 466, the Court said:

"And among the many respects in which the Guild's plan runs contrary to the policy of the Sherman Act are these: it narrows the outlets to which garment and textile manufacturers can sell and the sources from which retailers can buy (Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 45; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 48-49); subjects all retailers and manufacturers who decline to comply with the Guild's program to an organized boycott (Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 609-611); takes away the freedom of action of members by requiring each to reveal to the Guild the intimate details of their individual affairs (United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U. S. 371, 389); and has both as its necessary tendency and as its purpose and effect the direct suppression of competition from the sale of unregistered textiles and copied designs (United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., supra, at 389). In addition to all this, the combination is in reality an extra-governmental agency, which prescribes rules for the regulation and restraint of interstate commerce, and provides extra-judicial tribunals for determination and punishment of violations, and thus 'trenches upon the power of the national legislature and violates the statute.' Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 242."

[13] In International Salt Co. v. United States, supra, at p. 396, the Court said:

"Not only is price-fixing unreasonable, per se (citing cases), but also it is unreasonable, per se, to foreclose competitors from any substantial market. Fashion Originators Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, 114 F. 2d 80, affirmed, 312 U. S. 457."

[14] In United States v. Columbia Steel Co., supra, at pp. 522, 523, the Court said:

"A restraint may be unreasonable either because a restraint otherwise reasonable is accompanied with a specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint or because it falls within the class of restraints that are illegal per se. For example, where a complaint charges that the defendants have engaged in price fixing, or have concertedly refused to deal with nonmembers of an association, or have licensed a patented device on condition that unpatented materials be employed in conjunction with the patented device, then the amount of commerce involved is immaterial because such restraints are illegal per se. * * *"

[15] The Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494]. 345 U. S. 594, 625.

[16] See Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U. S. 1.

[Unreasonable Restraint]

In short, the Exchange practices are essentially the same, in purpose and effect, as those denounced as violative of the Sherman Act in Fashion Guild, supra. And here the evidence demonstrates that these practices not only tended to but actually did impose unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce. The Exchange's group boycott narrows the outlets or agents through which insurance companies can sell and the sources or companies through which agents can place insurance; it takes away the freedom of action of its own members by requiring them to participate in the boycott and to reveal to the Exchange the intimate details of their individual affairs to insure that they do; it suppresses competition from mutual and direct writer insurance companies as well as competition from nonmember agencies generally; and in addition to all this, the Exchange is in reality a private super-governmental agency which prescribes rules for the regulation and restraint of interstate commerce, provides extra-judicial tribunals for determination and punishment of violations, and thus trenches beyond the power of the national and state [17] legislatures, in addition to violating the Sherman Act.

[Monopoly]

Group boycotts and concerted refusals to deal flout the Sherman Act's command that competition rule the market place. Our economic faith is predicated on free competition uninhibited by group boycotts or other predatory practices. Not only must merchandise stand the cold test of competition, but services performed in connection with the sale thereof must be submitted to the same test, so that, in the last analyses, the public may have a free choice in spending its money, and businesses, willing and able to compete for that money, may have a free opportunity to do so. Therefore, any group boycott or concerted refusal to deal, if in fact not a per se violation of the Sherman Act, must, at the very least, be viewed with dark suspicion because of the commercial restraints and tendency toward monopoly inherent in such combinations. Where, as here, it is shown that the group boycott imposes unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a Section 2 violation is just a short step away, for most, if not all, unreasonable restraints have as their purpose the acquisition of at least a greater share of commerce than could otherwise be obtained in a free economy. Combinations indulging in group boycotts, then, must be put to proof to clear themselves of the predatory intent required for violation of Section 2 of the Act. Standard Oil Company v. United States, supra, p. 75. Here such proof is wholly lacking. On the contrary, this record depicts a nascent, if not an accomplished, monopoly, nurtured by group boycott.

[Defendant's Contentions]

The Exchange makes the contention that its group boycott of nonmembers and uncooperative insurers does not deny them the right to approach the public and sell insurance outside the Exchange. That is true. But it is the agency who controls the insurance buyer and the placement of his insurance. Admittedly, the Exchange agencies control approximately 75 per cent of the concerned insurance purchased in the New Orleans area. That insurance is placed with companies chosen by the agencies and not by the assureds. Consequently, any company who is allowed to plant through Exchange agencies, even on an exclusive basis, is happy to accept the "invitation" since otherwise it would be denied access to three-fourths of the insurance business in the area. And the minute a company submits to Exchange coercion and control, nonmember agencies are denied access to that company for the placement of risks.

The result, therefore, is that not only are the mutuals and other companies operating outside the Exchange excluded from a substantial market by a group boycott effected through the use of the dominent position of the Exchange, but companies allowed to do business through the Exchange outlets are actually controlled in their method of doing business in that, in addition to being denied the right to deal directly with the public, they must participate in the Exchange boycott of nonmember agencies. Not only are nonmember agencies restricted in their operations by a group boycott effected through the use of the dominant position of the Exchange, but the member agencies themselves are prisoners, sometimes unwilling prisoners, of their own rules, for they, too, are limited in their operations under pain of expulsion and boycott. It must be remembered that in suit here is a group boycott, participation in which is required of every Exchange member by its bylaws. While an individual agency may have the right to boycott another agency or an insurance company,[18] a concerted refusal to deal brings the combination within the condemnation of the Sherman Act. Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211; American Medical Association v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,254], 317 U. S. 519; Paramount Famous Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600.

[17] Louisiana has a comprehensive insurance code providing for the complete regulation of the insurance industry within the state. La. R. S. 22:1-22:1734.

The Exchange also states that its reason for boycotting mutual insurance companies is that the mutuals are socialistic in character whereas its membership is dedicated to the American way of life. That argument sounds high and lofty but the truth is that not only are mutuals boycotted under the requirements of the bylaws, but any company, stock, mutual or otherwise, which does not plant exclusively with Exchange members is likewise discriminated against. Thus the touchstone for acceptance by the Exchange is not belief or disbelief in socialism but willingness to submit to the restraints imposed by the Exchange.

The Exchange also argues that the reason for the restrictive bylaws is to protect the American agency system. But good intent is no defense under Section One of the Act except in non per se violations where unreasonable restraints are not shown. United States v. Columbia Steel Co., supra, p. 522. Where, as here, unreasonable restraints are shown, the requisite intent is inferred from the unlawful effects. The Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, supra, p. 614; United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100, 105, 108; United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 543.

The asseverations of good intent are also subject to considerable question. The evidence shows that mutual companies who are not direct writers also use the American agency system. In fact, all of the government's witnesses are mutual agents who are a part of the American agency system. Moreover, until 1950 there was an Exchange bylaw which applied the boycott against participating stock companies[19] using the American agency system, irrespective of their willingness to submit to Exchange control. Although the bylaw was repealed in 1950, the evidence shows that the boycott continues. It would seem, therefore, that the reason for the boycott of mutual as well as participating stock companies, as shown by the minutes of the meeting of the Exchange at which the boycott against participating stock companies was adopted, is, not the protection of the American agency system, but the prevention of a possible reduction in agency commissions caused by reduction in cost of insurance to the public.

[Interstate Commerce]

The defenses of the Exchange regarding interstate commerce and the McCarran Act may be quickly disposed of. In United States v. Southeastern Underwriters Association [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, the Court held that the business of insurance, when conducted aross state lines,[20] is interstate commerce. And even where, as here, the challenged activity is at the local level, "If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze." United States v. Women's Sportswear Manufacturers Association [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,390], 336 U. S. 460, 464; United States v. Employing Plasterers

[18] Compare Lorain Journal v. United States (1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143; United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300.

[19] A participating stock company is like a mutual insurance company in that the policyholders participate in the profits of the company by receiving dividends, thereby reducing the net cost of the insurance.

[20] The record shows that 90% of the insurance companies concerned here are domiciled in states other than Louisiana. In United States v. Southeastern Underwriters Association, supra, at p. 537, the Court said:

"(T)he insurance business * * * include(s) not only the execution of insurance contracts but also negotiations and events prior to execution of the contracts and the innumerable transactions necessary to performance of the contracts. All of these alleged transactions * * * constituted a single continuous chain of events, many of which, * * * could possibly have been continued but for that part of them which moved back and forth across state lines."

Association of Chicago [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186.

[McCarran Act]

It is true that Section 3(a)[21] of the McCarran Act provides that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to the business of insurance or to acts in the conduct thereof." But Section 3(b)[22] of the same act provides: "Nothing contained in this chapter shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." The legislative history of Section 3(b) affirms what its language so plainly says.[23] United States v. Insurance Board of Cleveland [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,460], 144 F. Supp. 684.

Decree for plaintiff in accord with Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law this day rendered.

[¶ 68,617] United States v. International Boxing Guild, Boxing Guild of Ohio, Charles Johnston, William Daly, and Albert W. Del Monte.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. Criminal No. 21823. Dated January 11, 1957.

Case No. 1268 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Boycott—Price Fixing—Professional Boxing.—An association of local professional boxing managers' guilds, one of its affiliated local guilds, and certain of their officers were granted judgments of acquittal in a Government action charging that they conspired to refuse to permit their boxers to participate in television studio boxing shows, to refuse to match their boxers with boxers managed by nonmembers, and to adopt a scale of minimum prices at which they would permit their boxers to participate in televised boxing shows. The court found that there was no conspiracy to unreasonably restrain interstate commerce; that the local guild invited all managers to become members of its guild; that there was no price fixing by the local guild; and that the defendants' actions were lawful and proper and were done for the purpose of preserving their work and the sport of boxing. Any interstate commerce affected by the defendants' actions was incidental, and any restraint on such commerce was so negligible as not to be unreasonable.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.533, 2011.181.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Trial—Motion for Judgment of Acquittal.—On a motion for a judgment of acquittal, the trial court must determine whether or not, upon the evidence, reasonable minds might reasonably conclude that guilt of the essential elements set forth in the indictment has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.675.

For the plaintiff: Robert B. Hummel, Cleveland, Ohio.

For the defendants: Harry Gittleson, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Edwin Knachel and Richard C. Ogline, Cleveland, Ohio.

---

[21] 15 U. S. C. § 1013(a).

[22] 15 U. S. C. § 1013(b).

[23] 91 Cong. Rec. 1486, Feb. 27, 1945. The Senate Judiciary Report on the bill reads:

"Section 4 (Section 3 of the final enactment) suspends the application of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act to the business of insurance until January 1, 1948; and (b) provides that at no time are the prohibitions in the Sherman Act against any act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation suspended. These provisions of the Sherman Act remain in full force and effect."

Court's Opinion

[Motion for Acquittal]

CONNELL, District Judge [In full text]: Gentlemen, the motion made puts the immediate burden on the Court concerning which we will necessarily have much to say. It is made under Rule 29 "Motion for Acquittal" under "(a) Motion for judgment of acquittal" in which the rule reads as follows:

> "Motions for directed verdict are abolished and motions for judgment of acquittal shall be used in their place. The court on motion of a defendant or of its own motion shall order the entry of judgment of acquittal of one or more offenses charged in the indictment or information after the evidence on either side is closed if the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction of such offense or offenses."

In the annotations under this which concerns us lawyers in particular is one to the effect that "a judge's function is exhausted when he determines that the evidence does or does not permit the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt within fair operation of reasonable mind.

> "In trial without a jury, a motion for judgment of acquittal at close of prosecution's case performs the same functions and is governed by the same considerations, as is a similar motion at a trial by jury."

And then the ultimate test we find in this language:

> "A trial judge, in passing on a motion for directed verdict of acquittal, must determine whether upon the evidence, giving full play to right of jury to determine credibility, weigh evidence, and draw justifiable inferences of fact, a reasonable mind might fairly conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

So what I am called upon to do here is to decide, as the judge, whether or not the case, as presented by the Government, agreeing that everything that has been said is true, would justify or uphold a conviction here. That is, whether or not, assuming that everything that is said is true, giving it the most favorable light that one can give it, whether or not they have made a sufficient case on which reasonable minds might reasonably conclude that guilt has been proved of the essential elements set forth in the indictment, beyond a reasonable doubt.

So much has been said that one has to cover this in a fashion which may not appear to be well organized, because you men finished up in somewhat of a hurry, and take me by some degree of surprise.

First of all, I am grateful to all counsel for the courtesy and expedition with which you have worked. We have been in the court room four days, and we put in a lot of time—you men in particular on your exhibits, beforehand, and on all of the divers agreements that we had to make by way of stipulations in order, under the new rules of procedure, to make trial before a court and jury as expeditious as is possible. For all that we are very grateful.

Having at some time in my life been in the position of both of you, both on the prosecution and on the defense, I can understand the intensity with which you have worked, the sincerity with which you have worked, and how happy men can be, in their work, because I presume we are all like fighters in the ring too—we love to win and hate to lose. As one who was on the prosecution side for some seven years, I think it would be fair to say that when one is in prosecution he always thinks he is right, and on defense one always hopes he is right, but one on defense can be much less sure because, as a rule, the facilities of prosecution are so much more all-embracing and effective than defense can ever muster —which has no direct application to the matters in front of us.

[Availability of Fighters]

Now, when Mr. Knachel just sought to make the point—I may have to cover this in a way not too well organized—that there was no showing that there were any fighters available between the dates involved, I feel as a lawyer, that he had in mind the various allegations that appear in the indictment under its final paragraph 14 called "jurisdiction and venue."

Under paragraph 14 the Government alleges as follows:

> "The combination and conspiracy alleged herein has been carried out in part within the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, and within the jurisdiction of this court. During the period of time covered by this indictment and within the applicable period of the statute of limitations and within the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Ohio, the defendants refused to provide boxers for the studio boxing shows telecast by WEWS."

Now, what Mr. Knachel was suggesting was the proposition that there had been no showing ever made that any fighters had been available, which is right. Nobody asked for any. He also used the expression with reference to the same thing that there was no showing that there were any fighters under contract available at the prices mentioned, which is also true.

[Criminal Action]

Now, then, Mr. Knachel also mentions one other little proposition, which is the fact that, as he says, the promoters of fights have been before the courts—that means the top promoters of the country—have been before the courts in civil actions, and the managers here in Ohio are before this court in a criminal action.

The point has been somewhat made before, that is, the question is asked,

> "Why should the Government in dealing with the promoters, who operate on such a big scale, nationally, just try it out in a civil way, wherein the best that could be done about it ultimately would be to enjoin them from a continuation of this misconduct, if it is misconduct, whereas before us in this court here today in the instant case an effort is made upon the part of the Government to obtain convictions against individuals, as a result of which they could be personally and, let's say, physically punished."

While Mr. Knachel raises the question, I must admit there isn't anything I can do about it; if there seems to be an injustice in it there still isn't anything that I know of that anybody can do about it. But let's get into the New York case, and the New York case, gentlemen, is the case which was decided January 31, 1955 on which, unquestionably, the Anti-Trust Division had the feeling that they now had authority to proceed against the boxing profession, the indictment before me being dated exactly a year later—January 10, 1956—that's exactly a year except for 20 days.

[National Football League Case]

Now, of course, up to that time there had been some other decisions affecting this question of sport. And, of course, the question of sport and all sports is an intriguing one to most men.

There had been a case called U. S. v. National Football League [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,614], 116 Fed. Supp. 319, which both sides have cited to me.

On the question of monopolies the annotation says that the true test of legality under the Sherman Act of an agreement or regulation of trade is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition, which is one of the questions before us today, and then it goes on to say that the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, the nature of the restraint, and its effect, actual or probable.

Then it says in order to determine whether restraint is legal under the Sherman Act, history of restraint, evil believed to exist, reason for adopting the particular remedy, and purpose or end sought to be attained are all relevant facts, all of which is before us.

An agreement may constitute a restraint of trade, without being illegal under the Sherman Act, and, for a contract to be illegal, it must cause both a restraint of trade and an unreasonable restraint of trade, which is before us today.

Then it gets into the TV question, and the TV question is to a degree still novel in the law. "Provision of by-laws of the National Football League preventing telecasting of outside football games into home territories of other teams on days when other teams are playing at home provides for a legal restraint of trade not in violation of the Sherman Act," which likewise has direct application here.

This case says, in effect, that even though you have a contract which says there will be no television whatsoever when the home team is playing, that contract is not illegal because, it reasons it out, if televising of that game is permitted when the home team plays nobody will come to see the team play, and ultimately there won't be any team. What the football industry was trying to do here was keep itself from going out of business, and that question is directly before me in this boxing business.

> "The purposes of the Sherman Act certainly will not be served by prohibiting the defendant clubs, particularly the weaker clubs, from protecting their home gate receipts from the disastrous financial effects of invading telecasts of outside games. The member clubs of the National Football League, like those of any professional athletic league, can exist only as long as the league exists. The league is truly a unique business enterprise, which is entitled to protect its very existence by agreeing to reasonable restrictions on its member clubs."

There you see the upper court saying, in effect,—well, people in the sporting industry may make rules and regulations for the conduct of their industry, sport, or profession, whatever it may be, such as are conducive toward their perpetuation and, in effect, they say, if something comes along which can endanger their very existence they have a right to fight against it, and if they do there is nothing unlawful about it.

[Related Boxing Case]

Now, the thing I think that precipitates all this—I may be wrong, and maybe I shouldn't say so—but I do think the thing —the case, rather, which causes a case like this to be filed here as of January 10, 1956, is this case decided in the Supreme Court the year before, and that case wasn't decided on the merits at all. Counsel on one side or the other has said here that a Federal Judge in New York City is now in the process of determining the case, and I believe somebody said that he took it under advisement five months ago, and that was the ultimate trial on what we, as lawyers, call the merits of the case. But the Supreme Court case and the Supreme Court decision had to do only with the court's ruling on the papers filed in the case, the procedure, the early procedure of the case, there having been an action filed, a civil action filed against all these people saying, in effect, "You are violating the Anti-Trust Laws" and a defensive action, a paper filed by the defendants, the promoters, saying, in effect, "Oh, the boxing business or profession or industry isn't subject to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act; we are not susceptible to prosecution; we are like football and baseball, you can't touch us because we are a sport," and the Supreme Court said no to that contention.

When it said, "No" I am not too sure that it said that boxing in and of itself does come within the purview of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, because the volume of business involved here was so gigantic, and all of it was practically in interstate commerce, to a point where monopolizing and controlling championship bouts and the champions of all of the divisions of the United States in fighting—there being some ten divisions, I think—the Supreme Court really went on to say that it amounted to such a great volume, such a multiplicity of transactions, that it practically constituted an industry which, when it became monopolized, could involve a violation of the Sherman Act and, therefore, they said the lower court was wrong in having granted the defendants', meaning the defendant promoters, motion.

When you get into the volume of it, it was really a business and they say, among other things, that a boxing match is "a local affair"—that has been the language used in most of the cases—but that does not alone bar the application of the Sherman Act to a business based on the promotion of such matches, if the business is itself engaged in interstate commerce and the business imposes illegal restraints on interstate commerce.

Now, when you get into the case you find that this International Boxing Club of New York was a pretty big thing; that the individual defendants mentioned there, James D. Norris and Arthur M. Wirtz, those two individuals, along with the Madison Square Garden Corporation own 80 percent of the stock of International Boxing Club, so you are dealing with big business. The Government's complaint was that the promoters of these contests, meaning the men before that court—and this is only civil, understand—

"The Government's complaint alleges that promoters of professional championship boxing contests 'make a substantial utilization of the channels of interstate trade and commerce to:

"(a) negotiate contracts with boxers, advertising agencies, seconds, referees, judges, announcers, and other personnel living in states other than those in which the promoters reside' "—which wouldn't have much comparison with what is in front of us today—" 'arrange and maintain training quarters in states other than those in which the promoters reside' ", which doesn't resemble anything I have listened to here—" 'lease suitable arenas, and arrange other details for boxing contests, particularly when the contests are held in states other than those in which the promoters reside; sell tickets to contests across state lines; negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to make and distribute motion pictures of boxing contests to the 18,000 theaters in the United States;"—meaning, gentlemen, it was a gigantic business, these men who were charged civilly—

> "negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to broadcast and telecast boxing contests to homes through more than 3,000 radio stations and 100 television stations in the United States; and negotiate for the sale of and sell rights to telecast boxing contests to some 200 motion picture theaters in various states of the United States by large-screen television."

Some of us may have personal memory that some of our theaters—I believe it was the Hippodrome—had some of these big contests put on the wide screen and practically charged the same price of admission as if you went to New York to see the show. It was really big business that was involved here, which becomes authority for the littler business with which I am concerned here today.

Now then, getting down to the real monopoly:

> "The promoter's receipts from the sale of television, radio and motion picture rights to championship matches, according to the complaint, represent on the average over 25 percent of the promoter's total revenue and in some instances exceed the revenue derived from the sale of admission tickets."

Then they got into this business of the ex-champion working out a deal with all of the so-called competition:

> "The conspiracy, it is claimed, began in 1949 with an agreement among the defendants and Joe Louis, then heavyweight champion of the world, that Louis would resign his title, that he would procure exclusive rights to the services of the four leading title contenders in a series of elimination contests which would result in the recognition of a new heavyweight champion, that he would also obtain exclusive rights to broadcast, televise, and film these contests, and that he would assign all such exclusive rights to the defendants," meaning the promoters then in this civil trial. So the court wound up by saying it's big business. There was a lot of interstate activity there, there isn't any doubt that there was.

Farther along in here they go on to say 15,000,000 dollars in the course of time had come in as a result of all this big interstate business, and then go on in one instance to make the statement that in some fight, the Marciano-Walcott fight, it says, on May 15, 1953, the admissions brought in $253,000 and the motion picture $300,000. So you have got big business.

When they say that a boxing match is a local affair and does not alone bar application of the Sherman Act, I have the feeling that the court really wasn't saying that boxing as a sport necessarily comes under the Act. But I will not touch upon that further.

[Instant Suit—Boxing Clubs]

Let's get down to our instant case here. As I have said, it's a kind of intriguing situation. We started out sort of listening to a complaint that there were no more boxing clubs around. One of counsel said there used to be 15,000 in the country, and now there are only 3,000. Of course, as a mere sociological problem, as people moved into the suburbs and men got more education, and everybody went to high school, and everybody wants to go to college, I think it reached a point where, when any young man thought enough of his nose to put it into a book, that he thought too much of his nose to put it in the ring. I think the increase in general education had something to do with it, because, while it has for 2,000 years been a sport, one could, in fairness to all the great athletes one has known, many of whom are in this town today and may be among your best friends, with all due respect to them, it is about the most primitive of all the sports because, as has been pointed out, it does not include much teamwork, except that one has a manager to look after business details, and perhaps get in the ring; one has trainers to get one ready; and one has seconds in the ring to try and protect a fighter in the one minute they get between rounds.

[Preservation of Boxing]

I suppose fights used to be far more gruesome than they are today. Today fights will be stopped because someone is supposed to be cut. Millions of people looking at the fight can't see the cut on the television. There are many things about it with which the public today is dissatisfied. That is all very regrettable, and it may be a dying industry as has been said. The question is when it starts to die, and it has been dying, no question about it, how far do those who are part of it have a right to go to protect and preserve their particular sport or profession. Can they do anything about it, or do they have to let it die?

[Public Injury]

We just heard the Supreme Court say it is perfectly all right for great football teams to shut off television under certain occasions so it doesn't hurt their chance to perpetuate themselves in their industry. That seems fair enough. You have to let the goose live if it is going to lay the egg, you know, that's the colloquial way of putting it, you have to let sports continue unless you want to eliminate them, and if you want to eliminate them you ought to do it by law. Whether the fights are run right or wrong is none of my concern here. I am concerned only with one phase of this: How much does it hurt the United States of America—nothing else. If somebody tries to influence someone to join, to get his initiation fees, that doesn't hurt the United States of America. If you meet someone at a fight and say, "Well, if you don't join we are not going to put our fighters against your fighters", that doesn't hurt the United States of America, in its interstate commerce.

I have looked at the minutes, and when I look at the minutes I can say again that if you think enough of your nose to put it in a book you won't put it in the ring, because the minutes to a great degree are hardly legible, and they are written by grown men who write like children, and they put down whether they got $2 dues from this fellow, or $3 from that fellow, until the more you look at it the more you say that when Eddie Knachel compares this $2 dues case and this $10 a round case with the $15,000,000 civil case in New York, the more you say he has got something to complain about as a matter of comparative justice or comparative injustice—but that's none of my concern. I have to rule on what the lawyers lay in front of me, and I always come back to this: was Uncle Sam hurt? Was the Government hurt, were the people of the United States hurt, and to what degree? Was Interstate Commerce unreasonably restrained?

[Boxing Business]

Well, it is said two situations arose in two cities, the first of which arose in the great city of New York. There television comes into play, a case of man against machine, the man went down to the prize fights—I shouldn't use the word "prize fights"—that refers to a fight for a prize where only the winner got any money, and when only the winner was paid they fought so hard the public didn't like it. So we put through a law and said there will be no more prize fights allowed because they fight too hard, we don't want them to fight that hard, now we will have boxing contests and boxing is a sport in which the art is to hit and not to be hit—that's the way to put it. That's the way they define it.

So suddenly television comes into play and the arenas which used to be filled with passengers became less filled.

Our Public Hall used to have 13,000 people looking at fights. The City used to get a percentage, the United States used to get its percentage, and now there is no percentage. Why? Because some advertiser can pay somebody to put it on, with the permission of the City, in a little hall where there are more employees being paid than there are fighters in the ring, and where the only customers are the customers of the advertisers, the people who get a complimentary ticket to come in to see it, whether it's for beer, or whatever it is, they can send tickets to their friends, and so we reach a point where fights are conducted in private without the public being present.

Now, we know as a mere matter of human psychology that when there are only a thousand people watching an American League Baseball game down in our stadium the team is apathetic and indifferent and listless. Why? There is no one to encourage them. If you have 80,000 there they fight for every strike and ball; they fight over every foul; they fight because they are encouraged. That's a significant element. That's a human element this eliminates, and in the elimination of the human element they have sought here to get it all down to a business basis. And suddenly the men who are in the fight business—no one can criticize them, because if we don't like it we should illegalize it, and if we permit it and have it as a sport, then it should have some protection even in a court house—those men who have managed these boys all these years and who supplied their training camp or place where they were trained, and who fed them in the weeks when they are not working, because they only get in the ring once in a while—and the only man who ever wanted to get in the ring three times a week was our own Johnny Risko—you know most of them are satisfied with once a week or once a month or once a year, if they can live on it. When they get in there they wish to be encouraged, and under the new system there is no one there to encourage them. There are no gate receipts, and when the manager of that boy wants to figure out or ascertain the basis on which he can bargain for that boy's participation, he can no longer figure on what they colloquially call the gate. At Soldier's Field he knows it's 100,000. When Stribling fought down here it was 80,000. At our Arena I think it is 10 or 11,000, at our Public Hall it's something else—it's something else everywhere else—and a manager could figure, well, so many people will come in, we are going to charge them this much money, and he concluded with the proposition. "I want so much money for my fighter, if you don't pay you don't get the fighter." That has been the way the industry has been run since the industry began, and the industry is new here. The first American champion was John L. Sullivan in 1892. Up to then the English controlled it. It is comparatively new in the United States.

[Creation of Guild]

Now then, television comes along, sponsors come along and, peculiarly, in two different cities at almost the same time two men get an idea, and they have both been witnesses here. Mr. Spero locally got a notion, which started as an idea, he says, that it would be a good commercial venture. From what he said he had no more interest in the fighter than he had in the razor blade or beer which has been mentioned. It was just a commercial venture. The human element is completely separated from it because, as he says himself, he never had anything to do with the art or with the kids engaged in the art. Many of them are kids in the sense that they are just young boys trying out, and they are willing to take a chance on their noses for the joy of this sport.

So he and others start figuring out how they are going to get into this business, and then they figure it out to a point where the managers who were concerned with the business on a permanent basis, and who have a personal interest in the boys, they could see and sense not only in Cleveland, not only in Ohio, not only in New York but everywhere, that someone is about to take over control of their business and, naturally, they didn't like it. So they seek to organize. And that is true of Spero here and that is true in New York in so far as what happened there is concerned. There they have some great arenas, and they have the benefit of those great big promoters and their $15,000,000 industry, who are under civil injunctive proceedings, and when business gets that big then the proceeds get bigger. What happened then was that they formed what amounted to a club or League, the International Boxing Guild, and they said, in effect, "Now, if you want our fighters in this arena we are going to ask a minimum of so many dollars, and if you want them in that arena we are going to ask a minimum of so many more dollars." In other words, it was like a tradesman who says I am a pipefitter, steamfitter, cement mixer, bricklayer, asbestos worker, carpenter—such a tradesman says, "I want to work for $3.57½ an hour, which may be the prevailing rate" —these men say, "For a fighter I want this much in this arena because I know you are going to take in this much money from this source, that source, and the other source." Television knows what they are going to take in, and they also set a minimum.

They are also part of this agreement, I would take it. So the fellows that run this little Guild here, or the big Guild, in New York, they say, "We want this much for our fighter, gentlemen." He might get two fights a year, or three fights a year. He pays his manager one-third, so let's say he takes in $2100 at the St. Nicholas Arena in New York and pays $700 to his manager, and let's say a lot of expenses come out, and let's say he can net $1000 a fight and fight four or five times a year. Well, the plumber and bricklayer can laugh at him at the end of the year. No one is making too much money on that, but the question is: how does it hurt Uncle Sam? How does it hurt our Government, because anything that hurts the Government hurts every one of us, if it really hurts the Government. That's my question: does it or does it not unreasonably restrain interstate commerce and trade?

Now, a man named Arata comes in here. He did very well for an amateur. In his first year as a promoter he grossed nearly a half million dollars, and he pays himself $20,000 that first year and pays off a mortgage of $15,000 that first year, some of the money went to the fighters—and what the profit was nobody says. He says he might have put a couple of hundred dollars in the bank. That immediately tells me, as one who used to be in prosecution, as it must have told all the gentlemen in prosecution in this court room, that he had some reason for not putting this money in the bank.

As a juror, which I am—I am twelve jurors this minute—you have to say to yourself, "I wonder why he was hiding it? Is this other fellow Lentz' partner? Did he merely handle it for him? Is he merely sitting there for him? Is it income tax evasion? What is it? Why should a man who took in nearly a half million dollars just put a half week's pay or a couple days' pay in the bank account during that whole year? Then on cross-examination the story comes out because one of the counsel apparently knows what has been going on in his town—and I am referring to Mr. Gittleson.

He asked about Lentz because Arata started talking about Lentz, because when Arata went to Johnston and complained of the $2900 figure for his new club as compared with the figure at St. Nick's Arena at $2100, the first thing Johnston said to him was, "Well, aren't you acting for Lentz?" And his answer was no. But by the time he finished I was very sure that he was. Lentz had a beautiful business. Just because he did something dishonest and was fined and punished, and disqualified from operation, was no reason he was going to stop making money. So his pal and friend, Arata, an employee of prior years and after years and today stepped into the breach, took the same lawyer, took the same building, went to the same landlord, took the same matchmaker who was the cornerstone and keystone or clearing house for fighters, Brenner or Brennan, whatever his name was—went out and got the same fighters that Lentz would have had if he wasn't disqualified, never missed a single match, and operated that way for a year.

I have before me the accusations of a man like Arata and Mr. Spero, who made a commercial venture out of a bunch of kids fighting for a net of less than $10 a night, and the indirect accusations of a gentleman named Kearns who did a lot of talking, but none in front of me, and none where he could be cross-examined by counsel for these defendants.

Yet, under the rules of evidence, one must listen to and hear it, and say, in effect, "Give it the best construction you can, give it the most favorable construction you can," even though you know as a strict matter of law the defendants had no chances to cross-examine the person out of whose mouth it is expected they will be convicted.

[Conspiracy]

Now then, how do we get a conspiracy out of all this? All the lawyers in this room well know that almost a basic conspiracy in this community for many years in criminal law has been an occasion when three or four men will get together and conspire to hold up a bank, and if one keeps the engine going in front of the bank so they can successfully escape, he is a conspirator. Anything he does can be charged against the men who go in to put guns on the people in the bank. If an employee inside the bank tells them where the money is before they go in, he is a conspirator. The conspiracy goes on until they have completed the robbery and everybody has made their complete escape, and if somebody in the process of escaping kills a policeman five miles from the bank, then each one of the co-conspirators, even though he was miles away, is equally guilty of the murder of the policeman. So we all have a pretty fair idea of what is a conspiracy, how far it goes, and to what degree one can use the declarations of one conspirator against another to prove the general conspiracy.

Now, what is the Government's theory here of fixing responsibility for conspiracy? Well, the real conspiracy from their viewpoint is—I say it with all due respect because I think these fine young men for the United States Government have done a very concentrated, intense, zealous job—but they say to me,

> "Why, New York was in a conspiracy to raise the prices, keep up the prices in that arena, and that's going out over the air, and Cleveland gets into the conspiracy because they joined the same society, have the same motives and the same intentions, the same desires. Therefore, everybody here in Cleveland, or in Ohio, who is in the League, or an officer of the League, is guilty of this crime that is going to be committed next Friday night at St. Nicholas Arena in New York, all equally guilty, all participants, and whatever anybody says about it we can use against everybody else."

Now, maybe all of us watch those fights in St. Nicholas Arena. I will admit I do not watch many of them beyond the second round, but I watch them, and I can take judicial notice that St. Nick's Arena puts a fight on television very frequently and the show gets into my living room, so it is in interstate commerce.

If there is something dishonest about it it isn't taking place at my end of the television set, it is taking place in New York City, and it is going to take place this weekend, or whenever the next fight is. If anybody in the Anti-Trust Division in New York City really believes that is a violation, and that they are acting in restraint of interstate commerce and trade, they ought to call the F. B. I. and arrest everybody at that ringside, in that office, in that club, down to the least fellow selling tickets and sweeping out, and maybe they ought to pick up a few customers, because from what you claim, everybody there is acquiescing in, participating in, co-operating in, and enjoying the fruits of a serious violation of law against the United States Government. I say if it is going on, gentlemen, track it down to its source. Please do not by a series of inferences try to hold somebody out here, 500 miles away, responsible for what goes on there. How do they seek to hold them responsible? They say, "why, you have an Ohio Guild." Well, so they do. What is it for? To protect their boxers. To perpetuate their profession. Against whom? The very people who are so closely connected with this prosecution, one of whom has a civil lawsuit, which it was explained here, is based on this same set of facts although Mr. Carter, the sponsor, has already said the thing became "old hat," and he was going to bring it to a head, and stop it, and if my memory is right of what counsel said, Spero sued here for something like $450,000, in triple damages.

Here you have a situation where a sport is dying—and whether it ought to die or not isn't my question or my legal concern in the slightest—where a sport is dying and the men in it, with whatever capacities the good Lord gave them—none of them are engineers or scientists or college graduates —but with whatever capacity the Lord gave them, helping these boys, if they do help them, or to whatever degree they help them, or perhaps even helping them for whatever they get out of it, forming an association to keep themselves not just from dying by degrees but from being suddenly killed off through the introduction of a new channel of communication and a new personality who has enough acquaintance around a television station to get a contract. Knowing nothing about the industry, Spero then goes out and finds somebody in it who will cooperate with him and bring in boys to fight, until the league with which, that manager had been connected protests, and then they finally say, "Well, we will not let our fighters fight your fighters if you are going to do that; we will throw you out of the league if you are going to do that." And when they bring them in and throw them out, from which no legal appeal was taken, like we might throw out a bad lawyer or a bad doctor, then the fellow who is thrown out becomes a star witness in an anti-trust case. His say-so is expected to convince a jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the men who were trying to protect the industry ought to be in a Federal prison. That's really the legal effect of this whole thing.

[Participation in Alleged Conspiracy]

I cannot see wherein men in Ohio who joined the Ohio Guild were participating in the slightest to hold up any prices at St. Nick's Arena in New York. I don't think mere membership here makes them criminals to that extent there, or makes them guilty of any such offense to that extent because they joined the Ohio League. I don't think the fact that minimum prices were set up there is any offense at all. And I will say if that's wrong, this Department ought to go into New York and raise the question there, not here, and I cannot see under this evidence wherein men in Ohio could be fairly said to have conspired with the men in New York to either set up prices or keep them up, and the only theory upon which it is suggested to me that they did participate is that since they are in the fight business, they might have. But there is no showing here that one of them ever took a fighter into the arena in New York. There is no showing here that one of them ever wrote to that arena and said,

"I want to bring a boy in at $2100." There is no showing here anyone of them ever lifted a finger to cooperate in any such conspiracy, if it be a conspiracy, and if it is I say again, gentlemen, do something about it at the point where the crime is being committed. It certainly isn't being committed here. And when men but seek to preserve their profession, it isn't being committed there.

[Expulsion of Members]

Here they did expel members who were breaking their rules, just as many associations do. They were throwing them out. They were trying to protect themselves and preserve themselves. I don't know how else they could have done it. My question is: having done it this way, did they so offend the Government of the United States, did they so hurt the people of the United States by an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce that they ought to be punished? That's my question.

[Interstate Commerce]

What crossed the state line? I suppose maybe some people listened to those studio fights on the other side of the line. We talked in private in chambers, one day we were together for hours trying to boil this down a little bit, and we talked about the fact that some people over there could be brought in to testify to say that they had heard many of the programs, and I suppose that's true. Now, granted that the Ohio Guild members obtained a charter from New York, to what degree could one say that Ohio's obtaining such a charter and participating in whatever degree it did, had any effect on restricting or restraining what went across the state line? That makes the whole point rather ridiculous. If it had even an infinitesimal effect it would have been merely incidental to their effort to protect and preserve themselves.

[No Restraint of Trade]

Not only would there have to be some volume, not only would there have to be enough to hurt the country, but it would have to unreasonably restrain trade to a point which would cause a court to say that it amounts to an illegal restraint of trade and, therefore, is an offense against the Government of the United States.

I can't see where the Government of the United States or the people of the United States have been hurt in the slightest by anything these people here in Ohio have done. I cannot go along with the theory that people in Ohio ought to go to jail for what people in New York do, and that is the legal effect of what is asked of me here. If Guild members in Ohio are in violation, then Guild members in many other states are in equal violation and don't know it. I do not think there is any conspiracy here, gentlemen, as conspiracies must be legally constituted. Nor can I see where there is any anywhere else. Sure, there was a membership. Sure, I, too, might be in four or five bar associations. But I am not responsible for what every member of the bar association does, even though I might agree with all other bar associations as to who should be expelled and why. If you have any kind of common national purpose, state-wide purpose, or international purpose, this doesn't mean when the other fellow does something which you think of as a crime that everybody in the society does it. Actually all that could fairly be said against this man here in Ohio and the Ohio society is that it got a charter from New York and told people not to fight their fighters except against members. Since they invited everybody to be a member, nobody could complain; and the only people that ever did complain were the ones thrown out for violating their rules. No one else has complained.

So I say to you gentlemen I do not find that there is here any unreasonable restraint on trade in interstate commerce passing between Ohio and Western Pennsylvania. I find absolutely no price fixing in Ohio, because the low prices that emanated from the 10-dollar-a-round ring from the studio here were fixed by the witnesses in the case for the Government, namely, Mr. Heath and some other manager and Mr. Spero himself with which defendants had nothing to do. All of that was a matter of arranging between each other. There was no arrangement of fixing prices here on the part of any defendant in this case. There may be a minimum price set in Clubs in New York, but that's for you gentlemen of the Government to determine where the Government has jurisdiction, and where the people over whom you have jurisdiction in New York City are committing weekly what you allege to be a crime.

Actually, the more I heard of this, gentlemen, the more I found all the justice in the case on the side of the defendants, and that whatever injustice is in the case emanates from some of the witnesses who came in for the Government.

So I believe, gentlemen, that as in the football case, these men have a right to preserve this sport. I believe that any interstate commerce affected here would be but incidental, and that such restraint, if it exists, is so negligible as not to be unreasonable. I find no conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States on the part of any defendant here or in New York. I consider their actions as lawful and proper and as done merely for the purpose of preserving their work.

[Motion Granted]

So I grant the motion of acquittal as to all.

[¶ 68,618] Opinion of the Attorney General of the State of Texas.

Addressed to Jack N. Fant, County Attorney, El Paso, Texas, from John Ben Shepperd, Attorney General of Texas, by John Minton, Assistant. Opinion No. S-224. Dated December 31, 1956.

Texas Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Labor Unions—Validity of Collective Bargaining Agreement—Subcontracting Restriction Concerning Wages and Job Classifications.—A provision of an agreement between general contractors and labor unions whereby the general contractors agreed not to sublet or contract any work to any subcontractor who does not or will not observe the minimum wage and job classification practices provided for in the agreement was held to be violative of (1) Article 7426, Texas Revised Civil Statutes, because the combination formed by the provision of the agreement constituted a "trust" to create restrictions in the businesses of the subcontractors and the contractors, (2) Article 7428 because the provision of the agreement constituted a conspiracy in restraint of trade by imposing a boycott on non-conforming subcontractors, and (3) Article 7428-1 because the provision of the agreement constituted a conspiracy in restraint of trade by denying persons the right to work because of non-membership in a labor union.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2447, 2449.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Texas Antitrust Laws—Who May Enforce Laws.—The Attorney General of Texas or the District Attorney or County Attorney, under the direction of the Attorney General, has the duty to enforce the recovery of penalties which may be imposed for violations of Articles 7426 and 7428 (Texas Revised Civil Statutes) of the Texas antitrust laws. The County Attorney has the duty of enforcing the comparable penal provisions of the Texas antitrust laws. There seems to be no statute authorizing the Attorney General to prosecute criminal violations of the Texas antitrust laws.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2423.

[Questions]

[In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: You have requested the opinion of our office concerning the validity of a provision in an agreement between an association of trades councils and an association of general contractors which would attempt to bind any subcontractor to observe the minimum wages and wage classifications set out in the base contract. The contract provision reads as follows:

"The contractor agrees as a term and condition of employment that he will not sublet or contract out any building or construction work of any kind unless the sub-contractor to whom work is sub-let, or subcontracted to, shall observe as minimum conditions the wage and classification practices provided in this agreement."

The specific inquiry involves (1) whether such contract provision violates the applicable Texas antitrust statutes, Articles 7426 and 7428, and the Texas Right to Work Law, Article 5207a, Vernon's Civil Statutes, and (2) whether the Attorney General or the County Attorney is authorized to prohibit the application of this clause and declare the contract void.

[Labor Unions—Antitrust Laws]

It should be pointed out in the beginning that labor unions are subject to the operation of the Texas antitrust laws, Article 5154 specifically providing that Article 5153, giving labor unions the right to induce or attempt to induce by peaceable and lawful means any person to accept certain employment or to refuse to enter any pursuit or quit or relinquish any particular employment or pursuit in which such person may then be engaged, shall not prohibit the application of the antitrust laws of the State. In the case of Best Motor Lines v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America Local No. 745, et al. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,788] 150 Tex. 95, 237 S. W. 2d 589 (1951), Justice Smith made the following statement:

> "The Texas antitrust statutes are valid laws and all persons are subject thereto, and the courts have the power to enjoin acts and conduct in violation thereof. Labor unions are not excepted even though there exists a labor dispute and the picketing is peaceful."

There follows in the opinion a full discussion by Justice Smith of the many holdings of both the Texas and United States Supreme Courts upholding the application of the antitrust statutes to labor unions.

[Unlawful Trust]

The pertinent portions of Article 7426, Texas Revised Civil Statutes, are as follows:

> "A 'Trust' is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes:
>
> ". . . to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by laws of this State."

It is our opinion that the combination formed by the above contract provision between the association of trades councils and the association of general contractors constitutes a "trust" under the wording of this statute in view of the scope and effect of the above quoted portion of the agreement entered into between these two parties. Under the terms of the contract the contractor agrees not to contract with a subcontractor who does not or will not observe as minimum conditions the minimum wage and job classification practices provided for in the base agreement between the trades councils and the general contractors. In this respect a restriction, conditional though it may be, is placed upon the business of the subcontractors who are not presently conforming to union standards and who are working with or doing business with the members of the association of general contractors.

The necessary result of this provision is to force the non-conforming subcontractor to pay higher wages and observe different wage classifications from those which he customarily operates under, thereby increasing the costs of his operations. The provision ultimately impels the hiring of union labor by the subcontractor and thereby constitutes another restriction on the subcontractor's business contrary to law. The provision further limits the non-conforming subcontractor's field of operation and the customers with whom he may deal. If the contractors observe the contract, then the non-union subcontractor cannot do business with any of the general contractors who are members of the association because of the terms of the contract. The contract amounts to a boycott by the trades council and the association of general contractors against a subcontractor in the area who does not conform to union practices. As a result the contractor's business is restricted within the contemplation of Article 7426, and since it is presumed that the parties intended the result of their actions, a violation of Article 7426 appears.

[Unlawful Conspiracies]

The pertinent sections of Article 7428 are as follows:

> "Either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade:
>
> ". . .
>
> "3. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons shall agree to boycott, or enter into any agreement or understanding to refuse to . . . use or work with any goods, wares, merchandise, articles or products of any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons; . . ."

It is our opinion that the above contract provision is violative of this provision of Article 7428, and that the alliance, agreement, or combination between the association of trades councils and the association of general contractors constitutes a conspiracy in restraint of trade under this article. Undoubtedly the parties are included under the first portion of Section 3 as being associations of persons and under the terms of the above provision they have agreed to boycott the non-conforming subcontractors, and have agreed to refuse to use their products or the products of their labor. It would make no difference that the subcontractor could free himself from the provisions of this contract by conforming to the union wage standards and job classification practices. The agreement entered into encompasses the forbidden purposes set out in the third section of Article 7428, thereby constituting a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

As stated above, the effect of this contract is to force subcontractors to hire union labor or to observe union standards and job classifications, but it is apparent that the ultimate purpose of the provision in the contract is to force a union labor requirement upon the subcontractors who are not parties to the agreement. Your attention is called to Article 7428-1, which is as follows:

> "Art. 7428-1. Agreements denying right to work because of union membership or non-membership.
>
> "It shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade for any employer and any labor union or labor organization or other organization to enter into any agreement or combination whereby persons are denied the right to work for an employer because of membership or non-membership in such union, labor organization or other organization; or whereby such membership or non-membership is made a condition of employment or of continuation of employment by an employer."

This article specifically defines a conspiracy in restraint of trade as being an arrangement whereby persons are denied the right to work because of non-membership in a union. The effect of the above quoted agreement is to do exactly that. The Legislature has, in this statute, made explicit its intentions formerly evidenced by Article 7428, and specifically defines a conspiracy in restraint of trade as encompassing such agreements as the contract provision here under consideration.

[Right To Bargain]

Article 5207a reads as follows:

> "Art. 5207a. Right to bargain freely not to be denied; membership in labor union
>
> "Section 1. The inherent right of a person to work and bargain freely with his employer, individually or collectively, for terms and conditions of his employment shall not be denied or infringed by law, or by any organization of whatever nature.
>
> "Sec. 2. No person shall be denied employment on account of membership or non-membership in a labor union.
>
> "Sec. 3. Any contract which requires of [or] prescribes that employees or applicants for employment in order to work for an employer shall or shall not be or remain members of a labor union, shall be null and void and against public policy. The provisions of this Section shall not apply to any contract or contracts heretofore executed but shall apply to any renewal or extension of any existing contract and to any new agreement or contract executed after the effective date of this Act."

It is our opinion that this contract provision violates Section 1 of Article 5207a and, depending on its practical application, could violate the second and third provisions of Article 5207a. * * *

[Enforcement of Laws]

Turning now to your second question as to whether the Attorney General or a County Attorney may enforce the provisions of Articles 7426, 7428, and 5207a, V. C. S., we find that Article 5199, V. C. S., provides as follows:

> "Each person, company or corporation, who shall in any manner violate any provision of this chapter shall, for each offense committed, forfeit and pay the sum of one thousand dollars, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas, in any county where the offense was committed, or where the offender resides, or in Travis County; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General, or the district or county attorney under the direction of the Attorney General, to sue for the recovery of the same."

Included in "any provision of this chapter" is Article 5207a. Thus the County Attorney would be authorized to enforce the penalty provisions of this chapter under the direction of the Attorney General. This authorization applies only to the penalty provisions and would not seem to include other remedies.

Article 7436, V. C. S., provides for penalties which may be imposed for violations of Articles 7426 and 7428, and again, under this statute, the Attorney General or the District Attorney or County Attorney, under the direction of the Attorney General, has the duty to enforce the recovery of same.

Articles 7426 and 7428, V. C. S., have as companion statutes in the Penal Code Articles 1632 and 1634, V. P. C. Article 1635 of the Penal Code provides that a violation of these statutes is a felony and provides for imprisonment from two to ten years. Enforcement of these penal statutes would be according to the regular duties of the County Attorney, and Article 1636, V. P. C., provides that the Attorney General or the District or County Attorney may compel witnesses to testify in courts of inquiry. There seems to be no statute authorizing the Attorney General to prosecute criminal violations of antitrust statutes.

[Authorization]

In addition to answering your questions by this opinion, we would like to authorize you to bring action on such contracts under the above stated statutes, and would assure you of our full cooperation in such a suit.

Summary

A contract between an association of general contractors and an association of trades councils providing that the members of the contractor's association shall not subcontract work unless the subcontractor shall observe the minimum wage scales and work classifications provided in said contract, violates Section 1, Article 7426, V. C. S., Section 3, Article 7428, V. C. S., and Article 5207a, V. C. S., and either the Attorney General or the County Attorney, under the direction of the Attorney General, may sue to recover the penalties for violations of the above articles as provided in Articles 5199 and 7436, V. C. S.

[¶ 68,619] Lendonsol Amusement Corporation v. B. & Q. Associates, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 52-1246-A. Dated January 22, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Supplemental Complaint.—A trial court revoked its order allowing a plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint since the court did not intend to permit the plaintiff to better its position, from the standpoint of the statute of limitations, by filing a supplemental complaint rather than a new complaint. The trial court, when it allowed the filing of the supplemental complaint, was under the impression that the plaintiff would not assert that it was in a better position if allowed to file the supplemental complaint.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.100.

For the plaintiff: George S. Ryan, Boston, Mass.

For the defendants: Robert W. Meserve, Boston, Mass.

Memorandum and Order

[Supplemental Complaint]

ALDRICH, District Judge [In full text]: In September 1956 a hearing was held on plaintiff's motion to amend by filing a supplemental complaint under Rule 15(d). This motion was opposed by the defendants. One of their objections was that its allowance would better the plaintiff's position with relation to the statute of limitations. I was not then, and am not now, clear whether this apprehension is well-founded, but I felt that the matter was taken care of by a statement in plaintiff's brief to the effect that "no harm can come to the defendants [as a result of allowing the motion] . . . Any defense they may have can be set up in answer to the supplemental complaint." In my memorandum of September 12 allowing plaintiff's motion I referred to this language. It was my understanding of this language, and my intention in referring to it, that the plaintiff would not assert that it was in a better position, statute of limitation-wise, if I allowed the motion; in other words that the defendants could plead the statute of limitations just as effectively in their answer to the supplemental complaint as they could have pleaded it were a new complaint filed. This is the only sensible meaning that I can give to the phrase "no harm can come to the defendants." It can hardly be said that an opportunity to plead something, which plea may not be successful because of changed circumstances, is a situation under which no harm can come to the pleader.

[Misunderstanding]

At the pretrial held December 18 counsel for some of the defendants informed me that he understood the plaintiff was contending that all it had meant by the quoted language was that the defendants were able to plead the statute of limitations, and not that the plea would have the same effect that it would have had were this a new complaint as distinguished from a supplemental one. I immediately asked the plaintiff whether defendants were correct in their understanding. The plaintiff replied that they were, and that it was making the contention that it was better off from the standpoint of the statute of limitations with the supplemental complaint than it would be with a new one. I thereupon stated that that had not been my understanding, that I had allowed the motion to amend as a result of a mistake and would reconsider it, and took a recess. Plaintiff did not, following the recess, accept my implied suggestion or state that it was in any way abandoning its contention.

I have never intended to permit the plaintiff to better its position from the standpoint of the statute of limitation by filing a supplemental complaint. I allowed the filing only as a matter of convenience, so that certain matters might perhaps be tried together to an extent, as stated in the memorandum, to be later determined. Since despite being warned on December 18, if not adequately advised on September 12, the plaintiff still persists in contending otherwise, and since under Rule 15(d) the court has power to impose terms, in view of plaintiff's non-acceptance of said terms, I hereby revoke the order allowing the filing of the supplemental complaint.

[Order]

The present order, in turn, involves the imposition of terms, so that no substantial harm will come to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff files a new complaint within 30 days, insofar as said complaint asserts causes of action contained in the supplemental complaint heretofore filed, it may to such extent be filed nunc pro tunc, as of September 12, 1956. I shall not, however, consolidate any new complaint with the present action for trial.

[¶ 68,620] Winfield Drug Stores, Inc. v. Needleman.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 137 N. Y. L. J., No. 22, page 7. Dated January 31, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Temporary Injunction—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A drug store's motion for a temporary injunction to restrain another drug store from selling products below their established fair trade prices was denied, where the defendant drug store denied that it sold products below their fair trade prices. Receipts evidencing such sales were not submitted, and the affidavits concerning such sales did not state that any of the affiants were customers of the plaintiff. Although the plaintiff alleged that the defendant was in direct competition with it, the locations of the parties could not be deemed to be in the immediate neighborhood.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3354.34.

[Temporary Injunction]

DINEEN, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendants from advertising, offering for sale and selling certain commodities in violation of the so-called Fair Trade Laws. Plaintiff conducts a retail pharmacy and alleges that defendants are in direct competition with it. Geographically the locations of the parties would not be deemed to be in the immediate neighborhood. Though the plaintiff claims that by reason of defendants' underselling the general public and customers of the plaintiff are induced to believe that products of certain manufacturers can be obtained at a lower price than generally advertised, the affidavits submitted to substantiate this contention do not state that any of the affiants are customers of the plaintiff. In this connection it is to be noted that of the many affidavits submitted a fair inference could be drawn that such affiants are professional shoppers. Furthermore, no receipts for the purchases are submitted nor does the record contain any statement to the effect that receipts were requested and refused. The defendants deny the purchases, and since the relief requested would be tantamount to the final relief sought, the plaintiff has failed to make such a clear showing which would form the basis for the issuance of a temporary injunction. The motion is denied. Order signed.

[¶ 68,621] Curtis F. Paxton v. Desch Building Block Co., Inc. Curtis F. Paxton v. Desch Building Block Co., Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action Nos. 19,952, 19,953. Filed November 1, 1956.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Exclusive Dealing—Lease Restrictions—Patents, Trade-Marks, and Secret Processes—Validity.—The contention that restrictions contained in an agreement providing for the lease of a machine for the manufacture of porous concrete pipe were illegal since they violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act was not established on a motion to dismiss actions based on the agreement. The court noted that since the record showed that patents, trade-marks, and secret processes were the subject of the agreement, the restrictions contained in the agreement might prove to be valid under the antitrust laws.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.100, 2013.900, 2013.950; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.

For the plaintiff: Robert H. Jordan, Allentown, Pa.

For the defendant: Irving W. Coleman, Northampton, Pa.

Opinion

[Motions to Dismiss]

FRANCIS L. VAN DUSEN, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: These actions are now before the court for disposition on motions of the defendant to dismiss and for judgment on the pleadings in both of plaintiff's cases, and on motion by plaintiff in the replevin action (Civil Action No. 19,953) to strike the counterclaim.

FACTS

[Sale of Business]

On March 12, 1953, Curtis F. Paxton,[1] plaintiff in this action,[2] entered into an agreement with Jerrold Oakley and J. Nevins McBride for the sale of his interest in a partnership conducted by him under the name of Walker Cement Products Company[3] at Little Ferry, New Jersey, excepting, in part, "the plant of the partnership situated at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and all assets and property whatsoever connected therewith" (defendant's Exhibit B, paragraph 1). The plaintiff agreed not to compete with the purchasers for a period of five years (until March 12, 1958) "within any of the states of the United States except the State of Utah, and excepting that Curtis F. Paxton, one of the sellers may operate the Lancaster, Pennsylvania, plant of the sellers for the purpose only of manufacturing and selling the products of said plant to the Highway Department or any instrumentality of the State of Pennsylvania or [1] Paxton, for the purposes of this action, is a citizen of the State of New Jersey.

[2] Paxton entered into the agreement of March 12, 1953, and the modification thereof on August 5, 1954, together with John C. Hanson, who is now deceased (see deposition of Curtis F. Paxton, page 3).

[3] The plaintiff also agreed by this instrument not to use the name "Poroswall" or "Walker Cement Products Company," and, in addition, that the sale of the partnership assets would include "any patents or trade-mark rights connected with said name and products of said company, including all rights to restrain others who may be using said name or manufacturing said products." See defendant's Exhibit B, paragraph 8.

for projects that may receive Federal or State aid."

Modifying this agreement on August 5, 1954, the Walker Cement Products Company, a corporation of the State of New Jersey formed by Oakley and McBride,[4] agreed:

". . . that for a period of five (5) years it will not set up or operate, directly or indirectly, a plant or installation in the State of Pennsylvania for the manufacture of porous concrete pipe, nor will it, directly or indirectly, sell, lease, furnish or install porous concrete pipe-making machinery to be used in said State for a like period of five (5) years."

[Manufacturing Agreement]

On December 8, 1954, the agreement under which the instant actions are brought was entered into by Paxton and the defendant, Desch Building Block Company, Inc. (hereinafter called "Desch"), a Pennsylvania corporation. By the terms of this agreement (hereinafter called the "Paxton-Desch agreement"), the parties covenanted that Paxton would lease and deliver to Desch a pipe machine for the manufacture of porous concrete pipe with slip joints for multiple production, together with a formula and process used in connection with the manufacture of the pipe. Such lease would be for a term of ten years and two months[5] and the total rent would be $75,000, with stated lump sums payable in advance[6] and quarterly payments of $1,000.[7] Paxton further granted Desch the exclusive[8] right to sell pipe manufactured on the pipe machine in an area called the "Territory,"[9] but limited such sales to the Highway Department or any instrumentality of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or for projects that may receive federal or state aid. These limitations on sales within the territory were to be effective only until March 12, 1958 (see Sec. 9 of plaintiff's Exhibit A).[10]

[State Court Action]

The Walker Cement Products Company, under its new name, The Walker Poroswall Pipe Company,[11] brought suit against Paxton and Hanson[12] in the Superior Court of New Jersey, Chancery Division, Bergen County, Docket No. C-1615-54, charging that Paxton had violated the terms of the March 12, 1953, agreement and the August 5, 1954, modification thereof (1) by entering into a business competitive to their business, (2) by selling porous concrete pipes to others than the Highway Department or any instrumentality of the State of Pennsylvania or projects that may receive federal or state aid, (3) by entering into leases for machinery for the manufacture of porous concrete pipe, and (4) by otherwise selling concrete pipe within and without the State of Pennsylvania other than in the State of Utah.[13]

On July 11, 1955, the suit was settled out of court by an agreement between Paxton, Hanson, and the Walker Poroswall Company (defendant's Exhibit 1), providing that the parties would share equally in all past and future profits and losses arising out of the Paxton-Desch agreement and that Pax-

[4] Oakley and McBride, in the agreement of 3/12/53, indicated that they were contemplating the formation of such a corporation. See paragraph 10 of defendant's Exhibit B.

[5] The lease was to be for a term of 10 years and 2 months up to 15 years and 2 months, depending on the rate at which Desch paid the quarter-annual rent. The lease was to start on February 1, 1955, and end between March 31, 1965, and March 31, 1970.

[6] The terms of payment are outlined in paragraph 3 of the Paxton-Desch agreement.

[7] In paragraph 3 of the Paxton-Desch agreement, Paxton also agreed that Desch should have the option and right to renew the lease under the same terms and conditions for an additional period of 10 years, with a rental for such period of $3,000. This renewal was to be automatic unless Desch served a written notice on Paxton at least one year prior to the termination date of the original lease that it would not renew the same.

[8] Paxton agreed that during the term of the agreement he would not sell porous concrete pipe in the "Territory."

[9] The "Territory" consisted of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Department of Highways, Districts 3 and 4 (as constituted on December 8, 1954) and Monroe County, Carbon County, Northampton County, and Lehigh County. See map attached to stipulation filed 10/18/56.

[10] Further, paragraphs 10 and 13 of the Paxton-Desch agreement contemplated that Desch would have first refusal rights and an option to enter into an arrangement for the manufacture and sale of porous concrete pipe in two other territories of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and that Paxton might contact Desch for the purpose of supplying porous concrete pipe for specific jobs in Bucks County, Pa.

[11] The change of name took place on October 15, 1954. See defendant's Exhibit A, paragraph 1.

[12] This suit was brought in the spring of 1955. See page 4 of deposition of Curtis F. Paxton.

[13] See deposition of Curtis F. Paxton, pages 28-9, for testimony as to the extent of these violations.

ton assigned to the parties' respective attorneys, Thomas L. Zimmerman and Floyd V. Amoresano, as agents for Paxton and the Walker Poroswall Pipe Company, all of his right, title and interest in the Paxton-Desch agreement.[14] The said agents were to have full power, on behalf of the parties, to enforce and carry out the terms and conditions of the latter agreement.[15]

[Instant Actions]

By letter of August 3, 1955, Desch claimed the commission of a fraud on itself by Paxton's failure to disclose the agreements of March 12, 1953, and August 5, 1954, at the time of the execution of the Paxton-Desch agreement. This letter claimed that such prior agreements rendered Paxton without legal capacity to make the representations that induced Desch to enter into the agreement, and purported to rescind the agreement.

Paxton, by his attorneys, Robert H. Jordan, Floyd V. Amoresano, and the Hon. Thomas L. Zimmerman, brought two actions: one in replevin,[16] No. 192, January Term 1956 (now Civil Action No. 19953), and the other in assumpsit,[17] No. 193, January Term 1956 (now Civil Action No. 19952) in the Court of Common Pleas of Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, on November 16, 1955. The defendant removed both actions to the instant Federal District Court and filed a counterclaim to both actions.

[Applicable Law]

The Paxton-Desch contract is governed by the law of New Jersey.[18]

* * *

[Antitrust Defense]

Also, the defendant raises these inapplicable grounds for his motions:

* * *

3. Defendant's contention that the agreement is illegal and unenforceable since it is a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1) and Section 3 of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 14) is not established by the record.[25] The defendant will have the [14] In the settlement agreement Paxton also agreed for a period of 10 years not to enter, directly or indirectly, into any business competitive with the business conducted by Walker Poroswall Pipe Company. Further, Paxton agreed not to exercise any options that were in the Paxton-Desch agreement and thereby not to enter into any contract for the sale or lease of other machines than those that he had contracted for in such agreement.

[15] The settlement agreement in paragraph 1 stated that: "The said agents shall have full power on behalf of both the said Curtis F. Paxton, party of the second part and the Walker Poroswall Pipe Company, party of the first part to carry out the terms and conditions of said agreement, dated the 8th day of December 1954, that were undertaken to be carried out by the said Paxton. The said Zimmerman and Amoresano shall have full power in their name or in the name of the said Paxton to enforce the terms of the said agreement and to cause the Desch Building Block Company, Inc. or any of its subsidiaries to carry the terms of the said contract upon its or their part to be performed; to collect any monies that may be due under the said agreement; to sue for and to compromise any suits but at the expense of the said Paxton, party of the second part and the party of the first part. The said agents shall have full power from time to time to modify any of the terms of the said agreement dated the 8th day of December 1954."

[16] In the replevin action, plaintiff alleged a failure on the part of the defendant to make the quarter-annual payment of 7/15/55, defendant's repudiation of the contract, plaintiff's notice to defendant of the termination of the bailment, and defendant's refusal to return the property to plaintiff. Damages were alleged in the sum of $10,000, plus $10.00 per day for illegal retention of the property since 7/15/55.

[17] In the assumpsit action, plaintiff in his first count alleged non-payment of the first two quarterly rent payments due on 7/10/55 and 10/10/55, a repudiation of the contract by defendant and the refusal to make such payments despite demands for such made by the plaintiff, all of which showed a breach of contract by defendant. Damages are alleged in the sum of $60,000 with interest since 8/3/55 ($75,000 total rental minus $15,000 of payments already made).

In the second count, plaintiff alleged the order and acceptance of such order for a second pipe machine, plaintiff's payment of $2500 on the order, and defendant's subsequent repudiation of the order which caused damages to plaintiff of $72,500.

[18] Paragraph 19 of the Paxton-Desch agreement states in part: "This agreement shall be construed and interpreted under the laws of the State of New Jersey."

See footnote 67 of opinion dated 10/5/56 in Lebeck v. William A. Jarvis et al., Civil Action No. 16395.

* * *

[25] Since the record shows that "patents, . . . trade marks, rights," and "secret formula or process" (see footnote 3, p. 2 above, and pp. 38-40 of deposition) are the subject of the agreement, the restrictions involved in this agreement may well prove to be valid under these sections of the anti-trust laws. Cf. Williston on Contracts (Rev. Ed.) § 1646; Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., Nos. 11,818-11,831 (3rd Cir., opinion of 10/24/56) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,509]. There is no proof in the record of the allegation in defendant's brief that certain patents have expired.

opportunity to present any proof of this defense at the trial.[26]

For the reasons above-mentioned, the motions for dismissal of these actions will be denied, without prejudice to the defendant's right to make a motion to dismiss the replevin action at the pre-trial conference or the trial.

COUNTERCLAIM

In a replevin action, a counterclaim cannot be asserted. See Rule 1082, subparagraph (a), of the Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure (12 P. S., Rules of Civil Procedure).[27] Therefore, defendant's counterclaim to Civil Action No. 19953 will be stricken.

[¶ 68,622] Baim & Blank, Inc. and Baim & Blank Television Service, Inc. v. Philco Corporation and Philco Distributors, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil Action No. 14083. Dated January 24, 1957.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Discrimination in Prices, Payments for Services, and Furnishing of Services—Sales by Different Sellers—Parent and Subsidiary Corporations.—A manufacturer and its wholly-owned distributing corporation did not unlawfully discriminate (in prices, in the making of payments for services rendered, or in the furnishing of services) against a retailer, which purchased the manufacturer's products from the manufacturer's distributing corporation, and in favor of a competing retailer which purchased the manufacturer's products directly from the manufacturer. The retailer claimed, in effect, that the manufacturer sold its products to the competing retailer under more favorable terms than those under which the distributing corporation sold the manufacturer's products to it, and that the manufacturer and its distributing corporation were a single entity or a common seller. The manufacturer controlled only its own prices and sales policy, and the distributing corporation had sole control of its prices and sales policy; therefore, there was no violation of the Robinson-Patman Act because the price and other related discriminations alleged by the retailer were not made by the same seller. The fact that the distributor was a wholly-owned subsidiary of the manufacturer, and that the officers of the distributor, with one exception, were also officers of the manufacturer, failed to demonstrate that the subsidiary was merely the alter ego of the parent.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505, 3522, 3524.

For the plaintiffs: J. Robert Ellner.

For the defendants: Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine (Granville Whittlesey, Jr., of counsel).

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,453.

[Motion to Dismiss]

GALSTON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion by defendants for an order, pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U. S. C. A., for summary judgment to dismiss the first cause of action as against Philco Corporation, and so much of the first cause of action as to Philco Distributors, Inc. as relates to matters which occurred prior to September 1, 1950.

[Discrimination Charged]

The first cause of action alleges that from November 20, 1926 to July 3, 1952, plaintiff, Baim & Blank, Inc., operated a retail store in Brooklyn, selling radios, television sets and household appliances. The action has

---

[26] For the strict construction of the summary judgment rule (which is applicable to these motions to dismiss—see F. R. Civ. P. 12(c)) in this Circuit, see Levy v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 18 F. R. D. 164 (E. D. Pa. 1955), and cases there cited.

[27] It is noted that both parties agree that Pennsylvania law governs the disposition of this motion. See F. R. Civ. P. 64.

been discontinued as to plaintiff, Baim & Blank Television Service, Inc. It alleges further that defendant, Philco Corporation, is a Delaware corporation which manufactures or assembles "Philco" branded products; that defendant, Philco Distributors, Inc., a Delaware corporation, is a wholly owned subsidiary of Philco Corporation and the sole and exclusive distributor throughout the greater New York area of "Philco" branded products manufactured and assembled by its parent, and the "local instrumentality" for conducting the business of parent in the New York area; and that in this area, Philco Corporation "is found in the person of, and transacts business through its wholly owned subsidiaries and agents, Philco Distributors, Inc., and Philco International Corporation * * *." It also alleges that during the periods complained of, plaintiff and its competitor, Davega Stores Corporation, an organization of twenty-eight stores located in the greater New York area, were engaged in the business of selling, at retail, and servicing television sets, radios, refrigerators and other electrical appliances, including Philco branded products. It is then alleged that defendants have discriminated against plaintiff (1) by selling to Davega Stores Corporation at prices lower than those charged to and paid by plaintiff in violation of subsection (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13(a); (2) by making payments or granting credits to Davega in consideration for services or facilities furnished by Davega in connection with the sale of Philco products without offering to make such payments or credits available to plaintiff on proportionately equal terms, in violation of subsection (d) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13(d); and (3) by furnishing services or facilities in connection with the sale of Philco products without offering to make such advantages available to plaintiff on proportionately equal terms, in violation of subsection (e) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13(e). Plaintiff seeks treble damages for the alleged foregoing acts.

[Conspiracy Charge]

The second cause of action alleges that Philco, Philco Distributors, and Davega, some time prior to July 1, 1944, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 1 & 2, combined and conspired to grant to Davega the status of "associate distributor" of Philco products in the New York area, which enabled Davega to purchase Philco products from the Philco distributing organization or directly from Philco at prices substantially below those available to all other "non-favored" retailers in the New York area, including plaintiff; and that as part of the said conspiracy, the "continuing arrangement" among the aforesaid corporations granted to Davega "certain competitive advantages which were not made available to plaintiffs," including the discriminations in price and terms of sale specifically alleged in the first cause of action.

[Scope of Motion]

The present motion is directed solely to the allegations of violations of the Robinson-Patman Act contained in the first cause of action. It is based on the pleadings and pre-trial testimony, in the form of depositions, taken by plaintiff of Jacob J. Harris, general manager of the New York Division of Philco Distributors, Harold Sheer, vice president and general manager of Philco Distributors, and John M. Otter, executive vice president of Philco.

[Flow of Products]

The action has to do with transactions occurring between September 15, 1947 and July 3, 1952, the parties having stipulated that transactions prior thereto are barred by the statute of limitations. The depositions referred to hereinabove, which are made a part of the motion papers, disclose that Philco Distributors purchased Philco products from Philco f. o. b. factory, paying the freight to Philco Distributors' Long Island City warehouse, at prices set by Philco in quantities determined by Philco Distributors. The depositions also disclose that plaintiff purchased all its Philco products from Philco Distributors at prices set by Philco Distributors. It had never purchased from Philco directly. Furthermore, though until September 1, 1950 Philco products were sold to Davega by Philco directly at prices set by Philco, from that date to and including July 3, 1952 Philco Distributors sold Philco products to Davega as well as to plaintiff at prices which Philco Distributors issued.

[Sales by Different Sellers]

It is defendants' contention that Philco controlled only its own prices and sales policy, and that Philco Distributors had sole control of its prices and sales policy, and, therefore, that since the price and other related discriminations alleged in the complaint were not made by the same seller, there was no violation of the Robinson-Patman Act within the meaning of said statute.

The statute in question, in pertinent part, reads:

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, * * * and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them."

[Separate Entities]

Plaintiff does not dispute that one cannot have a cause of action for violation under Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13, unless one is an actual purchaser from the person charged with the discrimination. See Klein v. Lionel Corp., 3rd Cir. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,485], 237 Fed. 2d 13. Moreover, in opposing the motion, plaintiff states that the facts as set forth in the moving affidavit are at this time not being disputed. It contends, however, that despite any surface appearance of separate price and sales policies of defendants, parent and subsidiary corporations, the depositions disclose that "in actual fact" the two defendants were a single entity. In effect, plaintiff's argument is that the depositions disclose the defendant Philco so dominated and regulated the policies of its wholly owned subsidiary, Philco Distributors, that the subsidiary is merely an instrumentality or alter ego of its parent, and that the court should deal with the situation by regarding Philco as the real party in interest and as if Philco Distributors did not exist as a separate legal entity.

My reading of the depositions leads me to the conclusion that so far as the depositions are concerned plaintiff's opposition to the motion is unsound, or rather unproved. On the contrary, it appears from these depositions that Philco determined the pricing and sales policies at which it sold its products directly to retail dealers, whereas the prices and practices of Philco Distributors were established not by the parent company, Philco, but on the contrary were fixed by Philco Distributors itself.

The depositions fail to disclose that in the sales by Philco Distributors to the plaintiff, and in the sales made by Philco Distributors to Davega before September 1, 1950, the two defendant corporations should be regarded as a single entity to the end that they constitute a "common seller," discriminating between their customers. Nor do the depositions sustain the contention of the plaintiff that the prices established by Philco Distributors to the plaintiff and to Davega, after September 1, 1950, were in fact prices determined by the parent Philco.

The fact that Philco Distributors was a wholly owned subsidiary of Philco, and that the officers of Philco Distributors, except for Harold Sheer, who was executive vice president in control of its sales operations, were also officers of Philco, fails to demonstrate that the subsidiary was merely the alter ego of the parent. With respect to other factors upon which plaintiff relies, they prove at most only that consultations took place between parent and subsidiary with the view that both companies were interested in having the subsidiary show a profit in its business operations. As appears from the depositions, however, there were no consultations between parent and subsidiary in respect to establishing pricing policies to compel the conclusion that the prices of both companies were controlled by Philco, or that they acted in legal effect as one seller.

[Motion Granted]

It is significant that the plaintiff offers nothing in opposition to the motion save that which is disclosed in the depositions, despite the fact that Rule 56(f) of the Rules of Civil Procedure gives opportunity to a party opposing the motion for summary judgment to apply for a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions taken or discovery had to defeat the motion.

Accordingly defendants' motion is granted.

Settle order.

[¶ 68,623] United States v. Dover Corporation, Oliver Iron & Steel Corporation, and Oliver Tyrone Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division. Civil Action No. 2908. Filed February 12, 1957.

Case No. 1284 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Exclusive Dealing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusive Dealing—Elevator Pumps.—A manufacturer of hydraulic elevators and a manufacturer of hydraulic elevator pumps were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with each other not to sell pumps to any person or not to buy pumps from any person. The pump manufacturer was prohibited from (1) selling pumps upon the condition that the purchaser thereof will buy all or any portion of his pumps from such manufacturer, (2) selling pumps upon the condition that the purchaser thereof will not buy pumps from any other source, or (3) selling pumps to the elevator manufacturer which embody improvements, modifications, or additions unless such pumps are offered for sale to its other customers upon an equal and non-discriminatory basis. The elevator manufacturer was prohibited from hindering or restricting any person from purchasing pumps from the pump manufacturer and from hindering or restricting the pump manufacturer from selling pumps to any person.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.100.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Vertical Integration.—A manufacturer of hydraulic elevator pumps was prohibited by a consent decree from selling or assigning to a manufacturer of hydraulic elevators any of its business, assets (including patents or patent rights), or goodwill relating to pumps, except upon such terms and conditions (other than dollar price) as may be approved by the Government.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.865.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Sale of Pumps.—A manufacturer of hydraulic elevator pumps was required to offer to sell and to sell its pumps, upon reasonable and non-discriminatory terms and conditions, to any person other than a specified manufacturer of hydraulic elevators. The consent decree provided that the failure by the manufacturer to deliver such pumps to any person making a request therefor shall constitute prima facie evidence of a violation of the decree. The manufacturer also was required to send a letter setting forth the substantive terms of the decree to each of its pump customers and to each person who has made written inquiry of the manufacturer concerning the purchase of pumps.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Charles F. B. McAleer, Harry N. Burgess, Charles L. Beckler, William P. Cassedy, and Charles H. McEnerney, Jr.

For the defendants: Clifton & Mack, Memphis, Tenn., by Clarence Clifton; and Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle, New York, N. Y., by Kenneth N. LaVine, for Dover Corporation. Lucius E. Burch, Jr., Memphis, Tenn., for Oliver Iron & Steel Corporation and Oliver Tyrone Corporation.

Final Judgment

MARION S. BOYD, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on the 11th day of June, 1956, and the defendants, by their attorneys, having appeared and filed their answers to such complaint and this Court having entered its Order herein dated 2/12/57 joining Oliver Tyrone Corporation as a party defendant herein and amending the caption of this cause, and plaintiff and said defendants having severally consented to the making and entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without this Final Judgment's constituting any evidence of any wrongful act by the defendants or any of them or any admission in respect to any issue of fact or law;

Now, therefore, before any testimony has been taken and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Clayton and Sherman Acts]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief can be granted under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended, and under Section 3 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," commonly known as the Clayton Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Dover shall mean defendant Dover Corporation, a Delaware Corporation;

(B) "Oliver" shall mean defendant Oliver Iron & Steel Corporation, a Pennsylvania Corporation, and defendant Oliver Tyrone Corporation, a Pennsylvania Corporation, and each of them;

(C) "Hydraulic elevators" shall mean any hoisting or lowering mechanism equipped with a car or platform which moves in guides in a substantially vertical direction and which serves two or more fixed levels, and in which the energy is applied by means of a liquid under pressure. In addition, for the purposes of this Judgment, the term hydraulic elevator shall also include service station and garage type lifts for automobiles or buses;

(D) "Pumps" shall mean hydraulic pumps, including component parts and accessories thereof, used or capable of use with hydraulic elevators;

(E) "Patents" shall mean any, some or all claims in the following United States Letters Patent which relate to pumps:

(1) Letters patent owned or controlled by defendant Oliver on the date of entry of this Final Judgment;

(2) Letters patent which may be granted on applications for Letters Patent which applications are on file in the United States Patent Office and owned or controlled by defendant Oliver on the date of entry of this Final Judgment;

(3) Divisions, continuations, reissues or extensions of the Letters Patent described above in clauses (1) and (2);

(F) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation or any other business or legal entity.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or participation with it who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Termination of Agreement]

The defendants and each of them are ordered and directed to terminate and cancel, within thirty (30) days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, the Agreement, dated October 14, 1954, between Dover and Oliver, including all agreements amendatory or supplemental thereto, and the defendants and each of them are enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, enforcing or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program contrary to or inconsistent with the terms of this Final Judgment.

V

[Agreements Not To Sell or Buy]

The defendants and each of them are enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, enforcing or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with each other:

(A) Not to sell pumps to any third person;

(B) Not to buy pumps from any third person.

VI

[Sales Required]

(A) So long as it engages in the business of manufacturing pumps defendant Oliver is ordered and directed unconditionally to offer to sell and to sell such pumps, upon reasonable and non-discriminatory terms and conditions to any person, other than Dover, making written request therefor. Failure by Oliver to deliver such pumps to such person within ninety (90) days of its receipt of such request, or such later date as may be specified in the request, shall constitute prima facie evidence of violation of this Final Judgment.

(B) Defendant Oliver is enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Selling, transferring or assigning to Dover any of its business, assets (including patents or patent rights) or goodwill, relating to pumps, except upon such terms and conditions, other than dollar price, as may be approved by the plaintiff herein;

(2) Selling or offering to sell pumps upon the condition or understanding that the purchaser thereof buy all or any portion of his pumps from Oliver;

(3) Selling or offering to sell pumps upon the condition or understanding that the purchaser thereof not buy pumps from any other source;

(4) Selling or offering to sell pumps to Dover embodying improvements, changes, alterations, modifications or additions unless such pumps are offered for sale to its other customers upon an equal and non-discriminatory basis.

VII

[Restrictions on Purchases and Sales]

Defendant Dover is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Hindering, limiting or restricting any person from purchasing pumps from defendant Oliver; and

(B) Hindering, limiting or restricting Oliver from selling pumps to any person, provided, however, that in the event Oliver should hereafter cease selling pumps to Dover, nothing herein contained shall prevent Dover from lawfully enforcing any patent and/or other property rights it may then have in and to pumps.

VIII

[Notice of Judgment]

Defendant Oliver is ordered and directed, within sixty (60) days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment to send a letter setting forth the substantive terms of this Final Judgment to each of its pump customers and to each person who has made written inquiry of Oliver concerning the purchase of pumps.

IX

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted (1) access during the office hours of such defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any of the subject matters contained in this Final Judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it to interview officers or employees of such defendant who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon such written request, each of the defendants shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section IX shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States of America is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

X

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment or for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,624] Barclay Home Products, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. No. 13305. Decided February 14, 1957.

Petition for Review of an Order of The Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresentation—Filling Content of Pillows.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting a manufacturer of pillows from misrepresenting the kinds and proportions of filling materials contained in its pillows was affirmed. The order was based upon the Commission's determination that the manufacturer's labels on the pillows did not meet the standards of accuracy under the Trade Practice Rules for the Feather and Down Products Industry. The manufacturer's contention that the Commission erred in accepting the results of tests conducted by its own expert witness, and in rejecting the results of tests conducted by the manufacturer's experts, was not decided by the reviewing court since the contention was not made before the Commission.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.482; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.27.

For the petitioners: F. Murray Callahan, with whom Benjamin H. Dorsey was on the brief; and Ralph E. Becker.

For the respondent: A. L. Berman, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, with whom Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, was on the brief; and Joseph B. Kennedy, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission.

Denying a petition to set aside a cease and desist order in FTC Dkt. 6275.

Before Bazelon, Fahy and Bastian, Circuit Judges.

[Petition To Set Aside FTC Order]

Per Curiam [In full text]: This petition, by a member of the Feather and Down Products Industry, seeks to set aside a Federal Trade Commission order [1] to cease and desist from engaging in certain unfair labelling practices. The order was based upon the Commission's determination that petitioner's labels, describing the kinds or types and proportions of filling materials contained in pillows, did not meet the standards of accuracy under the Trade Practice Rules for the Feather and Down Products Industry.[2]

In this court petitioner relies on grounds which stem from the Commission's acceptance of the results of tests conducted by its own expert witness and the rejection of those conducted by petitioner's experts.[3] These grounds were not urged before the Commission. We are, therefore, not bound to consider them now.[4]

We note our agreement, however, with the Court of Appeals for the Third and [1] Issued under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45.

[2] Promulgated by the Commission on April 26, 1951, 16 C. F. R. § 200 (Supp. 1955).

[3] These grounds are: "(1) that testimony of petitioners' experts had been totally disregarded because it was not styled in a manner made mandatory subsequent to its introduction: (2) that testimony of petitioners' experts had never been weighed; and (3) that rejection of testimony of petitioners' experts constituted an amendment to the Trade Practice Rules without notice to petitioners."

[4] United States v. L. A. Tucker Truck Lines, 344 U. S. 33, 36-37 (1952); Democrat Printing Co. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 91 U. S. App. D. C. 72, 77-78, 202 F. 2d 298, 303-04 (1952).

Second Circuits[5] in sustaining the Commission's like evaluation of these tests in related cases involving other members of this industry.

[Affirmed]

The petition to set aside is denied, and the Commission's order is affirmed.

[¶ 68,625] Rogers-Kent, Incorporated v. General Electric Company.

In the Richland County Court, State of South Carolina. Filed December 5, 1956.

South Carolina Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of South Carolina Fair Trade Act—Nonsigner Provision—Act Passed Prior to Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts—Due Process of Law, Equal Protection of the Laws, and Delegation of Legislative Power—United States and South Carolina Constitutions.—In a declaratory judgment action, the South Carolina Fair Trade Act was held invalid on the ground that the Act was void at the time of its enactment, which was prior to the passage of the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts, because it was in conflict with the Sherman Antitrust Act and therefore offended the "supremacy" and "commerce" clauses of the United States Constitution. Although the South Carolina Act no longer is in conflict with the Sherman Act by reason of the passage of the McGuire Act, the South Carolina Act remains invalid since it has not been reenacted since the passage of the McGuire Act. The removal of the constitutional objection to a statute which rendered it void does not by operation of law give it force and effect nor can it be made valid by a subsequent statute. The court found it unnecessary to pass upon the contention that the Act was reenacted by reason of its inclusion in the South Carolina Code because the legislature, in adopting the Code, declared it to be the only general statutory law of the State on January 8, 1952. The effective date of the Code, therefore, antedated the McGuire Act, which became law on July 14, 1952, and the inclusion of the Act in the Code does not impart validity to the Act.

The nonsigner provision of the South Carolina Act violates the due process clause of the South Carolina Constitution. The right of an owner of property to fix the price at which he will sell it is an inherent attribute of the property itself and a well recognized property right. Unless the property is affected with a public interest, the legislature is without authority to abridge this property right under its police power. The nonsigner provision denies equal protection of the laws in violation of the state's Constitution because it confers special privileges upon certain persons without a reasonable basis for classification. Furthermore, the Act's nonsigner provision confers an unlawful delegation of legislative power to private persons contrary to the South Carolina Constitution. It is a delegation to private individuals, not to a governmental agency, contrary to all established precedent, and the Act prescribes no standards and lays down no yard stick to be applied in the exercise of this unwarranted power.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3040.40, 3085.43, 3258.

For the plaintiff: I. S. Bernstein, Columbia, S. C.

For the defendant: Boyd, Bruton & Lumpkin, Columbia, S. C.

Order

[Validity of Fair Trade Act]

LEGARE BATES, Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff brings this action under the provisions of the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act (Sections 10-2000 through 10-2014 of the 1952 Code) for the purpose of obtaining a construction of the South Carolina Fair Trade Act (Sections 66-91 through 66-95

---

[5] Northern Feather Works v. Federal Trade Comm'n, and Sumergrade v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,366], 234 F. 2d 335 (3d Cir. 1956); Buchwalter v. Federal Trade Comm'n, The L. Buchman Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, and Sanitary Feather & Down Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,425], 235 F. 2d 344 (2d Cir. 1956). Contra: Burton-Dixie Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,591], — F. 2d — (7th Cir., Jan. 10, 1957); Lazar v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,597], — F. 2d — (7th Cir., Jan. 10, 1957).

of the 1952 Code) and an adjustment respecting its validity and constitutionality. The Attorney General, although not a party, was served with a copy of the Complaint in accordance with Section 10-2008 and appeared on behalf of the State.

[Plaintiff]

The parties have entered into an agreed stipulation of facts, from which the following pertinent facts appear: the plaintiff is a South Carolina Corporation and has its principal place of business in Columbia, South Carolina. Plaintiff is engaged in the general retail mercantile business in both interstate and intrastate commerce. In the conduct of its business plaintiff issues patron cards to its customers upon application, in return for which it requires that the holder agree to make at least one purchase a year. Plaintiff has advertised, offered for sale and sold appliances bearing nationally famous brand names, including many appliances bearing the defendant's trademark, "General (GE) Electric." It has been Plaintiff's practice heretofore and it proposes to continue to allow customers holding cards to purchase appliances, including those bearing defendant's trademark, at prices below the minimum fair trade retail prices specified in agreements entered into between manufacturers of these products and other dealers in the state.

[Defendant]

The defendant, General Electric Co., is a foreign corporation and is duly qualified to transact business in the state of South Carolina. It is engaged, inter-alia, in the business of manufacturing and selling electrical products, including clocks, automatic blankets, vacuum cleaners, fans, heating pads, heaters and radios. All of said appliances bear defendant's trademark "General (GE) Electric" and are in fair and open competition in this state with many appliances of the same general class produced and sold by other manufacturers.

Defendant has expended and is expending large sums of money in promoting the sale of said appliances by advertising and in every other available way and has established a valuable reputation and good will for said appliances and for the trademark under which they are distributed and sold.

Pursuant to the Fair Trade Act of South Carolina, the defendant since July 1952 has entered into agreements with a substantial number of retail dealers under which the defendant has specified minimum retail resale prices for the aforesaid appliances, a copy of which it attached to the amended answer.

In addition to the appliances mentioned, the defendant manufactures and sell a multitude of other products in the appliance field and also manufatcures electric ranges, refrigerators, TV sets and other major appliances, all of which bear defendant's trademark "General (GE) Electric." Customarily these major appliances are not sold subject to fair trade agreements and the retail pricing of these items is left to the individual dealer guided by circumstances in his own trading area.

[Nonsigner]

The plaintiff has not entered into a fair trade agreement with the defendant agreeing not to advertise or sell the said appliances at less than the minimum prices stipulated by the defendant nor is it a party to any such agreement, and within the purview of the South Carolina Fair Trade Act, is a non-contracting i. e., non signing retailer.

[Constitutionality]

On or about January 3rd, 1955 and at regular intervals thereafter, the defendant notified plaintiff of the form of its fair trade agreement with other retail dealers and the minimum prices for the appliances specified by the defendant under said agreements. Since that date the plaintiff has sold, and advertised and proposes to continue to advertise and sell said appliances bearing defendant's trademark at prices less than those specified in said agreements. Plaintiff contends that it has the legal right to do so for reason that the South Carolina Fair Trade Act is invalid and unconstitutional and brings this action under the Declaratory Judgments Act to obtain an adjudication respecting the validity and constitutionality of the Act.

This is the second time that this question has been before this court. In Rogers-Kent v. Westinghouse, et al. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,084], involving substantially the same issues, I held the Fair Trade Act of this state to be invalid and unconstitutional in a lengthy opinion setting forth my views. Inasmuch as the defendant's appeal to the Supreme Court was abandoned before an adjudication could be had on the merits in that case, I deem it necessary to restate the views therein expressed by me.

The principal grounds upon which the plaintiff challenges the validity and constitutionality of the Fair Trade Act are the same as those advanced in the Westinghouse case and may be summarized as follows:

(1) The South Carolina act was void in its inception because it was inconsistent with the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and the Constitution of the United States at the time of its passage; and the passage of permissive federal legislation could not impart validity to the State act without a subsequent re-enactment by the General Assembly.

(2) The act violates Article 1, Section 5 of the South Carolina Constitution, the "due process" and "equal protection" clauses.

(3) The act confers an unlawful delegation of legislative power to private individuals contrary to Article 3, Section 1 of the State Constitution.

[Conflict with Sherman Act]

In support of its first ground plaintiff relies primarily upon the authority of Grayson-Robinson Stores, Inc. v. Oneida [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,442], 209 Ga. 613, 75 S. E. 2d 161, which held invalid the identical Georgia statute on this ground. I am impressed with the sound reasoning and unassailable logic of that decision and I have concluded that it applies with equal force to our own statute. The Fair Trade Act of this State was approved on April 23, 1937, and like the Georgia Act, was void ab initio, in that it was in conflict with the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. A., Section 1, at the time of its enactment and thus offended the supremacy clause, Article 6, Clause 2, and the commerce clause, Article 1, Section 8, of the United States Constitution. Under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act as originally passed, interstate resale price fixing and price maintenance agreements were prohibited as being in restraint of trade and therefore illegal per se. In Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259, the Supreme Court of the United States stated:

"Under the Sherman Act a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate commerce is illegal per se."

Other decisions to the same effect are Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 S. Ct., 376, 55 L. Ed. 502; United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129.

On August 17, 1938, after the effective date of our Fair Trade Act, Congress passed the Miller-Tydings Act as an amendment to the Sherman Act, which provides that "nothing herein contained shall render illegal contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for resale of a commodity . . . when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions, under any statute, law or public policy in effect in any state . . ." In 1951 the Supreme Court of the United States in Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, held that this amendment excepted only "contracts or agreements" prescribing minimum prices, and could not be made applicable to persons who had signed no contract or agreement, who were in effect "nonsigners" as the plaintiff herein.

[Reenactment Necessary]

In order to remove the barrier to effective enforcement of resale price agreements under State Fair Trade Acts, Congress on July 14, 1952 passed the McGuire Act, 66 Stat. 632, 15 U. S. C. A., Section 45, which attempted to exempt from the operation of the Sherman Act the nonsigner clause identical to our own, and thus to make the Fair Trade Act applicable to all dealers or retailers whether they had signed contracts or not. Although conceding that the Fair Trade Act of this state no longer offends the Sherman Act by reason of the McGuire Amendment, plaintiff contends nevertheless, that the act in this state, not having been re-enacted since the passage of the McGuire Act, remains invalid. I am in accord with the decision of the Georgia Supreme Court on this point in the Grayson case, supra, which reached the following conclusion:

"So we accordingly agree that the provisions of Georgia's Fair Trade Act are not prohibited by the Sherman Act as amended by the Miller-Tydings Act and by the McGuire Act; but we do not agree with the contention that Georgia's act became valid without re-enactment, after the Sherman Act was thus amended. Since Georgia's Fair Trade Act was contrary to and inconsistent with the terms of the Sherman Act before it was amended by the Miller-Tydings Act and the McGuire Act, it offended the supremecy clause as well as the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution . . . The time with reference to which the constitutionality of an act is to be determined is the date of its passage by the enacting body; . . . and if it is unconstitutional then it is forever void. Christian v. Moreland, 203 Ga. 20, 45 S. E. 2d 201."

The principle thus invoked is amply supported by the authorities, including the earlier case in this state of Atkinson v. Southern Express, 94 S. C. 444, 78 S. E. 516, which involved the validity of the statute prohibiting the transportation of alcoholic liquors from place to place within this state and the bringing in of liquors from out of state. This act was held to be in conflict with the commerce clause of the United States Constitution and hence unconstitutional at the time of its enactment. Thereafter Congress passed the Webb Act divesting liquors of their interstate character and thus removed the constitutional barrier to the original dispensary statute. The question now presented was whether or not the statute became operative without re-enactment after the passage of the Webb Act. Our Supreme Court held that it did not and the clear language of that opinion is equally applicable to the act under consideration:

"The removal of the constitutional objections to a statute that rendered it null and void, does not by operation of law give it force and effect, nor can it be made valid by a subsequent statute."

I find it unnecessary to pass upon the Attorney General's contention that the Fair Trade Act was re-enacted by reason of its inclusion in the 1952 Code, for the reason that the Legislature, in adopting the Code, declared it to be "the only general statutory law of the State on the 8th day of January, 1952." The effective date of the Code thus antedated the McGuire Act which became law on July 14, 1952, and the inclusion of the act in the Code does not impart validity to it.

I must therefore conclude that the plaintiff's first ground is well taken and that the Fair Trade Act of this State is not a valid law. In view of the additional serious constitutional questions raised by the plaintiff, however, I prefer not to rest my decision on this ground solely, but will consider fully plaintiff's additional objections to the constitutionality of the statute under our State Constitution.

[Nonsigner Provision]

The plaintiff's remaining grounds of objection are directed primarily to Section 66-94, which embodies the clause familiarly known as the "nonsigner" clause as follows:

"Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract containing either of the provisions mentioned in Section 66-93, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

Under the wording of the foregoing section, any price arrangement entered into between a producer on the one hand and a retailer on the other is binding upon all other retailers selling the particular commodity involved. Plaintiff has not entered into a fair trade contract with the defendant General Electric, and contends that the enforcement of the nonsigner clause will deprive it of its property and its liberty to contract without due process of law, in violation of Article 1, Section 5 of the State Constitution.

[State's Police Power—Due Process]

The right of an owner of property to fix the price at which he will sell it is an inherent attribute of the property itself and a well recognized property right. Tyson v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418, 47 S. Ct. 426, 71 L. Ed. 718; Charles Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations, 262 U. S. 522, 43 S. Ct. 630, 67 L. Ed. 1103; Williams v. Standard Oil Co., 278 U. S. 435, 49 S. Ct. 115, 73 L. Ed. 287; New State Ice Co. v. Leibman, 285 U. S. 262, 52 S. Ct. 371, 76 L. Ed. 747. Only in those situations respecting public health, safety, morals and public welfare, where the state's police power may properly be invoked, or where a business is "affected with a public interest," is a departure from this rule sanctioned. In Gasque v. Nates, 191 S. C. 271, 2 S. E. 2d 36, our Supreme Court recognized that "to be valid as a legislative exercise of police power, the legislation must be clearly demanded for public safety, health, peace, morals or general welfare. 11 Am. Jur. 1171; West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379."

The Act before me is in essence a price fixing act, conferring upon private individuals the right to enter into price fixing arrangements which are obligatory upon non-assenters, and which follow the commodity down through the channels of trade to the ultimate consumer. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert, supra; Cox v. General Electric (Ga.) [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,934]; 85 S. E. 2d 514; Miles Laboratory v. Eckerd, (Fla.) [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,700] 73 So. 2d 680. The non-contracting party is required to sell at not less than a stipulated price not merely by reason of the contract; he is compelled to do so by the Act. In order to justify the granting of such extraordinary power to private individuals, the situation must be such as to call for the exercise of the police power of the state. In this respect I can see no distinction between price fixing by legislative mandate, as the act permits, and legislative price fixing itself.

I find nothing in the Act limiting or restricting its application to those businesses or trades affected with a public interest or to the sale of commodities which the state may reasonably regulate under its police power. The Act is all inclusive, bringing in all commodities and all industries alike without exception and without regard to their relationship to the public welfare. The only requisite for invoking this act is that the commodity bear a "trade-mark, brand or name of the producer, distributor or owner" and which is "in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others." The commodities produced by General Electric and which are sold under its trade-mark, as enumerated in the stipulation of facts, clearly bear no relationship to the public health, safety, morals and public welfare and the regulation of the price at which they are to be sold cannot be justified as a proper exercise of the police power of the state.

The Supreme Court of Georgia in Cox v. General Electric, supra, in holding the Fair Trade Act unconstitutional after its reenactment, penetrated to the very core of the constitutional objections in the following statement:

> "The right to contract and for the seller and purchaser to agree upon a price is a property right protected by the due process clause of our constitution, and unless it is a business affected with a public interest the General Assembly is without authority to abridge that right."

The plaintiff is a legal corporation engaged in a lawful business. It seeks to bestow upon its members who have card privileges the right to purchase its commodities, including some of the items bearing the trade-mark of the defendant General Electric, at prices below the minimum resale prices, and thus to pass on to them the economies effected through the efficiency of its operations. I can perceive of no sound reason why it should not be permitted to do so in free and open competition. Manifestly the public receives the benefits of its operations and its interests are best served thereby. The whole spirit and purpose of our constitution is to protect the liberties and property rights of our citizens. The act would impair and virtually destroy the right of the plaintiff to the free use and enjoyment of its property. It permits private individuals to make their price restrictions obligatory upon those who have refused to consent thereto, and is clearly arbitrary and confiscatory in violation of due process.

Among the recent decisions in other states declaring the Fair Trade Act unconstitutional on this and other grounds are Cox v. General Electric (Ga.) supra; Miles Laboratory v. Eckerd (Fla.) supra; Union Carbide v. White River (Ark.) [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,953], 275 S. W. 2d 455; McGraw Electric Co. v. Lewis & Smith Drug Co. (Neb.) [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,954], 68 N. W. 2d 608; Shakespeare v. Sporting Goods Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,303], 334 Mich. 109, 54 N. W. 2d 268. General Electric Co. v. Wahle (Ore.) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,333] 296 P. 2d 635; Benrus Watch Co. Inc. v. Kirsch [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,319], 92 S. E. 2d 384; Olin Mathieson Corp. v. Francis (Colorado) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,463] not yet reported.

The defendants advance the argument that a retailer, although a nonsigner, voluntarily acquires a commodity with knowledge of its trade-mark and resale price restrictions and such voluntary acquisition and knowledge imports consent to the price limitation. The fallacy in this contention lies in the fact that the retailer has clearly demonstrated his rejection of the price restriction by his refusal to enter into a resale price agreement. In Schwegmann v. Calvert, supra, the opinion of Justice Douglas effectively demolishes this fiction wherein he states:

"They can fix minimum prices pursuant to their contract with impunity. When they seek however to impose price fixing on persons who have not contracted or agreed to the scheme, the situation is vastly different. That is not price fixing by contract or agreement; that is price fixing by compulsion. That is not following the path of consensual agreement; that is resort to coercion.

* * *

"Contracts or agreements convey the idea of a cooperative arrangement, not a program whereby recalcitrants are dragged in by the heels and compelled to submit to the price fixing."

The views herein expressed find strong support in many decisions of our Supreme Court respecting due process. In the well reasoned opinion in Gasque v. Nates, supra, the Court held that the act limiting the hours of labor in certain types of mercantile establishments violated due process in that it was an undue interference with liberty of contract of both employer and employee and was not a proper exercise of the police power of the State. The opinion quotes with approval from Adair v. U. S., 208 U. S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 280:

"In all such particulars the employer and the employee have equality of right and any legislation that disturbs equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land."

The holding in that case would impel a similar conclusion respecting the statute under consideration.

In McCoy v. Town of York, 193 S. C. 390, 8 S. E. 2d 905, the Court had before it the validity of the town ordinance making it unlawful to deliver petroleum products to any gasoline station by trucks having capacity of more than 1250 gallons, which was apparently designed as a safety measure under the police power of the municipality. In holding the ordinance void at the suit of a filling station operator in the town, the Court declared:

"The appellant has the constitutional right of engaging in a lawful business and a constitutional right under license from the city to engage in the filling station business. Under the guise of public welfare this ordinance is passed in which the inevitable and evidently intended effect is to prevent the legitimate use by appellant of his equipment in the usual and ordinary manner."

Equally appropriate is the language of Judge Sease in Willis v. Town of Woodruff, 200 S. C. 266, 20 S. E. 2d 699, involving the validity of the town ordinance which conditioned the granting of a building permit to the plaintiff upon approval of his neighbors. The opinion states:

"The ordinance involved in the case at bar in [is] both unreasonable and discriminatory, for it attempts to confer upon a private citizen who may be so fortunate as to own a house power of the most arbitrary character over the property of his neighbors.

"For these reasons we do not hesitate to condemn the ordinance as unconstitutional and void."

And in Henderson v. City of Greenwood, 172 S. C. 16, 172 S. E. 689, the Court quoted with approval from 6 R. C. L. 196 the rule respecting the deprivation of property under the due process clause, which finds equal application herein:

"The constitutional guaranty that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law may be violated without the physical taking of property for public or private use. Its capacity for enjoyment or adaptability to some uses are essential characteristics and attributes without which property cannot be conceived. Hence a law is considered as being a deprivation of property within the meaning of this constitutional guaranty if it deprives an owner of one of its essential attributes, or destroys its value, or restricts or interrupts its common, necessary or profitable use, or hampers the owner in the application of it to the purpose of trade, or imposes conditions upon the right to hold or use it, and thereby seriously impairs its value."

[Equal Protection of the Laws]

The plaintiff further assails the act as denying the equal protection of the laws and as conferring special privileges upon a select few without a reasonable basis for classification. In Gasque v. Nates, supra, the Court recognized that the legislature has the power in passing a law to make a classification of its citizens, but "such classification cannot be made arbitrarily but must rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in which the classification was proposed." That case quotes with approval from Colgate v. Harvey, 296 U. S. 404, 56 S. Ct. 256, to the following effect: "The classification in order to avoid the constitutional prohibition, must be founded upon pertinent and real differences as distinguished from irrelevant and artificial ones."

The act before me classifies the producer, owner or distributor of a commodity with a trade-mark separately from the one without a trade-mark. I can perceive no rational basis for thus classifying trade-mark owners separately from other sellers of goods. Under the express terms of the act, any producer, owner or distributor may acquire unlimited price fixing powers by the mere expedient of placing a trade-mark, brand or name on his product and selling it in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class. A producer may place an entirely new product on the market and thereby exercise an unrestricted right to control its price through the channels of trade into the hands of the ultimate consumer. The seller who chooses not to place a distinctive mark or name on his product, as he may lawfully do, is denied the right to fix the price of the commodity. No sound reason has been advanced for permitting a seller with a trade-mark to thus exercise arbitrarily a power denied to others, contrary to the letter and spirit of our constitution. The distinction, if any exists, is artificial and irrelevant.

The defendants urge, however, that the act has for its purpose the protection of the property right of the trade-mark owner in his good will and that this affords a rational basis for classifying trade-mark owners separately from other sellers of goods. I can find nothing in the statute evincing this to be its purpose. There is no mention of "good will" in the act nor is there any requirement that a trade-mark or trade name enjoy a past or prospective good will, or that it shall have acquired a public reputation, as a condition precedent to the exercise of the price fixing powers conferred. The statute permits the owner to control the resale price of a commodity after he has sold the same to another, and thus accords a hitherto unknown property right to a trade-mark, the function of which has always been simply to designate the goods as the product of a particular manufacturer or producer and to prevent confusion as to their origin. Shakespeare v. Sporting Goods Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,303], 334 Mich. 109, 54 NW 2d 268; Sunbeam v. Wentling (CA 3) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,935] 192 F. 2d 7. Certainly it cannot be contended in this proceeding that the plaintiff has infringed upon the trade-mark rights of the defendant by selling below minimum prices.

Nor is there any reasonable basis for the suggestion that the good will of a producer is adversely affected by a sale below its minimum prices, nor conversely, that it may be enhanced by an artificially controlled price. Good will is an intangible asset which a producer may acquire through his reputation for fair dealing and the excellence of his product. I am unable to see any direct relationship between good will and the maintenance of a fixed retail price. It is axiomatic that an excessive price will discourage and eliminate purchasers and perhaps decrease the value of good will, whereas a popular price will result in wider distribution of a commodity and satisfied customers and aid in its enhancement. The sales of the plaintiff below the minimum prices stipulated by the defendant General Electric do not in my mind impinge upon the defendant's rights in its trade-mark, nor detract from its good will. The fallacy in defendant's position may be readily seen in the fact that the only commodities sold subject to a fair trade schedule are its smaller appliances as enumerated in the stipulation of facts; and even as to these, its contract allows the defendant to remove any product from its price schedule at any time. None of defendant's major appliances, which bear the same trade-mark, are sold subject to a fair trade schedule. This is clearly an admission by defendant that its good will is not harmed by its sales without regard to a minimum price schedule. The defendant's contention is patently unsound and unrealistic and must be rejected.

Other discriminatory features of the act may be noted which strengthen my conviction that it offends the equal protection clause. The act permits a producer and a retailer, by entering into a resale price agreement, to accomplish indirectly what the dealers as a group may not accomplish directly. If all of the retailers selling a particular commodity were to combine and conspire to set the resale price of an article, their activities would violate the anti-trust laws as "horizontal" price fixing; nevertheless, the same result is sanctioned by making mandatory upon all dealers in a commodity the resale price fixed by agreement of a producer and only one of their number. If the activities of the group as a whole are to be condemned, I fail to understand how two individuals may validly accomplish the same result with impunity. The exercise of this power clearly constitutes a denial of the equal protection of the laws and is a grant of special privileges to the select few within the constitutional prohibition.

Another inherent evil in the statute is its lack of proper safeguards against an arbitrary enforcement. Under its terms a violation is actionable "at the suit of any person damaged thereby." Enforcement is not vested in a governmental or other responsible body. Thus, private persons—producers, distributors or even competing retailers—are given absolute discretion as to enforcing the fixed resale price of an article against one refusing to consent thereto. The power to enforce necessarily carries with it the power to refrain from enforcement. At the mere whim or caprice of a private individual, any one particular retailer may be selected for legal action, while the selling activities of others are ignored, if not condoned outrightly. The exercise of a power of such an arbitrary character by private individuals over the liberties and property rights of others is repugnant to the basic constitutional guarantees of our citizens.

[Delegation of Legislative Power]

Plaintiff's third ground of attack is that the act confers an unlawful delegation of legislative power to private individuals to fix prices, contrary to Article 3, Section 1 of the State Constitution, which vests the legislative power in the General Assembly. By legislative leave a producer and a retailer may enter into a contract fixing the resale price of a commodity, the effect of which is to bind all other dealers and retailers in that commodity, even though they may have choosen not to consent thereto. The price as thus fixed by private contract is accorded the force of law under the act and those who refuse to abide by it may be prosecuted at the whim of the individuals establishing it. This constitutes a delegation to private individuals of legislative power of the most extreme character.

There is no precedent in our law for the delegation of legislative authority to private individuals so as to affect the property rights of others. The Legislature may properly delegate, to a governmental agency only, authority to prescribe rules and regulations for the complete operation and enforcement of a law within its expressed general purpose. Davis v. Guery 209 S. C. 41, 39 SE 2d 117. Even in such event there must be a standard or yard stick to guide the administrative agency. The rule was thus recently stated by our Supreme Court in South Carolina Highway Department v. Harvin, 86 SE 2d 466:

> "However, it is necessary that the statute declare a legislative policy, establish primary standards for carrying it out, or lay down an intelligible principle to which the administrative officer or body must conform, with a proper regard for the protection of the public interests and with much degree of certainty as the nature of the case permits, and enjoin a procedure under which, by appeal or otherwise, both public interests and private rights shall have due consideration."

As a delegation of legislative power the act must necessarily fail for two reasons: (1) It is a delegation to private individuals, not to a governmental agency, contrary to all established precedent; (2) the act prescribes no standards and lays down no yard stick to be applied in the exercise of this unwarranted power. The price may be fixed in the absolute and uncontrolled discretion of a producer. It may be fixed arbitrarily, capriciously or unwisely without regard to the interests of the public. Under our system of free enterprise, the safeguard against arbitrary price fixing has always been free competition among producers, a safeguard which the act would eliminate. I therefore do not hesitate to declare the act unconstitutional on this ground as well.

[Basis of Ruling]

In reaching the conclusion that the statute under consideration is invalid and unconstitutional, I have not been unmindful of the general principle of constitutional law so frequently reiterated by the Supreme Court that every presumption is to be indulged in favor of constitutionality of a statute. Neither have I been unmindful of the fact that the highest courts of numerous states and the United States Supreme Court have upheld the validity of similiar Fair Trade Acts, particularly in the years following the depression. But I have been most strongly impressed with the recent decisions of the highest courts of several states which have declared the act to be unconstitutional. Cox v. General Electric (Ga.) supra; Miles Laboratory v. Eckerd, (Fla.), supra; Union Carbide v. White River, (Ark.), supra; McGraw Electric Co. v. Lewis & Smith Drug Co., (Neb.), supra; Shakespeare v. Sporting Goods Co., (Mich.), supra; Grayson-Robinson Stores v. Oneida (Ga.), supra; General Electric Co. v. Wahle (Ore.), supra; Benrus Watch Co., Inc. v. Kirsch supra; Olin Mathieson Corp. v. Francis (Colorado) not yet reported. The sound reasoning of these decisions have influenced the conclusions I have expressed herein respecting the validity and constitutionality of the act. I have also noted with interest that the Attorney General's National Committee to study the Anti-trust laws, in a report dated March 31, 1955, concluded that the fair trade laws are incompatible with our free enterprise system and recommended the repeal of both the Miller-Tydings and the McGuire Amendments.

[Motion To Strike]

In view of my conclusions herein, I consider it unnecessary to pass upon the plaintiff's motion to strike the defendant's counterclaim and demand for injunctive relief as having been improperly asserted.

[Nonsigner Clause]

My conclusions respecting the constitutionality of the Fair Trade Act have been confined primarily to Section 66-94, the nonsigner clause. I do not find it necessary at this time to pass upon the constitutionality of the remaining sections under our State Constitution, since I have concluded that the entire Act was void ab initio.

[Ruling]

For the reasons herein expressed it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the Fair Trade Act of the State of South Carolina be and the same is hereby declared invalid and Section 66-94 thereof be and the same is hereby declared null and void and unconstitutional under the State Constitution of 1895, and it is so ordered.

[¶ 68,626] Baim & Blank, Inc. and Baim & Blank Television Service, Inc. v. Philco Distributors, Inc. and Philco Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil No. 14083. Dated February 4, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Depositions—Compilation of Data.—Where defendants were taking the deposition of the sole surviving officer of a plaintiff corporation to establish that the books of the corporation did not fully reflect its business transactions, the defendants asked the officer whether certain purported sales were reflected in the corporate books. The plaintiff objected on the grounds that the books speak for themselves, that the books have been inspected and copied by the defendants, and that the officer should not be required to compile this data. The objection was overruled, and the officer was required to examine the books and compile the data required to furnish the information sought.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.775.

For the plaintiffs: J. Robert Ellner, Rockville Centre, N. Y.

For the defendants: Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,622 and 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,453.

Memorandum

BRUCHHAUSEN. District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiffs are suing for treble damages under the Robinson-Patman Act, claiming that price fixing between defendants and other retailers forced them out of business.

[Depositions]

Defendants are attempting to establish that the books of the plaintiffs do not fully reflect their business transactions. In the course of taking the depositions of William Blank, sole surviving officer of plaintiff corporations, pursuant to Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, he was asked whether certain purported sales were reflected in the corporate books. The plaintiffs thereupon raised the objection that the books speak for themselves, that they have been inspected and copied by the defendants, and that the witness should not be required to compile this data, especially since he is not familiar with bookkeeping and never dealt with the books when the corporation was active.

Had not the trial been imminent, the defendants undoubtedly would have sought this information by interrogatories under Rule 33 of the Federal Rules.

[Compilation of Data]

It has been held that compilation of data, though burdensome, is proper where the information sought is proper and the records are those ordinarily kept in the course of business, or where the interrogated party would have to compile such information in its own preparation for trial. RCA Manufacturing Co. v. Decca Records, Inc., S. D. N. Y., 1 F. R. D. 433; United States v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., N. D. Ill. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,348], 13 F. R. D. 98; United States v. American Locomotive Co., D. C. Ind., 6 F. R. D. 35.

The purpose of the deposition-discovery procedure is not only for the ascertainment of facts, but also to determine what the adverse party contends they are, and what purpose they will serve, so that the issues may be narrowed, the trial simplified, and time and expense conserved. It has also been held that inquiry, either by deposition or interrogatory, into facts within the discoverer's own knowledge, and of which he already has information, are proper. Benevento v. A. & P. Food Stores, Inc., E. D. N. Y., 26 F. Supp. 424; Nakken Patents Corp. v. Rabinowitz, E. D. N. Y., 1 F. R. D. 90; Moore's Federal Practice, 2nd Ed., Sec. 26.21, 33.13.

[Sole Surviving Officer]

These are regular corporate books which will probably be collated for trial, and the testimony indicates that they have already been examined. The said William Blank is the sole surviving officer whose testimony can bind the corporation.

[Voluntary Production]

Usually this difficulty is not presented during the taking of depositions under Rule 26, for at that time inquiry is made of the existence of documents and they are subsequently sought for inspection under Rule 34 and formal interrogatories concerning them are served under Rule 33. Apparently this was obviated by the voluntary production and inspection of the books.

[Deposition-Discovery Practice]

Rule 33 has been amended to state that interrogatories may relate to any matters which can be inquired into under Rule 26 (b). It has been held that interrogatories may be as broad as depositions. Kingsway Press, Inc. v. Farrell Publishing Corp., S. D. N. Y., 30 F. Supp. 775. The converse of this proposition is implicit. There is some rapport between Rules 26, 33 and 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, all of which pertain to the deposition-discovery practice. The latter two rules refer to the former. A party demanding copies of documents in answer to specific interrogatories will not be compelled to move anew for discovery under Rule 34 when his original application justified such production. Alfred Pearson & Co. (Pty.) Ltd. v. Hayes, S. D. N. Y., 9 F. R. D. 210.

[Ruling]

Under the circumstances, the questions concerning the contents of the books are deemed to be in the same category as interrogatories. The plaintiffs are required to examine the books and compile the data required to furnish the information sought. The plaintiffs should be afforded a reasonable opportunity to do this and the length of time allowed therefor should be stipulated or specified in the order to be entered herein. Meanwhile the trial should be deferred.

The defendants' application is granted.

[¶ 68,627] United States Gypsum Company v. National Gypsum Company, et al.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1956. No. 11. Dated February 25, 1957.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

Case No. 548 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decree—Illegality of Patent Licenses—Right To Recover Royalties Under Licenses—Right To Recover for Use of Patents—Right To Recover for Infringement.—A trial court which had found that a company's patent licensing agreements, containing resale price fixing provisions, were illegal and which had entered a decree prohibiting the performance of the agreements by the company and its licensees under such agreements erroneously modified its decree to require the company to dismiss suits which it had brought against its co-defendant licensees to recover compensation for the use of its patents or damages for patent infringement during the period of time that the co-defendant licensees used its patents without paying any royalties. Although the trial court was correct in ruling that the company could not sue its co-defendant licensees to recover royalties payable under the illegal patent licensing agreements, the court erred in ruling that, as a matter of law, the company could not recover compensation or damages for the use of its patents.

The trial court erroneously concluded that recovery on such legal theories was barred because the company had engaged in "fresh" patent misuse, because the "old" misuse adjudicated in the original antitrust proceeding had continued unpurged, and because the "old" misuse itself was sufficient to bar the infringement claim. The company's attempt to recover royalties under the illegal licensing agreements did not constitute a new misuse of the patents, the evidence did not establish that the "old" misuse continued unpurged, and the "old" misuse did not bar the infringement claim.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.625, 8233.325, 8233.400; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9041.450, 9043.05.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Modification—Jurisdiction of Trial Court—Dispute Among Defendants.—A trial court which had entered a decree in a Government antitrust action had jurisdiction to entertain a petition by certain of the defendants in the action to modify the decree so as to prohibit another defendant in the action from prosecuting suits to recover from such defendants compensation and damages for the use of its patents. A provision of the decree reserving to the court jurisdiction to make such modifications of the decree as may be appropriate to carry out and enforce the provisions of the decree provided an adequate basis for the exercise of the court's jurisdiction. The question whether the defendant was barred from recovery in such suits by reason of the abuse of its patent rights was sufficiently related to the rationale of the decree to bring it within the reserved jurisdiction provision of the decree. Patent misuse was the essence of the original antitrust litigation, and its continuance or renewal was therefore an issue peculiarly within the province of the court, whose determination would avoid multiple litigation and possibly conflicting decisions on that issue among the courts in which the defendant had brought suit.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.325, 8233.475.

For the appellant: Bruce Bromley, New York, N. Y.; Cranston Spray and Robert C. Keck, Chicago, Ill.; and Hugh Lynch. Jr., Washington, D. C.

For the appellees: Elmer Finck, Buffalo, N. Y.; Samuel I. Rosenman, Seymour D. Lewis, and Malcolm A. Hoffmann, New York, N. Y.; and Seymour Krieger, Washington, D. C.

Reversing and remanding decisions of the U. S. District Court, District of Columbia, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,112, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,813. For prior opinions of the Court, see 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,578, 62,853; 1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,473. For prior opinions of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,632, 62,729; 1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,226.

[Nature of Appeal]

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

United States Gypsum Company appeals from a decree of a three-judge court of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, entered December 9, 1954. This decree modified a final decree of that court, entered May 15, 1951, against Gypsum, the appellees National Gypsum Company and Certain-teed Products Corporation, and others, in a civil antitrust proceeding instituted by the Government in 1940.[1] The modification was a provision ordering Gypsum to dismiss with prejudice four suits which it had brought in three different federal district courts against National, Certain-teed, and two other co-defendants in the antitrust proceeding, to recover compensation or damages for the pendente lite use of certain of its patents during the period February 1, 1948, to May 15, 1951.[2]

[Antitrust Suit]

At the outset some mention of the prolonged antitrust proceeding is required to put the present post-decree controversy in context. In that proceeding the Government charged Gypsum, National, Certain-teed, and a number of other corporate and individual defendants with conspiracy to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in gypsum board and other gypsum products in violation of §§ 1, 2 and 3 of the Sherman Act.[3] The crux of the Government's charges was the alleged illegality of Gypsum's system of industry-wide uniform patent licensing agreements containing clauses giving Gypsum the right to fix prices on gypsum board and products. In 1946, at the close of the Government's case, the District Court dismissed the complaint.[4] On appeal this Court, on March 8, 1948, reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings.[5] Thereafter the District Court, with one dissent,[6] interpreting this Court's decision to mean that Gypsum's multiple uniform price fixing patent licenses were illegal per se under the antitrust laws, granted the Government's motion for summary judgment, accepting as true the defendant's proffer of proof. On November 7, 1949, the District Court entered a decree which, among other things, adjudged Gypsum's patent licensing agreements illegal, null and void, enjoined the performance of such agreements, provided for limited compulsory nonexclusive licensing of Gypsum's patents on a reasonable royalty basis, and reserved jurisdiction over the case and parties for certain purposes. On appeals by both the Government and Gypsum, this Court, in 1950, dismissed Gypsum's appeal,[7] affirmed the summary judgment below,[8] and held the Government entitled to broader relief in certain respects, remanding the case for that purpose.[9] Meanwhile, in noting probable jurisdiction on the Government's appeal, this Court enjoined the defendants from carrying out the price fixing provisions of their current license agreements, and from entering into any agreements or engaging in concerted action in restraint of trade.[10] This preliminary injunction, entered May 29, 1950, remained in force until the new final decree of the District Court was entered on May 15, 1951.[11]

[1] Throughout this opinion United States Gypsum Company will be referred to as "Gypsum," National Gypsum Company as "National," and Certain-teed Products Corporation as "Certain-teed."

[2] The suits against National and Certain-teed were brought in the Northern District of Iowa. The other two suits were brought in the District of New Jersey, against Newark Plaster Company, and in the Southern District of New York, against Ebsary Gypsum Company. These latter suits have been settled and are not before us.

[3] 26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1-3.

[4] 67 F. Supp. 397 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,473].

[5] 333 U. S. 364 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,226].

[6] The opinion of the court, and the dissenting opinion of the late Judge Stephens, are not officially reported. They appear at pp. 137-140, 478, of the record on this appeal.

[7] 339 U. S. 959 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,632].

[8] 339 U. S. 960.

[9] 340 U. S. 76 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729].

[10] 339 U. S. 960.

[11] The significance of these various holdings as it bears upon the issues in the present controversy is dealt with later. Infra, pp. 10-16.

[Suits to Recover for Use of Patents]

After this Court's 1948 reversal of the District Court's original order of dismissal, National, Certain-teed, and Gypsum's other co-defendant licensees ceased paying royalties under their license agreements.[12] Following the May 15, 1951, decree, National and Certain-teed, as authorized by Article VI of that decree, entered into new license agreements, effective May 15, for the future use of Gypsum's patents, such licenses containing no price fixing clauses; the royalty rate was the same as under the old licenses, except that the licensee's returns on unpatented gypsum products did not enter into its measure. The new licenses were without prejudice to Gypsum's claim for compensation for the use of the patents during the period February 1, 1948, to May 15, 1951. The respondents not having paid for that period, Gypsum, in 1953, brought suit against them in the Iowa federal court. The complaints in these suits asserted three separate grounds for recovery: (a) the royalty provisions of the old license agreements (Counts I and II); (b) quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the use of the patents (Counts III and IV);[13] and (c) damages for patent infringement (Count V).

[Modification of Decree]

Thereafter, National and Certain-teed, claiming that the institution of the Iowa actions violated the 1951 decree, and that in any event Gypsum was barred from recovery by reason of unpurged misuse of the patents involved, petitioned the antitrust court to enjoin further prosecution of the actions.[14] The Government also filed a separate petition to enjoin Gypsum from maintaining any action based on the illegal license agreements, but took no position on Gypsum's right to recover for the period in question on the grounds of quantum meruit or patent infringement.[15] Gypsum's answers to these petitions in substance alleged that the District Court was without jurisdiction to grant the relief sought by the petitioners, and put in issue all of the allegations on which the right to relief was predicated.

The District Court decided that it had jurisdiction to grant relief (one judge dissenting), and, after hearing the parties through briefs and oral argument, but without taking any evidence beyond that already of record in the antitrust proceeding, concluded that the 1951 decree should be modified so as to enjoin the prosecution of Gypsum's suits.[16] The court held that prosecution of Counts I and II, which declared upon the illegal license agreements, could not be maintained under the terms of the 1951 decree. Although finding that the other three Counts were not barred by that decree, it further held that the suits should be prohibited in their entirety because of Gypsum's unpurged misuse of its patents.[17] There followed the modifying decree of December 9, 1954,[18] from which this appeal was taken. We noted probable jurisdiction. 350 U. S. 946. For the reasons given hereafter we conclude that, except as it related to the two causes of action based on the illegal license agreements (Counts I and II), this proscriptive modification of the 1951 decree was not justified by the record before the District Court.

[12] In the case of National and Certain-teed the default period began with the February 1, 1948 royalties, due March 20, 1948.

[13] The lower court, regarding Count III as declaring upon a contract implied in law, described that Count as being for "indebitatus assumpsit." The appellant says it was for "quantum meruit." As nothing here turns on the characterization, we shall refer to both Counts III and IV as "the quantum meruit" Counts.

[14] The Iowa court, upon motions by National and Certain-teed, stayed all proceedings in the two actions pending the determination of the antitrust court [count] now under review.

[15] The Government takes the same position in this Court.

[16] 124 F. Supp. 573 [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,813]. Judge Cole dissented on the jurisdictional ground. 124 F. Supp. 598 [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,813]. On December 9, 1954, the District Court denied reconsideration, Record, p. 1136; and on June 30, 1955, it denied Gypsum's motion for a new trial. 134 F. Supp. 69 [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,112].

[17] The court also held that Count III should be barred because it was "but a left-handed, indirect method for recovering such royalties." The court did not elaborate on this, but since it held that this Count was not "expressly or impliedly" covered by the 1951 decree we think this additional ground requires no separate discussion.

[18] The operative part of the decree reads as follows: "Defendant United States Gypsum Company is hereby ordered and directed to discontinue and to dismiss, with prejudice to United States Gypsum Company, its pending actions as follows: against National Gypsum Company, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa; against Certain-teed Products Corporation, in the same District Court . . . ."

I.

[Reserved Jurisdiction Clause]

Preliminary, we conclude that three aspects of the lower court's holding must be upheld. First, we think that Article X of the 1951 decree, reserving to the antitrust court jurisdiction, upon application of "any of the parties" to the decree, to make such "directions" and "modifications" as may be appropriate to the "carrying out" and "enforcement" of the decree, provided a fully adequate basis for the jurisdiction exercised below.[19] United States v. Swift & Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55-005], 286 U. S. 106, 114; Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,103], 312 U. S. 502. See also Chrysler Corp. v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,214], 316 U. S. 556. Gypsum argues that insofar as the relief granted below was rested upon patent misuse, instead of a construction of the 1951 decree which was the basis of enjoining the prosecution of Counts I and II of Gypsum's suits, the lower court's decision involved a determination of a collateral private controversy between this group of antitrust defendants, rather than a "carrying out" or "enforcement" of the terms of that decree. But we think that whether Gypsum was barred from recovery in these suits by reason of the abuse of its patent rights was a problem sufficiently related to the rationale of the 1951 decree to bring it within the reserved jurisdiction clause. This is especially so because patent misuse was the essence of the old antitrust litigation, and its continuance or renewal were thus issues peculiarly within the province of the antitrust court, whose determination would avoid multiple litigation and possibly conflicting decisions on that issue among the courts in which Gypsum had brought suit.

[Suits Based on Licenses]

Likewise we conclude that there is no basis for disturbing the District Court's determinations that prosecution of Counts I and II, based on the old license agreements, was not permissible under the 1951 decree,[20] but that its terms did not reach the quantum meruit and infringement Counts.[21]

[Issue]

The outcome of this appeal then turns on whether the District Court was right in holding as a matter of law that Gypsum was barred from any kind of recovery for the pendente lite use of its patents because of their unpurged misuse. It is now, of course, familiar law that the courts will not aid a patent owner who has misused his patents to recover any of their emoluments accruing during the period of misuse or thereafter until the effects of such misuse have been dissipated, or "purged" as the conventional saying goes. Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,177], 314 U. S. 495; Edward Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,524], 329 U. S. 394; MacGregor v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,525], 329 U. S. 402; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis Honeywell Regulator Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,202], 320 U. S. 680. The rule is an extension of the equitable doctrine of "unclean hands" to the patent field. In terms of this case this means that Gypsum may not recover from these appellees for their use of its patents between February 1, 1948 and May 15, 1951, if Gypsum has been guilty of misuse of the patents since 1948, or if the original misuse found in the antitrust litigation remained unpurged. This issue, of course, involves

[19] Article X reads: "Jurisdiction of this cause, and of the parties hereto, is retained by the Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this decree, or any other person, firm or corporation that may hereafter become bound thereby in whole or in part, to apply to this Court at any time for such orders, modifications, vacations or directions as may be necessary or appropriate (1) for the construction or carrying out of this decree, and (2) for the enforcement of compliance therewith."

[20] Article IV of the 1951 decree had adjudicated as to all defendants that these license agreements were "unlawful under the antitrust laws of the United States and illegal, null and void." Article V enjoined the defendants from "performing" such agreements. Cf. Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U. S. 227. It might be well to add that the 1951 decree would similarly prevent the use of these illegal agreements as defenses by co-defendants National and Certain-teed against the quantum meruit and infringement Counts of Gypsum's suits.

[21] As appears, infra, p. 16, the Government at one time had sought to bar all such claims for recovery on the patents, but later in effect abandoned that request for relief.

essentially a question of fact. And since the record is barren of any facts with respect to the situation existing in the gypsum industry since 1941, we think that the District Court erred in holding purely as a matter of law that an unpurged misuse had been shown.

II.

[Trial Court Rulings]

Putting aside the two contract Counts, the enjoining of which we have held was sufficiently supported by the court's finding that they could not be maintained under the terms of the 1951 decree, there are three aspects to the lower court's holding as to the remaining Counts. First, the court held those Counts barred because Gypsum had engaged in "fresh" patent misuse—misuse unrelated to the original antitrust litigation. Secondly, it was held that since the "old" misuse adjudicated in the antitrust proceeding had continued unpurged, recovery must in any case be barred.[22] And finally, the court held that irrespective of purge, the "old" misuse itself was sufficient to bar the patent infringement Count. We discuss each of these holdings in turn.

A.

[New Patent Misuse]

The "fresh" misuse found by the lower court was simply the fact of the inclusion of Counts I and II in the 1953 suits. These Counts sought recovery of royalties under the illegal licensing agreements. Such inclusion, the court held, was a renewed attempt to enforce these illegal agreements, and as such should be regarded as a new misuse of the patents which barred recovery under the other Counts as well.[23] We do not agree.

The five Counts in Gypsum's complaints were merely alternative legal theories for reaching a single end, namely, recovery for the pendente lite use of Gypsum's patents. Had the complaints declared only upon the quantum meruit and infringement Counts the mere bringing of the suits could then hardly have been regarded as fresh misuse, even though recovery might be defeated by showing some independent unpurged misuse of the patents involved. For as the lower court recognized, such recovery by way of quantum meruit or damages for infringement was not "expressly or impliedly" touched by the terms of the 1951 decree. Gypsum explains the inclusion of the two contract Counts as precautionary pleading to fend against the possibility that the defendants, if sued only for quantum meruit and infringement, might set up the license agreements in defense.[24] Such alternative pleading is expressly sanctioned by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 8, and, even though that defense has turned out to be untenable in light of the lower court's findings, we think that it distorts the doctrine of patent misuse to hold that recourse to this method of pleading here vitiated the other Counts of the complaints.[25]

Moreover, in view of what transpired before the antitrust court in the hearings relating to the settlement of the 1949 decree, we are by no means satisfied that Gypsum was not entitled to a bona fide guess, at least as a matter of alternative pleading, that the decree would not be interpreted as barring the collection of these interim royalties. At those hearings counsel for one of the defendants, Celotex, without remonstrance by either of these respondents, stated:

> "In order that United States Gypsum will have no misunderstanding of my position, I want them to know that my suggestion [that the decree should declare the licenses 'illegal, null and void'] is in no sense based on any hope or desire on my part to get out of any license fees during any interim period, and if we can agree . . . as far as my client is concerned, we are willing to let the royalty rate [of the new compulsory licenses], whatever it is, agreed upon apply back to the time when we ceased paying royalties. I just want to make it clear to all that we are not attempting by this declaration of illegality of them to find some way of avoiding the license fees which during this [litigation] none of us have paid."

Further, both the Government and the other co-defendants at that time seem to [22] Counts I and II were also held barred on these grounds.

[23] We assume that if the inclusion of Counts I and II constituted a "fresh" patent misuse, the fact that they were not asserted until 1953 would make no difference in their effectiveness to bar recovery for the 1948-1951 period.

[24] National had in fact pleaded that defense in the suit against it. But see n. 20, supra.

[25] In view of this conclusion it is unnecessary to deal with the contention that the lower court's holding also violated 35 U. S. C. § 271(d).

have regarded the "illegal, null and void" provisions of the decree as simply the equivalent of "cancellation" of the licenses. In view of the narrow adjudication of violation by this Court, infra, p. 12, we cannot say that Gypsum could not have reasonably entertained the belief that the price fixing provisions of the license agreements would ultimately be held separable from the basic undertaking to pay royalties. Indeed, the new licenses, authorized by the decree, which omitted the price fixing clauses, carried the same royalty rate on products made under the patents.

We conclude that in the circumstances present here it was error to regard the inclusion of the contract Counts as constituting a "fresh" patent misuse on Gypsum's part.

B.

[Unpurged Patent Misuse]

We come next to the holding that the "old" misuse, found in the antitrust proceeding, continued unpurged through the 1948-1951 period. And here we are met immediately by the fact that the record before the antitrust court is completely bare of any facts relating to this period, or indeed any period after 1941. For the Government's proof in the antitrust case, presented from 1940 to 1944, concerned the gypsum industry prior to and until 1941, and no further evidence has ever been introduced into any of these litigations. We thus know literally nothing about the state of the gypsum industry between 1948, when this Court, on evidence not extending beyond 1941, first held that there had been an antitrust violation, and 1951. How, then, can we assume that this earlier violation, adjudicated for the first time in 1948, continued thereafter?

[Nature and Extent of Violation]

The answer to this question depends on the nature and extent of that violation. According to Gypsum, the only illegality ever adjudicated was the fixing of prices on gypsum materials under the industry-wide uniform price fixing clauses of patent licenses which were found to have been the product of concerted action between Gypsum and its co-defendants. In other words, Gypsum, relying on the 1949 decree, which followed this Court's first decision, and its underlying findings,[26] argues that the maintenance of uniform patent licenses with price fixing clauses was the only patent misuse ever found. It then points out that it offered to prove below that price fixing in the industry stopped in 1941, and that the licenses were rescinded in 1948. Add to this the fact that the 1949 decree, and again this Court's 1950 interlocutory decree, enjoined Gypsum from enforcing these licenses, and, says Gypsum, the inference arises that the only patent misuse ever adjudicated had ceased by 1948 —an inference at least sufficient to allow the issue to go to trial on the facts.

According to appellees National and Certainteed, however, the adjudication of misuse in the antitrust proceeding was much broader, encompassing the regimentation of the entire gypsum industry, the restraint of commerce in unpatented gypsum products, the elimination of jobbers, and the standardization of trade practices throughout the industry. This broad view of the character of the antitrust violation rests upon this Court's 1950 decision, which held the 1949 decree too narrow and allowed the Government the broader relief embodied in the 1951 decree.[27] Appellees argue that the fact that this Court felt it necessary to broaden the 1949 decree involved by necessity an adjudication of broad patent misuse, misuse not prohibited by the 1949 decree and therefore left unpurged by it. In other words, the argument runs, the broadening of the decree by this Court necessarily involved a holding that Gypsum was guilty of violations not proscribed by the original decree, violations which existed unpurged during part or all of the 1948-1951 period, since they were first adjudicated by this Court in 1950 and presumptively continued until 1951, when they were finally dealt with by the 1951 decree.

Appellees' argument is ingenious, but incorrect. The course of decisions in the antitrust litigation clearly shows that the only misuse ever adjudicated was that arising from the uniform price fixing provisions of the license agreements. In the original [26] See n. 6, supra.

[27] 340 U. S. 76 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729]. This relief included the extension of the injunctive provisions to the entire United States (instead of merely the East) and to all gypsum products (instead of only gypsum board), compulsory licensing for an indefinite period (instead of for only 90 days), such licensing to include after-acquired (instead of only existing) patents.

suit the only undisputed issue of fact was that Gypsum had given its competitors uniform patent licenses containing a price fixing clause. The Government also charged Gypsum with a variety of other abuses, including price fixing on unpatented articles, elimination of jobbers, and standardization of trade practices. All of these charges were put in issue by Gypsum. On the appeal from the original dismissal of the proceedings, this Court held that the uniform price fixing licenses constituted a per se antitrust violation, and also that the Government's evidence as to the other matters constituted a prima facie case of additional violation.[28] On remand, the District Court, instead of going into a factual trial of these other matters, granted summary judgment on the price fixing violation. This left all of the other matters still at issue. They continued to remain at issue after the ensuing appeals to this Court, for in affirming the summary judgment[29] and broadening the 1949 decree,[30] this Court made it clear it was proceeding solely on the basis of the narrow antitrust violation found by the District Court:[31]

> "We agree with a statement made by counsel for the Government in argument below that as a 'matter of formulating the decree' many facts offered to be proven would have effect upon the conclusion of a court as to the decree's terms. However, we read the preliminary statement of the District Court . . . as an adjudication of violation of the Sherman Act by the action in concert of the defendants through the fixed-price licenses, accepting as true the underlying facts in defendants' proof by proffer. The trial judges understood the summary judgment to be, as Judge Stephens said, 'limited to that one undisputed question.' Judge Garrett and Judge Jackson agreed. That conclusion entitled the Government only to relief based on that finding and the proffered facts. On that basis we dismissed United States Gypsum's appeal from the decree, and on that basis we examine the Government's objection to the decree.
>
> * * *
>
> "[A decree] is not limited to prohibition of the proven means by which the evil was accomplished, but may range broadly through practices connected with acts actually found to be illegal. . . .
>
> ". . . We turn them to the Government's proposals for modification of the decree on the assumption that only a violation through concerted industry license agreements has been proven, but recognizing, as is conceded by defendants, that relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation." 340 U. S., at 87-89, 90.[32]

Thus we see that the only patent misuse that has ever been established in this long-drawn-out litigation is concerted price fixing under the former patent licenses, and that the 1950 holding of this Court was not an adjudication of other violations but only an application of the well known principle that relief in antitrust cases may range beyond the narrow area of proven violations. Nothing, therefore, in the broadening of the decree supports the inference that the acts prohibited therein and left open in the 1949 decree continued in the pendente lite period or, in fact, had ever taken place. Perhaps Gypsum did engage in broad regimentation of the industry, as charged in the Government's 1940 complaint, and perhaps such misuse or its effects continued through 1951. But there is nothing in this record to show that any such hypothesis is true, and no part of it has ever been proved. The question is one of fact, and Gypsum is entitled to go to trial on it.

[Unresolved Factual Question]

Nor is it enough to sustain the judgment below to say, as appellees do, that the conceded "old" misuse, consisting of industry-wide price fixing through uniform patent licenses, should be presumed to have continued unpurged into the 1948-1951 period. The record shows, without dispute so far, that for seven years before the beginning of the 1948-1951 period Gypsum had not engaged in price fixing, and that for two of

---

[28] 333 U. S. 364 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,226].

[29] 339 U. S. 960.

[30] 340 U. S. 76 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729].

[31] As we have seen, supra, pp. 2-3, the Court dismissed Gypsum's appeal from the 1949 decree. 339 U. S. 959 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,632].

[32] That this Court's expansion of the 1949 decree did not involve a corresponding holding of broader violation is illustrated by what was done with respect to the geographical area covered by the decree. The Government's complaint charged Gypsum with violation only in the eastern part of the United States. There was never any claim, much less proof, that Gypsum engaged in any improper activities in the West. Yet the Court granted the Government's prayer that the 1949 decree be broadened to cover the whole United States. This was done not because it was alleged or proved that Gypsum had done anything illegal in the West, but simply on the theory that effective relief required that the decree be broader than the "proven violation."

those three years price fixing had been under injunction. These factors raised a sufficient inference of purge prior to the critical period to entitle Gypsum to go to trial on the point and to prevent the court from granting what in effect was summary judgment. Cf. United States v. Oregon State Medical Society [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,264], 343 U. S. 326. Nor do we think this conclusion is overcome by the lower court's findings that the "five acts" of purge offered by Gypsum were not sufficient to establish purge. We express no opinion upon the merits of these findings, for their sufficiency can hardly be judged in isolation from the facts as to competitive conditions in the gypsum industry during the 1941-1951 period, on which the record is silent. And other alleged antitrust violations are not now available to appellees as acts of misuse, for as to them Gypsum has not yet had its day in court.

We conclude, therefore, that the judgment below cannot be supported on the basis of the claimed unpurged "old" misuse.

C.

["Old" Misuse—Infringement Count]

We pass lastly to the lower court's holding that the "old" misuse, without regard to purge, barred the infringement Count of Gypsum's suits. In effect this holding was that, because "of the practical and legal situation," proscription of this Count should be added by relation back, as it were, to the relief already accorded by the 1951 decree. Admittedly such relief was neither obtained nor sought by the Government in either the 1949 or 1951 decree proceedings. To be sure one of the prayers for relief in the Government's antitrust complaint in 1940 had been that the defendants should be enjoined from bringing any action for infringement of any of the patents involved or from attempting to collect in any way royalties or fees for their use until all misuse had been abandoned and its consequences dissipated. In the subsequent 1949 and 1951 decree and appellate proceedings, however, this item of proposed relief was never adverted to, much less pressed upon the courts. And even in the 1953-1954 modification proceedings, and now, the Government does not contend that Gypsum is precluded from maintaining the infringement Count. The conclusion seems inescapable that the Government's original request for such relief was in effect withdrawn. In this state of affairs we think this relief should not have been added to the decree in 1954, in the absence of proof of intervening circumstances indicating its need in the public interest. Cf. Hughes v. United States [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,213], 342 U. S. 353. There was no such proof, and without it the proscription of the infringement Count amounted to the imposition of an unwarranted penalty on Gypsum.

[Hartford Empire Cases]

Nor do we think that anything in the Hartford-Empire cases, 323 U. S. 386, 324 U. S. 570 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,319], to which the lower court attached much weight, justifies what was done here. The basic difference between Hartford and this case is that in Hartford the injunction against infringement suits on Hartford's misused patents was part of the original relief granted the Government, whereas here that relief was added, without the taking of any evidence as to justifying intervening circumstances, some five years after the original decree was entered in the District Court, and three years after its enlargement pursuant to the 1950 decision of this Court,[33] which made no mention of this type of relief.

Moreover, the factors justifying such relief in Hartford were quite different from those involved here, in that the litigated findings of fact as to Hartford's violation of the antitrust laws were much broader than anything found here. See supra, p. 12. Beyond this, in Hartford only infringement suits against nondefendants were enjoined, and not, as here, suits against co-defendants; and despite the breadth of Hartford's violations, this Court held that Hartford was entitled to quantum meruit compensation for the pendente lite use of its patents unless further violations of the antitrust laws during that period were shown. No such violations on Gypsum's part were shown or claimed by the Government or appellees, except for the inclusion of the contract Counts in Gypsum's suits, a contention which has already been met. And although the Court in Hartford struck down royalty-free compulsory licensing as part of the relief, the District Court here in effect held these appellees entitled to three years' free use of Gypsum's patents. We thus find no parallel between this case and Hartford.[34]

[33] 340 U. S. 76 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729].

[Summary of Rulings]

Our conclusions then are these: The enjoining of Counts I and II of Gypsum's Iowa suits was proper, and upon remand the District Court may, by appropriate modification of the decree of May 15, 1951, or otherwise, require Gypsum to discontinue and dismiss such Counts with prejudice. The enjoining of Counts III, IV and V of those suits was not justified upon this record, and as to them the case should be remanded to the District Court for the taking of evidence upon the issues of misuse and purge as they may relate to the period since February 1, 1948. We think it appropriate that these issues should be tried and disposed of by the antitrust court rather than the Iowa court, both because of reasons already given, supra, pp. 5-6, and because of the antitrust court's familiarity with what has occurred in these protracted litigations.[35] However, should the antitrust court conclude that Gypsum is not barred from recovery on Counts III, IV or V by reason of unpurged patent misuse, we think that the trial and disposition of all other issues, including any defense of patent invalidity, should then take place in the District Courts in which the two suits are pending. There is no reason why the three-judge court should be burdened with such issues.

[Reversed and Remanded]

Accordingly, we reverse the judgment below and remand the case to the District Court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

Mr. JUSTICE CLARK took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS join, dissenting.

I would affirm the judgment of the United States District Court.

[Scope of Dissent]

For many years appellees used patents belonging to the appellant, United States Gypsum Company, under certain license agreements. On March 8, 1948, this Court decided that on the record before it these license agreements constituted a conspiracy between Gypsum and its licensees to violate the Sherman Act. 333 U. S. 364 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,226]. Appellees then ceased paying royalties under their license agreement until May 15, 1951, on which date the United States District Court rendered a final decree holding the license agreements null and void. On this latter date new patent licenses were obtained from Gypsum which did not contain the illegal provisions and were not part of a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act. This is a suit to make appellees pay for the use of Gypsum's patents during the period of February 1, 1948, to May 1951. Gypsum seeks payment in five separate counts. Counts one and two assert claims under the old outlawed license agreements. I agree with the Court's holding that Gypsum cannot recover on these counts. I also agree that the patent misuse rule which bars recovery "is an extension of the equitable doctrine of 'unclean hands' to the patent field." I disagree with the Court's holding that Gypsum is not barred from attempting to recover for the use of its patents during the period on the other three counts of "quantum meruit," "indebitatus assumpsit," and "infringement."

[Misuse Doctrine Weakened]

In declining to permit Gypsum to recover under the license agreements the Court

[34] National makes a further contention as to the quantum meruit Counts. It argues that these Counts in any event were properly proscribed because they related to an illegal transaction. But the rule on which National relies applies only where the quantum meruit claim declares upon an implied agreement which, had it been reduced to an express contract, would itself have been illegal; that is, a contract where the kind of consideration moving between the parties is wholly against public policy, as, for example, a contract to commit murder. The implied contract here was not of that character, for certainly an express contract simply for reasonable compensation for the use of Gypsum's patents would not have been illegal.

[35] We recognize that the composition of the three-judge court has completely changed since the main antitrust case was tried. Even so, the present court has acquired an intimate knowledge of the record.

here necessarily does so on the ground that the licenses were a part of an unlawful conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act. That conspiracy existed as long as the illegal agreements remained in existence.[1] And the agreements could and did continue to exist whether or not their inseparable parts,[2] such as the price-fixing provisions, were enforced from time to time. Any attempt to enforce directly or indirectly any part of the illegal agreements shows that the agreements and the conspiracy were still in existence. The present holding clearly indicates their continuing existence during this period in question. The majority appears to recognize the coexistence of the license agreements and the conspiracy when it bars a recovery for the use of the patents so long as the suits are for "royalties" under the contracts. But under the Court's holding persons who misuse their patents hereafter, and who could not, under our prior cases, recover compensation for patent use because of their illegal agreements, may now, in some instances, be able to recover full compensation by labeling their causes of action "indebitatus assumpsit" or "quantum meruit." To permit a Sherman Act conspirator to recover for patent use under any label from a co-conspirator where the licensing agreement for that patent was held void as an integral part of the conspiracy runs counter to the doctrine of "unclean hands." That doctrine rests basically on the idea that the law leaves wrong-doers where it finds them. The Court does not do so here. Appellant and appellees have been found guilty of an unlawful conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act. Gypsum's patents were an essential part of that conspiracy. But by giving its lawsuits appropriate labels it has obtained an opportunity to seek compensation for the use of tools it supplied to violate the law. I agree with the District Court that to allow recovery on these differently labeled counts "is but a left-handed, indirect method for recovering the royalties provided in the illegal license agreements." As I see it this permits "a licensor to be protected on an illegal contract merely because he chose one remedy rather than another on the same substantive issue." Edward Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,524], 329 U. S. 394, 399-400. I think the Court's holding seriously weakens the patent misuse doctrine and thereby makes enforcement of the Sherman Act far more difficult.[3]

[¶ 68,628] William Radovich v. National Football League, Bert Bell, J. Rufus Klawans, et al.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1956. No. 94. Dated February 25, 1957.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Construction of Sherman Act—Interstate Commerce—Applicability of Sherman Act to Professional Football.—The business of professional football, as conducted by a football league and its member clubs on a multistate basis, including the interstate transmission of games over radio and television, is subject to the provisions of the Sherman Act. A professional football player's complaint alleging that he was denied employment in organized professional football by an illegal conspiracy between a football league and its member clubs to monopolize commerce in professional football was held to state a cause of action within coverage of the antitrust laws. The Federal Baseball Club and Toolson cases, in which professional baseball was held to be immune from the application of the Sherman Act, are not controlling as to professional football since those decisions are specifically limited to the business of professional baseball. The orderly way to eliminate any error in, or discrimination caused by, the baseball decisions is by legislation and not by court decision.

[1] "It is the 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce' which § 1 of the Act strikes down, whether the concerted activity be wholly nascent or abortive on the one hand, or successful on the other." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 225, n. 59.

[2] MacGregor v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,525], 329 U. S. 402, 407.

[3] Some of the cases in which courts have utilized the doctrine to break up illegal combinations and practices are Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,177], 314 U. S. 495; United States v. National Lead Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,575], 332 U. S. 319; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,319], 324 U. S. 570.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce.—A professional football player's complaint alleging that he was denied employment in the business of professional football by a conspiracy between a football league and its member clubs was held to state a cause of action under the Sherman Act. The allegations concerning interstate commerce were held to be sufficient. In addition to the standard allegations, the complaint specifically alleged that radio and television transmission is a significant and integral part of the defendants' business, even to the extent of being the difference between a profit and a loss. Proof that the amount of commerce affected was substantial can be established at the trial.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.600.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—General Requirements—Injury to Public.—A professional football player's complaint alleging that he was denied employment in the business of professional football by a conspiracy between a football league and its member clubs was held to state a cause of action under the Sherman Act. While the complaint might have been more precise in its allegations concerning the purpose and effect of the conspiracy, the court ruled that it was not prepared to say that nothing can be extracted from the complaint that falls under the Sherman Act. The player's claim need only be tested under the Sherman Act's general prohibition against unreasonable restraints of trade and meet the requirement that he has thereby suffered injury. Congress has determined that such prohibited activities are injurious to the public and provided sanctions allowing private enforcement of the antitrust laws by an aggrieved party. The antitrust laws protect the victims of the forbidden practices as well as the public. The court will not add requirements to burden the private litigant beyond what is specifically set forth by Congress in those laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.170, 9009.475.

For the petitioner: Maxwell Keith and Joseph L. Alioto, San Francisco, Cal., and Elwood S. Kendrick, Los Angeles, Cal.

For the respondents: Marshall E. Leahy and John F. O'Dea, San Francisco, Cal., and Bernard I. Nordlinger, Washington, D. C.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,303.

[Summary of Case and Rulings]

MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text].

This action for treble damages and injunctive relief, brought under § 4 of the Clayton Act,[1] tests the application of the antitrust laws to the business of professional football. Petitioner Radovich, an all-pro guard formerly with the Detroit Lions, contends that the respondents[2] entered into a conspiracy to monopolize and control or-

[1] 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, reads as follows:

"Sec. 4. That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

Injunctive relief is provided for by 38 Stat. 737, 15 U. S. C. § 26.

[2] The respondents include the National Football League; its 10 member clubs at the time the complaint was filed: Boston Yanks, New York Giants, Philadelphia Eagles, Los Angeles Rams, Pittsburgh Steelers, Washington Redskins, Chicago Bears, Chicago Cardinals, Detroit Lions, and Green Bay Packers; the now defunct Pacific Coast League; the San Francisco Clippers, a member of the Pacific Coast League; Bert Bell, Commissioner of the National Football League; and J. Rufus Klawans, Commissioner of the Pacific Coast League.

ganized professional football in the United States, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act;[3] that part of the conspiracy was to destroy the All-America Conference, a competitive professional football league in which Radovich once played; and that pursuant to agreement, respondents boycotted Radovich and prevented him from becoming a player-coach in the Pacific Coast League. Petitioner alleges that respondents' illegal conduct damaged him in the sum of $35,000, to be trebled as provided by the Act. The trial court, on respondents' motion, dismissed the cause for lack of jurisdiction and failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. The Court of Appeals affirmed [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,303], 231 F. 2d 620, on the basis of Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200 (1922), and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,602], 346 U. S. 356 (1953), applying the baseball rule to all "team sports." It further found that even if such application was erroneous and that United States v. International Boxing Club [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236 (1955), applied, Radovich had not grounded his claim on conduct of respondents which was "calculated to prejudice the public or unreasonably restrain interstate commerce." 231 F. 2d, at 623. We granted certiorari, 352 U. S. 818, in order to clarify the application of the Toolson doctrine and determine whether the business of football comes within the scope of the Sherman Act. For the reasons hereafter stated we conclude that Toolson and Federal Baseball do not control; that the respondents' activities as alleged are within the coverage of the antitrust laws; and that the complaint states a cause of action thereunder.

I.

[Complaint]

Since the complaint was dismissed its allegations must be taken by us as true. It is, therefore, important for us to consider what Radovich alleged. Concisely the complaint states that:

1. Radovich began his professional football career in 1938 when he signed with the Detroit Lions, a National League club. After four seasons of play he entered the Navy, returning to the Lions for the 1945 season. In 1946 he asked for a transfer to a National League club in Los Angeles because of the illness of his father. The Lions refused the transfer and Radovich broke his player contract by signing with and playing the 1946 and 1947 seasons for the Los Angeles Dons, a member of the All-America Conference.[4] In 1948 the San Francisco Clippers, a member of the Pacific Coast League which was affiliated with but not a competitor of the National League, offered to employ Radovich as a player-coach. However, the National League advised that Radovich was black-listed and any affiliated club signing him would suffer severe penalties. The Clippers then refused to sign him in any position. This black-listing effectively prevented his employment in organized professional football in the United States.

2. The black-listing was the result of a conspiracy among the respondents to monopolize commerce in professional football among the States. The purpose of the conspiracy was to "control, regulate and dictate the terms upon which organized professional football shall be played throughout the United States" in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. It was part of the conspiracy to boycott the All-America Conference and its players with a view to its destruction and thus strengthen the monopolistic position of the National Football League.

3. As part of its football business, the respondent league and its member teams schedule football games in various metropolitan centers, including New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Los Angeles. Each team uses a standard player contract which prohibits a player from signing with another club without the consent of the club holding the player's contract. These contracts are enforced by agreement of the clubs to black-list any player violating them and to

[3] 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1, reads in pertinent part:

"Sec. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is hereby declared to be illegal. . . ."

26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 2, reads in pertinent part:

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . . shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. . . ."

[4] This Conference operated from 1946 through 1949 at which time it was disbanded.

visit severe penalties on recalcitrant member clubs. As a further "part of the business of professional football itself" and "directly tied in and connected" with its football exhibitions is the transmission of the games over radio and television into nearly every State of the Union. This is accomplished by contracts which produce a "significant portion of the gross receipts" and without which "the business of operating a professional football club would not be profitable." The playing of the exhibitions themselves "is essential to the interstate transmission by broadcasting and television" and the actions of the respondents against Radovich were necessarily related to these interstate activities.

In the light of these allegations respondents raise two issues: They say the business of organized professional football was not intended by Congress to be included within the scope of the antitrust laws; and, if wrong in this contention, that the complaint does not state a cause of action upon which relief can be granted.

II.

[Application of Antitrust to Football]

Respondents' contention, boiled down, is that agreements similar to those complained of here, which have for many years been used in organized baseball, have been held by this Court to be outside the scope of the antitrust laws.[5] They point to Federal Baseball and Toolson, supra, both involving the business of professional baseball, asserting that professional football has embraced the same techniques which existed in baseball at the time of the former decision.[6] They contend that stare decisis compels the same result here. True, the umbrella under which respondents hope to stand is not so large as that contended for in United States v. International Boxing Club, supra, nor in United States v. Shubert [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,942], 348 U. S. 222 (1955). There we were asked to extend Federal Baseball to boxing and the theater. Here respondents say that the contracts and sanctions which baseball and football find it necessary to impose have no counterpart in other businesses and that, therefore, they alone are outside the ambit of the Sherman Act. In Toolson we continued to hold the umbrella over baseball that was placed there some 31 years earlier by Federal Baseball. The Court did this because it was concluded that more harm would be done in overruling Federal Baseball than in upholding a ruling which at best was of dubious validity. Vast efforts had gone into the development and organization of baseball since that decision and enormous capital had been invested in reliance on its permanence. Congress had chosen to make no change.[7] All this, combined with the flood of litigation that would follow its repudiation, the harassment that would ensue, and the retroactive effect of such a decision, led the Court to the practical result that it should sustain the unequivocal line of authority reaching over many years.

[Baseball Decisions Limited]

The Court was careful to restrict Toolson's coverage to baseball, following the judgment of Federal Baseball only so far as it "determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws." 346 U. S., at 357. The Court reiterated this in United States v. Shubert, supra, at 230, where is said, "In short, Toolson was a narrow application of the rule of stare decisis." And again, in International Boxing Club, it added, "Toolson neither overruled Federal Baseball nor necessarily reaffirmed all that was said in Federal Baseball. . . . Toolson is not authority for exempting other businesses merely because of the circumstance that they are also based on the performance of local exhibitions." 348 U. S., at 242. Furthermore, in discussing the impact of the Federal Baseball decision, the Court made the observation that that decision "could not be relied upon as a basis of exemption for other segments of the entertainment business, athletic or otherwise. . . . The controlling consideration in Federal Baseball . . . was . . . the degree of interstate activity involved in the particular business under review." Id., at 242-243. It seems that this language would have made it clear that the Court intended to isolate these cases by limiting them to baseball, but since Toolson and Federal Baseball are still cited as controlling authority in antitrust actions involving other fields of business, we now specifically limit the rule there established to the facts there involved, i. e., the business of organized professional baseball. As long as the Congress continues to acquiesce we should adhere to—but not extend—the interpretation of the Act made in those cases. We did not extend them to boxing or the theater because we believed that the volume of interstate business in each—the rationale of Federal Baseball—was such that both activities were within the Act. Likewise, the volume of interstate business involved in organized professional football places it within the provisions of the Act.

[5] No contention is made that the business of professional football has any specific exemption from the antitrust laws.

[6] Since this action was dismissed on the pleadings, there has been no factual determination establishing the claimed similarity between the businesses of baseball and football.

[7] Congress did consider the extension of the baseball rule to other sports. In 1951 four separate bills were introduced to exempt organized professional sports from the antitrust laws. None of them were enacted. See H. R. 4229, 4230, 4231, and S. 1526, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. (1951).

[Legislative Repudiation]

If this ruling is unrealistic, inconsistent, or illogical, it is sufficient to answer, aside from the distinctions between the businesses,[8] that were we considering the question of baseball for the first time upon a clean slate we would have no doubts. But Federal Baseball held the business of baseball outside the scope of the Act. No other business claiming the coverage of those cases has such an adjudication. We, therefore, conclude that the orderly way to eliminate error or discrimination, if any there be, is by legislation and not by court decision. Congressional processes are more accommodative, affording the whole industry hearings and an opportunity to assist in the formulation of new legislation. The resulting product is therefore more likely to protect the industry and the public alike. The whole scope of congressional action would be known long in advance and effective dates for the legislation could be set in the future without the injustices of retroactivity and surprise which might follow court action. Of course, the doctrine of Toolson and Federal Baseball must yield to any congressional action and continues only at its sufferance. This is not a new approach. See Davis v. Department of Labor, 317 U. S. 249, 255 (1942);[9] compare Rutkin v. United States, 343 U. S. 130 (1952).

III.

[Interstate Commerce]

We now turn to the sufficiency of the complaint. At the outset the allegations of the nature and extent of interstate commerce seem to be sufficient. In addition to the standard allegations, a specific claim is made that radio and television transmission is a significant, integral part of the respondents' business, even to the extent of being the difference between a profit and a loss. Unlike International Boxing, the complaint alleges no definite percentage in this regard. However, the amount must be substantial and can easily be brought out in the proof. If substantial, as alleged, it alone is sufficient to meet the commerce requirements of the Act. See International Boxing, supra, at 241.

[Technical Objections]

Likewise, we find the technical objections to the pleading without merit. The test as to sufficiency laid down by Mr. Justice Holmes in Hart v. B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, 262 U. S. 271, 274 (1923), is whether "the claim is wholly frivolous." While the complaint might have been more precise in its allegations concerning the purpose and effect of the conspiracy, "we are not prepared to say that nothing can be extracted from this bill that falls under the act of Congress . . . ." Id., at 274. See also United States v. Employing Plasters Assn. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186 (1954).

Petitioner's claim need only be "tested under the Sherman Act's general prohibition on unreasonable restraints of trade," Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 614 (1953), and meet the requirement that petitioner has thereby suffered injury. Congress has, by legislative fiat, determined that such prohibited activities are injurious to the public[10] and has provided sanctions allowing private enforcement of the antitrust [8] Consideration of basic differences, if any, between the baseball and football businesses, such as the football draft system, use of league affiliations, training facilities and techniques, etc., is not necessary to this decision.

[9] The concurring opinion uses this language: "Such a desirable end cannot now be achieved merely by judicial repudiation of the Jensen doctrine." 317 U. S., at 259.

[10] In Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469 (1940), this Court said: "The end sought was the prevention of restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended laws by an aggrieved party. These laws protect the victims of the forbidden practices as well as the public. Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,251], 334 U. S. 219, 236 (1948). Furthermore, Congress itself has placed the private antitrust litigant in a most favorable position through the enactment of § 5 of the Clayton Act.[11] Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,778], 340 U. S. 558 (1951). In the face of such a policy this Court should not add requirements to burden the private litigant beyond what is specifically set forth by Congress in those laws.

Respondents' remaining contentions we believe to be lacking in merit.

[Reversed]

We think that Radovich is entitled to an opportunity to prove his charges. Of course, we express no opinion as to whether or not respondents have, in fact, violated the antitrust laws, leaving that determination to the trial court after all the facts are in.

Reversed.

[Dissenting Opinions]

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, dissenting.

The difficult problem in this case derives for me not out of the Sherman Law but in relation to the appropriate compulsion of stare decisis. It does not derive from the Sherman Law because the most conscientious probing of the text and the interstices of the Sherman Law fails to disclose that Congress, whose will we are enforcing, excluded baseball—the conditions under which that sport is carried on—from the scope of the Sherman Law but included football. I say this, fully aware that the Sherman Law's applicability turns on the particular circumstances of activities pursued in trade and commerce among the several States. But whether the conduct of an enterprise is within or without the limits of the Sherman Law is, after all, a question for judicial determination, and conscious as I am of my limited competence in matters athletic, I have yet to hear of any consideration that led this Court to hold that "the business of providing public baseball games for profit between clubs of professional baseball players was not within the scope of the federal antitrust laws," Toolson v. New York Yankees [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,602], 346 U. S. 356, 357, that is not equally applicable to football.

But considerations pertaining to stare decisis do raise a serious question for me. That principle is a vital ingredient of law, for it "embodies an important social policy." Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U. S. 106, 119. It would disregard the principle for a judge stubbornly to persist in his views on a particular issue after the contrary had become part of the tissue of the law. Until then, full respect for stare decisis does not require a judge to forego his own convictions promptly after his brethren have rejected them.

The considerations that governed me two years ago in United States v. International Boxing Club [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236, have not lost their force by reason of the authority that time gives to a single decision. And so I am confronted with the Toolson case, supra, which guides me to find the present situation within its scope, and the Boxing case, supra, which, while it looks the other way, left Toolson as a living authority. Respect for the doctrine of stare decisis does not yet require me to disrespect the views I expressed in the Boxing case.

I would affirm.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN joins, dissenting.

What was foreshadowed by United States v. International Boxing Club [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236, has now come to pass. The Court, in holding that professional football is subject to the antitrust laws, now says in effect that profesto restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services, all of which had come to be regarded as a special form of public injury." (Emphasis supplied.) Id., at 493. In Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20 (1912), speaking of the antitrust laws, the Court said: "The law is its own measure of right and wrong, of what it permits, or forbids, and the judgment of the courts cannot be set up against it in a supposed accommodation of its policy with the good intention of parties, and it may be, of some good results." (Emphasis supplied.) Id., at 49.

---

[11] 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 16, declares that a final judgment against a defendant in proceedings by the Government for violation of the antitrust laws may be introduced by a private litigant in a subsequent treble damage action and establishes prima facie a violation of the antitrust laws.

sional baseball is sui generis so far as those laws are concerned, and that therefore Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200, and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,602], 346 U. S. 356, do not control football by reason of stare decisis. Since I am unable to distinguish football from baseball under the rationale of Federal Baseball and Toolson, and can find no basis for attributing to Congress a purpose to put baseball in a class by itself, I would adhere to the rule of stare decisis and affirm the judgment below.

If the situation resulting from the baseball decisions is to be changed, I think it far better to leave it to be dealt with by Congress than for this Court to becloud the situation further, either by making untenable distinctions between baseball and other professional sports, or by discriminatory fiat in favor of baseball.

[¶ 68,629] Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Company, et al.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1956. No. 63. Dated February 25, 1957.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Conspiracy to Fix Prices—Zone Delivered Pricing System—Validity of Federal Trade Commission Order Prohibiting Individual Use of System.—Where the Federal Trade Commission found that manufacturers of lead pigments had conspired to adopt and use a zone delivered pricing system in their sale of lead pigments in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission had the power to prohibit the manufacturers from individually adopting the same or a similar system of pricing for the purpose or with the effect of "matching" the prices of competitors.

Under the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission is empowered to prevent the use of unfair methods of competition. Also, the Commission is clothed with wide discretion in determining the type of order that is necessary to terminate unfair practices. In the instant case, the remedy selected by the Commission had a reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist. The simplicity of operation of the pricing system lends itself to unlawful manipulation; the system had been used in the industry for almost a quarter of a century; and the originator and chief beneficiary of the system had been previously adjudged a violator of the antitrust laws. The Commission correctly determined that it was necessary to include some restraint in its order against the individual use of the system by the manufacturers in order to prevent a continuance of the unfair competitive practices found to exist. Under the circumstances in the case, it would not have been sufficient merely to prohibit the manufacturers from conspiring to adopt the system.

The order did not prohibit independent delivered zone pricing per se, and it did not prohibit the practice of the absorption of actual freight in order to foster competition. Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended, which permits a seller in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor, is read into every Commission order. Furthermore, the order was temporary since the Commission expressed its intention to eliminate the individual prohibition when competition in the industry is restored, and delivered zone pricing violates the order only when (1) there are identical prices with competitors (2) resulting from zone delivered pricing.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5035.56; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8621.

For the petitioner: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Victor R. Hansen and Charles H. Weston, Department of Justice; Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission; and Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission.

For the respondents: Eugene Z. Du Bose, New York, N. Y., for National Lead Co.; Thomas J. McDowell, Cleveland, Ohio, for Sherwin-Williams Co.; Nathan S. Blumberg, Chicago, Ill., for Eagle-Picher Co.; and James D. Ewing, John B. Henrich, Jr., Richard Serviss, Robert A. Sturges, John T. Van Keuls, and J. Kenneth Campbell, of counsel.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,211, in FTC Dkt. 5253.

[Issue]

MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text].

The sole question involved in this proceeding under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act[1] concerns the power of the Commission in framing an order pursuant to its finding that respondents had conspired to adopt and use a zone delivered pricing system in their sale of lead pigments.[2] In its general cease and desist order prohibiting concert of action among respondents in the further use of such system, the Commission inserted a provision directing each respondent individually to cease and desist from adopting the same or a similar system of pricing for the purpose or with the effect of "matching" the prices of competitors. The respondents assert that this is beyond the power of the Commission, and the Court of Appeals agreed, [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,211] 227 F. 2d 825, striking that provision from the Commission's order. We granted certiorari, 351 U. S. 961, because of the importance of the question in the administration of the Act. We restore the stricken provision of the Commission order, permitting it to stand with the interpretations placed upon it in this opinion.

I.

[FTC Findings]

The original proceeding under § 5 of the Act was commenced in 1944. The order was entered on a second amended complaint filed in 1946. After protracted hearings, the Commission entered its findings which the Court of Appeals has held to be supported by substantial evidence. The findings material here are as follows:

The pricing practice of the industry as to the sale of white lead in oil prior to 1933 is not shown in the record. However, National Lead had as early as 1910 sold this pigment on the basis of territorial differentials involving free freight to specified towns. The differentials added to the base price were generally uniform for some 589 cities listed in National Lead's pricing system in 1933. The charge to purchasers outside the listed cities was the base price plus actual freight to the nearest listed city. In the sales of dry white lead and lead oxides it appears that by the sales practice prior to 1933 there was a uniform delivered price in the case of the white lead, while the purchasers of lead oxides paid the freight charge in addition to the base price.

Beginning in July 1933, the industry held a series of meetings in Chicago for the ostensible purpose of drafting a code of fair competition to govern it under the National Industrial Recovery Act. These meetings resulted in an understanding and agreement among those attending, including respondents, to sell lead pigments "on the basis of flat delivered prices to customers within designated zones, with uniform differentials applicable as between such zones . . . .". 49 F. T. C. 840. Four zoning systems were established covering the various lead pigments. As an example, the system for white lead in oil and "keg" products consisted of 12 geographical zones, one known as a par zone. The remaining zones in this system were known as premium zones, the price in each being determined by adding a set premium to the par zone price. These premiums varied from $.125 per cwt. in two of the zones to a high of $1 per cwt. in the premium zone covering the State of New Mexico.[3] The zones were highly artificial and zone boundaries led to bizarre results

[1] 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45.

[2] The three principal lead pigments are dry white lead, white lead in oil, and the lead oxides, red lead and litharge. Dry white lead is a fine white powder used as a pigment in paints. White lead in oil is white lead with linseed oil added and is sold for use as the basic ingredient in exterior house paint. Lead oxides and litharge are sold to electric storage battery manufacturers as the basic raw material for battery plates. Red lead is also the basic ingredient in red lead paint commonly used as a protective coating for iron and steel structures.

[3] The par zone includes a number of northeastern and midwestern States. However, some cities located within these States are excluded from the par zone. On the other hand, the San Francisco area is a par zone, as is the City of St. Louis, though both are located in States not included in par zone areas. For a detailed discussion and maps of the operation of the zone pricing system, see the findings, 49 F. T. C. 840-870.

at times, with purchasers located near the plants of respondents being charged higher prices than those located at a distance from the plants. The industry, including respondents, not only agreed to sell at the same zone delivered prices in identical geographical zones but also adopted uniform discounts, terms of sale, and differentials with respect to certain of their products. A further agreement was to sell white lead in oil on the basis of consignment contracts.

The Commission stated that "nowhere in the code, nor in any preliminary draft of a code produced at the meetings of any of the committees, is there any reference to the use of zones or to territorial differences in the prices of lead pigments, or to the use of agency or consignment contracts or arrangements in the sale of white lead-in-oil." Id., at 839. The Commission added that "with certain exceptions, the respondents have followed the pricing practices and have adhered to the terms and conditions for the sale of lead pigments agreed upon in 1933 and 1934 as herein found from 1934 to the present time." Id., at 849. The respondents admit that they are bound by these findings and we see no reason to disturb them.

II.

[FTC Order and Opinion]

The Commission entered an order prohibiting respondents from entering into or carrying out any "planned common course of action," agreement, or conspiracy to sell at prices determined pursuant to a "zone delivered price system," or any other system resulting in identical prices at the points of sale. The order also included a provision, to which respondents strenuously object, directing each of them to cease and desist from

> "quoting or selling lead pigments at prices calculated or determined in whole or in part pursuant to or in accordance with a zone delivered price system for the purpose or with the effect of systemically matching the delivered price quotations or the delivered prices of other sellers of lead pigments and thereby preventing purchasers from finding any advantage in price in dealing with one or more sellers as against another." Id., at 873-874.

The Commission, in an accompanying opinion, stated that in all cases where it found violations of the law, "it is the Commission's duty to determine to the best of its ability the remedy necessary to suppress such activity and to take every precaution to preclude its revival." Id., at 884. In this case, the opinion pointed out, the respondents cooperatively revised the pricing practices in the industry by establishing a "uniform zone pricing system." Detailed discussions were carried on which resulted not only in an agreement, but "maps showing the boundaries of the zones to be observed . . . were distributed" by the individual respondents. Id., at 884. Each respondent has "since that time . . . followed the pricing system and adhered to the zone boundaries so discussed and shown on these maps." Ibid. Discussing the complaint, the Commission in its opinion further noted that charges were included against each respondent as to its individual use of and adherence to the zone system of selling " 'for the purpose and with the effect of enabling the respondents to match exactly their offers to sell lead pigments to any prospective purchaser at any destination, thereby eliminating competion between and among themselves.' . . . It was the adherence by each of them to this system of pricing that made the combination work. . . . Unless and until each of the respondents is prohibited from so adhering to the system and from so using the zones, the evils springing from the combination, one of which is to eliminate price competition, may well continue indefinitely. Unless the respondents, representing practically the entire economic power in the industry, are deprived of the device which made their combination effective, an order merely prohibiting the combination may well be a useless gesture." Id., at 884-885.

In its view, the Commission added, the "prohibition is necessary, not because it is unlawful in all circumstances for an individual seller, acting independently, to sell its products on a delivered price basis in specified territories, but to make the order fully effective against the trade restraining conspiracy in which each of the respondents [defendants] participated." Id., at 884. When and if competition is restored and the individual prohibition is no longer necessary, the Commission expressed its intention, upon application, to vacate the latter provision of its order.

III.

[Scope of Order]

At the beginning we must understand the limits of the contested portion of the order.

First, it is temporary. Though its life expectancy is not definite, it is clear that the Commission was creating a breathing spell during which independent pricing might be established without the hang-over of the long-existing pattern of collusion. Second, the order is directed solely at the use of a zone delivered pricing system[4] and no other. This system is a pricing method based on geographic divisions or zones, the boundaries of which are entirely drawn by the seller. His delivered price is the same throughout a particular geographic zone so drawn up by him. Customarily the delivered price is different between zones, though as here, widely separated zones, geographically, might have the same delivered price. It is well to mention here that while this Court has passed upon the validity of basing point systems of sales, Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,363], 324 U. S. 726 (1945), it has not decided the validity of the zone pricing plan used here. Third, zone delivered pricing per se is not banned by the order. The Commission might have made the order more specific by entering a flat prohibition of the use for a definite period of the device found to be "the very cornerstone of the . . . conspiracy," i. e., zone pricing. See Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,319], 323 U. S. 386, 428 (1945), where the corporate defendants were enjoined from "forming or joining any such trade association" for a period of five years. But the Commission chose the more flexible sanction, i. e., the limited use of zone delivered pricing. However, it concluded that the future use should be temporarily restricted for the protection of the public. And so, delivered zone pricing violates the order only when two conditions are present: (1) identical prices with competitors (2) resulting from zone delivered pricing. Considering these conditions with the mechanics of the zone plan, we see that the only way prices can be systematically identical is for the zones of competitors to be so drawn as to be in whole or in part identical and for zone prices to be the same in those zones which coincide or overlap.[5]

[Meeting Competition]

Respondents contend that the cease and desist order, as written, excludes the benefits of § 2(b) of the Clayton Act.[6] While § 2(b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems . . . [but] only [with] the seller's 'lower' price and [with] that only to the extent that it is made 'in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor,'" Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,364], 324 U. S. 746, 753 (1945), this section is read into every Commission order. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,279], 343 U. S. 470, 476 (1952). Since § 2(b) must, therefore, be read into this order, the respondents are afforded all of the benefits of that section.

IV.

[Individual Use of Zone Pricing]

It is the contention of respondents that the contested paragraph of the order effectively bans the noncollusive, individual use of zone pricing, a lawful, competitive sales method, and is therefore beyond the authority of the Commission. Respondents further assert that even if the Commission had such authority its exercise here was entirely improper, unnecessary, and would, in fact, hamper competition in the industry. They stress that the complaint did not include a charge that the individual use of zone pricing was unlawful; that it came into the case after the Trial Examiner had filed his recommended decision and order; and that respondents were denied the opportunity of rebutting the charge by evidence showing zone pricing to be "a logical, economical, and competitive method of doing business." The insertion of the objectionable paragraph, they contend, violates due process in that they had no opportunity to defend. Since § 2(b) is read into every Commission order and since it would allow respondents to rebut the charge, their contention is completely answered and we shall not deal with it further.

[Fair Hearing]

It goes without saying that the requirements of a fair hearing include notice of [4] Our discussion of the zone delivered pricing system should in no way be construed as our approval of its use. We do not reach that question.

[5] At oral argument, counsel for the Federal Trade Commission was requested by the Court to submit a statement on behalf of the Commission setting forth its view as to the scope of the disputed paragraph of the cease and desist order. In response, the Commission supplied its interpretation which coincides with that set out here.

[6] 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13(b).

the claims of the opposing party and an opportunity to meet them. Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1 (1938). The record indicates that the respondents were afforded those safeguards. The emphasis that there was no charge, no evidence, no finding to support the inclusion of the objectionable provision in the order is misplaced. Its insertion was nothing more than a mode of implementation, selected by the Commission, to enforce its findings of violations of the Act. Moreover, the record is replete with evidence that counsel supporting the complaint would seek the use of such a method of enforcement. As far back as in early 1947, while the case was before the Examiner, the issue concerning the effect of the zone pricing system used by respondents was before the Commission on motions to dismiss. Admittedly Count II of the complaint dealt with the use of the zone system itself. The Commission overruled the motions to dismiss, adopting the view of counsel supporting the complaint that its allegations were directed against the effects of the alleged system or method, i. e., the zone pricing plan, and "not against individual instances" of discrimination in pricing. Furthermore, in May 1948, almost five years before the decree was entered, counsel supporting the complaint filed written exceptions to the recommended decision of the Examiner on the ground, among others, that it did not include a provision similar to the one objected to here. If respondents thought rebuttal evidence necessary, the record is bare of any effort on their part to offer it. Nor was any request made to reopen the case for that purpose after it reached the Commission.

[FTC's Power]

We pass on to respondents' major contention questioning the power of the Commission. As the Court has said many times before, the Commission may exercise only the powers granted it by the Act. Federal Trade Commission v. Western Meat Co., 272 U. S. 554, 559 (1926). The relevant sections empower the Commission to prevent the use of unfair methods of competition and authorize it, after finding an unfair method present, to enter an order requiring the offender "to cease and desist" from using such unfair method.

The Court has held that the Commission is clothed with wide discretion in determining the type of order that is necessary to bring an end to the unfair practices found to exist. In Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,451], 327 U. S. 608 (1946), the Court named the Commission "the expert body to determine what remedy is necessary to eliminate the unfair or deceptive trade practices which have been disclosed. It has wide latitude for judgment and the courts will not interfere except where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist." Id. at 612-613. Thereafter, in Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,237], 333 U. S. 683, 726 (1948), the Court pointed out that the Congress, in passing the Act, "felt that courts needed the assistance of men trained to combat monopolistic practices in the framing of judicial decrees in antitrust litigation." In the light of this, the Court reasoned, it should not "lightly modify" the orders of the Commission. Again, in Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., supra, at 473, we said that "if the Commission is to attain the objectives Congress envisioned, it cannot be required to confine its road block to the narrow lane the transgressor has traveled; it must be allowed effectively to close all roads to the prohibited goal, so that its order may not be by-passed with impunity." We pointed out there that Congress had placed the primary responsibility for fashioning orders upon the Commission. These cases narrow the issue to the question: Does the remedy selected have a "reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist"? We believe that it does. First, the simplicity of operation of the plan lends itself to unlawful manipulation; second, it had been used in the industry for almost a quarter of a century; and, third, its originator and chief beneficiary had been previously adjudged a violator of the antitrust laws. United States v. National Lead Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,575], 332 U. S. 319 (1947).

[Order Upheld]

The respondents were found to have plainly disregarded the law. In this respect the Commission correctly considered the circumstances under which the illegal acts occurred. Those in utter disregard of law, as here, "call for repression by sterner measures than where the steps could reasonably have been thought permissible." United States v. United States Gypsum Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729], 340 U. S. 76, 89-90 (1950). Respondents made no appeal here from some of the findings as to their guilt. Having lost the battle on the facts, they hope to win the war on the type of decree. They fight for the right to continue to use individually the very same weapon with which they carried on their unlawful enterprise. The Commission concluded that this must not be permitted. It was "not obliged to assume, contrary to common experience, that a violator of the antitrust laws will relinquish the fruits of his violations more completely than [it] requires . . . ." International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, 400 (1947). Although the zone plan might be used for some lawful purposes, decrees often suppress a lawful device when it is used to carry out an unlawful purpose. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,013], 309 U. S. 436 (1940) ; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707 (1944). In such instances the Court is obliged not only to suppress the unlawful practice but to take such reasonable action as is calculated to preclude the revival of the illegal practices. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, supra, at 461; Local 167, I. B. T. v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,043], 291 U. S. 293 (1934). See also United States v. United States Gypsum Co., supra; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,316], 323 U. S. 173, 188 (1944).[7] We therefore conclude that, under the circumstances here, the Commission was justified in its determination that it was necessary to include some restraint in its order against the individual corporations in order to prevent a continuance of the unfair competitive practices found to exist. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,170], 302 U. S. 112, 120 (1937). We shall now examine the restraint imposed.

Respondents point out that in only one other case in the long history of the Commission has a similar order been entered. They say our restoration of the contested paragraph will effectively prevent competition. In its supplemental memorandum, see note 5, supra, the Commission has clearly stated its understanding of the scope and effect of the order. It is our conclusion that the order was not intended to and does not prohibit or interfere with independent delivered zone pricing per se. Nor does it prohibit the practice of the absorption of actual freight as such in order to foster competition. Furthermore, as we have said, there is read into the order the provision of § 2(b) of the Clayton Act as to the right of a seller in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor. This is not to say that a seller may plead this section in defense of the use of an entire pricing system. The section is designed to protect competitors in individual transactions.

Respondents pose hypothetical situations which they say may rise up to plague them. However, "we think it would not be good judicial administration," as our late Brother Jackson said in International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, 401 (1947), to strike the contested paragraph of the order to meet such conjectures. The Commission has reserved jurisdiction to meet just such contingencies. As actual situations arise they can be presented to the Commission in evidentiary form rather than as fantasies. And, we might add, if there is a burden that cannot be made lighter after application to the Commission, then respondents must remember that those caught violating the Act must expect some fencing in. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, at 187.

Reversed.

[¶ 68,630] Charles Lawlor and Mitchell Pantzer, Co-Partners, Trading as Independent Poster Exchange v. National Screen Service Corporation.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1956. No. 632. Dated February 25, 1957.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

[7] We need not discuss the full scope of the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, nor their relative breadth in comparison with those of a court of equity. As this Court said in May Dept. Stores Co. v. Labor Board, 326 U. S. 376, 390 (1945), "The test . . . is whether the Board might have reasonably concluded . . . that such an order was necessary. . . ."

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolization—Exclusive Agreements—Summary Judgment for Injunctive Relief—Existence of Issues of Fact—Scope of Appellate Review.—Although the United States Supreme Court agreed with a United States Court of Appeals that a motion for summary judgment should have been denied by a trial court in an action charging that a manufacturer-distributor of motion picture advertising accessories monopolized trade in such accessories by entering into exclusive agreements with producers and distributors of motion pictures, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the trial court for trial because the Court of Appeals had passed upon issues other than the per se invalidity of the exclusive agreements. The Supreme Court did not want the trial court to be bound by the considerations which the Court of Appeals had given to such other issues. In the opinion of the Supreme Court, it was unnecessary for the Court of Appeals to pass upon such other issues.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2530.16, 2540.12, 2610.304, 2610.554; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010, 9013.675, 9015, 9024, 9024.48.

For the petitioners: Francis T. Anderson, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the respondent: Louis Nizer and Walter S. Beck.

Vacating a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,509, reversing decisions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,919 and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,122. For a prior opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,061, reversing U. S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,709, which affirmed U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,619; for prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,217, 68,216, and 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,760, 62,603.

[Judgments Vacated]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: We agree with the Court of Appeals that the motion for summary judgment should have been denied. However, in our view, this disposition of the case made it unnecessary for the Court of Appeals to pass on any other issue than that of the per se invalidity of exclusive contracts under the Sherman Act. In order that the District Court not be bound by the consideration the Court of Appeals gave to the remaining issues, and without reaching any of the same, we grant the petition for writ of certiorari, vacate the judgments, and remand the cause to the District Court for trial.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, whom MR. JUSTICE BURTON and MR. JUSTICE HARLAN join, dissenting.

[Nature of Proceedings]

The District Court granted the motion of plaintiffs, the petitioners here, for summary judgment. The Court of Appeals, having found that summary judgment was not warranted, remanded the case for "[t]rial of the disputed factual issues." [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,509] 238 F. 2d 59, 68. This Court also holds that the motion for summary judgment should have been denied by the District Court: it grants certiorari and vacates the judgment of the Court of Appeals, but directs the District Court to do precisely what the Court of Appeals directed that court to do. This is the legal situation unless I wholly misconceive the matter.

Since the Court's disposition of the petition for certiorari affects the proper administration of its own business as well as the relation between this Court and Courts of Appeals, the matter deserves exposition.

[Court of Appeals Ruling]

The Court of Appeals thus stated what it called the critical issue before it:

> "Was there, in the cases involved in these appeals [there were other cases affecting other parties], a genuine issue as to a material fact which, under well-settled principles, precluded the entry of summary judgments adjudicating the defendant-appellant, National Screen Service Corporation ('National') to be an unlawful monopoly?" 238 F. 2d, at 60-61.

Having found that there were triable issues of fact, it concluded that summary judgment should not have been entered and sent the case back for trial. This Court now echoes these conclusions: the motion for summary judgment should have been denied and the plaintiffs must establish their claim at trial.

["Law of the Case"]

The explanation of the puzzle must lie in the statement that this Court is doing what it is doing "[i]n order that the District Court not be bound by the consideration the Court of Appeals gave to the remaining issues . . . ." This is an oblique concern about the so-called "law of the case." The only "law of the case" decided by the Court of Appeals is the legal issue on which this Court agrees with the Court of Appeals. Nowhere is there a suggestion in the petition for certiorari that when the case goes back to the District Court, the trial will be restricted in determining the facts relevant to a claim under the antitrust laws. (Indeed, petitioners' only suggestion that the new trial directed by the Court of Appeals will not leave all relevant issues open for trial is that the Court of Appeals indicated that some issues "require determination by the trier of facts," while the petitioners suggest that these are issues to be determined by the trial court as a matter of law.)

One cannot read the thirteen pages of argument in support of the petition here and not be left with the conviction that the adjudication before the Court of Appeals was exclusively of the issue as the Court of Appeals stated it. That is "the law of the case," so far as that phrase has meaning, and nothing else. In the federal courts "the law of the case" is not a legal principle. It is a bogey that has been exposed, a ghost that has been laid, since Mr. Justice Holmes's opinion for the Court in Messenger v. Anderson, 225 U. S. 436, 444. The misuse of the rule of practice embodied in the conception of "law of the case," we have occasion to reject in United States v. United States Smelting Refining & Mining Co., 339 U. S. 186, 198:

> "It is not applicable here because when the case was first remanded, nothing was finally decided. The whole proceeding thereafter was in fieri."

Here the only thing that was decided was, as this Court holds, rightly decided—namely, that on the facts summary judgment is precluded and the case must go to trial.

[Effect of Court's Action]

In granting the writ of certiorari, the Court sets aside all consideration by the Court of Appeals of issues other than "that of the per se invalidity of exclusive contracts under the Sherman Act." It is a customary practice for a Court of Appeals, in sending a case back to a District Court for trial, to give guidance on issues that may arise in the course of the trial in order to avoid needless appeals and retrials. No doubt a District Court must follow the adjudication of a Court of Appeals on reversal and remand of a case. But here the only adjudication was that the case be tried on all the relevant issues. We review judgments not talk. The basis of the reversal was a consideration by the Court of Appeals of opinions of this Court, and more particularly of our recent decisions in Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, and United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377. What this Court has decided in those and other antitrust cases, and not any passing observations by a Court of Appeals, are the controlling directions for the District Court.

[Role of Court]

If the opinion of the Court of Appeals in this case disregarded controlling rulings of this Court, the District Court is of course not bound to disregard such decisions of this Court. A District Court can hardly fail in its duty to its Court of Appeals in obeying what decisions of this Court command. On the other hand, if the Court of Appeals has expressed views that do not run counter to what this Court has decided, this Court should not direct the District Court to disregard them. Surely, this Court should not go out of its way to purport to pass on these questions at this stage of the proceedings, especially when the questions are abstract, and more particularly in such summary fashion. If we begin to grant petitions for certiorari although we agree with the judgment of a Court of Appeals because, perchance, in the opinion some dubious remarks may have been made that cannot as a matter of law control the trial of the cause (I am not implying that such is the case here), a new fecund source of business will still further swell the docket of this Court. Of course, if ever the contingency arises when a Court of Appeals challengingly or ignorantly disregards the controlling law as set forth by this Court, the means for correction here are ample and sure.

I would deny the petition.

[¶ 68,631] United Liquors Corporation, Sidney Perlberg, King Klein, Hubert R. Lewis, Alex Barizza, and George B. Hart v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1956. No. 637. Dated February 25, 1957.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division. Marion S. Boyd, District Judge.

Case No. 1246 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Practices—Price Fixing—Alcoholic Beverages.—A trial court finding that wholesalers of alcoholic beverages in the Memphis, Tennessee, trading area engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy to fix, maintain, and stabilize the prices of alcoholic beverages was affirmed.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181, 2011.282; Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20.

For the appellants: Thurman Arnold, Washington, D. C., and Hal Gerber, Memphis, Tenn.

For the appellee: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General, and Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Western District of Tennessee, Western Division, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,459; for a consent decree entered in the Court, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,383.

[Affirmed]

Per Curiam [In full text]: The motion to affirm is granted and the judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 68,632] Kimberly Knitwear, Inc., Jack Lazar and Helen Lazar v. Renee Y. Hall.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 95-296. Filed February 15, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Intervention.—Where a defendant in a patent suit had filed a counterclaim charging that the plaintiffs violated the antitrust laws, a party suing the plaintiffs for similar alleged violations of the antitrust laws in another action was not permitted to intervene in the patent suit. The party was denied intervention as of right on the ground that a determination of the antitrust counterclaim in the patent suit would not be binding on the party in his own antitrust suit, and permissive intervention was denied on the ground that the party's intervention would unduly delay the trial of the patent suit containing the antitrust counterclaim.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.535.

For the plaintiffs: Cooper, Dunham, Dearborn & Henninger (William R. Liberman and John N. Cooper, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendant: V. Alexander Scher, New York, N. Y.

For the applicant for intervention: Bader & Bader, New York, N. Y.

[Motion for Intervention]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion pursuant to Rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for an order permitting the petitioner, Lass O'Scotland, Ltd., to intervene in the above entitled action. The motion is made on the ground that said intervenor may be bound by a judgment in the action with respect to the third counterclaim interposed by defendant, Renee Y. Hall, and on the ground that representation of intervenor's interest in the action to that extent may be inadequate.

[Patent Suit]

The action is one for a declaratory judgment with reference to the claimed invalidity of United States Patent No. 2,222,946 apparently owned by defendant Hall. The applicant for intervention admits that so much of the action as relates to the validity of the patent is of no interest to the petitioner.

[Alleged Anti-Trust Violations]

It appears, however, that defendant Hall on January 31, 1957 interposed a third counterclaim which pleads a cause of action based upon allegations that this defendant had been damaged by activities of the plaintiffs which were violative of the anti-trust laws and in which defendant seeks damages against the plaintiffs. It also appears that there is another action pending in this Court (Civil 108-209) where Lass O'Scotland, Ltd. is suing the present plaintiffs for damages alleged to have been occasioned by their violation of certain provisions of the anti-trust laws. We therefore have a situation where the plaintiff in one anti-trust action seeks to intervene in another anti-trust action brought by entirely different persons, but wherein a counterclaim exists based upon similar alleged violations of the anti-trust laws.

[Common Questions]

So far as the allegations in the counterclaim assert that in violation of the anti-trust laws plaintiffs in the present action were engaged in an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade, it is true that common questions of law and fact might be involved in both the trial of the counterclaim in the present action and the other action in which Lass O'Scotland is plaintiff. Where such common questions of law and fact exist intervention might be granted in the discretion of the Court, but in exercising this discretion the Court is directed to consider whether permitting the intervention would unduly delay the trial of the original action. Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 24(b).

[Intervention as of Right]

A person may intervene as of right in a pending action only when he may be bound by the judgment in the action and his representation by existing parties may be inadequate. Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 24(a). Certainly a determination of the anti-trust counterclaim in the present action will not be binding in the entirely different anti-trust action brought by Lass O'Scotland, for the parties are different, the facts may be different, and the claims for damages of the respective parties must certainly be different. It would indeed be a remarkable situation if we were to hold that a party would be barred from maintaining a successful action under the anti-trust laws simply because another party in another suit and claiming only damages to it had been unsuccessful in winning its case. Petitioner will not be bound by whatever determination is made of the counterclaim in the present action and it has therefore not established that it may intervene in the action as of right. Sutphen Estates, Inc. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,936], 342 U. S. 19 (1951). See, generally, Note, 63 Yale L. J. 408 (1954).

[Permissive Intervention]

Permissive intervention should be granted, as has been pointed out, only if it will not unduly delay the trial of the original action. This action was filed in September, 1954. On the day this motion was argued, the action was No. 22 on the Ready Day Calendar of Non-jury causes and in the ordinary course of events would be sent out for trial within the next week or two. In fact, when Judge Weinfeld granted the motion permitting the third counterclaim to be added to the answer his order provided:

> ". . . that the motion to amend the answer as herein granted shall not cause or be ground for any application for delay of the trial of this action."

The present action has therefore been pending for a considerable period of time and is about to go out to trial. If granting the intervention would delay the trial of the action this is a fact which must be considered by the Court in determining whether such permissive intervention should be allowed. That granting the intervention would delay the trial seems to be admitted. The petitioner for intervention admits that it is not ready to go to trial. In fact, in its prayer for relief it asks that it be granted sufficient time in order to carry out all the necessary pre-trial discovery proceedings and that the trial be stayed until such pre-trial proceedings are concluded.

[Motion Denied]

The equities do not justify granting such permissive intervention with the consequent delay in the trial of the present action. The petition for intervention seems to present essentially a situation where a plaintiff who has one anti-trust proceeding pending in this Court is seeking to latch to another action and to try his claim in that action. Plaintiff will have its day in court but it should not delay the trial of the present action.

Motion denied. So ordered.

[¶ 68,633] Reese Drug Corp. v. Jarvis Drug Co., Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 137 N. Y. L. J., No. 31, page 6. Dated February 14, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Temporary Injunction—Defenses—Price Violation by Enforcing Party.—A drug store's motion for a temporary injunction to restrain another drug store from advertising, offering for sale, or selling fair traded commodities at less than their established prices was granted, although the defendant drug store contended that the plaintiff drug store was selling products below their fair trade prices and therefore came into court with "unclean hands." The defense was rejected since the defendant admitted the price violations by its failure to deny such violations.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3452.34.

["Clean Hands" Defense]

DINEEN, Justice [In full text]: Motion by the plaintiff to restrain and enjoin the defendants pendente lite, from advertising, offering for sale and selling any commodities owned, produced or distributed by manufacturers or distributors who have entered into fair trade agreements. Numerous instances are cited by the plaintiff indicating violations of the Fair Trade Laws. The defendants contend that the plaintiff is engaged in similar practices and consequently comes into court with unclean hands and is not entitled to any relief. Under like circumstances this court held otherwise (Librandi v. Berner's Pharmacy, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,966], N. Y. L. J., January 25, 1955, Special Term, Part III). In the cited case the defendants conceded the alleged violative sales while in the instant case such sales are not denied. Failure to deny unless inadvertent must be accepted as an admission of fact. Motion granted. Settle order.

[¶ 68,634] Court Degraw Theatre, Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil Action No. 12921. Dated January 29, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Discovery—Production of Documents—Tax Returns.—A plaintiff, having put in issue its income in a suit for treble damages under the antitrust laws, was required to produce for inspection and copying its various tax returns (federal income, admission, state unemployment, federal excess profits, withholding, social security, payroll, excise tax returns). The plaintiff's contentions that such returns are privileged, and that they are not the proper subject of discovery in the absence of a showing that the books and records from which the returns were prepared are false, inaccurate, or incomplete, were rejected.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.825.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Discovery—Production of Documents—Materiality of Documents.—Defendants in a treble damage action were required to produce for inspection and copying their records pertaining to two motion picture theatres, although they contended that such records were immaterial because the seating capacity of each of the theatres was almost three times that of the plaintiff's theatre and that the theatres were located in an area too remote from the plaintiff's theatre to receive consideration. The court also ruled that records for a period dating two years before the commencement of the conspiracy alleged by the plaintiff would be sufficient to permit the plaintiff to prepare for trial.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.825.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Discovery and Interrogatories—Priority in Proceeding.—In a treble damage action, the defendants' contention that they should not be required to make their records available for inspection and copying until the plaintiff has answered their interrogatories, which were served prior to the time that the plaintiff moved for the production of the defendants' records, was rejected. While there is priority involved in the taking of depositions, there is no advantage in priority under the present circumstances.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.825, 9013.875.

For the plaintiff: Sperry, Weinberg & Ruskay (Joseph A. Ruskay, of counsel).

For the defendants: Louis Phillips, E. Compton Timberlake, and Bernard E. Kalman.

[Motion for Discovery]

RAYFIEL, District Judge [In full text]: Both the defendants and the plaintiff have moved under Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for the production, inspection and copying of various documents set forth in the moving papers.

[Tax Returns]

The plaintiff agrees to produce all the documents requested by the defendants except various tax returns therein specified. It limits its objection to the demands for "14. Copies of federal income and admission tax returns and accompanying schedules and work sheets" and "28. Copies of all tax returns, including state unemployment, federal excess profits, withholding, social security, payroll and excise taxes and related documents, memoranda and supporting data."

[Privilege]

The plaintiff contends that its income tax returns are privileged, that it has produced the books and records from which the returns were prepared, and that, in the absence of a showing that they are false, inaccurate, or incomplete, the plaintiff's tax returns are not a proper subject of discovery under Rule 34.

I disagree. The plaintiff brings this action for treble damages for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws, and thereby puts in issue its income for the period in question. The various tax returns can be used by the defendants to determine the accuracy of the figures obtained from the plaintiff's books and records.

The returns are not privileged and should be disclosed. See Connecticut Importing v. Continental Distilling Corporation et al., 1 F. R. D. 190.

[Materiality of Documents]

As to the plaintiff's motion the defendants' objections are confined to two items, (1) the records pertaining to the Clinton and Tivoli Theaters, and (2) the records listed under item II of the notice of motion, namely, the so-called cutoff cards or other records showing, inter alia, the titles and dates of pictures exhibited, the license fees paid therefor, etc., in certain theaters, for the period between January 1, 1927 and December 31, 1937.

The plaintiff contends that the Tivoli and Clinton Theaters are approximately a mile from its theater, and that therefore the information it seeks respecting the motion pictures exhibited at those theaters is material and pertinent to its claim of discrimination. The defendants, on the other hand, argue that the seating capacity of each of said theaters is almost three times that of plaintiff's theater, and that they are located in an area too remote from it for consideration herein.

I am not impressed by defendants' argument. Disparity in size, standing alone, cannot justify the denial of access to such information. Further, the said theaters were located—the Tivoli has been demolished—less than a mile from that of the plaintiff, and served the same general clientele. The defendants will, therefore, furnish the plaintiff with the information sought under item (1) above.

I come now to plaintiff's request for the cutoff cards, etc., for the period running from January 1, 1927 to December 31, 1937. The period covered by the alleged violations runs from 1940 to 1947. I reject the plaintiff's contention that the documents in question, although remote in time from the dates of the alleged conspiracy, are material in that they will show the course of conduct of the defendants prior to the commencement of the alleged conspiracy. In my opinion records for the period commencing with 1938, two years before the commencement of the alleged conspiracy, will be sufficient to permit the plaintiff to prepare for trial. Accordingly, item (2) above, is denied.

[Interrogatories]

The defendants argue that since they served their interrogatories prior to plaintiff's service of its notice, they should not be required to make their documents and records available for inspection until plaintiff has answered their interrogatories. They contend that the instant situation is analogous to that existing when cross-notices are served to take the depositions of adversary parties, in which case the party serving the earlier notice is generally permitted to conduct the prior examination. The cases are not analogous. There is no advantage in priority here, as there may frequently be in the taking of depositions. Furthermore, there is no reason why inspection by both parties may not proceed simultaneously.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 68,635] Ben Hur Coal Company v. Earl Wells and M. A. Berman, co-partners doing business as Starr Coal Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. January Term, 1957. No. 5413. Dated February 13, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Sales at Unreasonably Low Prices—Purpose of Destroying Competition—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A coal producer's treble damage action charging that a competing producer sold its coal at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating the plaintiff producer as a competitor in violation of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act was properly dismissed where the trial court found that (1) the defendant producer, in uniformly reducing its prices, was motivated by business considerations, (2) the price reductions were not motivated by malice or by an intent to injure or destroy competition or the plaintiff producer, and (3) the defendant producer's prices were not low in relation to competitive prices for like products but were always higher than comparable coal from competing mines. To recover under the provision of Section 3 of the Act relating to sales at unreasonably low prices, the prices must not only be unreasonably low, but they must also have been established with the design and purpose to destroy competition. The trial court had absolved the defendant producer of any guilty intent, and its findings and conclusions in that respect were not clearly erroneous. The plaintiff producer's contention that the defendant's method of cost accounting was wholly unrealistic and unreasonable for the purpose of determining whether it sold its coal at unreasonably low prices was rejected. A pricing policy based upon sound economics cannot be said to be inadmissible simply because it may result in the destruction of a competitor. One who reduces his prices in defense of his economic life cannot be guilty of eliminating competition or his competitors.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3551.60, 3551.70.

For the appellant: G. C. Spillers, Jr. (G. C. Spillers was with him on the brief).

For the appellees: Richard B. McDermott (Bradford J. Williams, Fenelon Boesche, T. Hillas Eskridge, and Franklin D. Hettinger were with him on the brief).

Before BRATTON, Chief Judge, and MURRAH and LEWIS, Circuit Judges.

[Recovery Denied]

MURRAH, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal from a judgment denying recovery of triple damages under Section 15, Title 15 USC, for losses incurred by the appellant in competition with appellees' coal sales. Such sales are said to have been made at "unreasonably low" prices "for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor" within the meaning of the latter part of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act § 13a, Title 15 U. S. C.

[Parties—Nature of Action]

The appellant, a family corporation owned by Ellis, Gene and Amy Taylor, and the appellees have been competing producers of domestic coal in Henryetta, Oklahoma, for a great number of years. Although there have been various price levels in the preceding years, Henryetta domestic stoker coal was selling for $7.35 per ton on November 1, 1953, at which time the appellees reduced their price to all customers to $6.50 per ton f. o. b. Henryetta, and subsequently on June 1, 1954, to $6.00 per ton. To maintain its competitive market, the appellant also reduced its prices, but excessive losses compelled it to increase its price in the latter part of 1954 over that of the appellees. Such reductions, says the appellant, were the culmination of a growing animosity between the parties and were made solely for the purpose of destroying the appellant as a competitor.

[Trial Court Ruling]

Upon a trial of the case to the court without a jury, the court found that in making the two price reductions, the defendants were motivated by business considerations, including shrinkage of the competitive market; decline in the prices of immediate competitors; pressure of their wholesale customers; appellant's covert discounts below its published price; desire to maintain existing volume, recover and retain individual customers, and maintain and increase their profit. The court specifically found that the price reductions complained of were not motivated by malice or by an intent to injure or destroy competition or the appellant; that the accused prices of the appellees were not low in relation to competitive prices for like products but were always higher than comparable coal from competing mines. It was on these findings that the trial court dismissed the cause of action and entered judgment for the appellees.

[Issue]

There is no question of federal jurisdiction founded in the antitrust law. The sole and only question is whether the findings of the court are without support in the record, hence clearly erroneous. Appellant earnestly contends that they are utterly without factual foundation.

[Elements of Violation]

It may be noteworthy to observe at the outset that we do not have the problem of price discrimination to competing buyers under Section 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act (§ 13(b), Title 15 USC) as in Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231; or discriminatory sales for the purpose of eliminating competition under Section 3 as in Mead's Fine Bread Co. v. Moore [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,630], 208 F. 2d 777, rev. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,906] 348 U. S. 115, reh. den., 348 U. S. 932. And so, we have no occasion to indulge in the contrariety of view concerning whether good faith reduction to meet an equally low price of a competitor must be uniform. See "Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws", March 31, 1955, pp. 179-186; "Report of the Select Committee on Small Business", H. R. 2966, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 256-277. We have here only the question of whether uniform price reductions violated the unreasonably low price provisions of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act. And, to recover under this provision of Section 3, prices must not only be unreasonably low, but they must also have been established with the design and purpose to destroy competition. Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,266], 104 F. Supp. 796, 800, aff'd [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,186], 231 F. 2d 356, cert. den., 350 U. S. 991, reh. den. 351 U. S. 928; F. & A. Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,848], 98 F. Supp. 180.

[Product]

The basic facts are that Henryetta domestic stoker coal, with an established reputation for premium quality, is sold through wholesalers f. o. b. Henryetta to consumer markets in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota and Minnesota in competition with coal of comparable grade and quality from Catoosa, Oklahoma, Southern Illinois and Western Kentucky. It seems agreed, however, that the Henryetta coal has always enjoyed a premium price over other coals by reason of consumer preference.

[Price Reduction]

There was an abundance of evidence on behalf of the appellant to the effect that the reduction in price of Henryetta coal on November 1 was "unusual" due to the fact that coal dealers had already contracted for their supply at the higher price, and that the reduction at or just before the peak of the season prompted some of the dealers to demand a price revision. There was also credible testimony to the effect that the reduction of the price of the coal did not stimulate sales, and that there would have been as much Henryetta coal sold at $7.35 per ton as $6.50, or even $6.00; and that in fact the reduced prices were not passed on to the consumer but were pocketed by the retailers. Indeed, there was testimony to the effect that the Henryetta operators could not profitably produce coal at $6.50 per ton and that the price reductions complained of eliminated one competitor and ruined the appellant; that the appellees lost money and were able to survive only with the support of large profitable sales of industrial coal. Specifically there was accounting evidence from which the appellant persuasively argues that according to the appellees' own methods of accounting, they realized 71¢ average profit per ton on $7.35 domestic coal in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1953, and only 11¢ per ton on comparable tonnage for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1954, including approximately $9,000.00 profit made in October 1953 before the November 1st price reduction. The appellees raised the price of their coal from $6.00 to $6.50 on January 1, 1955. And, appellant introduced testimony to the effect that during the latter part of 1954 and most of 1955, the appellees were engaged in what they called "retreating operations" during which they avoided expensive development work, thereby enabling them to show a fanciful profit.

[Relations Between Parties]

These facts are portrayed against a hostile background commencing in 1949 when appellant broke a stalemate in a strike between the Coal Operators Association and the Miners Union by signing a contract with the Union against the advice of appellee, Wells, who was representing the Association in the labor dispute. Another event alluded to as indicative of animosity was the option secured by the appellant to lease 120 acres of valuable coal land upon the expiration of appellees' lease. When the lease was inadvertently allowed to expire without renewal, it was taken by the appellant, leaving appellees almost without additional productive coal land. Another straw in the wind were statements by Wells to the effect that if Manager Ellis Taylor did not cease cutting his price and splitting commissions with his jobbers, he could cut his price. And, finally came the conference between Gene Taylor and Wells, after the price reductions, when Taylor prevailed upon Wells to restore the price in order to spare appellant's business. Wells is said to have replied that he was sorry for Gene and his mother but he "was forced to teach him [Ellis Taylor] a lesson."

[Demand for Coal]

The appellees developed their case against a background of a constantly diminishing demand for both consumer and industrial coal due to the encroaching natural gas and fuel oil supplies. It was shown that in the ten years preceding the trial of the case, the national domestic market for coal declined over 51 percent, and that in the last five years, Oklahoma domestic coal tonnage dropped 84 percent; that during the same period, the number of producing coal mines in Oklahoma decreased from 95 to 61; that in 1920 there were 36 producing underground Henryetta coal mines, and at the date of the trial, there were only 2—the appellant and appellees. It was in this context of over-pricing, in a dwindling and competitive market, that the appellees say they reduced their prices of domestic coal in order to increase their volume and decrease the unit cost.

[Profit or Loss]

The basic and material difference in the loss on oil-treated domestic coal sales shown by appellant's audit of appellees' accounting records and the profit shown by appellees' audit lies in the accounting methods employed to arrive at divergent results.

[Accounting Methods]

In determining appellees' profit or loss on oil-treated domestic stoker coal the appellant first assumed that the two competing mining operations were sufficiently similar for cost accounting purposes. Using its own operation as a criterion, it proceeded to determine the cost of producing oil-treated domestic coal separate and apart from any other line. It charged against this line additional labor, machine and oiling expenses and also the constant loss on slack or fine coal.

In computing their profit or loss, the appellees employed the accounting methods and practices used in the regular course of their business, said to be customary in the coal producing industry. Under this method of accounting all producting costs, fixed and variable, are lumped against the total sales to determine unit cost of production. And, profit or loss on different grades and qualities is determined by the difference between the unit cost of production and the respective sales prices. The only exception recognized by the appellees is to take the costs of oil treating and advertising out of the general cost of production and charge it directly to oil-treated stoker coal. Appellees concede the additional labor and machinery costs in the production of oil-treated domestic coal but take the position that the amount is negligible and indeterminable.

Employing this method of accounting, and based on their own accounting records, the appellee produced a profit and loss statement for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1954, showing a net profit of approximately $153,000 on total coal sales of approximately 231,000 tons, or approximately 66¢ per ton. During this period industrial coal sold for $5.95 per ton and oil-treated domestic coal sold at $7.35, $6.50 and $6.00. Breaking it down into categories of industrial coal and the various grades of domestic coal, the statement showed a net profit of $1.05 per ton on industrial coal; 79¢ per ton on 57,000 tons of oil-treated domestic coal; and a profit of 11¢ per ton on a total of 95,000 tons of all grades of domestic coal, including a $2.00 loss per ton on the slack or fine coal—always sold at a loss.

Using the same method of cost accounting, but relating it to the different pricing periods under consideration, it was shown that for seven months ending May 31, 1954, while oil-treated domestic coal was selling for $6.50 per ton, appellees realized a net profit of 74¢ per ton on total sales of 131,000 tons; a profit of 94¢ per ton on 32,000 tons of oil-treated domestic coal; and total domestic profit of 23¢ per ton on 54,000 tons. For the seven months ending December 31, 1954, during which oil-treated domestic coal sold for $6.00 per ton, the appellees realized a net profit of 68¢ per ton on a total of 58,000 tons; 66¢ per ton on 48,000 tons of oil-treated domestic coal; and 6¢ per ton on a total of 77,000 tons of all grades of domestic coal. For the four months ending April 30, 1955, during which oil-treated domestic coal sold for $6.50 per ton, appellees realized a net profit of $1.27 per ton on a total of 85,000 tons; $1.44 per ton on 22,000 tons of oil-treated domestic coal; and 73¢ per ton on a total of 36,000 tons of all grades of domestic coal. The statement showed an increased profit on $6.00 oil-treated domestic coal over the $6.50 coal in the face of a diminished per ton profit realization (94¢ to 66¢) because of a volumetric decrease in unit cost. To reflect the increase in sales of $6.00, domestic coal over their sales at higher prices, the appellees produced a comparison of the $6.00 coal sales period with identical months in the previous year. The result showed a total increase of 20 percent of all domestic coal and a 25 percent increase in the oil-treated stoker.

[Reason for Profits]

To show the "how and why" for the increased profits based upon the volumetric decrease in unit cost, the appellees produced graphic illustrations of the ratio of unit cost to selling price as related to volume of production. Taking its fixed market of industrial coal of 132,000 tons per fiscal year at a fixed selling price of $5.95, it was shown that it was necessary to produce only 6000 tons of domestic coal at $5.50 net, or a total of 138,000 tons of coal at established selling prices, in order to reach the "break-even point." From that point appellees plotted the curves of unit cost and average selling price in relation to tonnage production to a point where their fiscal 1954 total output of 231,000 tons cost $4.90 per ton, which when sold at an average selling price of $5.40 per ton yielded a net profit of approximately 50¢ per ton. Basically, this cost analysis was based upon actual selling prices, production costs and tonnage, and is in conformity with their accounting records. The discrepancy, however, between this reflected profit and the 66¢ per ton reflected in the audit is explained by an understatement of the industrial production tonnage and an overstatement of some operational costs. In other words, the graph was on the "conservative side." In any event, the appellees accounting records show an overall profit which the appellant cannot gainsay. And, there was testimony to the effect that if this production and pricing pattern were applicable to the appellant's operation, it would result in a profitable enterprise.

[Reasonableness of Methods]

The appellant, however, challenges this method of cost accounting as a wholly unrealistic and unreasonable method of determining whether the appellees sold domestic coal at unreasonably low prices. In effect it says that profit and loss must be determined by the unit cost of domestic coal standing alone; that acceptance of the method of accounting employed by the appellees would allow them to use the profits from industrial coal sales as a war chest to destroy competition and to eliminate the appellant as a competitor by selling his domestic coal at a loss.

We do not suppose that the appellees could use their profits from one line to sustain their business while selling another line at a loss to eliminate a competitor with any less impunity than they could discriminate with respect to prices of merchandise of the same grade and quality to different customers for the same purpose. Cf. Mead's Fine Bread Co. v. Moore, supra. Furthermore, it would ignore the economic facts of life to say that one in business for a profit would deliberately and consistently sell at a loss without some ulterior motive. It would be equally inadmissible to say that one who consistently sells at a loss without competitive compulsion is not selling at unreasonably low prices. And, one who consistently sells at unreasonably low prices is vulnerable to the inference that he is doing so for the proscribed purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.

[Intent and Purpose]

We cannot say, however, that a pricing policy based upon sound economics is inadmissible simply because it may result in the destruction of a competitor; for it is not within the scope or purpose of the antitrust laws to protect a business against loss in a competitive market. Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms, supra, at p. 801. One who reduces his prices in defense of his economic life cannot be guilty of eliminating competition or his competitors. If, as the trial court held, the price reductions on domestic coal were made to increase volume and decrease unit cost in order to retain its proportionate share of a diminishing market, the appellees were certainly within the law. In the final analysis, the question resolves itself into one of intent and purpose, not a choice of accounting methods. The trial court has absolved the appellees of any guilty intent and we cannot say that is [its] findings and conclusions in that respect are clearly erroneous. The judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 68,636] Federal Trade Commission, et al. v. The B. F. Goodrich Company, No. 13,070; Sigurd Anderson, et al. v. The B. F. Goodrich Company, No. 13,071; FTC, et al. v. The General Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,072; Anderson, et al. v. The General Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,073; FTC, et al. v. The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Inc., No. 13,074; Anderson, et al. v. The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Inc., No. 13,075; FTC, et al. v. The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,076; Anderson, et al. v. The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,077; FTC, et al. v. Allied Tire & Battery Company, et al., No. 13,078; Anderson, et al. v. Allied Tire & Battery Company, et al., No. 13,079; FTC, et al. v. United States Rubber Company, No. 13,080; Anderson, et al. v. United States Rubber Company, No. 13,081; FTC, et al. v. Inland Rubber Corporation, No. 13,082; Anderson, et al. v. Inland Rubber Corporation, No. 13,083; FTC, et al. v. Pacific Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,084; Anderson, et al. v. Pacific Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,085; FTC, et al. v. Denman Rubber Manufacturing Company, No. 13,086; Anderson, et al. v. Denman Rubber Manufacturing Company, No. 13,087; FTC, et al. v. The Mansfield Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,088; Anderson, et al. v. The Mansfield Tire & Rubber Company, No. 13,089; FTC, et al. v. Carlisle Corporation, No. 13,090; Anderson, et al. v. Carlisle Corporation, No. 13,091; FTC, et al. v. Durkee-Atwood Company, No. 13,092; Anderson, et al. v. Durkee-Atwood Company, No. 13,093; FTC v. Seiberling Rubber Company, No. 13,094; Anderson, et al. v. Seiberling Rubber Company, No. 13,095; FTC, et al. v. Dunlop Tire and Rubber Corporation, No. 13,096; Anderson, et al. v. Dunlop Tire and Rubber Corporation, No. 13,097; FTC v. Missouri Farmers Association, Inc., No. 13,098; Anderson, et al. v. Missouri Farmers Association, Inc., No. 13,099; FTC, et al. v. Western Auto Supply Company, No. 13,100; Anderson, et al. v. Western Auto Supply Company, No. 13,101; FTC, et al. v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Incorporated, No. 13,102; Anderson, et al. v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Incorporated, No. 13,103; FTC, et al. v. The Dayton Rubber Company, No. 13,104; Anderson, et al. v. The Dayton Rubber Company, No. 13,105; FTC, et al. v. Lee Rubber & Tire Corporation, No. 13,106; Anderson, et al. v. Lee Rubber & Tire Corporation, No. 13,107; FTC, et al. v. The American Oil Company, No. 13,108; Anderson, et al. v. The American Oil Company, No. 13,109.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Nos. 13,070-13,109. Decided February 28, 1957.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. HOLTZOFF, District Judge.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Quantity-Limit Rules of the Federal Trade Commission—Tires and Tubes—Validity of Rule—Necessary Statutory Finding.—A trial court ruling that the Federal Trade Commission's quantity-limit rule for tires and tubes, which fixed the maximum quantity discount limit on sales of tires and tubes at 20,000 pounds ordered at one time for delivery at one time, was invalid because the Commission did not find that available purchasers in greater quantities than a 20,000-pound carload are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly was affirmed on the ground that the trial court correctly held that the Commission did not make the finding required by the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The Commission's finding as to the fewness of available purchasers in annual dollar volumes greater than $600,000 did not support its rule fixing a quantity limit of one 20,000-pound carload. A "Statement of Basis and Purpose," appended to the Commission's quantity-limit rule, cannot be used to supplement the formal findings upon which the Commission specifically based its quantity-limit rule. When a statute provides, as the Clayton Act, as amended, "that a specified finding is a prerequisite to the exercise of power, and where formal findings are made which are said to be the basis of the power claimed, there is no justification for reliance on a later statement to support the exercise of the power."

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.654, 3611.01; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.790.

For the appellants: James H. Durkin, Attorney, Department of Justice, with whom Leo A. Rover, United States Attorney at the time record was filed, Oliver Gasch, United States Attorney, and Joseph E. Sheehy, Director, Bureau of Litigation, Federal Trade Commission, were on the brief.

For the appellees: Mathias F. Correa, of the bar of the Court of Appeals of New York, pro hac vice, by special leave of Court, with whom James E. Greeley was on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,074 and 13,075, argued for all appellees. Edgar Barton, of the bar of the Court of Appeals of New York, pro hac vice, by special leave of Court, with whom Dow H. Harter was on the brief, for appellee in Nos. 13,070 and 13,071. Hammond E. Chaffetz, with whom Perry S. Patterson and Herbert J. Miller, Jr., were on the brief, for appellee in Nos. 13,108 and 13,109. David L. Dickson, of the bar of the Supreme Court of Illinois, pro hac vice, by special leave of Court, with whom Robert L. Wright was on the brief, for appellee in Nos. 13,102 and 13,103. Arthur H. Dean and H. Douglas Weaver were on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,072 and 13,073. Louis A. Gravelle and Thomas S. Markey were on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,076 and 13,077. J. Strouse Campbell was on the brief for appellees in Nos. 13,078 and 13,079. Henry F. Butler was on the brief and John Geyer Tausig entered an appearance for appellee in Nos. 13,080 and 13,081. Charles Walker was on the brief and Jackson Brodsky entered an appearance for appellees in Nos. 13,082, 13,083, 13,084, 13,085, 13,086, 13,087, 13,088 and 13,089. Folsom E. Drummond was on the brief and Harry A. Toulmin, Jr., and William H. Pavitt, Jr., entered appearances for appellees in Nos. 13,090, 13,091, 13,106 and 13,107. Narvin B. Weaver was on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,092 and 13,093. John H. Pratt was on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,094 and 13,095. Francis J. O'Hara, Jr., was on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,096 and 13,097. William W. Beckett and James M. Desmond were on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,098 and 13,099. Lawrence C. Moore was on the brief for appellee in Nos. 13,100 and 13,101. Raymond C. Cushwa was on the brief and Alfons B. Landa and James T. Welch entered appearances for appellee in Nos. 13,104 and 13,105.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Columbia, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,130. For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, see 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,535, reversing U. S. District Court, District of Columbia, 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,367.

Before PRETTYMAN, WILBUR K. MILLER and WASHINGTON, Circuit Judges.

[Quantity-Limit Rule]

WILBUR K. MILLER, Circuit Judge [In full text]: In these actions, certain tire manufacturers and dealers asked the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to declare invalid and enjoin the enforcement of the Federal Trade Commission's Quantity-Limit Rule 203-1, which is as follows:

"The quantity limit as to replacement tires and tubes made of natural or synthetic rubber for use on motor vehicles as a class of commodity is twenty thousand (20,000) pounds ordered at one time for delivery at one time."

The Commission promulgated the Rule purportedly pursuant to authority conferred upon it by § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.[1] This section provides that "the Federal Trade Commission may . . . fix and establish quantity limits . . . as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce . . . ."

[1] Act of Oct. 15, 1914, c. 323 § 2, 38 Stat. 730; Act of June 19, 1936, c. 592 § 1, 49 Stat. 1526; 15 U. S. C. § 13(a).

[Prior Proceedings]

The District Court dismissed the complaints for lack of jurisdiction and also for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. On appeal we held to the contrary on both grounds, reversed the order of dismissal, and remanded the cases to the District Court.[2] Then that court, after considering cross motions for summary judgment, granted the motion of the plaintiff manufacturers and dealers, holding that "the statutory finding expressly required by the Act of Congress as a basis for the order has not been made and that, therefore, the order should not stand."[3] The Federal Trade Commission and some of its members—Anderson, et al.—appeal.

[Issue on Appeal]

It is clear from the language of § 2(a) that the Commission has no power to fix and establish quantity limits unless it first makes the finding required by the quantity-limit proviso thereof, quoted above. The primary question is, therefore, whether the District Court correctly held the requisite finding was not made. For if it was not, the matter is at an end, and we need not consider the contentions of appellees that they were denied procedural rights when the Rule was made and that the Rule itself, based not on factual findings but on unwarranted inference from the borrowed experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is arbitrary and capricious.

[Absence of FTC Findings]

The Commission concedes that the three formal findings, upon which it said in the order of promulgation it was basing the Rule,[4] do not include a finding that available purchasers in quantities greater than a carload are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly. Instead of dealing directly with that question of fact in its findings, the Commission seems to have been primarily concerned with the fewness of available purchasers in annual dollar volumes greater than $600,000.[5] Obviously, a finding concerning that does not support a rule fixing a quantity limit of one 20,000-pound carload.

The Commission argues that the vital finding, which it admits was not expressly made, sufficiently appears in what it termed a "Statement of Basis and Purpose," appended to the promulgating order, which is in the nature of an opinion concerning tire pricing practices. Assuming without deciding that the "Statement" can be construed as indicating a finding of the sort necessary to support the Rule, we hold it may not be used to supplement the formal findings in the manner suggested. It may be that, had the Commission not made any specific separate findings labeled as such, it could have supported the order by writing an opinion embodying the requisite finding of fact. But, when it made formal findings in separate numbered paragraphs and said it was basing its order upon them, the order must stand or fall on the basis of those findings alone.

Section 2(a) conditions its grant of authority upon the prior making of a simple finding. Though well aware of the statutory requirement, the Commission did not meet it in the formal findings on which the order was based. It chose to make a finding concerning the paucity of available purchasers in quantities greater than a certain annual dollar volume, and then fixed a quantity limit in terms of a carload. Even though the Commission's accompanying Statement may have indicated its belief that available buyers in quantities greater than a carload are so few as to give it authority under the quantity-limit proviso (which appellees seriously question), the Commission did not purport to base its order on that belief. We find no satis-

[2] B. F. Goodrich Co. et al. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,535], 93 U. S. App. D. C. 50, 208 F. (2d) 829 (1953).

[3] B. F. Goodrich Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, et al. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,130], 134 F. Supp. 39 (1955).

[4] The order, after reciting three formal findings, said:

"It is therefore ordered, That the following rule . . . be, and it hereby is, promulgated . . . ." (Emphasis supplied.)

[5] The first of the formal findings follows:

"1. Available purchasers in the greater quantities of annual dollar volumes of six hundred thousand (600,000) dollars and more are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory against purchasers in smaller quantities and promotive of monopoly in the lines of commerce in which the sellers and purchasers, respectively, are engaged."

factory explanation of its failure to do so. When a statute provides, as this one does, that a specified finding is a prerequisite to the exercise of power, and where formal findings are made which are said to be the basis of the power claimed, there is no justification for reliance on a later statement to support the exercise of the power.

[Rules of Civil Procedure]

Although Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure does not apply to administrative agencies, it furnishes a helpful analogy in the consideration of the present question. The Rule provides that in all actions tried upon the facts without a jury, the court shall find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon; and that "If an opinion or memorandum of decision is filed, it will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law appear therein." With respect to this the following was said in Ohlinger v. United States, 219 F. (2d) 310, 311 (9th Cir. 1955):

> ". . . Under the circumstances referred to in the rule, it is not necessary to file formal findings of fact and conclusions of law, but when the trial court does make formal findings, they alone serve as the court's findings of fact. In the words of the Supreme Court: 'We are not at liberty to refer to the opinion for the purpose of eking out, controlling, or modifying the scope of the findings.' [Stone v. United States, 164 U. S. 380.]" (Italics in the cited opinion.)

[Affirmed]

Being of the view that the reasoning of the Ohlinger[6] opinion is sound and should be applied to the agency action involved here, we need not discuss appellees' criticisms of the Rule itself and the method by which it was adopted.

Affirmed.

[¶ 68,637] Union Circulating Company, Inc., National Circulating Company, Inc., Periodical Sales Company, Inc., Publishers Continental Sales Corporation, and Leo E. Light and Roy C. Hodge, Co-Partners, doing business as National Literary Association v. The Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 16 — October Term, 1956. Docket No. 23588. Argued November 8, 1956. Decided February 18, 1957.

Petition for review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission directing petitioners to cease and desist from certain practices found by the Commission to be violative of 15 U. S. C. § 45(a). Order affirmed.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Combining or Conspiring—"No-Switching" Agreements—Supervision of Employee Conduct—Legality.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting sellers of magazine subscriptions by "door-to-door" solicitation from entering into any agreement not to hire any "door-to-door" solicitor who has been employed by any other such seller at any time during a certain period of time was affirmed. The sellers contended that such "no-switching" agreements were not unfair methods of competition because they were directed only at the prevention of abuses within the industry and were not directed at the elimination or obstruction of competition. Although the agreements were not illegal per se because a harmful effect upon competition was not clearly apparent from the terms of the agreements, the reasonably foreseeable effects of the "no-switching" agreements were the impairment of competition between existing sellers of subscriptions and the prevention of would-be competitors from engaging in similar activity. The tendency of such agreements is to discourage labor mobility, whereby the magazine selling industry could become static in its composition to the obvious advantage of the large, well-established signatory sellers and to the disadvantage of infant organizations. The "no-switching" agreements, in the context of the industry affected, were harmful to competition; they constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act and therefore were the proper subject of an injunction by the Federal Trade Commission.

[6] Cf. 2 Barron and Holtzoff, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1128 (1950).

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5033, 5043.12.

Unfair Practices—Coercive Agreements to Cut Off Competition—Legality—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting sellers of magazine subscriptions by "door-to-door" solicitation from limiting their efforts to obtain magazine subscriptions for publishers who deal with subscription agencies which employ sales representatives formerly connected with other subscription agencies was affirmed. There was sufficient evidence that several of the sellers or agencies joined in a concerted effort to coerce magazine publishers into withdrawing their authorizations, and that several publishers cancelled their authorizations with an agency. The Commission could reasonably infer that the firms carried out their illegal scheme of coercion; therefore, the order enjoining such conduct in the future was justified.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5031.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Cease and Desist Order—Refusal to Modify Order—Review.—The Federal Trade Commission, in affirming an order prohibiting sellers of magazine subscriptions by "door-to-door" solicitation from entering into agreements not to hire each others' former solicitors, properly refused to modify the order so as to permit the application of such agreements to solicitors "who in the course of such business have been using unfair methods of competition, or unfair or deceptive acts or practices." The application and effects of an agreement so restricted had not been explored by the Commission, and therefore there was no evidence in the record by which the reasonableness of such a hypothetical agreement could be tested.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.55.

For the petitioners: Gilbert H. Weil (Alfred T. Lee, on the brief; Mortimer M. Lerner, of counsel to National Circulating Company, Inc.), New York, N. Y.

For the respondent: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission; Robert B. Dawkins, Asst. General Counsel; and Jno. W. Carter, Jr., Attorney.

Affirming Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 5978.

Before: MEDINA, LUMBARD and WATERMAN, Circuit Judges.

[Review of FTC Order]

WATERMAN, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Petitioners are agencies engaged in the business of selling subscriptions for magazines and periodicals by door-to-door solicitation. They were charged with engaging in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a). At the conclusion of the administrative proceedings before the Federal Trade Commission that Commission issued a cease and desist order. Petitioners bring their petition to us seeking to review this order.

[Subscription Solicitation Business]

The door-to-door subscription solicitation business is conducted through crews of solicitors who travel from place to place throughout the country. A crew may have from a few to forty or more solicitors, together with a supervising crew manager. The petitioners, the agencies, contract directly with the crew manager, who in turn usually engages the solicitors and controls their work. The solicitors, the managers, and the petitioners are all paid on a commission basis determined by the number and nature of periodical subscriptions secured. The solicitors collect part or all of the subscription money. The proper amounts are remitted by the crew managers through the agencies to the publishers.

The Federal Trade Commission found that door-to-door solicitation of subscriptions to periodicals conducted in this manner accounts annually for millions of subscriptions valued at millions of dollars; that the petitioners are among the leaders in the field and constitute a very substantial segment of the industry; and that they contract for the services of 3,000 solicitors, who procure $15,000,000 of such subscriptions annually.

The Trial Examiner found that for many years the reputation of the magazine-selling industry, both with the publishers and the general public, has been undermined by the deceptive selling practices and other fraudulent conduct of many of the solicitors in the field. Misrepresentation of magazine content, misappropriation of subscription monies, and false sympathy appeals are among the practices that plague this industry. The history of the petitioners and other subscription agencies over the past twenty years is a chronicle of attempts to curb these abuses by such devices as jointly sponsored "Standards of Practice," a Central Registry providing information about individual solicitors, and a trade association created to study new remedial techniques and to sponsor their industry-wide adoption.

["No-Switching" Agreements]

In recent years the petitioners have entered into "no-switching" agreements with each other, typically providing that each agency will not hire any solicitors who have been employed by the other signatory agency at any time during a certain period, usually the preceding year. Petitioners have also agreed at various times not to hire solicitors who have been employed by any other agency, whether or not a party to the agreement. The petitioners contend that these agreements have been entered into solely in order to prevent the fraudulent practices of certain crew members, it being maintained that they are less likely to respond to agency discipline or to observe agency standards when they are able to move about freely from one agency to another; and, in particular, that such crew members, when their fraudulent practices are discovered by one agency, find it easy to obtain new employment with a less scrupulous agency.

From this testimony the hearing examiner concluded that the "no-switching" agreements represent a reasonable attempt at self-regulation by members of an industry and therefore the practice of entering into them should not be enjoined. The Commission rejected this conclusion, however, finding that the "no-switching" agreements were an unreasonable restraint of trade and constituted unfair methods of competition within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a).

The Commission also found that several of the petitioners had illegally attempted to coerce the publishers into withdrawing the authority to sell subscriptions from the Federal Readers Guild, an agency that was not a party to any "no-switching" agreement.

[FTC Order]

The Commission accordingly enjoined the petitioners from:

> "* * * 1. Entering into, carrying out, enforcing or giving effect to any agreement not to employ parties who have previously been actively engaged for themselves or for others in the business of soliciting magazine subscriptions.
>
> "2. Ceasing or limiting, or threatening to cease or limit, their efforts to obtain subscriptions for magazines for publishers unless such publishers refuse or discontinue authority to solicit subscriptions for their magazines to subscription agencies employing sales representatives formerly connected with other subscription agencies."

The petitioners appeal from the order of the Commission, and seek to have both of its provisions set aside.

[Coercive Practices]

Substantial evidence was adduced at the hearings to support the second part of the order. The Commission found that several of the petitioners joined in a concerted effort to coerce the magazine publishers into withdrawing their authorizations from a newly formed competitor, the Federal Readers Guild. Several experienced crew managers, with their crews, had switched employment to the new competitor. At the Commission hearings the owner of Federal Readers testified without contradiction that he had attended a meeting with several representatives of the petitioners at which petitioner Leo Light threatened to have all the publishers "cancel out" the Federal Readers Guild. Light indicated that a meeting would be held that evening to discuss ways and means to accomplish this. Although no evidence was introduced to show whether the meeting was ever held, there was evidence that several publishers subsequently canceled their authorizations with Federal Readers. Since the Commission could reasonably infer that the petitioners carried out their illegal scheme of coercion, the second part of its order enjoining such conduct in the future is clearly justified.

[Legality of "No-Switching" Agreements]

Of much greater significance are the "no-switching" agreements proscribed by the first part of the order. Petitioners readily admit the widespread existence of these agreements, but contend that they are not unfair methods of competition because they are directed only at the prevention of abuses within the industry and are not directed at the elimination or obstruction of competition.

[Concerted Restraints of Trade]

A violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq., is an unfair method of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act. FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 441, 453 (1922); Keasbey & Mattison Co. v. FTC [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,537], 159 F. 2d 940, 946 (6th Cir. 1947). Under the Sherman Act the test of validity for any restraint of trade is not the motive of the parties who act in concert. Restraints of trade must be examined not merely for the intent of their creators but for their reasonableness, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 (1911), and therefore they must be considered in the light of their impact upon the competitive structure of the industry affected.

Since the Standard Oil decision, many concerted restraints of trade have been held unlawful or unreasonable per se,[1] and "no showing of so-called competitive abuses or evils which those agreements were designed to eliminate or alleviate may be interposed as a defense." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 218 (1940). Many group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal, and certain other restraints such as price-fixing, market-sharing, or production control, are considered so inimical to competition that they will not be countenanced regardless of the portion of the industry that they actually affect or the alleged beneficial ends that they are designed to serve. See United States v. Columbia Steel Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,260], 334 U. S. 495, 522 (1948); Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,107], 312 U. S. 457, 467-68 (1941); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 218 (1940); Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n v. United States [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,673], 210 F. 2d 732, 740-41 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 348 U. S. 817 (1954).

Although "some agreements and practices are invalid per se, * * * others are illegal only as applied to particular situations." United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377, 387 (1956). When the courts or the Commission are confronted with an alleged boycott whose deleterious effect on competition is not as apparent on its face as that of the agreements which have been held illegal per se, they may consider its actual or potential impact upon the competitive fabric of the particular industry affected. Ruddy Brook Clothes v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,244], 195 F. 2d 86 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 344 U. S. 816 (1952); United States v. Insurance Board of Cleveland [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,460], 144 F. Supp. 684 (N. D. Ohio 1956). The restraints here under consideration, the "no-switching" agreements, are dissimilar in several significant respects to the group boycotts that have been held illegal per se by the Supreme Court. The "no-switching" agreements are directed at the regulation of hiring practices and the supervision of employee conduct, not at the control of manufacturing or merchandising practices.[2] The agreements are not designed to coerce retailers, or other independent members of an industry, into abandoning competitive practices of which the concerted parties do not approve. Rather, they are ostensibly directed at "housecleaning" within the ranks of the signatory organizations themselves. Because a harmful effect upon competition is not clearly apparent from the [1] Judge Medina believes that we should avoid a discussion of the applicability of the per se doctrine, because, upon appeal, it was neither briefed nor argued by either side, and it is not necessary to discuss it in order to reach our result. He would prefer to leave per se applicability here an open question.

[2] The Supreme Court, in the long and active history of anti-trust litigation, has rarely considered the validity of agreements directed solely at the employment practices of an industry. Perhaps the closest parallel to the situation at bar was reviewed in Anderson v. Shipowners Ass'n of the Pacific Coast, 272 U. S. 359 (1926). There it was alleged that the members of the respondent associations owned, operated or controlled substantially all the merchant vessels of American registry engaged in interstate and foreign commerce between the ports of the Pacific Coast and to and from foreign countries. The associations required every seaman seeking employment to register with them, receive a number, and await his turn before he could obtain employment. A certificate was issued to each seaman reciting in part that no person would be employed unless registered, that the certificate must be delivered to the master of the vessel, and that terms of these agreements, we believe them to be distinguishable from those boycotts that have been held illegal per se. See United States v. Insurance Board of Cleveland, supra, at 696-98. We shall therefore consider their application within the specific framework of the magazine-selling industry and in the light of the fact that the signatory parties represent a very substantial segment of that industry.

[Injury to Competition]

The petitioners contend that the Commission found actual injury to competition only in the Federal Readers episode, and that this was an isolated incident unrelated to the "no-switching" agreements. The validity of these contentions is not determinative of the issue at bar, because the agreements should be struck down if their reasonable tendency, as distinguished from actual past effect, is to injure or obstruct competition. Under the Federal Trade Commission Act, industry agreements and practices have been enjoined without an actual showing of injury to competition in order to extinguish monopolistic practices before injury occurs. See Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,101], 312 U. S. 457, (1941); FTC v. Raladam Co., 283 U. S. 643, 647 (1931).

Because the hearing examiner in this case concluded that these agreements were not illegal per se, he properly admitted evidence tending to show the circumstances prompting their formulation and adoption and the allegedly beneficial effects that they have upon the industry. But in order to decide whether these restraints are reasonable, we must also consider their actual or potential impact upon the competitive structure of the magazine-selling industry. Here it appears that the reasonably foreseeable effect of the "no-switching" agreements will be to impair or diminish competition between existing subscription agencies, and to prevent would-be competitors from engaging in similar activity. One probable result of the agreements, because entered into by organizations that represent a very substantial segment of the industry, will be to "freeze" the labor supply, which is the indispensable element of the door-to-door magazine-selling trade. Although only the signatory agencies are bound by the agreements, a crew member working for one of them will hesitate to leave his employer in order to join a newly formed competitor, or an expanding established one, if he knows that he may be out of work for a year in the event that the latter agency does not prove to be successful. The tendency of the "no-switching" agreements is to discourage labor mobility, and thereby the magazine-selling industry may well become static in its composition to the obvious advantage of the large, well-established signatory agencies and to the disadvantage of infant organizations.

Thus we find the "no-switching" agreements, in the context of the industry affected, to be harmful to competition, and therefore an unreasonable restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act, and the proper subject of injunction by the Federal Trade Commission.

[Scope of Agreements]

One last contention of the petitioners remains to be considered. They claim that the agreements were intended to affect only those crew members who have a record of deceptive selling practices and other fraudulent conduct, and, in practice, that they have been invoked only against such crew members. Whether or not this be true, the agreements considered by the Federal Trade Commission are capable of enforcement against any crew member. The petitioners can not be left to police the magazine-selling industry by a method as ripe for abuse as that offered by such agreements.

the certificate was the personal record of the seaman and the basis of his future employment. The shipowners, as members of the association, were bound to hire in accordance with the terms of the certificates. In addition, the associations fixed the wages to be paid the seamen.

The Supreme Court, reversing the district court and the court of appeals, held that the shipowners, if these alleged facts were so, by jointly surrendering their "freedom of action in the matter of employing seamen," had unlawfully restrained trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. The decision does not indicate whether this restraint would be invalid per se or whether it would be found unreasonable under the particular circumstances of the industry, the Court saying only that "each of the shipowners and operators, by entering into this combination, has, in respect to the employment of seamen, surrendered himself completely to the control of the associations." Anderson v. Shipowners Ass'n of the Pacific Coast, 272 U. S. 359, 362 (1926). Furthermore, since the appeal was from a dismissal of the complaint for failure to state a cause of action, the Court was not required to consider evidence in justification of the rules of the associations.

The agreements here went beyond what was necessary to curtail and eliminate fraudulent practices. Therefore dicta in cases cited by the petitioners from such decisions as Butterick Publishing Co. v. FTC [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,130], 85 F. 2d 522 (2d Cir. 1936), Fashion Originators Guild v. FTC, 114 F. 2d 80 (2d Cir. 1940), aff'd [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,101], 312 U. S. 457 (1941), and Ruddy Brook Clothes v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,244], 195 F. 2d 86 (7th Cir.) cert. denied, 344 U. S. 816 (1952), are no guide to us here and we need not pass on the questions raised by those cases.

[Modification of Order]

The petitioners asked the Commission to modify its original order so as to permit the application of the "no-switching" agreements to solicitors "who in the course of such business have been using unfair methods of competition, or unfair or deceptive acts or practices." The Commission properly refused this request, pointing out that the application and effects of an agreement so restricted had not been explored by it, and thus there was no evidence in the record by which the reasonableness of such a hypothetical agreement could be tested.

[FTC Order Affirmed]

For the reasons expressed above, the "no-switching" agreements do not survive the close scrutiny that must be given under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act to any concerted restraints of trade. Therefore the order of the Commission must be affirmed in all respects.

Order affirmed.

[¶ 68,638] William Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation, Fabian Theatres, Jay Emanuel, and Key City Theatres, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 21,077. Filed February 11, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Licensing of Motion Pictures—Competitive Bidding as Method of Preventing Antitrust Violations.—In a motion picture theatre operator's action charging that a motion picture distributor and other theatre operators conspired to limit the operator's ability to compete in the exhibition of first run films by adopting a system of competitive bidding for motion pictures, contention that the operator's complaint failed to state a cause of action because the motive of the distributor in requiring competitive bidding and the defendants' conduct with respect to the bidding for one particular picture in a single locality did not violate the antitrust laws was rejected. The mere requirement of competitive bidding for a product does not prevent conduct and dealings involving that bidding from coming in conflict with the antitrust laws. The fact that the complaint only alleged one incident of the alleged conspiracy does not preclude the operator from showing additional incidents. Also, the fact that the alleged conspiracy was of a local nature does not put the conspiracy beyond the reach of the antitrust laws.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.553; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.600.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Injury to Public.—In a motion picture theatre operator's action charging that a distributor of motion pictures and other theatre operators conspired to adopt a system of competitive bidding to the operator's injury, the defendants' motion to dismiss the operator's complaint because it failed to allege an injury to the public was denied. The complaint set forth facts from which it could be inferred that the public interest was injured by the defendants' conduct. The public is interested in the preservation of free competition, and when competition is restrained by means declared unlawful by the antitrust laws, the interest of the public is harmed. The complaint need not allege that the public has been injured as the result of the defendants' conduct.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Summary Judgment on Basis of Deposition.—In a motion picture theatre operator's action charging that a distributor of motion pictures and other theatre operators conspired to adopt a system of competitive bidding to the operator's injury, the distributor's motion for a summary judgment on the ground that the deposition of the president of the plaintiff operator failed to set forth a cause of action was denied. Although it was apparent from the deposition that the president would not be able to supply all of the facts necessary to prove the operator's case, there is no burden on the plaintiff operator to establish its case in a pretrial deposition. "So long as the deposition did not constitute a demonstration of the invalidity of plaintiff's claim, its mere inadequacy to establish that claim has no persuasiveness."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.675.

For the plaintiff: Edwin P. Rome, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendants: Speiser, Satinsky, Gilliland & Packel for Jay Emanuel; Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis, by Arlin M. Adams, for Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corp.; and Thomas D. McBride for Fabian Theatres; all of Philadelphia, Pa.

Opinion

[Motion Picture Exhibition]

GANEY, District Judge [In full text]: Prior to May 30, 1956, there were five first-run moving picture theatres in Reading, Pennsylvania. They were as follows: Warner, Loew's Colonial, Embassy, Astor and Park. The Warner was operated by Stanley Warner Management Corp. and showed pictures made by Warner Bros. Loew's Colonial was managed by Loew's, Inc. and displayed films released by Loew's, Inc., United Artists Corp., Universal Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Walt Disney Productions and some by Columbia Pictures. The Embassy, under the control of Fabian Theatres, exhibited two-thirds of the movies made by Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation ("20th-Century Fox"), Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Columbia Pictures Corp. The Astor and Park Theatres, managed by Jay Emanuel, divided the remaining products between them.

[Complaint]

For a period beginning May 30, 1956, the plaintiff, an operator of a chain of motion picture theatres in Pennsylvania, leased the Astor, a large favorably located theatre, for the purpose of exhibiting motion pictures to the public.[1] It was unable to operate for a month immediately following that date because it could not obtain first-run feature products. On July 23, 1956, plaintiff brought the action here involved under the antitrust laws. The defendants are 20th-Century Fox, one of the major motion picture distributors in the United States; Fabian Theatres, which controls approximately forty motion picture theatres, including the Embassy in Reading and the Colonial and State in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania; and Jay Emanuel, the chief executive officer of Key City Theatres, Inc., in which capacity he owns and controls a number of motion picture theatres in Pennsylvania, including the Park in Reading and the Senate in Harrisburg. Key City Theaters, Inc., was also named as a defendant. Paragraphs 7 and 8, the nub of plaintiff's complaint, aver:

> "7. Plaintiff's Astor Theatre is eminently suitable for the exhibition of motion pictures on first run in Reading, Pennsylvania, and plaintiff is fully qualified to operate such first run theatre. For a number of years past, the said theatre divided the product of certain motion picture distributors, including the defendant Fox, with the Park Theatre owned and operated by the defendant Emanuel. This division or split of product was accomplished without resorting to the practice of so-called 'competitive bidding' between the two theatres. During this period of time, the defendant Fabian's Embassy Theatre in Reading, Pennsylvania, did not seek to license pictures which fell on the Astor-Park Split.
>
> "8. On May 30, 1956, when plaintiff took over the operation of the Astor Theatre, Emanuel refused to continue the division of product which had formerly existed between the Park and

[1] The Astor is the second largest theatre in Reading. It has a seating capacity of 2,251, which is 231 less than that of the Embassy.

Astor Theatres, but combined and conspired with Fox and Fabian in an attempt to limit and restrain plaintiff's ability to compete in Reading and towards that end brought into effect the device of 'competitive bidding' for licensing motion pictures in Reading in an effort to deprive plaintiff's Astor Theatre of a proper, fair supply of first run pictures and to enable Fox to exact excessive film rental from plaintiff. Fox has, as a result, refused to license its pictures in Reading to plaintiff unless plaintiff would comply with the 'competitive bidding' system."

As an example of how the requirement of "competitive bidding" had prevented it from obtaining first-run items, plaintiff cites its failure to obtain the highly regarded motion picture and outstanding box office attraction, "The King and I." It also alleges that it failed because the defendants "maneuvered and manipulated the so-called competitive bidding" so that Fabian's Embassy was awarded "The King and I" in Reading and Emanuel's Senate was given the privilege of showing the film in Harrisburg. The complaint further alleges that the business of distributing and exhibiting motion pictures constitutes interstate commerce, that the conspiracy charged is in restraint of such commerce and that as a result of it plaintiff has and will continue to suffer severe financial loss.

[Motions]

20th-Century Fox, Jay Emanuel and Key City Theatres, Inc. have filed motions to dismiss on the ground that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under the antitrust laws. 20th-Century Fox has also filed a motion for summary judgment. The reasons given why the complaint allegedly fails to meet the test are (1) the motive of 20th-Century Fox in requiring competitive bidding on the part of the exhibitors, and defendants' conduct with respect to the bidding for one particular picture in a single locality do not violate the antitrust laws, and (2) the complaint fails to aver an injury to the public.

[Competitive Bidding]

As for the first reason, defendants are apparently under the impression that the mere requirement of competitive bidding for a product prevents conduct and dealings involving that bidding from coming in conflict with the antitrust laws. That is not the law. See United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948); Maple Drive-In Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS ¶ 68,422, (S. D. N. Y., June 26, 1956). We do not read the complaint as involving just one motion picture. The averment concerning the picture "The King and I" is similar to an allegation of an overt act under an indictment for conspiracy. By making such an averment, the plaintiff is not precluded from showing additional incidents. That the conspiracy was of a local nature will not for that reason put it beyond the reach of the antitrust laws. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,316], 323 U. S. 173, 183-84 (1944); William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, Inc. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,410], 150 F. 2d 738, 744 (3 Cir. 1948); White Bear Theatre Corp. v. State Theatre Corp. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,222], 129 F. 2d 600, 605 (8 Cir. 1942).

[Injury to Public]

In answer to defendants' second reason, it is our opinion that the complaint sets forth facts from which it can be inferred that the public interest was injured by defendants' conduct. The public is interested in the preservation of free competition. And when competition is restrained by means declared unlawful by the antitrust laws, the interest of the public is harmed. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469, 491-493 (1940); William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, Inc. supra, 743. It is not necessary that the complaint aver that the public has been injured as the result of defendant's conduct. "While detail is not necessary, it is essential that the complaint allege facts from which it can be determined as a matter of law that by reason of interest, tendency, or the inherent nature of the contemplated action, the conspiracy was reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting the free flow of interstate commerce." Feddersen Motors v. Ward [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519, 522 (C. A. 10, 1950). Also see Southern Rendering Co. v. Standard Rendering Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,530], 112 F. Supp. 103, 109 (E. D. Ark. 1953).

[Summary Judgment]

Finally, 20th-Century Fox argues in support of its motion for summary judgment that its deposition of William Goldman, president of plaintiff, fails to set forth a cause of action against it. By this argument we take it that this defendant means to say that plaintiff will not be able to substantiate the claim made in the complaint. From our reading of the deposition it seems apparent to us that William Goldman, through lack of personal knowledge, will be unable to supply all the facts necessary to prove plaintiff's case. He admitted that he obtained knowledge of some of the facts in conversations with other persons. The testimony of those other persons may be sufficient to supply the pertinent facts. There is no burden on plaintiff to establish his case in a pre-trial deposition. "So long as the deposition did not constitute a demonstration of the invalidity of plaintiff's claim, its mere inadequacy to establish that claim has no persuasiveness." Southern Rendering Co. v. Standard Rendering Co., supra, 109. Although a jury may not draw the same inferences as William Goldman does from certain facts, up to this point he has not "talked" the plaintiff out of a lawsuit.

[Motions Denied]

Accordingly, the motions to dismiss the complaint and the motion for summary judgment will be denied.

[¶ 68,639] United Grocers' Company v. Sau-Sea Foods, Inc., and Ernest Schoenbrum and Abraham Kaplan, doing business as Shore Distributors.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 114-365. Filed February 20, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Refusal To Deal—Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Motion for Summary Judgment.—In an action by a wholesale distributor of groceries charging that a manufacturer and a distributor of frozen foods conspired to refuse to sell the manufacturer's products to the wholesaler because it refused to increase the price at which it sold the manufacturer's products, the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that an officer of the wholesaler failed to give direct evidence of the alleged conspiracy in his deposition was denied. Conspiracies, by their very nature, are rarely established by direct evidence. Usually, only circumstantial proof is available. The fact that the wholesaler's orders were not filled and its supply cut off after it refused to yield to demands to increase prices, if accepted by the trier of the fact, is a circumstance that may be taken into account in deciding the existence of the conspiracy. The existence of fact issues precluded the granting of a summary judgment.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.675.

For the plaintiff: Manes, Sturim, Donovan & Laufer, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Louis G. Greenfield, New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Refusal To Sell Charged]

EDWARD WEINFELD, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, a wholesale distributor of food stuffs and groceries, commenced this action for treble damages and injunctive relief charging the defendants, a manufacturer and a distributor of frozen and refrigerated foods, with violations of the anti-trust laws.

The defendants move for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 based principally upon the affidavit of their attorney and upon the incomplete deposition before trial of the plaintiff through one of its officers. The gist of the plaintiff's charge is that because of its refusal to yield to the defendants' demand to increase the price at which it sold defendants' product, the defendants and a number of distributors who were in competition with the plaintiff engaged in a conspiracy unreasonably to restrain trade and to fix the resale price of the defendants' product by continued refusal to sell to plaintiff any of the defendants' products. The plaintiff specifically charges, and the deposition of its principal officers alleges, that when upon demand of defendants' sales representative it refused to increase the price of the defendants' product to accord with those at which it was sold by competitors, its orders were not filled and its supply was cut off. Other witnesses for the plaintiff submit affidavits which charge threats to this effect had previously been made by the president of the corporate defendant. The latter has submitted no affidavit in reply to this charge although the defendants' sales representative denies he ever attempted to dictate the price at which plaintiff was to sell the defendants' product or that he threatened to cut off the supply. The defendants concede they refused to sell their product to the plaintiff and assert that the reason therefor, and the only reason, was because the salesman had disagreeable relations with the plaintiff; that their refusal to continue to sell was unrelated to any attempt to coerce plaintiff to increase prices.

[Summary Judgment Denied]

The fact question posed by this one issue (apart from others) is so clear that it is difficult to understand the basis for the motion for summary judgment. Apparently it is predicated on the ground that plaintiff's officer in his deposition failed to give direct evidence of conspiracy against the defendants. The defendants overlook the fact that conspiracies, by their very nature, are rarely established by direct evidence, and that usually only circumstantial proof is available. The fact that the plaintiff's orders were not filled and its supply cut off after it refused to yield to demands to increase prices, if accepted by the trier of the fact is a circumstance that may be taken into account in deciding the existence of the conspiracy as charged.

Summary judgment may not be availed of to defeat a party's right to trial where a genuine issue of fact exists. The papers here establish fully the existence of fact issues and accordingly the motion is denied.

[¶ 68,640] Ace Tackless Corporation v. American Tackless Corporation.

In the New York Supreme Court, Kings County, Special Term, Part III. 137 N. Y. L. J., No. 34, page 10. Dated February 19, 1957.

Clayton and New York Donnelly Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Agreement Not To Compete—Sale of Business—Legality Under Federal and State Antitrust Laws.—Where a manufacturer of tackless carpet installation accessories sold its business, including goodwill and a list of customers, to another manufacturer of such accessories, an agreement by the selling manufacturer and its officials that they would not for a period of five years engage in the business of manufacturing and selling tackless carpet installation accessories in any place in the United States was not illegal under the Clayton Act or the New York antitrust laws. Where a business is sold and the seller, or those in official connection with the seller, agree not to compete, such an agreement is not illegal under the Clayton Act. The agreement was not too broad in providing that the sellers should not engage in such a business in any place in the United States because the sellers had done business, directly or indirectly, in all of the states.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.34; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.

[Nature of Action]

The Referee [HON. MEIER STEINBRINK, Special Referee, In full text]: This is an action brought by the plaintiff for an injunction against a number of named defendants, some of whom have been dropped from the case. During the trial the action was dismissed as against the American Tackless Corporation and William Snyder and this was on consent. The defendants named as Jack Allen and Irving Allen were never served. The only remaining defendants, therefore, in the case are Irving Alexander and Abe Selton. This is the third day that we have been in this trial. From all that has been established here, I say with more than formal respect for counsel on both sides, that this case could easily have been disposed of in less than a day. The defendants could very well have admitted those allegations of the complaint which they denied, namely, that they violated the restrictive covenants which were contained in the bill of sale and in the agreement supplementary to that bill of sale. For that fact has not only been clearly established but has not been refuted by either of the two remaining defendants though they were present in court. This case seems to have had its origin when the Ace Tackless Corporation entered into an agreement to purchase the American Tackless Corporation, resulting in a bill of sale dated August 23, 1956. The provisions of that bill of sale are quite germane and important to the decision of this case. The bill of sale recites the sale of the goods and chattels particularly described in Schedule A, which was annexed, and the list of customers set forth in Schedule B, which likewise was annexed. It included the good will of the American Tackless Corporation and the list of customers was warranted by the American Tackless Corporation that this contained the list of customers then appearing on the books of the seller. In addition, Ace Tackless Corporation purchased certain raw materials which were on hand, including nails, cardboard cartons, wood, and so forth, which are specifically enumerated in a separate memorandum executed simultaneously with the bill of sale. I pause for a moment and turn to Schedule B which is annexed to the bill of sale. Without reciting the name and address of each customer, it appears that quite a number of the customers were located in Illinois, in Pennsylvania, in Arizona, in Maryland, in Ohio, in New Jersey, in Utah, in Georgia, in North Carolina, in Florida, in Michigan and in Kansas. I call specific attention to this in view of one of the affirmative defenses which is pleaded in the answer by Alexander and Selton. The supplementary agreement which was a part of this transaction recites the names of all the parties, including the two defendants who remained in this case. It recites that both the American Tackless Corporation and Ace Tackless Corporation were engaged in designing, manufacturing and selling carpet and rug installation accessories, more particularly in the form of tackless installation accessories and equipment.

[Restrictive Covenants]

It again makes cross-reference to the list of customers to which I have already alluded. It specifically recites:

> "Whereas a valuable and substantial part of the consideration paid by Ace Tackless Corporation for the property and list of customers so as aforesaid described was and is the agreement herein contained and the first parties will derive great profit, benefit and advantages from and in consequence of the said purchase."

It then recites "Consideration." It then goes on to provide as follows in paragraph 1:

> "That the first parties, individually and collectively, covenant with the second party, its successors and assigns, that they and each of them will not at anytime during the period of five years from and after the date hereof, directly or indirectly, under any circumstances or conditions whatever, engage in or be or become interested as an individual, partner, stockholder, director, officer, principal, agent, employee, trustee or in any relation or capacity whatsoever in or to the business of designing, manufacturing and sale of carpet and rug installation, accessories, more particularly, in the form of tackless installation accessories and equipment in any place in the United States of America."

There is then the usual provision that in the event of a breach that the party as against whom the breach is committed would be entitled to an injunction.

There is then the third paragraph to which I call specific attention and which I quote for the reason that there is a separate defense which refers to it. That third paragraph is as follows:

> "That the said first parties, individually and collectively, shall not at anytime and forever canvass, solicit or accept any business for carpet and rug installation accessories, more particularly in the form of tackless installation accessories and equipment from any customer or customers contained in the list of customers, as set forth in Schedule B annexed to the bill of sale herein referred to, which bill of sale runs from American Tackless Corporation to Ace Tackless Corporation either for themselves or any of them or for another directly or indirectly as an employee, owner, partner, dormant or otherwise, agent or stockholder, director or officer of any corporation or otherwise."

This was signed by the American Tackless Corporation by its president and attested by its secretary. Irving Allen, William Snyder, Irving Alexander, Abe Selton and Jack Allen signed as individuals and Ace Tackless Corporation signed by its president Lionel H. Rosenhaft.

[Violation of Covenants]

That there was a violation of the restrictive covenant no one would seriously dispute. It was amply proven, especially by the testimony of Mr. Meyer Yorsamer, who said that within two weeks after August 23, 1956, that both Alexander and Selton became associated with the business that he was engaged in, which was a competitive business with the Ace Tackless Corporation, and that he paid to them $125 a week as a drawing account against a ten per cent interest in the profits of the corporation and the business.

Yorsamer certainly did not try to help the plaintiff. In fact, he testified with considerable hesitation, which casts some doubt on his credibility in an endeavor, if he could, to hide the activities of both Alexander and Selton. And I will point out specifically where that arose.

He was asked to take the list of Schedule B and then to tell us which one of those were customers with whom he had come in contact through introduction by either Alexander or Selton or by both. He had his sales book, which was marked for identification. The court specifically asked counsel whether it was agreeable to them that that book should be examined and tested as against the list of customers on Schedule B. Yorsamer had testified that there were only seven concerns. He was entirely in error. And when I say that I am speaking charitably, for there were not seven, there were seventeen and they were read into the record.

I say, therefore, that the fact that they violated the restrictive covenant is as clear as anything could be.

[Defenses]

I deal now, however, with the affirmative defenses, one of which is that the agreement which was supplemental to the bill of sale was void since it was an agreement to create a monopoly in the manufacture, production and sale of an article of common use.

The second affirmative defense is, in effect, the same thing, that it is void because contrary to public policy of the State of New York for the reason that it tends to restrain trade and creates a monopoly.

The General Business Law applicable to this has often been referred to as the little Clayton Act.

The third is that it violated the terms of the Clayton Act. And the final one that the defendant, the plaintiff, together with others, agreed and conspired to purchase the assets of the American Tackless Corporation and to restrain the members of the American Tackless from competing with them in the field and sale and manufacture of carpet and rug tackless installation.

No one of these defenses has been established. Conspiracy cannot be guessed at. It must be a conspiracy to do a wrong. The law does not recognize such a thing as a conspiracy standing baldly by itself. It must be either a conspiracy to do an act unlawful in itself or to refrain from doing that which one is called upon to do.

It cannot be said and I do not find that this agreement was void because it ran for a period of five years. There are many cases in the reports where a period longer than five years has been embodied in an agreement of sale and there is a distinction which is recognized by the decisions between the sale of a business, its good will and a restrictive covenant as against individuals interested in the business and that of a contract of mere employment.

[Antitrust Laws]

This was not a contract of mere employment. This agreement was not void as contrary to the public policy of the State of New York nor is it void under and by virtue of the terms of the Clayton Act, because both in the state courts and in the federal courts, it has been repeatedly held that where a business is sold and with it the seller, or those in official connection with the seller, agree not to compete, that it does not fall within the condemnation of the terms of the Clayton Act.

Now, the next question that arises is: Was it too broad in providing that they shall not engage in this line of business anywhere in the United States? My answer to that is no, it was not too broad, and for this reason: In addition to the customers which I have previously listed in different parts of the United States, we have the testimony of the president of the plaintiff, Lionel H. Rosenhaft, that they had distributors with whom they did business directly in thirty-three states in the United States and through those distributors that their products were also sold in the other fifteen states. There they obtained them indirectly from the plaintiff and from the plaintiff's distributors.

[Evidence]

Now, these two defendants were left absolutely free to go into any other business that they desired to go into. But they bound themselves not to go into a competing business and they did so within a period of two weeks after August 23, 1956.

We have the testimony of Frank Felty of Sloane and Company, who did business with one of these two defendants, but who then believed that he was buying from Allied Tackless Corporation, when as a matter of fact, he was buying through these two defendants from either that concern or some other concern.

I repeat that I think the credibility of Meyer Yorsamer was rudely shaken.

I have no reason whatever to disbelieve the testimony of Harry J. Lockman of the E. L. Supply Company that Selton came to him as early as September 14, 1956, and told him he had good news for him and that he could get him tackless from another source.

I have no reason to doubt the testimony of Edward Lieberman, of William Fuhrman, or Lionel H. Rosenhaft, nor of the young lady who was last called and who was the bookkeeper for the plaintiff, Evelyn Warshauer.

I think that what the two defendants did here was unconscionable. They were parties to this agreement in this sale for which the price of $25,000 was paid, and in addition, some added items of merchandise or other incidentals; and by defendant's Exhibit C in evidence, both Abe Selton and Irving Alexander acknowledged receipt of their distributive share on the liquidation and dissolution of the American Tackless Corporation. That is set forth in the sheet appended to defendant's Exhibit C. The total that they received either by accounts receivable, in cash paid at the time or in cash at the time of the signing of this paper was $7,382.58.

At no time did they assert the invalidity of that which they have done nor did they tender back the moneys that they had received.

I do not think it necessary to go any further into the facts. Suffice it to say that there is not a shred of evidence on which one could predicate a decision in favor of these two defendants on their affirmative separate or partial defenses.

[Injunction]

It will appear in the record that a little while ago this afternoon I asked if Irving Alexander and Abe Selton were in the courtroom. Counsel responded that they were both present. Neither of them saw fit to take the stand in aid of their denials or their affirmative defenses.

An injunction will issue.

Now, since they are both present and their counsel is present, the injunction will be effective as of the end of this week, regardless of whether it has been reduced to typewritten form and signed or not. The Court of Appeals of this state has held that an injunction or order made from the Bench is just as effective as a written order.

They must cease immediately their activities with the competitor of the plaintiff.

Should the plaintiff desire the opportunity to offer evidence of money damage with respect to any of the seventeen customers who unquestionably were sold because it's on the book which was produced here, that opportunity will be afforded.

The injunction order, however, should be prepared promptly and served on defendants' attorney.

Costs will run as a matter of course in a case of this kind.

[¶ 68,641] James F. Crafts v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 14,972. Filed February 27, 1957.

Upon Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division. Oliver D. Hamlin, District Judge.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Production of Documentary Evidence—Enforcement of Subpoena by U. S. District Court—Jurisdiction of District Court—Scope of Subpoena—McCarran-Ferguson Act.—An order of a United States District Court enforcing a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission in a false advertising proceeding against an insurance company was reversed on the ground that the order was too broad. The order required the production of all books, papers, and records of the insurance company, including those relating to the intrastate business of the company in California. Under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the power of the Federal Trade Commission to regulate the business of insurance is limited. The District Court had jurisdiction to determine, and should have determined, whether or not the Federal Trade Commission had any power over the subject matter of its proceeding in view of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. Also, the court should have determined whether or not the broad demand for documents covering the whole field of intrastate operation in California and in other states, which respectively attempted to legislate with regard to advertising in the field of insurance, was arbitrary and unreasonable. There was no examination by the court of the relevancy and pertinence of the documents demanded to any matter into which the Commission was empowered by statute to inquire. While it may be the duty of a court to enforce a subpoena insofar as the demand is in accordance with the law, the phraseology of the subpoena in the instant case was such that the court had no means of separating the items, if any, over which the Commission had jurisdiction from those as to which Congress had explicitly denied authority to the Commission.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.362, 5201, 5301; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.55.

For the appellant: Christopher M. Jenks, of Orrick, Dahlquist, Herrington & Sutcliffe, San Francisco, Cal.

For the appellee: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission; Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, FTC; and Janet D. Saxon, Washington, D. C. Don Eastvold, Attorney General, State of Washington; Bernard C. Lonctot, Chief Assistant; and J. Calvin Simpson, Olympia, Wash. James E. Corkey; John W. Brookfield, Jr.; Edmund G. Brown, Attorney General, State of California; and Harold B. Haas, San Francisco, Cal.

Reversing an order of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division, enforcing a Federal Trade Commission subpoena in Dkt. 6310.

Before: LEMMON, FEE and CHAMBERS, Circuit Judges.

[FTC Subpoena—Court Order]

JAMES ALGER FEE, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal from an order enforcing a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission to Crafts in a proceeding against Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company. The trial court issued an order as follows:

"Order Requiring the Giving of Evidence and the Production of Documentary Evidence

"The Federal Trade Commission, having invoked the aid of this Court in requiring the attendance and testimony of James F. Crafts and the production of documentary evidence by James F. Crafts, as a witness in a proceeding instituted by the Federal Trade Commission against Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company (D. 6310) and

"The Court having considered the application, it is hereby

"Orderd: That the application be, and the same hereby is granted, and that the said James F. Crafts be, and he is, hereby ordered to appear upon not less than ten days' notice at a time and place to be set by the Federal Trade Commission or a Hearing Examiner thereof designated by the said Commission to take testimony and receive evidence, and to perform all other duties authorized by law in the prosecution of the inquiry pending before said Commission entitled, 'In the Matter of Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, a corporation, Docket No. 6310,' or an examiner subsequent hereto designated by it for such purposes, to give evidence and testimony at the aforesaid time and place touching matters brought in question by the complaint of the Federal Trade Commission against Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, a corporation, and the answer thereto, to then and there produce the documentary evidence identified and described in a subpoena issued by the said Commission, on September 22, 1955, and already served upon said James F. Crafts, and which the said James F. Crafts has not produced, and to answer at said time and place every question relevant and material to said proceeding and necessary and proper to the conduct thereof and to attend before said Examiner of the Federal Trade Commission from day to day until his examination shall have been completed.

"It Is Further Orderd: That this Order and its effectiveness be and the same is hereby stayed for the time permitted by law for an appeal therefrom, and if such appeal is filed, thereafter until final determination of such appeal."

[Enforced Subpoena]

The subpoena which was thus enforced read:

"United States of America Federal Trade Commission

"Subpoena Duces Tecum

"To Mr. James F. Crafts, Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, 401 California Street, San Francisco 20, California.

"You are hereby required to appear before J. Earl Cox, a Hearing Examiner of the Federal Trade Commission, at Room 261, U. S. Post Office and Court House, 7th and Mission Streets in the City of San Francisco, California, on the 17th day of October, 1955, at ten o'clock a.m., of that day, to testify at the instance of the Federal Trade Commission in the Matter of Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, Docket No. 6310, and you are hereby required to bring with you and produce at said time and place the following books, papers, and documents: described in Schedule 'A' attached hereto and incorporated by reference as if fully rewritten herein.

"Fail not at your peril.

"In testimony whereof, the undersigned, a Hearing Examiner of the Federal Trade Commission, has hereunto set his hand and the said Federal Trade Commission has caused its seal to be affixed at Washington, D. C., this 22nd day of September, 1955.

[Seal] /s/ J. EARL COX, Hearing Examiner.

"Schedule 'A'

"1. One copy of each form letter, bulletin, circular, folder, brochure, stuffer, newspaper advertisement, magazine advertisement, or other written or printed advertising material which was disseminated by respondent Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company (hereinafter described in this Schedule 'A' as respondent) to the general public, or to its employees or agents for dissemination to the general public or which was disseminated to the general public by any person, partnership, or corporation with the permission of, request of, order by, or under the terms of any contract with the respondent from March 1, 1954, to date, which advertised, described, or related to any of the accident and health insurance policies named in the complaint or any policies issued by the respondent since March 1, 1954, as substitutes or modifications for such policies.

"2. All contracts, memorandums of agreement, or correspondence between respondent, its officers, agents, employees, or contractors, or any records, books of accounts, or verified summaries thereof which have reference to the following listed advertisements and which show on a state by state basis volume of dissemination of such advertisements by respondent to the general public or to its agents for redissemination to the general public during the years 1953 and 1954.

1. Form letter of A & H No. 2.
2. Form letter of A & H No. 7.
3. Form letter of A & H No. 9.
4. Form letter of A & H No. 10.
5. Circular bearing form No. A & H 4800.
6. Postcard bearing form No. A & H 4800-A.
7. Circular bearing form No. A & H 4801.
8. Postcard bearing form No. A & H 4801-A.
9. Circular bearing form No. A & H 4803.
10. Postcard bearing form No. A & H 4803-A.
11. Pamphlet bearing form No. A & H 4804.
12. Pamphlet bearing form No. A & H 4807.

"3. One specimen copy of each accident and health insurance policy issued by respondent since March 1, 1954, as a substitute or modification for any of the accident and health insurance policies named in the complaint.

"4. Original books, records, or accounts of the respondent, or verified summaries thereof, showing: the dollar volume of the premium receipts received by it from insureds residing in each of the several states of the United States and in the District of Columbia during the years 1953 and 1954 to whom respondent has issued during those years one or more of the following listed policies on a family or group basis; or the total number of such policies issued by respondent during the years 1953 and 1954 in each of the several states of the United States and the District of Columbia:

1. The Basic Equity Accident Policy (No. BA).

2. The Basic Income Equity Accident Policy (No. BAI).

3. The Basic Equity Life and Limb Accident Policy (No. BAL).

4. The Basic Health Policy (No. BHP).

5. The Budget Hospital and Medical Policy (No. GMA).

6. The Hospital Nurses and Expense Policy (No. HNE).

7. Hospital and Medical Policy (No. IMH).

8. Polio Policy (No. PS).

"[Endorsed]: Filed October 18, 1955."

[FTC Complaint]

The complaint in the original proceeding is of extremely broad scope:

"United States of America Before Federal Trade Commission Docket No. 6310

"In the Matter of:

Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, a Corporation

"Complaint

"Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as that Act is applicable to the business of insurance under the provisions of Public Law 15, 79th Congress (Title 15, U. S. Code, Sections 1011 to 1015, inclusive), and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

"Paragraph One: Respondent, Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company, is a corporation, duly organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with its office and principal place of business located at 410 California Street, San Francisco, California.

"Paragraph Two: Respondent is now, and for more than two years last past has been, engaged as an insurer in the business of insurance in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, by entering into insurance contracts with insureds located in various States of the United States in which the business of insurance is not regulated by state law to the extent of regulating the practices of respondent alleged in this complaint to be illegal. Respondent maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in said insurance policies in commerce between and among the several States of the United States.

"Respondent, during the two years last past, has sold insurance indemnification in a variety of policies, among which are the following:

1. The Basic Equity Accident Policy (No. BA).

2. The Basic Income Equity Accident Policy (No. BAI).

3. The Basic Equity Life and Limb Accident Policy (No. BAL).

4. The Basic Health Policy (No. BHP).

5. The Budget Hospital and Medical Policy (No. GMA).

6. The Hospital Nurses and Expense Policy (No. HNE).

7. Hospital and Medical Policy (No. IHM).

8. Polio Policy (No. PS).

"Paragraph Three: Respondent is licensed, as provided by the respective State laws, to engage in the business of insurance, as heretofore generally described, in all of the forty-eight States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

"Paragraph Four: In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, respondent, during the two years last past, disseminated, and caused to be disseminated, in the form of printed and written matter, false, misleading and deceptive advertising statements concerning the terms and provisions of its contracts of insurance, as reflected by policies as aforesaid. These statements were disseminated by letters, bulletins, circulars, etc., through the United States mail and by other means; or through its agents in commerce, between and among the various States of the United States. The purpose and effect of these statements was and is to induce members of the public to become insured by the respondent under the terms and provisions of the policies advertised.

"Paragraph Five: In the course and conduct of its said business in said commerce, as aforesaid, the respondent has disseminated, among others of similar import and meaning, not herein set out, advertisements relating to its said policies containing the statements hereinafter set forth:

1. 'Available to Males ages 18-54 . . . Females 18-54 . . . Renewable to age 70.'
2. 'A Perfect Combination for Full Coverage Disability Insurance.'

'Let Accident and Health Insurance Protect Your Income as Fire Insurance Protects Your Home.'

'Adequate Sickness Protection Combined With Sound Accident Insurance.'

'Basic Coverages

Hospital Confinement cases:

	Benefits Plan A
1. Hospital room and board for a period not exceeding 100 days for any one disease or injury,
Adults, per day up to	$ 5.00
Children, per day up to	4.00
2. Actual expense incurred for operating room, anaesthesia, anaesthetist's fee, drugs, dressings, diagnostic X-ray and laboratory examinations, up to an aggregate maximum of..	100.00
Ambulance Expense:
Transportation to or from the hospital, up to	15.00'

'Optional Coverages

Surgical Operation Expense:
Whether at hospital, doctor's office or home, schedule up to..	$250.00
Housewives and Unemployed Females	187.50
Doctor's Visits During Hospital Confinement
In non-surgical cases, reimbursement will be made for physician's fees up to a maximum of 100 days for each disease or injury, per day up to	3.00'

4. 'Loss of Business Time Weekly Income up to 52 weeks Confining Illness Coverage from first day or with waiting period of 7, 14, 21 or 28 days.'

"Paragraph Six: Through the use of such statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning, not specifically set out herein, the respondent represents and has represented directly or by implication, with respect to said policies of insurance, as follows:

"1. That the policies providing indemnification against loss caused by accident or sickness may be continued at the option of the insured to a specific age or for life as long as the insured makes such premium payments within the time and in the amounts as are required by the terms of the policy.

"2. That complete indemnification is provided for any or all sicknesses, illnesses or accidents suffered by the insured.

"3. (a) That indemnification is provided in the form of cash benefits for the payment of hospital room and board at the rate of $5.00 per day for a period not to exceed 100 days for any one disease or injury which may be suffered by the insured.

"(b) That indemnification in the form of cash benefits in an amount up to $250.00 is provided for surgical expense incurred by the insured as a result of illness or injury.

"(c) That indemnification is provided for doctors' visits in non-surgical cases during hospital confinement at the rate of $3.00 per day for a maximum 100 days for each sickness or injury suffered by the insured.

"(4) That indemnification is provided for any confining sickness which may be suffered by the insured during the policy term from the first day of such sickness or after a waiting period of 7, 14, 21, or 28 days as the policy may prescribe.

"Paragraph Seven: The aforesaid statements and representations are false, misleading and deceptive. In truth and in fact:

"1. Contrary to the statements made in paragraph 1 of Paragraph Five, respondent's policies may not be renewed at the option of the insured until the age of 70 years or any other specific age by the timely payment of premiums in the amounts required by such policies. On the contrary, respondent's policies provide, in effect, that they are subject to cancellation by the respondent at any time for any reason or for no reason at all.

"2. Contrary to the statement made in subparagraph 2 of Paragraph Five concerning respondent's Basic Health Policy and Basic Equity Accident Policy, the insured is not provided with complete indemnification by such policies against any loss which may be incurred by reason of any or all sicknesses or accidents. For example, Respondent's Basic Health Policy provides, (a) in effect, that no cash benefits are payment for any loss due to sickness the cause of which is traceable to a condition existing prior to or within 15 days after the effective date of the policy; (b) any loss due to pregnancy, childbirth or miscarriage; and (c) suicide or any attempt threat, death, disability or other loss caused or contributed to, by disease or infection (except pyogenia infection) or injury sustained by the insured while in or on any aircraft or other device for air travel. Total disability benefits are only provided if the disability wholly and continuously disables the insured and prevents the insured from performing each and every duty pertaining to his occupation. Further, such total disability must occur within 30 days of the date of the accident.

"3. Contrary to the statements made in subparagraph 3 of Paragraph Five:

"(a) Respondent's Hospital and Medical Expense Policy (as referred to in subparagraph 3(1) of Paragraph Five) does not provide indemnification for hospital room and board for a period not to exceed 100 days for any one disease or injury. On the contrary, such policy does not cover losses resulting from any illness the cause of which is traceable to a condition existing prior to or within 30 days of the effective date of the policy. Further, the policy does not provide for the payment of cash benefits for losses resulting from insanity, pregnancy or childbirth, or any condition resulting therefrom; intentional self-inflicted injuries; or operations for removal of tonsils or adenoids, or both, upon children up to the age of 18; unless the policy has been in effect for at least 12 consecutive months. Also, it is to be noted that the policy provides that benefits payable thereunder shall be reduced 25% when the insured reaches 60 years of age and 50% when the insured reaches 65 years of age.

"(b) Respondent's Hospital and Medical Expense Policy does not cover any surgical expense which may be suffered by the insured by reason of sickness or accident in all cases to a maximum of $250.00. The surgical benefits provided by the policy, if payable at all, are limited to the maximum amounts stated in the schedule of operations (Rider Form MSE) contained in the policy. This schedule lists 114 different types of operations. A maximum of $250.00 will be payable for surgical fees for only four of these types of operations. A maximum of $75.00 or less is provided for 90 of the listed types of operations.

"(c) Respondent's Hospital and Medical Policy does not provide indemnification for doctors' visits to the insured during hospital confinement in all non-surgical cases. Instead, such policy excludes indemnification for this expense in many instances for the reasons previously stated in subsection (a) of this section.

"4. Contrary to the statements contained in subparagraph 4 of Paragraph Five (which refer to respondent's Basic Health Policy) indemnification is not provided for the first day of any illness which may be contracted by the insured during the policy term. Instead, such policy excludes payment for losses resulting from any sickness the cause of which originates on or prior to fifteen days after the effective date of the policy.

"Paragraph Eight: The use by the respondent of the aforesaid false and misleading statements and representations with respect to the terms and conditions of its said policies and its failure to reveal the limitations of said coverage found in said policies have had and now have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive and have misled and deceived a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the aforesaid statements and representations were and are true and to induce said portion of the purchasing public to purchase insurance coverage from the respondent because of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

"The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

"Wherefore, the Premises Considered, the Federal Trade Commission, on this 11th day of March, A. D. 1955, issues its complaint against said respondent."

[Appeal]

Crafts appeals, claiming it is not shown that the proceeding lies within the power of the Commission and that the testimony and exhibits demanded are therefore not shown to be relevant to any inquiry within the jurisdiction of the administrative body to conduct. No claim of personal privilege is made.

The proceeding raised the question of whether Congress had not totally proscribed action by the Commission in the insurance field, albeit trafficking across state lines in insurance now constitutes interstate commerce.[1] It must be determined at the outset whether the demand of the subpoena related specifically to any books, documents or other papers, the production of which the Commission had a right to require from this corporation or its officers, as being within the closely circumscribed area which Congress may have left remaining for Commission action as to insurance.

[1] United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Association [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, rehearing denied 323 U. S. 811.

[Jurisdiction of District Court]

The two bases for the claim of the Commission that the order should be upheld cut diagonally across these fields.

First, it is said that the District Court had no authority to determine whether the Commission was empowered to bring the proceeding and issue the subpoena, and, second, it is argued that the only question involved is one of "coverage," which must be left to the discretion of the Commission. It will be demonstrated that neither of these contentions is sound. As paraphrased by the agency brief, the trial court took the position that "the subpoena must be enforced without deciding whether the appellant is covered by the statute, provided the subpoena is relevant to a legitimate field of inquiry and is otherwise reasonable." But it must be pointed out that even this test, so loosely defined, was not really employed by the trial court in the instant case.

The present proceeding to enforce the subpoena was frankly initiated in order to gain complete disclosure of all records by Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company without settling the question of the authority of the Commission to investigate that company in their present proceeding. Indeed, as noted above, the claim was made and was apparently accepted by the trial judge that the District Court had no jurisdiction to consider whether the Commission had power to investigate this particular corporation at all. It is urged by the agency that this Court accept the interpretation of the Commission of its own powers for the purpose of making the investigation and that the breadth thereof can be reviewed when the final order in the main proceeding is attacked. We reject this limitation upon the jurisdiction of the trial court.

It cannot be too often reiterated that the attempt to enforce an administrative subpoena initiates a case or controversy.[2] All questions relating to jurisdiction of the court, authority of the administrative body, reasonableness of the demand under all the circumstances, with regard for due process and protection of individual rights, and relevancy of the testimony and documents demanded are justiciable. Since the Commission was asking for relief of an affirmative nature, it was incumbent upon that agency to establish affirmatively its legal power to act in the field, among other essentials. The postulate upon which any jurisdiction to act in the field of interstate commerce by the Commission depends is that Congress had not explicitly excluded such action by specific statute. The power of Congress to exclude completely such action under the Commerce Clause of the Federal Constitution cannot be denied. If the Commission were then precluded from regulation by Congress, it would have no power to act and the court would be bound so to declare.

[Issues]

The jurisdiction of the District Court and the extent of the area denied by Congress to the Commission in regulation of insurance in interstate commerce are the cardinal questions here. Therefore, the decision here is not affected by the principles set forth in cases recently decided by this Court. In these decisions, the element of personal privilege, the right of privacy, the right of a person to be secure from a general search and seizure and not to be required to be a witness against oneself as constitutionally guaranteed were discussed.[3] Here, as noted above, no claim of any personal

[2] Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 489.

[3] These decisions turn on the propriety of judicial enforcement of subpoenas issued by various administrative agencies in the light of claims of personal privilege or privacy by those directly involved or by third parties to the proceeding. In Boren v. Tucker, 9 Cir., No. 15,010, filed December 3, 1956, it was held, so far as is important here, that the subpoena was reasonable in that the evidence sought was sufficiently material and relevant to the tax liability of the defendant taxpayers. In Chapman v. Maren Elwood College, 9 Cir., 225 F. 2d 230, the denial of enforcement of a subpoena issued by the Veterans Administration was affirmed, as the subpoena was found, on the facts, to reach unreasonably far back in time.

Three cases involve the rights of third persons to protection where the administrative agency is authorized to investigate another directly. The question presented is whether a general, rather than specific, demand allows the third person to raise questions of personal privilege and avoid disclosure which might tend to incriminate him. Enforcement of a Civil privilege or right is made. The issue is essentially one of authority to determine jurisdictional questions.

There are three separate questions in this case which were before the trial court. First, did the Federal Trade Commission have any authority to demand production of any papers whatsoever from Fireman's Fund Indemnity Company? Second, has the Commission any power over the subject matter of the inquiry? Third, was the subpoena definite enough to show all the material demanded was relevant to any inquiry which the Commission was empowered to conduct?

[Duty of District Court]

The question of whether either Indemnity or Crafts was covered by an act, regulation or statute personally was really not involved or, perhaps we may rather say, was entirely a dependent proposition which could only be solved by a determination of whether Congress had precluded the Commission from acting in the particular field. The trial court refused to consider the scope of authority of the Commission, the relevancy of the testimony or documents to any inquiry which the agency had the authority to conduct and the arbitrary nature of the demand considering that Congress may have prohibited action or at least closely circumscribed action in this field of interstate commerce by the Commission.

But at the threshold of any inquiry a District Court must consider not only its own jurisdiction, but also the authority of any agency to act which seeks relief before it.[4] The idea that a fiat of an administrative agency that it possesses authority to act in a particular field is sacrosanct is illusory. In certain statutes, Congress has permitted an agency to determine conclusively whether a certain person or state of facts comes within the orbit of its administrative power.[5] But those instances are not analogous to the instant proceeding.

[McCarran-Ferguson Act]

Here the trial court places an imprimatur upon each demand of the subpoena without any consideration of the limitations upon Aeronautics Board subpoena was reversed and the case remanded in Hermann v. Civil Aeronautics Board, 9 Cir., 237 F. 2d 359, in part because the District Court failed to pass upon privilege asserted by third parties to the proceeding in behalf of documents relating "entirely to their personal affairs, such as their income tax reports." A similar result obtained in Local 174, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, 9 Cir., No. 14,746, filed November 8, 1956, where the subpoena issued by the Internal Revenue Service to the Local, a third party to the tax investigation of another, was so broad on its face as to compel a holding that the District Court had not given consideration to the right of privacy of the Local. Likewise, this Court, in Hubner v. Tucker, 9 Cir., No. 14,704, filed January 30, 1957, set aside a contempt order imposed against defendant, a third party to a tax investigation for failure to obey the subpoena issued by the Internal Revenue Service, and remanded the case. It was held that the blanket demand, by its very breadth, precluded the defendant from effectively raising the defense of unlawful search and seizure and the privilege against self-incrimination.

It should be noted that, in all these cases, there was no question raised as to the broad legal authority of the various agencies involved to issue subpoenas, and to have them enforced: "coverage" was not an issue in any of them. Rather, the issues raised in these enforcement proceedings concern more particular problems, such as what may be subpoenaed, from whom, and in what manner.

[4] Jones v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 298 U. S. 1. A leading "coverage" case indicates that evidence sought by subpoena cannot be "plainly incompetent or irrelevant to any lawful purpose" of the agency. Endicott Johnson Corporation v. Perkins, 317 U. S. 501, 509. As the District Court stated in Application of Barnes, 116 F. Supp. 464, 467, ultimately affirmed sub nom. United States v. Minker, 350 U. S. 179, "Subpenas should not issue on hit or miss legal grounds." See also cases where enforcement was denied on analogous legal grounds: Cudahy Packing Co. v. Holland, 315 U. S. 357 (improper delegation of subpoena power); cf. Ellis v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 237 U. S. 434; Harriman v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 211 U. S. 407 (witnesses not required to answer questions outside the scope of the statutory authority of the Commission).

[5] See, for example, Endicott Johnson Corporation v. Perkins, 317 U. S. 501, so holding as to the Walsh-Healy Public Contracts Act, 41 U. S. C. A. § 38, and Tobin v. Banks and Rumbaugh, 5 Cir., 201 F. 2d 223, cert. den. 345 U. S. 942, so holding as to the Fair Labor Standards Act, § 9, 29 U. S. C. A. § 209.

The trial court was impressed with the rationale of these cases and treated the question raised in the instant case as one of "coverage." The government has cited a wealth of cases on this point, which have properly treated "coverage" questions following the same line of reasoning. These are not applicable here. In each of them Congress had vested an agency with regulatory power in a broad field, and the particular question was whether some individual or entity was within or without the field. The agency was given primary jurisdiction to reach a tentative conclusion and subpoenaed records to prove the fact of coverage. But here Congress has severely circumscribed, if not destroyed the power of any agency to enter the field, if the regulation by a particular state is sufficiently comprehensive.

the power of the agency to act. However, Congress had passed an act specifically stating its position with regard to the business of insurance, which reads in part:

> "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress hereby declares that the continued regulation and taxation by the several States of the business of insurance is in the public interest, and that silence on the part of the Congress shall not be construed to impose any barrier to the regulation or taxation of such business by the several States.
>
> "Sec. 2. (a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.
>
> "(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically related to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law." McCarran-Ferguson Insurance Regulation Act, 59 Stat. 33, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1011-1012.

In the face of this statute, the Commission has decided by a vote of three to two that it has a broad and uncontrolled power to regulate the business of insurance.[6] This result seemingly was reached by rationalization from the terms of the statute. However, it is not the intention to attempt to construe the statute because the demand of the subpoena is so broad and general that such a holding is not compelled here.

[State Regulation]

The appellant Crafts, contrary to the Commission, claims that California is the state of origin of the company and that the operations of the company with regard to advertising are completely regulated by the law of that state.[7] It is urged that California has the complete control of the existence of the corporation and may revoke its charter for violations of the laws, even if the particular act may have occurred in another state, federal district or foreign country.[8] Nor, it is claimed, is this a dry letter of the enactment, since the proper officers do enforce such regulations upon violations outside the state.[9] Furthermore, it is said, practically every state in the Union and the District of Columbia have statutes which regulate and control the advertising of the persons and corporations, domestic or foreign, doing insurance business in the state or district.[10] It is urged upon us that these are purely questions of law and that therefore it is incumbent upon this Court to decide now just what are the limitations, if any, upon the power of the Commission. We hold it improper for us to rule upon the questions thus presented in this ancillary case except insofar as these may affect breadth of the demand of the subpoena.

That there are limitations upon the power of the Commission in this field is beyond all doubt. It is apparently conceded by everyone that the agency had no power to inquire into the advertising of this corporation in the State of California. Indeed, it is stated that some such limitation was placed upon the claim to discovery by the trial examiner and affirmed by the Commission. It has also been stated by counsel that the agency has no interest in discovery as to this area. But this Court cannot consider this as a supposition or admission. The trial court enforced the subpoena as it read without qualification or exception. This was error.

[6] In the Matter of American Hospital and Life Insurance Company, F. T. C. Docket No. 6237, decided April 24, 1956.

[7] Cal. Stat. (Insurance Code) (West, 1956) §§ 780, 781.

[8] Cal. Stat. (Insurance Code) (West, 1956) §§ 704, 783.5.

[9] Appellant draws our attention to the pending case of Foster v. McConnell, Docket No. 422572, in Superior Court at San Francisco, in which just this application of the statutes is being tried.

[10] Almost four-fifths of the states have adopted, with minor variations, the so-called "Model Act," which was drafted by the National Association of State Insurance Commissioners and provided for the regulation of trade practices. See R. C. W. §§ 48.30.010-48.30.250. The remaining states all have statutory provisions regulating to various degrees deceptive representations or advertising.

[Scope of FTC Jurisdiction]

The entire complaint in the proceeding is predicated upon the overriding authority of the Commission to regulate and punish advertising in the business of insurance which may affect interstate aspects thereof in accordance with the ruling by that body, split three to two.[11]

When the Congress passes an act which is intended to cure an evil, legislatively designated and defined, the courts will not circumscribe the sphere of action of the agency. Here the Commission acts within the scope of power conferred by a general statute which purports to confer authority "to prevent * * * corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."[12] This Act covers a broad field and unquestionably sets out a legislative purpose of great public importance. As such, the legislation has been upheld and broadly enforced by the courts. Yet even the Commission will not contend that this legislation is of universal application to all corporations, persons and partnerships in the United States. Indeed, before the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Association [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, the Commission had never attempted to exercise this authority against insurance companies. If such an attempt had been made before that time, surely no claim could have been made that an insurance company could not resist the investigation at the outset on ground that the Commission had no jurisdiction. This consideration highlights the proposition that the primary question for a court here is jurisdictional and does not involve coverage.[13]

This point serves to distinguish all legislation and all decisions thereon where the particular entity may or may not be as a matter of fact within the general sweep of power conferred.[14] Where Congress has conferred broad authority upon an agency to exercise regulatory power over a legislative classification such as interstate commerce, the question as to whether the entity or person subpoenaed is within the classification and thus subject to administrative control is one of "coverage." As it is a question of fact, the agency usually has complete power of determination, and the courts cannot interfere. As to many fields, the Commission has such unhampered power in regulation of interstate commerce.

Here Congress had plenary power to refuse to occupy the field of regulation of insurance in interstate commerce. Whether the refusal was complete with a clause of re-entry left for future contingency or whether a considerable area was left for present regulation by the Commission, we do not attempt presently to decide. But the determination involves a question of law. The jurisdiction of the Commission certainly was drastically circumscribed in this field in any event. How far the prohibition has gone is dependent upon a construction of this act of Congress and the statutes of the several individual states regulating insurance. It may be conceived the actual practice in insurance regulations of a particular state may become pertinent eventually, but such matter will still relate to jurisdiction of the Commission and not to "coverage."

Patently, the power of the Commission to act at all is based upon the exception contained in a proviso.[15] The distinct purpose of Congress, emphatically set out in the act, was to abandon the field of regulation to the states, where the power traditionally lay.[16] Judicial knowledge may be taken of the fact that, in view of the responsibility which lay on the individual states to regulate this business when by hypothesis there could be no federal regulation,[17] the field was well covered both in the states of origin of the corporations and in the states of dissemination of advertising

[11] In the Matter of American Hospital and Life Insurance Company, F. T. C. Docket No. 6237, decided April 24, 1956.

[12] Federal Trade Commission Act, § 5(a)(6), as amended July 14, 1952, 66 Stat. 632, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45(a)(6).

[13] See cases at Note 4, supra.

[14] See cases at Note 5, supra.

[15] McCarran-Ferguson Insurance Regulation Act, § 2(b), as amended 61 Stat. 448, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1012(b), quoted in text, supra.

[16] McCarran-Ferguson Insurance Regulation Act, § 1, 59 Stat. 33, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1011, quoted in text, supra.

[17] Before the decision in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Association [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, rehearing denied 323 U. S. 811, it had been consistently held for many years that insurance was not "commerce." Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 168, 183; New York Life Insurance Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. 495.

and of written policies. In the time zone which Congress deliberately created for the purpose,[18] state legislation to fill lacunae in regulation was widely enacted, as was the intention. A major portion controls the corporation in the place of its incorporation or where it has its principal place of business. But it must not be forgotten that many states scrupulously control the media of dissemination of policies, such as brokers, agents and advertising of foreign corporations engaged in the insurance business within the territorial jurisdiction thereof. In initiating a scheme of regulation of strictly interstate negotiation and sale of insurance policies, it might have been well for the Commission to establish as to two different states what the limits of such business are. Of course, this Court is not attempting to set boundaries to the jurisdiction of the Commission, but rather to seek a solution for the problem at bar.

[Reasonableness—Relevancy]

The trial court should then have considered the second proposition. It should have found affirmatively upon the question whether the broad demand for the testimony and documents covering the whole field of intrastate operation in California[19] and that in other states, which respectively attempted to legislate with regard to advertising in the field of insurance, was arbitrary and unreasonable or not.

The decisive point, however, encompasses all these phases. There was no examination by the District Court of the relevancy and pertinence of the testimony and documents demanded to any matter into which the Commission was empowered by statute to inquire.[20] Section 6 of the Administrative Procedure Act provides in part:

> "Agency subpenas authorized by law shall be issued to any party upon request and, as may be required by rules of procedure, upon a statement or showing of general relevance and reasonable scope of the evidence sought. Upon contest the court shall sustain any such subpena or similar process or demand to the extent that it is found to be in accordance with law * * *." Administrative Procedure Act, § 6(c), 60 Stat. 240 5 U. S. C. A. § 1005(c).

It may be incumbent upon the trial court to place limitation upon the subpoena. So only could the demand be sustained "to the extent that it is found to be in accordance with law." This Court is of the opinion that the subpoena was so broad on its face and the implications of the complaint upon which it was based are so farreaching that it would have been almost impossible to frame appropriate phrases of limitation. If the subpoena be enforced without regard to the relevance of the testimony sought to the areas over which the Commission has established jurisdiction, the ruling would not only be unfair to the company, but could be quoted as a precedent for an unlimited authority for investigation and discovery in the field of insurance, whether intrastate or interstate. The agency could have limited the subpoena itself so as to have raised the question of its power by particularizing the demand. If the demand had been confined to records relevant to interstate commerce with another single state such as Montana, where there is probably the least regulation of advertising by a foreign corporation in the insurance area,[21] a much closer question would have been presented. But decisions as to relevance as well as those as to reasonable or arbitrary exercise of power must have bases in facts.

[Subpoena Too Broad]

We hold that not only did the District Court have jurisdiction to decide, but also that it is required to decide whether the statutes have withdrawn the power from the Commission to regulate the particular area of interstate commerce in insurance solely when the court is moved to enforce a subpoena so definite in demand for specific books or papers that the scope of authority may be defined. Since this present subpoena demanded in mass all books, papers and records of the Indemnity Company including those relating to the intrastate business of that company in California, wherein Fireman's Fund was incorporated,

[18] McCarran-Ferguson Insurance Regulation Act, § 2(b), as amended, 61 Stat. 448, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1012(b), quoted in text, supra.

[19] See Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U. S. 298, 307.

[20] Federal Trade Commission Act, § 9, 38 Stat. 722, 15 U. S. C. A. § 49.

[21] And, even in Montana, there is general legislation governing false statements in advertising. Montana Revised Code, § 94-1819, which would seem to be specifically applicable to "any insurance company * * * organized in this state, or in any other state." Montana Revised Code, § 40-1106.

the order of enforcement was too broad. While it may be the duty of the court to enforce a subpoena insofar as the demand be "in accordance with law," [22] here the phraseology was such that the court had no means of segregation of items, if any, over which the Commission had jurisdiction from those as to which Congress had explicitly denied them authority. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43; Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Company, 264 U. S. 298. The subpoena in the instant case is not sufficient to present the question of jurisdiction, if any, remaining to the Commission. The proceeding should be dismissed.

Reversed.

[¶ 68,642] Federal Trade Commission v. American Crayon Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 12,286. Filed February 16, 1957.

Petition for Enforcement of Decision of Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Price Discrimination—Cease and Desist Order—Court Review.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting violations of Sections 2(a) and 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended, was affirmed and enforced by a United States Court of Appeals, upon a petition of the Federal Trade Commission for affirmance and enforcement and upon a mandate of the United States Supreme Court, 1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,497.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3508.132, 3522.426, 3522.655; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.

For the petitioner: Robert B. Dawkins and J. B. Truly, Washington, D. C.

For the respondent: Flynn, Py & Kruse, Sandusky, Ohio; and Thomas F. Butler, of Marshall, Melhorn, Bloch & Belt, Toledo, Ohio.

Affirming and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 4142. For prior opinions of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,497, and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,204, reversing a judgment of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,044.

Before ALLEN, MARTIN and STEWART, Circuit Judges.

Order

[FTC Order Affirmed]

FLORENCE E. ALLEN, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This case came on to be heard upon the petition of the Federal Trade Commission for affirmance and enforcement of its order of December 31, 1940, and upon the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States dated October 8, 1956, and upon the record and briefs and oral argument of counsel;

On consideration whereof, it is ordered that the order of the Federal Trade Commission be and it hereby is affirmed.

It is further ordered that the order of the Federal Trade Commission be enforced in its entirety.

[¶ 68,643] Victor N. Alexander v. The Texas Company.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana, Shreveport Division. Civil Action No. 5432. Filed March 1, 1957.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Price Discrimination—Unlawful Effects of Discrimination—Sufficiency of Complaint.—A service station dealer's complaint, alleging that an oil company forced him to pay $.0365 more per gallon of gasoline than other dealers because he refused to request the company's assistance in a price war, failed to state a claim for damages on account of price discrimination. The effect of the alleged discrimination must be to (1) substantially lessen competition, (2) tend to create a monopoly, or (3) injure, destroy, or prevent competition among sellers, buyers, or their customers. The plaintiff dealer was one of nineteen of the company's dealers in the area, and there were more than two hundred other dealers in the area handling competitive brands of oil products. Whatever consequences the alleged discrimination may have had upon the dealer's business would have been almost infinitesimal in their effect upon the over-all business of the area. Such small-scale discrimination could not have substantially lessened competition or tended to create a monopoly. Furthermore, the dealer did not allege in detail how the price difference injured, destroyed, or prevented competition between his business and that of any or all of the favored dealers. The dealer did not show that he was actually in competition with any of the favored dealers.

[22] Administrative Procedure Act, § 6(c), 5 U. S. C. A. § 1005(c), quoted supra.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.365, 3505.390.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Elements of Unlawful Conspiracy—"Horizontal" and "Vertical" Conspiracies—Proof of Illegality.—Where a service station dealer's complaint, charging that an oil company conspired with its other retail dealers to fix the maximum prices of gasoline, was dismissed for insufficiency, the court noted that only a "horizontal" conspiracy between competitors at the same level, and not a "vertical" conspiracy between a manufacturer-distributor and its retail dealers, is proscribed by the Sherman Act, and that, in those decisions which have held a "vertical" conspiracy to be prohibited, the manufacturer-distributor occupied a "dominant" position in the trade area. The court further noted that the oil company did not occupy a "dominant" position in the area.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Refusal to Deal—Cancellation of Service Station Lease.—An oil company was granted a summary judgment in an action charging that it unlawfully cancelled a service station dealer's lease for the reason that the dealer refused to request assistance from the oil company in a price war. Under the terms of the lease, the oil company had a contractual right to cancel the lease. Also, the dealer failed to allege that the cancellation of the lease was directly or indirectly involved in any alleged conspiracy or that the oil company violated the antitrust laws. A simple unilateral refusal to deal is not proscribed by Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and a bilateral refusal to deal is prohibited only where there is concerted action by those who are true "competitors." In the instant case, the oil company could not be characterized as a "competitor" of its retail dealers, who were allegedly given favored treatment. Furthermore, it is only where an actual monopoly or a specific intent to monopolize has been properly pleaded that a unilateral refusal to deal constitutes a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. No such monopoly or intent was alleged by the dealer. The undisputed facts established that the oil company could not, did not, and cannot monopolize or unreasonably restrict competition in the service station business in the area.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Refusal To Buy—Prevention of Sale of Goods.—An oil company was granted a summary judgment in an action charging that it violated the antitrust laws when it prevented a service station dealer, whose lease had been cancelled, from selling its stock and equipment by inducing a prospective buyer not to purchase the dealer's stock and equipment. The dealer admitted that the company was merely acting as a go-between between himself and the in-coming dealer, and the dealer did not have a contract with the prospective purchaser. Unilateral refusals to buy are not prohibited by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. They are only unlawful where there is a group boycott or concert of action between horizontal competitors. If the company was representing the dealer as his agent, the company's actions were the dealer's actions, and, therefore, there could be no violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act since a person cannot conspire with himself. If the company was acting as the prospective buyer's agent, there could be no conspiracy under Section 1 since a principal cannot conspire with his agent. Furthermore, the prospective buyer and the oil company were not competitors and, therefore, there could be no violation of the section. Such a refusal was not unlawful under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The dealer's complaint did not allege that the oil company was engaged in the business of buying stock and equipment; therefore, it could not monopolize any part of that business.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355, 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Measure of Damages —Price Discrimination.—Where a service station dealer alleged that an oil company discriminated in price by charging him $.0365 more per gallon of gasoline than its other dealers, any loss the dealer may have sustained would not be measured by the amount of the alleged discrimination of $.0365 per gallon of gasoline. The measure of the dealer's loss, if any, would be the gross loss of profit on sales he otherwise would have made to those customers who bought from the favored dealers, instead of from the plaintiff dealer, because of the price differential. The dealer failed to allege, among other things, that he sustained any loss of business to the favored dealers; therefore, his claim for damages based on the alleged discriminatory price was dismissed as insufficient.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.640.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Allegations of Conspiracy and Public Injury.—A service station dealer's complaint charging that an oil company conspired with other service station dealers to fix maximum retail prices of gasoline was dismissed on the ground that the complaint did not allege facts which show that there was a conspiracy and that any injury occurred to the public as a result of the conspiracy. The dealer merely alleged that he was eliminated as a competitor pursuant to the oil company's endeavor to eliminate competition and to gain a monopoly on the service stations in his area, that the company forced the dealer from his business, and that the interest of the general public in the area has been or will be affected. The dealer's deposition established that he became a dealer for another oil company.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.170, 9009.475.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Injury to Plaintiff—Damages.—A service station dealer, who alleged that an oil company unlawfully cancelled his service station lease, failed to allege any recoverable damages proximately resulting from such cancellation. The damages claimed by the dealer were computed on the basis of alleged profits he anticipated realizing through the continued operation of the station over a three-year period. Such a computation assumed a legal right that did not exist, since, under the terms of the lease, the oil company could legally cancel the lease. Therefore, the damages claimed by the dealer were purely speculative and were not founded upon any enforceable right.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275, 9011.200.

For the plaintiff: Malcolm E. Lafargue, Shreveport, La.

For the defendant: John T. Guyton, of Hargrove, Guyton, Van Hook and Hargrove, Shreveport, La.; Jack D. Childers, Houston, Tex.; and A. B. Steed, New York, N. Y.

Memorandum Ruling on Pending Motions

[Damages Claimed]

BEN C. DAWKINS, JR., Chief Judge [In full text]: The suit is brought under 15 U. S. C. § 15. Plaintiff, a former service station dealer in Texaco products, seeks to recover treble damages from defendant totalling $63,696.72, plus an attorney's fee of $21,232.24, upon general allegations that defendant has violated the antitrust laws. The actions complained of allegedly occurred during a gasoline "price war" which began in the Shreveport-Bossier City, Louisiana, area on August 12, 1955. Plaintiff avers that he sustained losses, because of defendant's conduct, in four respects:

1. He sues for $1,818.18 (untrebled) as damage he is said to have sustained on account of defendant's allegedly unlawful price discrimination, in favor of other Texaco dealers, in violation of Section 2(a) of the

Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(a);

2. He sues for $1,057.26 (untrebled) as damage he is said to have sustained because of defendant's allegedly conspiratorial price-fixing, in league with other Texaco dealers, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1;

3. He sues for $12,000.00 (untrebled) as damage he is said to have sustained because of defendant's allegedly unlawful termination of his service station lease in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 2; and,

4. He sues for $6,356.80 (untrebled) as damage he is said to have sustained because of defendant's allegedly wrongful acts in inducing a "prospective buyer" not to purchase his service station stock and equipment, following termination of his lease, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 2.

His complaint does not categorize the sections of the antitrust laws upon which his claims are based, but it is plain that he must rely upon those cited.

[Motions]

Defendant has moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, and also for summary judgment. The motion to dismiss is directed against the claims for damages on account of alleged price discrimination and conspiratorial price-fixing; and the motion for summary judgment is levelled at the remaining claims. Defendant also has moved to strike certain allegations from the complaint, and for a more definite statement.

We shall consider these matters seriatim. In doing so, we must follow the more recent federal jurisprudence which uniformly holds that the liberal attitude of Rule 8(a), Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., as to notice pleadings, should not be applied in antitrust actions, and that all essential ultimate facts must be plainly detailed. Conclusions of fact or law are not enough to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Kinnear-Weed Corporation v. Humble Oil & Refining Company (5th Cir.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,822] 214 F. 2d 891, 893, cert. den. 348 U. S. 912; Crummer v. Du Pont (5th Cir.) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,042] 223 F. 2d 238, 244; Beegle v. Thomson (7th Cir.) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,291] 138 F. 2d 875, 881, cert. den. 322 U. S. 743; Shotkin v. General Electric Company (10th Cir.) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341] 171 F. 2d 236, 238; Bader v. Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,277], 12 F. R. D. 437, 438; Dublin Distributors, Inc., v. Edward & John Burke [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,398], 109 F. Supp. 125, 126.

Approaching the case with those principles in mind, we make the following findings:

1. PRICE DISCRIMINATION

[Allegations]

At Articles 12, 13, 14 and 15 of the complaint, plaintiff has attempted to allege "price discrimination" by defendant, and anti-competitive consequences to his business, in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, but we do not believe he has succeeded in doing so. In sum, all he actually asserts is that, between August 12, 1955, and November 18, 1955, because he would not subscribe to defendant's "Chicago Plan", by writing a "letter" requesting price assistance from defendant in the price war then going on, he was forced to pay $.0365 more per gallon of gasoline than were twelve other local dealers in Texaco products, as the result of which he sold a somewhat smaller gallonage than he had been selling, and made that much less profit per gallon. He does not allege any ultimate facts showing how this price difference amounted to a true price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act.

[Effect of Alleged Discriminations]

That statute prohibits price discrimination only where it has produced one or more of the three anti-competitive consequences it is intended to prevent. The effect of the alleged discrimination must be (1) substantially to lessen competition, or (2) tend to create a monopoly, or (3) to injure, destroy or prevent competition among sellers, buyers or their customers. Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co. (9th Cir.) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,186] 231 F. 2d 357, and authorities therein cited.

It is perfectly clear that the results of defendant's alleged price discrimination did not fall within the first or second of these categories. This Court judicially notices, and the record shows, that plaintiff was merely one of nineteen Texaco dealers in the Shreveport-Bossier City area between August 12, and November 18, 1955. At that time there also were more than 200 other gasoline service stations, handling many competitive brands of petroleum products, in the area. Whatever consequences the alleged price discrimination may have had upon plaintiff's business would have been almost infinitesimal in their effect upon the over-all service station business of the area; and any such small-scale discrimination could not (1) have substantially lessened competition in interstate commerce or (2) have tended to create a monopoly of such commerce in the area, within the meaning of the statute.

It is possible, although not shown by the complaint, that defendant's alleged price discrimination may have come within the third category by injuring, destroying or preventing competition between plaintiff and the twelve dealers who are said to have been given cheaper prices. Plaintiff has not alleged that this was so.

All he has done is to level a broad charge against defendant that it was guilty of "price discrimination"—a mere legal conclusion—in that he had to pay more for gasoline than did the twelve other Texaco dealers named, but he does not allege in detail, as he must, how or to what extent the difference in price injured, destroyed or prevented competition between his business and that of any or all of the favored dealers.

[Loss to Plaintiff]

Moreover, any loss he may have sustained would not be measured by the "discrimination" of $.0365 per gallon of gasoline. Rather, the true yardstick of his damages, if any, in this respect would be the gross loss of profit on sales he otherwise would have made to those customers who bought from the favored dealers, instead of from plaintiff, because of the price differential. Enterprise Industries, Inc., v. The Texas Company (2d Cir.) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,596] — F. 2d —, No. 24045, decided January 7, 1957, and authorities therein cited.

As stated, plaintiff makes no factual allegations that he sustained any loss of business to those dealers and he likewise does not take into account any losses which may have occurred by reason of his customers patronizing the many other service stations participating in the general price war. Neither does he allege whether he passed on any part or all of the "discrimination" in the retail prices he charged to those customers who actually bought from him during the period involved; nor does he allege whether he absorbed any part or all of the price difference. Inferentially, at Article 15 of his complaint, he indicates that he absorbed the entire price difference, in alleging that his margin of profit was diminished to that extent, but this is far from clear.

[Competitive Area]

In addition, plaintiff does not attempt to define, as he must, what he contends is the so-called Shreveport-Bossier City trade area or to show, as he must, that at the time of the "discrimination", he actually was in competition with any one or all of the favored dealers, most of whose businesses were located miles away from his station. The mere possibility that there was competition between his business and theirs is not enough. Such competition must be clearly shown. Enterprise Industries, Inc., v. The Texas Company, supra. For aught that appears, since his station was located in a residential district in Shreveport, it might have served, in its usual business, only a relatively small area in its immediate vicinity, without actually being in true competition with any of the favored dealers.

[Exclusive Contracts]

At Article 13 of his complaint, plaintiff alleges that, under his lease and sales contracts with defendant, he could not obtain an agency for the sale of other petroleum products during the period involved because the contracts required him to handle defendant's products exclusively. Evidently he makes this allegation in an effort to excuse himself from failure to mitigate his alleged damages. This is a conclusion not borne out by the contracts themselves, which he has attached to his complaint and which are completely silent on the subject of exclusiveness.

[Failure To State Claim]

Having alleged only generalities and legal conclusions, in the language of the statute, plaintiff has failed to state a claim for damages, on account of price discrimination, upon which relief may be granted. Lipson v. Socony-Vacuum Corporation (2d Cir.) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,069] 76 F. 2d 213, 217; National Used Car Market Report, Inc., v. National Auto Dealers Association [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,369], 108 F. Supp. 692, 694.

2. Conspiratorial Price-Fixing

[Allegations]

At Article 16 of his complaint, plaintiff alleges that defendant, in violation of the antitrust laws, acted in concert and conspiracy with "other retail dealers" (presumably those allegedly favored by defendant with price assistance) in fixing "maximum" retail prices of gasoline, as the result of which he was damaged, in that he was prevented from making sales, during the period from August 12, 1955, to November 18, 1955, of "at least 17,786 gallons of gasoline," upon which he would have made a profit of $1,057.26. He claims treble that amount from defendant.

[Claim Defective]

As presently presented, this claim is defective, among other reasons, because (a) there are no facts alleged which show that there was such a conspiracy and (b) there are no facts alleged which show that an injury occurred to the public interest as the result of the conspiracy.

It is true that, at Article 20 of his complaint, plaintiff alleges that this (and the other acts of defendant complained of) ". . . is an endeavor to eliminate competition and to gain a monopoly on the service stations in said trade area, that it has eliminated petitioner as a competitor, [Plaintiff's deposition refutes this. He almost immediately became a Conoco dealer.] that it has forced petitioner from his business and that in addition the interest of the general public in said community has been or will be affected by reason thereof." This is not enough.

The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals has settled these points in no uncertain language. In Nelson Radio & Supply Company v. Motorola, Inc., [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,386], 200 F. 2d 911, cert. den. 345 U. S. 925, the Court said:

> "* * * It is the well recognized rule that in pleading a conspiracy in an [antitrust] action such as this, a general allegation of conspiracy, without a statement of the facts constituting the conspiracy to restrain trade, its object and accomplishment, is but an allegation of a legal conclusion, which is insufficient to constitute a cause of action. Black & Yates v. Mahogany Association, 3rd Cir., 129 F. 2d 227, 148 A. L. R. 841; Neumann v. Bastian-Blessing Company, D. C., 70 F. Supp. 447, 448."

In Crummer Company v. Du Pont [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,042], 223 F. 2d 238, Chief Judge Hutcheson, speaking for the Court, said:

> "* * * Charges as to such conspiracies must be based on substantial and affirmative allegations, and no mere gossamer web of conclusion or inference, as here, trifles light as air, to the suspicious strong as proofs from Holy Writ, will suffice * * *."

See also, to the same effect, Hudson Sales Corporation v. Waldrip, (5th Cir.) [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,694] 211 F. 2d 268; Feddersen Motors, Inc., v. Ward, (10th Cir.) [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,579] 180 F. 2d 519.

In the Waldrip case, Judge Hutcheson emphasized that the decisions:

> "* * * have firmly established the principle that an essential to a private recovery is a showing of a public injury."

In Kinnear-Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil & Refining Company, (5th Cir.) [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,822] 214 F. 2d 891, Judge Rives, as the organ of the Court, stated:

> "Public injury alone justifying the threefold increase in damages and being an indispensable constituent of a claim for violation of the antitrust laws, a general allegation of such injury is not sufficient. It is essential that the complaint allege facts from which it can be determined that the conduct charged to be in violation of the antitrust laws was reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting the free flow of interstate commerce.", citing numerous decisions, including two by the Supreme Court.

We have noted also, in this connection, Schwing Motor Company v. Hudson Sales Corporation [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, aff. per curiam, 4th Cir. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,564], 239 F. 2d 176. That case held, inter alia, that only a "horizontal" conspiracy between competitors at the same level, not a "vertical" conspiracy between a manufacturer-distributor and its retail dealers as is here alleged, is proscribed by the Sherman Act; and that in those decisions which have held a "vertical" conspiracy to be prohibited, the manufacturer-distributor occupied a "dominant" position in the trade area, which defendant here certainly does not do.

Accordingly, we find that plaintiff has failed to state a valid claim for damages, on account of the alleged conspiratorial price-fixing, upon which relief may be granted.

3. Unlawful Cancellation of Lease

[Allegations]

At Article 18 of his complaint, plaintiff alleges that on October 19, 1955, defendant cancelled his service station lease for no other reason than his refusal to write "the letter" requesting assistance in the price war (in his deposition, he merely "presumes" or "assumes" that this was the reason); that because of this unwarranted, capricious and arbitrary action by defendant he was forced to give up the service station on November 18, 1955, losing ". . . his good will in a location where he had been established for the past twenty-one years . . .", as the result of which he was damaged to the extent of $12,000.00 (untrebled), for which he sues defendant.

[Lease]

The lease, a duplicate original of which is attached to the complaint, was dated November 7, 1951, and contained the following pertinent clause:

"(2) Term. This lease shall remain in full force and effect for a period of one (1) year beginning November 9, 1951, and ending November 8, 1952, and thereafter from year to year, subject to termination by either party at the end of the first year or any subsequent year on ten (10) days' prior written notice; . . ."

It is obvious from this proviso that unless plaintiff in some way adequately can connect the least termination with a violation of the antitrust laws, defendant had a perfect contractual right to cancel it, and is not liable for damages on that account.

[Antitrust Violation]

Plaintiff makes no allegation that the lease cancellation was directly or indirectly involved in the alleged conspiracy between defendant and the twelve favored Texaco dealers. Indeed, he alleges nothing in this respect from which a reasonable conclusion could be drawn that defendant violated any of the antitrust laws.

Even if this article of the complaint is read in connection with all other articles, particularly Article 20, which attempted, but failed (as shown above), adequately to allege a conspiracy, price discrimination, monopolistic efforts or public injury, still this claim, as now asserted, must fall for the same failure to make sufficient factual allegations showing that such antitrust violations actually were intended, attempted or committed by defendant.

[Refusal to Deal]

It is clear that a simple "refusal to deal" is not proscribed by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Times Picayune Publishing Company v. United States [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 625; United States v. Colgate & Company, 250 U. S. 300; Nelson Radio & Supply Company v. Motorola, Inc., (5th Cir.) [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,386] 200 F. 2d 911, 915, cert. den. 345 U. S. 925. A unilateral "refusal to deal" always is permissible except where actual monopoly, or intent to monopolize, exists, Nelson Radio & Supply Company v. Motorola, Inc., supra; Hudson Sales Corporation v. Waldrip (5th Cir.) [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,694] 211 F. 2d 268, cert. den. 348 U. S. 821; and a bilateral refusal is prohibited only where there is concerted action by those who are true "competitors." Hudson Sales Corporation v. Waldrip, supra; Times Picayune Publishing Company v. United States, supra; Kiefer-Stewart v. Seagram [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211, 213. It also must be shown that such concerted, or bilateral, refusal unduly affects interstate commerce. Interborough News Company v. Curtis Publishing Company (2d Cir.) [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,129] 225 F. 2d 289. It would be ridiculous to characterize defendant as a "competitor" of its retail dealers, such as those who allegedly were favored here; and there is no allegation, or other showing, that the lease cancellation affected interstate commerce in any degree.

It is only where an actual monopoly or a specific intent to monopolize has been properly pleaded that a unilateral refusal to deal constitutes a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Nelson Radio & Supply Company v. Motorola, Inc., supra; Hudson Sales Corporation v. Waldrip, supra. There is no adequate allegation of a monopoly or intent to monopolize anywhere in the complaint, and the documents on record show that such a charge would not be true, even if properly alleged.

When the lease was cancelled, defendant did not attempt to take over and operate the service station, but immediately released it to another dealer, Ray Stump. At that time there were at least eighteen other Texaco dealers, and more than 200 unrelated dealers handling numerous competing gasoline brands, in the Shreveport-Bossier City area. Plaintiff himself reopened as a Conoco dealer at another location in Shreveport within less than four months. These undisputed facts show that defendant could not, did not, and cannot monopolize or unreasonably restrict competition in the service station business in this area. Monopolization under Section 2 means monopoly in the economic sense—". . . power to raise prices or to exclude competition when it is desired to do so. American Tobacco Company v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 811; United States v. Du Pont [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U S. 377, 380, 393. The price, quality or quantity of gasoline available to the motoring public was not, and could not have been, affected by defendant's termination of plaintiff's lease; and it would be sheer nonsense to any that defendant terminated the lease ". . . in an endeavor to eliminate competition and to gain a monopoly on the service stations in said trade area," as is spuriously claimed by plaintiff.

[Damages]

Finally, plaintiff has not alleged any recoverable damage proximately resulting from this alleged antitrust violation. The damages he claims, as shown by his deposition, are computed on the basis of alleged profits he anticipated realizing through continued operation of the service station over a three-year period. Necessarily, this assumes a legal right which did not exist, for by the terms of the lease defendant legally could have cancelled it at the end of any lease-year, as was done. Consequently, the damages he claims for this are purely speculative and are not founded upon any enforceable right. Cf. Goodman & Son v. United Lacquer Manufacturing Company (D. C. Mass.) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,355] 81 F. Supp. 890, 893.

Therefore, defendant's motion for summary judgment as to this claim, in its present status, must be granted.

4.

PREVENTION OF STOCK AND EQUIPMENT SALE

[Allegations]

At Article 19 of his complaint, plaintiff alleges that it is customary in the trade, when a dealer gives up a service station, that he sell his stock and equipment to his successor; that upon cancellation of his lease he was negotiating with a buyer to purchase his stock and equipment, but that this prospective buyer would not go through with the purchase because defendant threatened him with refusal to lease the station if he bought from plaintiff; that, consequently, plaintiff was unable to sell it and lost its entire value of $6,356.80 (untrebled), for which defendant is liable to him.

In his deposition, plaintiff admitted that defendant simply was acting in this transaction as a ". . . go-between between the out-going dealer and the in-coming dealer to see that neither one of them takes advantage of the other." Both his complaint and his deposition show that plaintiff did not have a firm contract with the "prospective buyer," but simply hoped to sell his stock and equipment to him.

[Refusal to Buy]

Like refusals to deal or sell, unilateral refusals to buy are not prohibited by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. F. T. C. v. Raymond Brothers, 263 U. S. 565, 573. Refusals to buy, like refusals to sell, violate Section 1 only where there is a group boycott or concert of action between horizontal competitors. Here, by plaintiff's own admission, defendant acted simply as a "go-between" or agent for either plaintiff or the prospective buyer, or for both. No matter who defendant was representing, the legal consequence is the same. If defendant was representing plaintiff as his agent, then defendant's actions were his actions, and he has no valid complaint under Section 1, for, as stated in Nelson Radio & Supply Company v. Motorola, Inc., supra, a person "cannot conspire" with himself.

On the other hand, if defendant was acting as the prospective buyer's agent, still, there could be no conspiracy under Section 1, because a principal cannot conspire with his agent. Motorola, supra.

Moreover, the prospective buyer and defendant were not "competitors," horizontal or otherwise, engaged in purchasing service station stock and equipment, and there could be no "contract, combination, or conspiracy" under Section 1. Plaintiff admitted in his deposition that defendant was not in the business of buying service station equipment.

Plaintiff has cited no decisions holding that a unilateral refusal to buy violates the monopoly provisions of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, and we have found no cases to that effect. In any event, as stated, the complaint does not allege, and plaintiff does not contend that defendant was in the business of buying stock and equipment. Consequently, it could not and did not monopolize any part of that business, so as to have violated Section 2.

[Insufficient Allegations]

In addition to those considerations, as already pointed out, plaintiff generally has failed to allege any ultimate facts which validly show 1) a conspiracy to restrain trade or competition, 2) a monopoly or intent to monopolize, or 3) any public injury, with respect to this or any other item of alleged damage. Likewise, it is plain that interstate commerce was not, and could not have been affected by defendant's alleged conduct. Myers v. Shell Oil Company [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶62,816], 96 F. Supp. 670.

Even if plaintiff had held a firm contract with the prospective buyer to purchase his stock and equipment, and defendant induced a breach of such contract, he could not recover ordinary tort damages from defendant on that account under Louisiana law. Moulin v. Monteleone, 165 La. 169, 115 So. 447, Latter & Blum v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, 208 La. 490, 23 So. 2d 193.

Consequently, defendant's motion for summary judgment as to this claim, in its present status, must be granted.

CONCLUSIONS

[Amended Complaint]

For the reasons given, defendant's motion to dismiss will be granted as to claims for damage on account of alleged price discrimination and conspiratorial price-fixing; and its motion for summary judgment will be granted as to the claims for damages on account of the allegedly unlawful cancellation of plaintiff's lease, and the prevention of the proposed stock and equipment sale. Because plaintiff may be able to correct some, or all, of the faults in his case, as herein noted, leave is granted to file a supplemental or amended complaint within thirty days. Because of these rulings, we deem it unnecessary to pass upon defendant's motions to strike and for a more definite statement.

[¶ 68,644] Laskey Bros. of W. Va., Inc., et al. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 96-335. Filed February 21, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Dismissal of Actions—Lack of Prosecution—Bar as to Other Actions.—An order dismissing an action "with prejudice" for lack of prosecution was modified so that the dismissal of the action could not be used as an adjudication on the merits in any other action of the plaintiff on the same cause of action in any other United States District Court. Since the plaintiff had an action based on the same set of facts pending in another District Court, the court was of the opinion that it would be an unwarranted punishment to bar the plaintiff from a hearing in the other action because of its dilatory action in the instant court.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.355.

For the plaintiff: Myron Saland, New York, N. Y.

For the defendant: Lawrence R. Condon; John H. Galloway; Frisch & Goldfuss; Louis M. Seber; Meyer H. Lavenstein; William B. Jaffe; Schwartz & Frohlich; R. W. Perkins; O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery; Weisman, Celler, Allan, Spett & Steinberg; Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey; Adolph Schimel; Benjamin Melniker; Louis Phillips; Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim; J. Miller Walker; and George G. Gallantz. All of New York, N. Y.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,103; and for prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,017, 67,967.

Memorandum

[Dismissal—Lack of Prosecution]

ARCHIE O. DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion by plaintiff under Rule 60(b) for an order modifying the previous order entered by this court which dismissed the action "with prejudice" for lack of prosecution. See Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 60(b). Plaintiff seeks to modify the order so as to provide that the action is dismissed without prejudice.

[Disqualification Proceeding]

The records of this court show that the action was instituted on November 6, 1954 through the law firm of Malkan & Ellner as attorneys for the plaintiff. Shortly after the action was instituted these attorneys filed a motion for an order that they might properly represent, and were not barred or disqualified from representing, the plaintiff. Certain of the defendants cross-moved for an order disqualifying this firm from representing the plaintiffs in the action. On March 25, 1955 the court granted the cross-motion of the defendants. Laskey Bros. of W. Va. v. Warner Bros. Pictures [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,017], 130 F. Supp. 514, aff'd [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,103], 224 F. 2d 824, cert. denied, 350 U. S. 932. This determination was affirmed by the Court of Appeals on July 13, 1955 and a petition for a writ of certiorari was denied by the United States Supreme Court on January 9, 1956.

[No Attorney]

Plaintiff did not substitute a new attorney to represent it in this action. From January 9, 1956 to January 28, 1957, it had an action pending with no attorney qualified to represent it and no proceedings of any nature took place in the action. In the month of January 1957, this court, pursuant to General Rule 21, called for review all cases on the docket where the case had been pending for more than two years and had not been noticed for trial. See General Rules of United States District Courts for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York. Notice was given to the attorneys of record in these cases to appear on a certain day. The notice stated: "The rule will be strictly enforced and your case may be dismissed for lack of prosecution." A further notice of this special calendar call was published in the New York Law Journal.

The above action was called for review before the undersigned on January 28, 1957. No attorney appeared representing plaintiff. The attorneys who appeared representing defendants moved for dismissal of the action for lack of prosecution. Thereafter the Court, after hearing argument and ascertaining that no action had taken place for over one year, entered the following decision and order:

> "It appearing that plaintiff has not substituted a qualified attorney for the prosecution of the case, and that this condition has existed for over one year, and nobody appearing on behalf of plaintiff on this call, motion is granted to dismiss this action under Rule 21 for lack of prosecution."

[Modification Sought]

Thereafter a judgment was entered on February 6, 1957 dismissing the action with prejudice. It is this judgment the plaintiff now seeks to amend by making the dismissal "without prejudice."

Plaintiff's new attorneys who appeared on this motion stated that they were retained by the plaintiff several months ago but that they never filed a notice of substitution and therefore never received the notice of the special calendar call hereinabove referred to. They also stated that there is now pending in the Western District of Pennsylvania an action by the same plaintiff against some of the defendants in this action, which includes the same claim that is asserted in this action and that dismissal of this action with prejudice might have a prejudicial effect on the case pending in Pennsylvania. Counsel for plaintiff stated on oral argument that he would have no objection to dismissal of the present action with prejudice so far as it relates to the defendants in this action who are not defendants in the Pennsylvania action.

The power of the Court to dismiss a case for lack of prosecution probably derives from the inherent power of a court to control its calendars. Zielinski v. United States, 120 F. 2d 792 (C. A. 2, 1941). The power is also specifically granted in Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. This rule provides in part:

> "Unless the court in its order for dismissal otherwise specifies, a dismissal under this subdivision, and any dismissal not provided for in this rule, other than dismissal for lack of jurisdiction or improper venue, operates as an adjudication on the merits."

See Bartfield v. Parkhurst, 117 F. Supp. 82 (D. Puerto Rico, 1953).

This case is a graphic illustration of the unsatisfactory type of practice which has led to congestion of the court calendars. The plaintiff, not content with starting one action, has instituted two actions on the same set of facts in two separate districts. Thereafter when plaintiff's counsel is found to be disqualified, plaintiff takes no steps to substitute new counsel for many months. When new counsel is finally selected, the new counsel does not even note his appearance in the case and no steps are taken to bring the case on for trial. A plaintiff who has shown so little interest in the action which it has started does not awaken much sympathy in the Court.

Nevertheless, plaintiff has another action pending in Pennsylvania. The instant action has not been decided on the merits. It would perhaps be an unwarranted punishment to bar plaintiff from a hearing in the Pennsylvania action because of its dilatory action in this court. Cf. Gill v. Stolow, — F. 2d — (2d Cir. Feb. 7, 1957).

[Modified Order]

Therefore, in the exercise of its discretion, the Court directs that the order and judgment heretofore entered herein on February 6, 1957 is to be amended to read:

"It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that this action be and it hereby is dismissed for lack of prosecution, but this order and judgment shall not be pleaded or used as an adjudication on the merits in any other action of the plaintiff now pending on the same cause of action in any district court other than the District Court for the Southern District of New York."

So ordered.

[¶ 68,645] Central Liquor Store, Inc. et al. v. Capitol City Liquor Co., Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Civil No. 4824-55 Dated January 23, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—Corporations.—Two corporations were held to be "found" and "transacting business" within the District of Columbia; therefore, their motions to dismiss a private action brought against them in the District were denied.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210.

For the plaintiffs: Arnold, Fortas & Porter, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: Jaffee, Chase & Donnelly, Washington, D. C.

Memorandum

[Transacting Business]

MATTHEW F. MCGUIRE, District Judge [In full text]: The motion to dismiss of the defendant Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., is denied, as the Court finds that the defendant corporation is found and transacts business in the terms of the statute within the District of Columbia. The so-called distributing corporations are engaged solely in the sale of the product of Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. (deposition of Fischel, p. 509). Again, one corporation does not ordinarily act as a bookkeeper for another out of mere largess, nor does the fact that it is paid for such ostensibly in any way negative the situation here, as Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. is not engaged in the business of bookkeeping and accounting, but in the manufacture of distilled spirits and the corporation whose books are kept is engaged solely in the selling of these same manufactured spirits.

The motion of the defendant House of Seagram (formerly Seagram Distillers Corp. and Calvert Distillers Corp.) is also denied because the Court finds that it is found within the District of Columbia and is transacting business within its confines. The so-called "missionary" activities of its employees Maxon and Biondi are alone sufficiently indicative of its activities in this respect, apart from anything else, to warrant the conclusions drawn.

[Factual Question]

It might be said here, by way of paraphrase of the language of Frankfurter, J., in U. S. v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795 at 819-820, that whether or not a corporation transacts business in a particular district is a question of fact and the resolution of the question turns on the particular and peculiar circumstances of a given situation, and he says categorically

". . . a corporation can be 'found' anywhere, whenever the needs of law make it appropriate to attribute location to a corporation, only if activities on its behalf that are more than episodic are carried on by its agents in a particular place."

It will be noted in this reference that Mr. Justice Frankfurter makes the observation:

"To reach this result, however, I do not find it necessary to open up difficult and subtle problems regarding the law's attitude toward corporations. . . . I prefer to reach its destination by the much shorter route of recognizing that a corporation as such never transacts business and is never found anywhere, but does 'transact business' and is 'found' somewhere by attribution to the corporation of what human beings do for it."

Order accordingly.

[¶ 68,646] Roy W. Darden and Roy Darden Industries, Inc. v. Jesse H. Besser, Besser Manufacturing Company, and Stearns Manufacturing Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division. No. 11765. Filed December 27, 1956.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies — Monopolies — Patents — Threatening Infringement Suits—Agreement Not to License Others—Legality.—A manufacturer of concrete block-making machinery was held to have suffered damages in the amount of $15,000 due to violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act by two other manufacturers of such machinery. The court relied, in part, upon findings in a Government antitrust suit against the defendant manufacturers that the defendants, as licensees of patents concerning such machines, agreed with the licensors that no further licenses would be granted without the defendants' consent; that the licensed patents were used by the defendants in a campaign to threaten competition with suits for alleged infringements; and that the defendants violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The instant court found, among other things, that the defendants brought a patent infringement suit against a customer of the plaintiff; that the defendants refused to consent to the grant of a license to the plaintiff; that the defendants warned the trade against infringement knowing that certain claims of the patents which they licensed were invalid; that one of the defendants induced a supplier of the plaintiff to cease dealing with the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff, faced with the destruction of its business, entered into an agreement with the defendants which authorized a limited production of such machines by the plaintiff.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.225, 2013.360; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.525, 2610.550.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable —Proof of Damages.—A manufacturer of concrete block-making machinery was held to have suffered damages to its business in the amount of $15,000 due to violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act by two other manufacturers of such machinery. "Where the tort itself is of such a nature as to preclude ascertainment of the amount of damages with certainty, it would be a perversion of fundamental principles of justice to deny all relief to the injured person, and thereby relieve the wrongdoer from making any amend for his acts. In such case, while the damages may not be determined by mere speculation or guess, it will be enough if the evidence shows the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference although the result be only approximate." The court also noted that the loss of prospective profits may constitute an element of recoverable damages.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.325, 9011.385.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Award of Attorneys' Fees.—Where a manufacturer of concrete block-making machinery was found to have suffered damages in the amount of $15,000, a reasonable allowance to the manufacturer for attorneys' fees was found to be $10,000. Reasonable attorneys' fees must be fixed in accordance with the usual considerations, including the difficulty of the litigation; the amount recovered; time and labor spent; the learning, skill, and experience required; and the responsibility undertaken. The court noted that the case was relatively simple so far as liability was concerned because much of the evidence used in the case was substantially the same as that in a Government antitrust action against the defendants, that most of the time and effort of the attorneys was spent in attempting to establish their theory of damages, and that the attorneys were not successful in establishing their theory of damages.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.725.

For the plaintiffs: Justin L. Giltner, Detroit, Mich., and Edward S. Irons, of Burns, Doane & Benedict, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: Fildew, DeGree & Flemming, Detroit, Mich., for Stearns Mfg. Co., Inc.; Carl R. Henry, Alpena, Mich., for Besser Mfg. Co. and Jesse H. Besser; and Cook, Beake, Miller, Wrock & Cross, Detroit, Mich.

Findings of Fact

[Treble Damage Action]

ARTHUR F. LEDERLE, Chief Judge [In full text]: 1. Plaintiffs in this action are seeking to recover damages under Sections 4 and 5 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 15 and 16) on the ground that they have been injured in their business and properties by reason of violations by defendants of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1 and 2). Plaintiffs rely, in part, on a judgment rendered in this Court on behalf of the United States holding that these defendants and others had monopolized the business of manufacturing and selling concrete block machinery. U. S. A. v. Besser [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,773], 96 Fed. Supp. 304, affirmed [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,280], 343 U. S. 444.

[Plaintiffs]

2. The plaintiff, Roy W. Darden, hereinafter referred to as "Darden," is a citizen of the United States and a resident of Atlanta, Georgia.

The plaintiff, Roy Darden Industries, Inc., hereinafter referred to as "Darden Industries," is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Georgia, with offices and principal place of business at Atlanta, Georgia.

[Defendants]

The defendant, Jesse H. Besser, hereinafter referred to as "Besser," is a citizen of the United States and a resident of Alpena, Michigan, and is president and was, on the date his answer was filed, principal stockholder of defendant, Besser Manufacturing Company.

Defendant, Besser Manufactuing Company, hereinafter referred to as "Besser Company," is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Michigan, with offices and principal place of business at Alpena, Michigan.

Defendant, Stearns Manufacturing Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as "Stearns," is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Michigan, with offices and principal place of business at Adrian, Michigan.

All of the defendants are inhabitants or residents of, transact business in, and are found within the Eastern District of Michigan.

[Concrete Block-Making Machinery]

3. The parties hereto are and have been at all times relevant hereto, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling concrete block machinery. These machines are manufactured for and sold extensively in interstate commerce.

4. Concrete building blocks and other concrete masonry units are utilized extensively in the construction of residential, farm and commercial structures. The commercial production of such blocks and units is almost entirely accomplished by machines, herein referred to as "concrete block machines," which form and compress a concrete mixture into molded units of a size and shape suitable for building purposes.

5. Some block machines utilize a hand or power tamp for settling and packing the concrete mixture into the mold and other machines use vibration or a combination of vibration and pressure for this purpose. Block machines also range in size and complexity from hand operated units to completely automatic units capable of turning out three blocks at a time. The highest production and greatest efficiency and economy are obtained by these automatic machines of the vibration type, some of which by 1947 were capable of producing over 800 standard sized concrete blocks per hour. The market for such machines is necessarily limited by its own high production and the very substantial investment required for their purchase.

6. Sales of concrete block machines are normally accompanied by sales of auxiliary equipment, such as concrete mixers and attachments. In 1946, both Besser Company and Stearns had been in business for many years and had thousands of machines in the field. They had extensive service facilities and large sales organizations and did a large volume of business in maintenance parts. Both did national advertising and had a variety of machines on the market.

[Business Trend]

7. At the end of World War II, the demand for block machines became too great for the established companies to meet. Besser Company and Stearns were a year to eighteen (18) months behind in deliveries. By the end of 1946 or early 1947, this abnormal demand was largely filled and the established companies experienced a sharp and steady decline in sales. It became necessary for block machine makers to finance sales of their machines and to take in old machines in trade.

[Government Antitrust Suit]

8. On April 28, 1949, the United States filed a civil suit in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, charging all of the present defendants and Louis Gelbman and Hamlin F. Andrus with violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. After a lengthy trial, the Court rendered its opinion on January 30, 1951, that all defendants had combined and conspired to restrain and monopolize trade and commerce in concrete block machines in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and that Besser and Besser Company had attempted to monopolize and had monopolized said trade and commerce in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Judgment was entered on April 12, 1951. Thereafter, Besser and Besser Company appealed to the United States Supreme Court which, on June 24, 1952, affirmed the judgment of the District Court [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,280], (343 U. S. 444). A new final judgment was entered by the District Court on July 20, 1952. This judgment is relied on here by plaintiffs as prima facie evidence under 15 U. S. C. 16.

9. In the foregoing action, the District Court found the following facts relevant to the present suit:

a. That on December 7, 1942, Besser Company and Stearns became licensees under a patent license agreement with Gelbman and Andrus, which provided that no further licenses would be given without the consent of both Besser Company and Stearns.

b. That the patents forming the basis of the aforesaid license agreement were used by Besser Company and Stearns in a campaign to threaten competition with suits for alleged patent infringement.

c. That Besser brought influence on a material supply source of Darden Industries that curtailed the output of concrete block machines by Darden Industries.

d. That Besser controlled Stearns, such control having to all intents and purposes become complete in 1948.

The Court concluded that:

a. The aforesaid license agreement of December 7, 1942 was illegal.

b. That all defendants in the Government action had combined and conspired to unreasonably restrain and monopolize trade and commerce in concrete block-making machines in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

c. That Besser and Besser Company had attempted to monopolize and had monopolized trade and commerce in concrete block-making machines in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

[Plaintiff's Business]

10. In 1938, Roy W. Darden entered the employ of an Atlanta, Georgia, concrete block manufacturing plant known as the Concrete Manufacturing Company. He subsequently became General Superintendent of that plant. In 1941, Darden designed, built, and successfully tested a semi-automatic block-making machine which was subsequently introduced to the trade as the "Rockercrete Machine." Darden left the employ of the Concrete Manufacturing Company in early 1945 and engaged in manufacturing and selling the Rockercrete Machine.

11. In October, 1945, a partnership known as "Roy Darden Equipment Company" was formed in which Darden had a 75 per cent interest and one Milton E. Posey a 25 per cent interest. During the year 1945, Darden and subsequently the partnership sold a total of 12 to 15 Rockercrete Machines.

12. On or about February 5, 1946, Darden Industries was incorporated with a capitalization of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) of which approximately three thousand dollars ($3,000) was goodwill. Darden became president of the corporation, and has held that position up to the present time. The Company maintained a small one-room office in Atlanta and employed a maximum of four people. It had no manufacturing or assembly facilities of its own, its machinery being fabricated initially by Atlanta Welding & Machine Company of Atlanta, Georgia, and later by the Atlanta plant of the Link-Belt Company. Darden Industries was, nevertheless, responsible for and controlled the design and specifications for machines manufactured for, and sold by it.

13. In its first fiscal year ending January 31, 1947, Darden Industries sold some 30 Rockercrete Machines and had a total sales of block machines and auxiliary equipment in the amount of $282,765 of which $97,250 was from sales of block machines.

[Patent Infringement Claim]

14. The Rockercrete was a small, inexpensive cored pallet, semi-automatic type machine selling for about $3,250. A fully automatic vibrating machine developed by Millard Warren of Knoxville, Tennessee, was investigated by Darden in 1946. Darden entered into an oral agreement with Warren to produce and market this machine as the "Warren 800." The arrangement with Link-Belt was enlarged to provide that Link-Belt would fabricate the "Warren 800" machine to the specifications of Darden Industries. The first order for the fabrication of three "Warren 800" machines was placed with Link-Belt on October 24, 1946, but it was necessary for Link-Belt to tool up to make the "Warren 800." The first delivery of a "Warren 800" machine manufactured by the Link-Belt Company was made in June, 1947. There was no written contract with Link-Belt and the price of the machines that it built was not definitely fixed. They were supplied on open purchase order with payment made on the basis of cost plus ten per cent (10%). A deposit of $15,000 was maintained with Link-Belt to secure payment for the machines. Darden's selling price for the "Warren 800" was around $20,000. In January, 1946, Gelbman advised Darden and representatives of Besser Company and Stearns that, in Gelbman's opinion, Darden's Rockercrete Machine infringed patents owned by Gelbman and Andrus and licensed to Stearns and Besser Company. Gelbman informed Besser that he was going to Atlanta to investigate the matter and was advised by Besser that he had already been to see Darden and, after securing copies of the Gelbman-Andrus patents, was going to return to Atlanta for further investigation. Nothing further was done until the summer of 1946 when Eugene F. Olsen, the president of Stearns, wrote to Gelbman and to Besser suggesting that they revive the matter and proceed with it.

15. Stearns and Besser Company were clearly interested in protecting their rights as licensees under the Gelbman-Andrus patents, but it is also clear that defendants were concerned about Darden as a competitor and not merely as a patent infringer. On July 8, 1946, Olsen wrote to Besser, urging that Besser give Gelbman a report on the Darden matter. He said, in part:

> "I think it is important that we move in on this case (if it is justified at all) because I know that Darden has some rather ambitious plans including the manufacture of a high production vibrator machine which has been pretty well proven out in the field in a way that would make it really effective competition."

By letter from Haakon Paulson, Distribution Manager of Besser Company, to Gelbman on July 31, 1946, Besser Company stated that Darden was infringing and that suit should be started. Paulson stated further:

> "We can further protect the future of the industry in which we are all interested by greatly reducing or eliminating the avalanch of small machines that are now flooding the market. Many of these machines make an inferior block and this, together with the lack of information for these small operations and the lack of interest of the sellers of this equipment, will make for another period of inferior blocks and thereby greatly retard the industry."

16. In addition to the proposed infringement suits, defendants in their correspondence discussed as further moves against Darden:

a. Publicity about the infringement action.

b. Publicity to the effect that only Stearns and Besser Company were licensed under the Gelbman-Andrus patents along with a warning against infringement of these patents by others.

c. Giving notice to the home office of Link-Belt that their branch plant in Atlanta was making block machines which infringed the Gelbman-Andrus patents.

17. It was not until November, 1946, that defendants or Gelbman obtained a legal opinion in regard to the alleged infringement of the Gelbman-Andrus patents by the Rockercrete Machine.

18. Both Stearns and Besser Company purchased chain, bearings and other items from Link-Belt. Defendants expected and desired that giving notice to Link-Belt of the impending patent action would result in Link-Belt's refusal to ship any more machines to Darden Industries until the matter was settled.

[Infringement Suit]

19. On January 14, 1947, Gelbman and Andrus brought suit against Landis Concrete Products of Landisville, New Jersey, a customer of Darden Industries, alleging infringement of patents Nos. 2,276,676 and 2,366,780, two of the patents covered by the 1942 joint license agreement. Stearns and Besser Company shared the expense of this litigation as required by the 1942 agreement.

[Refusal to License Patents]

20. On January 15, 1947, Darden requested of Gelbman a license under the Gelbman-Andrus patents. This request was relayed to the Besser Company and Stearns to determine if Besser Company and Stearns would consent to granting such a license. Both Besser Company and Stearns refused to give their consent.

[Notices to Trade]

21. The advertisements contemplated by the correspondence mentioned in Finding 18 appeared in the February, 1947, issues of leading periodicals of the concrete block plant industry. These advertisements featured the words "vibration under pressure." The text of the advertisement in relevant part stated that Louis Gelbman, inventor, announced that only Besser Company and Stearns were licensed to make block machinery under his patents. The advertisement then listed the numbers of the patents covered by the joint license agreement and concluded with a warning against infringement.

22. These advertisements were intended to make the industry "patent conscious" and to give the impression that the Gelbman patents had something to do with making blocks with vibration or vibration under pressure. During and prior to February, 1947, Besser Company advertised that it was licensed under Gelbman's "basic vibration patents." During and prior to February, 1947, Stearns advertised that it was licensed under "basic Gelbman vibration patents." Besser Company, in 1939, had taken the position that "vibration with pressure" was broadly disclosed prior to the Gelbman patents. All defendants knew that in 1942 two claims of the Gelbman patents were held invalid as there was no novelty in vibrating or reciprocating a mold.

[Unfair Competition Suit]

23. With the advice of counsel, plaintiffs, in February, 1947, started suit in Cook County, Illinois, against Gelbman, Olsen and Besser asserting that these advertisements and other alleged activities of the defendants constituted unfair competition.

[Plaintiff's Supply Cut-off]

24. On February 18, 1947, Besser, Olsen and one Stark, patent attorney for Besser Company, called on the president and other officials of Link-Belt Company in Chicago, Illinois. They notified Link-Belt that the machines being made in Link-Belt's Atlanta plant for Darden infringed patents which they controlled and that suit had been started against a user of one of these machines. The president of Link-Belt decided that Link-Belt should discontinue supplying Darden Industries with materials that were claimed to infringe until the patent controversy was settled. Darden was advised of this decision by the manager of Link-Belt's Atlanta plant on February 20, 1947.

[Settlement of Litigation]

25. Plaintiffs, in the absence of a source of supply for machines, were not capable of financing the defense of the patent infringement suit which had been instituted by Gelbman and Andrus in New Jersey or the prosecution of the unfair competition suit which they had started in Illinois. Darden Industries was threatened with immediate destruction of its business and with financial ruin unless its established source of machines could be maintained. In this dilemma, Darden decided that there was nothing he could do except to settle the matter on the best terms possible. On February 20, 1947, Darden signed an agreement with Gelbman which provided:

a. That Darden and Darden Industries would be licensed to make, sell and service 32 Rockercrete, three "Warren 800" and 30 mixers.

b. That Darden and Darden Industries, after the above quantities had been disposed of, would discontinue the manufacture, sale or use of block machinery, including machines of the type mentioned and other mixers.

c. That Darden would withdraw the suit for unfair competition mentioned in Finding 23.

d. That the agreement was to be supplemented and replaced by a formal agreement to be later signed by Darden.

26. The formal agreement contemplated by the preliminary agreement of February 20 was executed by Darden on March 17, 1947, by Gelbman and Andrus on March 21, 1947, and by Darden for Darden Industries on April 7, 1947. That agreement referred to the preliminary agreement of February 20, 1947, and provided in part:

a. A license to Darden Industries under Patent Nos. 2,275,676 and 2,366,780 to complete, use, and sell machines embodying the invention claimed with the license being limited to a total of 35 machines including not more than five multiple block machines.

b. That Darden Industries was not to be restricted in the sale of repair parts or the rendering of service to these machines or any other machines heretofore sold by Darden or Darden Industries.

c. That after 35 machines were completed and sold, Darden and Darden Industries would cease from further making and selling any machines covered by any of the claims of Patent No. 2,275,676.

d. That Darden's suit for unfair competition would be dismissed.

e. That the patent infringement suit in New Jersey against Landis Concrete Products would be dismissed.

27. After this agreement was entered into by the plaintiffs and Gelbman, Darden Industries advertised that it was licensed under Gelbman's patents and thereafter Darden Industries sold its machines as a licensee under the Gelbman patents.

28. Under the provisions of the limited license agreement granted to Darden Industries by Gelbman, the Company was authorized to sell 30 Rockercrete and five "Warren 800" machines. In the period following the grant of that license to the time of this suit, Darden Industries was able to dispose of only 16 of the 30 Rockercrete machines. The last of the five "Warren 800" machines authorized was sold in 1951.

[Damages]

29. Plaintiff sought to prove damages by reviewing the history of Darden Industries and making a prophesy as to what the future profits would be in the absence of interference by defendants. In order to bolster this prophesy, they reviewed the history of Besser and Stearns during the same period. Although it is true that in a case of this kind damages do not have to be proved to an exact certainty, they cannot be based upon speculation and conjecture. In a highly competitive business, such as that involved in this case, there are so many factors involved that no reasonable person would conclude that the method adopted by the plaintiffs would give even an approximate measure of the damages sustained.

30. This is not to say that the evidence submitted to support the plaintiff's theory should be disregarded. Loss of prospective profits may constitute an element of recoverable damages. Certainly a prospective purchaser of Darden Industries, as a going concern, would give serious consideration to this evidence. At the time the defendants started their campaign to destroy Darden Industries' business, that Company had acquired some goodwill and going concern value. It had a small staff qualified to carry on the business. It had established some credit and satisfactory arrangements with Link-Belt, its supplier of machines.

31. The restrictions placed upon the operations of Darden Industries by the 1947 agreements, which it was forced to accept, limited the future development of the Company.

32. Giving consideration to all the factors, it is determined that Darden Industries suffered damages due to the illegal conduct of defendants in the amount of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000).

33. Darden, individually, has failed to show any injury from the defendants' activities apart from his interest as officer and stockholder of Darden Industries.

[Attorneys' Fees]

34. Plaintiffs were represented by able counsel, who spent much time in the preparation and trial of the case. In essence, the case was relatively simple so far as the liability was concerned. Much of the evidence used in this trial was substantially the same as U. S. A. v. Besser, supra. Most of the time and effort of the attorneys was spent in attempting to establish their theory of damages. Basing his opinion quite largely upon the time spent by plaintiff's counsel; a highly respected and competent member of the local bar gave his opinion as to the value of these services. Had it been possible for the plaintiff's counsel to sustain the theory of damages which they advanced, the opinion of this expert would have been more persuasive. However, the fact remains that plaintiff's counsel were not successful. It follows that reasonable attorneys' fees must be fixed in accordance with the usual considerations including the difficulty of the litigation, the amount recovered, time and labor spent, the learning, skill and experience required, and the responsibility undertaken. A reasonable allowance to Darden Industries for attorneys' fees is determined to be ten thousand dollars ($10,000).

Conclusions of Law

1. The Court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter of the claims of the plaintiffs (15 U. S. C. 15).

2. In addition to the prima facie effect that the Court is compelled to give to the decision of the courts in U. S. A. v. Besser, supra, sufficient evidence has been offered to establish that all of the defendants herein have committed acts forbidden by the anti-trust laws of the United States and that these acts have injured the business of Darden Industries entitling it to some of the relief sought (15 U. S. C. 15 and 16).

3. Where the tort itself is of such a nature as to preclude ascertainment of the amount of damages with certainty, it would be a perversion of fundamental principles of justice to deny all relief to the injured person, and thereby relieve the wrongdoer from making any amend for his acts. In such case, while the damages may not be determined by mere speculation or guess, it will be enough if the evidence shows the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference although the result be only approximate. The wrongdoer is not entitled to complain that they cannot be measured with the exactness and precision that would be possible if the case, which he alone is responsible for making, were otherwise. Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U. S. 555.

4. Plaintiff, Darden Industries, is entitled to judgment against the defendants for threefold the damages found to be sustained by it in Finding 32, a total sum of forty-five thousand dollars ($45,000). It is also entitled to recover its reasonable attorneys' fees as found in Finding 34 and its costs (15 U. S. C. 15).

[¶ 68,647] Federal Trade Commission v. Fred J. Bowman, President, Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 56 C 1372. Dated February 15, 1957.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Production of Documentary Evidence—Clayton Act Proceeding—Power of Commission To Serve Subpoena on Witness Not Being "Proceeded Against".—In a proceeding charging that a manufacturer of sporting goods purchased a competing manufacturer in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, the Federal Trade Commission had the power to serve a subpoena on another manufacturer in the industry demanding the production of certain of its records. The manufacturer contended that the Commission did not have the power to issue the subpoena under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act because it was not being "investigated or proceeded against" within the meaning of the section. The court, conceding that the manufacturer was not being "proceeded against," ruled that the manufacturer was being "investigated" as that word is used in the Act. Under Section 6 of the Act, the Commission has the power to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate the organization and practices of, any corporation engaged in commerce. The power to investigate so conferred is broad and sweeping, and there is nothing to suggest that only corporations suspected of a violation of law are subject to the power. The court further noted that the subpoena power conferred upon the Commission is available to it in the discharge of its duties under the Clayton Act, and that the instant proceeding would be crippled if the Commission could not produce by compulsory process essential industry data.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8701.55, 8701.74, 8741, 8741.55, 8801.870.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Production of Documentary Evidence—Clayton Act Proceeding—Reasonableness of Subpoena Served on Witness Not Being "Proceeded Against"—Trade Secrets.—In a proceeding charging that a manufacturer of sporting goods purchased a competing manufacturer in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, the Federal Trade Commission was held to have the power to serve a subpoena on another manufacturer in the industry demanding the production of certain of its records. In ruling on the manufacturer's contention that the subpoena was unreasonable and oppressive, the court held that while the requested information may be relevant to the Commission's proceeding against the other manufacturer, the imposition of a heavy burden upon a witness not a party to that proceeding should be avoided. Accordingly, the court ruled that the witness must produce any compilations already prepared by it, that the Commission must bear the burden of making any new compilations, that the witness will be required to make available the necessary records at the places of business where they are ordinarily kept, and that copies of specific single documents should be produced at the place of hearing. With respect to confidential business information, the court ruled that Section 6(f) of the Federal Trade Commission Act excepts trade secrets from the Commission's general power to make public the information it gathers, and that the order enforcing the subpoena will provide against the disclosure of confidential information.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8701, 8701.92, 8741, 8741.70.

For the petitioner: William A. Somers, Dwight L. Carhart, and Andrew C. Goodhope, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendant: Thomas Freeman, Louis R. Simpson, and Howard C. Parson, Chicago, Ill.

Modifying and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission subpoena relating to Dkt. 6478.

Memorandum

[Enforcement of Subpoena]

JULIUS J. HOFFMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The Federal Trade Commission has filed in this court a petition for enforcement of its subpoena duces tecum directed against the defendant, Fred J. Bowman, President of the Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company, under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 722, 15 U. S. C. § 49 (1914). The defendant has resisted enforcement upon the grounds that the subpoena is beyond the power of the Commission to issue and that it is unreasonable and oppressive.

[FTC Merger Proceeding]

The dispute arises in the course of a proceeding commenced by the Commission against A. G. Spalding & Bros., charging Spalding with a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, resulting from its purchase of a competitor, Rawlings Manufacturing Company. The issues as framed in that proceeding center around the question whether the effect of this purchase may be "substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly" within the meaning of the Clayton Act and the allegations of the complaint.

[Subpoena]

Seeking evidence concerning the effect of the purchase, the Commission issued its subpoena against the defendant, as President of the Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company, a competitor in the field. As summarized in the Commission's memorandum filed in support of this petition, the subpoena required the defendant to appear to testify and to produce documents showing:

1. Defendant's production for the past four years as shown by compilations in defendant's possession and any related documents;

2. Athletic goods manufactured by the Wilson company by units for the years 1952 through 1955;

3. Sales by the Wilson company of athletic goods by units, dollars, and price class of products during the years 1952 through 1955;

4. Purchases by the Wilson company of athletic goods for resale by units, dollars, and price class for the past four years;

5. All patents on athletic goods or production thereof which the Wilson company owns, the licensees under the patents, and the royalties paid to the Wilson company since January 1, 1952;

6. All patents on athletic goods or production thereof owned by others of which the Wilson company is the licensee, the license agreement, and the royalties paid by the Wilson company since January 1, 1952;

7. All agreements between the Wilson company or any subsidiary with any athlete or athletic organization for the use, gift, sale, or endorsement of any of the Wilson company's athletic goods during the last four years;

8. Catalogs and price lists of the Wilson company for the last four years; and

9. Names and addresses of suppliers of the Wilson company who supplied more than 5% of the Wilson company's total purchases of raw material used in the production of athletic goods, including the units and the dollar value thereof.

[Defendant's Objections]

The defendant Bowman personally appeared in response to the subpoena, but refused to supply the requested documents, claiming that the Commission lacked power to compel their production; that production would impose an unreasonable burden upon the Wilson company by requiring it to transport voluminous records from some thirty-two establishments in twenty-nine cities to the place of hearing, with consequent disruption of its business; and that compliance with the subpoena would involve disclosure of confidential business information and trade secrets. Upon the defendant's refusal to comply, the Commission filed this application for the aid of the court in compelling production of the requested documents.

[Power To Issue Subpoena]

The first point of argument raises the question whether the Federal Trade Commission, or this court in its support, is empowered to order the defendant to produce any documents at all. The defendant urges that the only charge of any violation of law is directed against A. G. Spalding & Bros., and that the Wilson company is not being proceeded against. It follows, according to the argument, that the Wilson company, being neither a party nor a prospective party to any proceeding but only a potential witness, is not subject to a subpoena duces tecum. The argument rests upon the interpretation of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 49, which provides in part:

> "For the purpose of sections 41-46 and 47-58 of this title the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. . . ."

[Section 9, FTC Act]

The word "such," in the defendant's reading of this section, incorporates all the limiting description of documentary evidence as used in the preceding clause. So construed, the act would authorize the Commission only "to require by subpoena . . . the production of all [such] documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against relating to any matter under investigation." In this view, if the Wilson company is not charged with the violation of any law administered by the Commission, then the company is not "being investigated or proceeded against" within the meaning of the authorization, and no power is vested in the Commission to issue a subpoena duces tecum.

[Section 6, FTC Act]

It is unnecessary to decide whether the defendant's interpretation attaches more significance to the word "such" than it can reasonably be made to bear. The argument fails upon another ground. Conceding that the Wilson company is not being "proceeded against" within the meaning of the quoted portion of Section 9, the question remains whether the company is "being investigated" as that term is used in the Act. Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 721, 15 U. S. C. § 46, provides in part:

> "The commission shall also have power—
>
> "(a) To gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the Act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships."

[Scope of Subpoena Power]

Certainly the power to investigate so conferred is broad and sweeping. There is nothing to suggest that only corporations suspected of a violation of law are subject to the power. Nor is there any reason to import such a limitation. Assuming for purpose of argument the soundness of the defendant's contention that the production of documentary evidence can be required only of corporations being investigated or proceeded against, to limit the meaning of investigation to cases of suspected violation would mean that the Commission would be powerless to perform many of the duties which Congress enjoined upon it. Where necessary evidence was in the hands of a competitor of a corporation charged with a violation, the Commission would be able to discharge its responsibility for protecting the public interest only if the victimized competitor chose to cooperate by supplying the evidence. The Commission would be limited in effect to proceeding upon the complaint of the injured party, despite the availability of private civil remedies for the protection of such parties. Effective enforcement in the public interest would be foreclosed.

Moreover, as the defendant would have me read these sections, the Commission would have unlimited power to call witnesses who are not suspected of violation and to examine them orally, but would be bound by the witness's recollection and statements; production of the books and records which constitute the best evidence of the facts could not be compelled.

This suggested interpretation would not only severely hamper the Federal Trade Commission. It would also prejudice the corporation being proceeded against in the establishment of its defense. For if the Commission were unable to compel the production of documents from non-parties in support of its charges, it would equally be powerless to lend its authority to the party charged, where the crucial evidence of innocence lay in the records of another corporation.

This court has previously held that the subpoena power conferred upon the Commission is available to it in the discharge of its duties under the Clayton Act. Federal Trade Commission v. Reed Candy Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,551], N. D. Ill. No. 56 C 483 [843], decided June 12, 1956. The same conclusion was reached in Federal Trade Commission v. Menzies [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,478], D. Md., decided August 30, 1956. In a proceeding under the anti-merger provisions of the Clayton Act, the share of the market affected by the merger and the effect on competitors engaged in the same line of commerce are crucial inquiries. The proceeding would be crippled if neither the Commission nor the party charged could produce by compulsory process the essential industry data.

[Related Rulings]

A related question was before the Court of Appeals for this Circuit in Bowles v. Shawano Nat. Bank, 151 F. 2d 749 (7 Cir. 1945). There the Administrator of the Office of Price Administration sought judicial enforcement of a subpoena to compel a bank to produce account records of four of its depositors who were connected with a company suspected of violating the act. The bank contended that "The Administrator cannot secure a court order directing subpoena against persons who were not parties to the instant (or any other) action." 151

F. 2d, at 750. The contention was rejected by the Court.

> "The Administrator, ex necessitate, needs investigatory powers both to promulgate rational orders and regulations, and to apprehend violations thereof. He can not intelligently make charges without knowing facts to substantiate them. The accused would vigorously and justly protest against unfounded charges. How is the Administrator to unearth such violations or to confirm information given him by aggrieved persons or alert loyal citizens? By investigation and checking, of course.
>
> "The statute granting him powers is inclusive and all embracive when it comes to investigation." (151 F. 2d at 751)

In interpreting Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act as it is incorporated in the investigatory legislation for other administrative agencies, other courts have held that a subpoena duces tecum may issue against corporations not parties to any proceeding nor suspected of any violation. United States v. C. & V. Poultry, Inc., 132 F. Supp. 945 (S. D. N. Y. 1955); United States v. Woerth, 130 F. Supp. 930 (N. D. Ia. 1955).

In a number of other cases, courts have reached decisions upon the basis of an assumed power to compel non-parties to produce documents, although without directly holding that the power exists. Thus in Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,503], 346 U. S. 61 (1953), Mr. Justice Frankfurter considered the power of the Commission to issue subpoenas duces tecum against corporations not parties to the proceeding as a factor justifying imposing the burden of proof on the question of cost justification upon the Commission rather than upon the corporation being proceeded against. He observed, "Certainly the Commission with its broad power of investigation and subpoena, prior to the filing of the complaint, is on a better footing to obtain this information than the buyer." 346 U. S., at 79. Similarly, in E. B. Muller & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,231], 142 F. 2d 511 (6 Cir. 1944), the Commission had issued a subpoena duces tecum at the request of the corporation being proceeded against, compelling a competitor to disclose certain information. The defendant complained that more information should have been disclosed. The Court held the Commission had acted within its discretion in not compelling the non-party to disclose all that the defendant demanded, but it assumed that the Commission had power to grant what the defendant sought and received in part. To the same effect is Fleming v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 114 F. 2d 384 (7 Cir. 1940), a proceeding under the provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act incorporating the section here in issue. The respondent objected to supplying its records, claiming that the information should be obtained from other persons not parties to the proceeding. While apparently recognizing the availability of that source, the Court overruled the objection.

The decisions of the courts are not the only relevant authority upon a question of the interpretation of an act of Congress conferring powers upon an administrative agency. Interpretation by the agency itself is entitled to great weight. In Alaska Steamship Co. v. United States, 290 U. S. 256 (1953) [1933], the Court declared:

> "Courts are slow to disturb the settled administrative construction of a statute long and consistently adhered to. [Citations omitted.] This is especially the case where, as here, the declared will of the legislative body could not be carried out without the construction adopted." (290 U. S., at 262)

See also Norwegian Nitrogen Products Co. v. United States, 288 U. S. 294, at 315 (1933); United States v. American Trucking Associations, Inc., 310 U. S. 534, at 543 (1940). For forty-two years the Federal Trade Commission has issued subpoenas duces tecum against corporations not parties to a pending proceeding. To upset this established interpretation would disrupt not only the operations of this Commission but of many other agencies operating under statutes which have incorporated this section of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[Cases Distinguished]

The defendant relies primarily upon two decisions as supporting his position: Federal Trade Commission v. Baltimore Grain Co., 284 Fed. 886 (D. Md. 1922), and Federal Trade Commission v. W. W. Tuttle [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,399], S. D. N. Y., Civil No. M-18-304, decided June 26, 1956. Neither case controls the question here presented. In the Baltimore Grain case, a general mandamus was sought to compel the respondent to open all its records to the Commission for purposes of compiling information and reporting to Congress as required by a Joint Resolution. As the court observed, there was "no reason to believe that any violation of law has been committed" by any person or corporation. The Joint Resolution did not expand the investigatory power, it was held, and the mandamus was denied. The holding falls far short of establishing that the subpoena power may not be used against non-parties as an incident to a pending proceeding charging a specific violation of law. The Tuttle case is also distinguishable. There, in aid of this same proceeding against A. G. Spalding & Bros., the Commission sought to obtain documents from the accountants who serve this defendant and other companies engaged in the athletic goods business. In denying the subpoena the court relied primarily upon the accountant's claim that its business would be destroyed if it were obliged to disclose this information obtained in confidence. The court also noted, however, that the Commission conceded that the accounting firm was not being "investigated" within the meaning of Section 6 of the Act, and that the Commission had conceded that the information could be obtained from the companies, like the Wilson company, that were engaged in the business. The two questions thus left open and undecided in the Tuttle case are here ripe for decision.

[Reasonableness of Subpoena]

Concluding as I do that a subpoena duces tecum to this defendant is within the power of the Commission, I next turn to the defendant's argument that the subpoena is unreasonable and oppressive. It appears that compliance with the subpoena as drawn would require the production of a vast number of documents from scattered points throughout the United States. While the requested information is or may be relevant to the pending proceeding against A. G. Spalding & Bros., the imposition of a heavy burden upon a witness not a party to that proceeding should be avoided. Under the discovery provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the burden of collecting a large number of documents and of compiling information from them is a ground for an order limiting the duty to produce. See Kainz v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,708], 15 F. R. D. 242 (N. D. Ill. 1954). Rule 81(a)(3) of those Rules provides:

". . . These rules apply (1) to proceedings to compel the giving of testimony or production of documents in accordance with a subpoena issued by an officer or agency of the United States under any statute of the United States except as otherwise provided by statute . . . ."

In Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U. S. 186 (1946), in construing Section 9 of the Act here involved as incorporated by the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Court observed:

"The result therefore sustains the Administrator's position that his investigative function, in searching out violations with a view to securing enforcement of the Act, is essentially the same as the grand jury's, or the court's in issuing other pretrial orders for the discovery of evidence, and is governed by the same limitations. . . ." (327 U. S., at 216)

In Walling v. American Rolbal Corporation, 135 F. 2d 1003, 1005 (2 Cir. 1943), the Court remarked:

". . . Requiring records to be produced away from the place where they are ordinarily kept may impose an unreasonable and unnecessary hardship which in itself would make the issuance of the subpoena, otherwise proper, arbitrary and capricious. The district judge suggested in his opinion 'that the investigation be carried on at the premises of the respondent and so conducted as not to interfere unduly with the course of its business.' The order is affirmed but our mandate will make the above suggestion a part of it if the District Court so decides after due consideration."

A similar limiting order was imposed in Application of Walling, 47 F. Supp. 255 (E. D. N. Y. 1942). There the judge stated:

". . . It was suggested, and with reason as I believe, that if the petitioner could acquire the desired information without the interference with the conduct of the respondent's business that would be entailed by the production of an impressive array of its records at a comparatively distant office, the ends of justice to both the petitioner and the respondent would be served. . . ." (47 F. Supp., at 256)

The order to be entered herein will therefor provide that the defendant must produce any compilations already prepared by it reflecting the information requested, but that the Commission must bear the burden of making new compilations from the Wilson company's sales invoices, voucher files, and other records. The defendant will be required to make available the necessary records, at the places of business where they are ordinarily kept, for examination by the Commission's agents at such times and places as will not unduly interfere with the conduct of business. Copies of specific single documents, such as compilations, catalogs, contracts, agreements, patents, and price lists, shall be produced at the place of hearing.

[Trade Secrets]

Finally, the defendant has objected to the disclosure of confidential business information that might prove beneficial to competitors if made public. The Federal Trade Commission Act itself recognizes the force of this claim. Section 6(f), 15 U. S. C. § 46(f), excepts trade secrets and names of customers from the Commission's general power to make public the information it gathers. In Federal Trade Commission v. Menzies [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,478], D. Md., decided August 30, 1956, the court specified:

"No part of the documentary evidence should be made public and available to the competitors of the several respondent corporations unless it is necessary to do so in the proper enforcement of the law. If requested by the respondents, the Commission should follow its practice of placing the documents offered in evidence in a confidential file, in order to keep business secrets away from the sight and knowledge of the respondents' competitors so far as it is practicable to do so in the discharge of the Commission's responsibilities under the law."

A similar qualification will be included in the order of enforcement to be entered.

[Order]

Counsel are directed to confer and submit an order reflecting the views herein expressed on or before March 18, 1957.

[¶ 68,648] John T. Menzies, President of the Crosse & Blackwell Company; Charles P. McCormick, President of McCormick & Company, Inc.; and Samuel H. Hoffberger, President of Pompeian Olive Oil Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7352. Argued January 23, 1957. Decided March 7, 1957.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore. THOMSEN, Chief Judge.

Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence—Subpoenas Duces Tecum—Power to Issue Subpoenas in Clayton Act Proceedings.—The Federal Trade Commission has the power to issue subpoenas duces tecum, under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, in proceedings before the Commission based upon alleged violations of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act were before Congress at the same time and were in pari materia, dealing with the same general subject matter. The FTC Act created the Commission as an administrative agency and conferred certain powers upon it, including the power to conduct investigations as to the organization and practices of certain corporations engaged in commerce. Authority to enforce compliance with the Clayton Act was conferred by Section 11 of that Act on the Federal Trade Commission. In carrying out this section, the Commission should exercise its powers with respect to investigations vested in it by the act of its creation. Among such powers is the power to examine documents and witnesses and issue subpoenas. The phrase "for the purposes of this act," contained in Section 9 of the FTC Act, does not limit the Commission's power to issue subpoenas to proceedings authorized by the FTC Act. If the Commission were conducting an investigation under Section 5 or 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act into the alleged discriminatory practices of the corporations involved in the instant proceedings, it would have the power to issue subpoenas under Section 9 and to use information obtained in subsequent proceedings to enforce the Clayton Act. Certainly, the power of the Commission is not less because of the fact that the corporations previously had been charged with violating the Clayton Act.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741, 8801.870.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence — Subpoenas Duces Tecum — Reasonableness of Subpoenas — Confidential Information.—In a proceeding by the Federal Trade Commission for court orders enforcing subpoenas duces tecum issued by it in proceedings charging three corporations with violating Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, the corporations' contention that the subpoenas are violative of the provisions of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution was rejected. The court held that the contention that the subpoenas authorize searches and seizures violative of the Fourth Amendment was so lacking in merit as not to warrant discussion. The subpoenas request records containing further information clearly relevant to the charges being investigated and describe the records as accurately as they can be described under the circumstances. Furthermore, the court order directed that none of the records be made public unless and until received in evidence, and that documents containing trade secrets be placed in a confidential file in accordance with the practices followed by the Commission in such cases. Also, there was further provision for the examination of records in the offices of the corporations and for the production before the Commission of only such records as were material to the matter under inquiry.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741, 8741.70.

For the appellants: G. C. A. Anderson and James W. Cassedy (A. Adgate Duer; Niles, Barton, Yost & Dankmeyer; Anderson, Barnes & Coe; and Morton J. Hollander, on brief).

For the appellee: Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission (Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, and John T. Loughlin, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, on brief).

Affirming orders of the U. S. District Court, District of Maryland, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,478, enforcing Federal Trade Commission subpoenas in Dkts. 6463, 6468, 6470.

Before PARKER, Chief Judge, and HARRY E. WATKINS and GILLIAM, District Judges.

[Enforcement of FTC Subpoenas]

PARKER, Chief Judge [In full text]: These are appeals from an order enforcing subpoenas duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission pursuant to section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 USC 49. The subpoenas were issued in proceedings before the Commission in which three corporations were charged with violation of section 2(d) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The contentions on appeal are that the subpoenas are invalid on the ground that the Commission does not have power to issue subpoenas under section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in proceedings had before it for enforcement of the Clayton Act and that, even if this power exists, the subpoenas are violative of the provisions of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

[Other Rulings]

The facts are fully stated and the applicable statutory provisions are accurately set forth and analyzed in the opinion of the District Judge. See Federal Trade Commission v. Menzies [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,478] 145 F. Supp. 164. We note that like action was taken in the case of Federal Trade Commission against Reed in the Northern District of Illinois, not yet reported, although not followed in Federal Trade Commission v. Rubin in the Southern District of New York [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,505] 145 F. Supp. 171. With due respect to the opinion of the judge in the case last mentioned, which we have carefully read and considered, we entertain no doubt as to the correctness of decision of the District Judge in this case and feel that little need be added to his opinion.

[Issuance of Subpoenas]

It is not without significance that for more than forty years the Federal Trade Commission, in proceedings had before it under the Clayton Act, has issued subpoenas such as it issued here and has issued many thousands of such subpoenas. While we agree that this is not conclusive as to its power to issue them, it is not reasonable to suppose that the power would have gone unchallenged for so long a period in such a sensitive field of the law, if there were any real doubt as to its existence.

[FTC Subpoena Power]

The Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act were before Congress at the same time and were in pari materia, dealing with the same general subject matter, restraints of trade and unfair competition. The Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730) laid down substantive rules of law and provided for their enforcement by courts and administrative agencies. The Federal Trade Commission Act created the Commission as an administrative agency and conferred certain powers upon it, among others the power to enter cease and desist orders upon a finding of unfair competition and to conduct investigations as to "the organization, business, conduct, practices and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers * * * and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations and partnerships". 38 Stat. 717-724. Authority to enforce compliance with the provisions of the Clayton Act, except as to banks and common carriers, was conferred by section 11 of that act on the Federal Trade Commission; and this could mean nothing else than that, in carrying out this provision, the Commission should exercise the powers with respect to investigations and hearing vested in it by the act of its creation. Among such powers, was the power to examine documents and witnesses and issue subpoenas. This was provided in section 9 of the Act, the pertinent portion of which is as follows:

"Sec. 9. That for the purposes of this Act the Commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. Any member of the commission may sign subpoenas, and members and examiners of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. * * *."

Contention is made that the language "for the purposes of this act" limits the power of examining witnesses and issuing subpoenas to proceedings and investigations authorized by the act creating the Commission and that the power may not be exercised in an enforcement provision which the Commission is authorized by the Clayton Act to conduct. This, we think, is an unreasonable and forced construction of the language used, the manifest purpose of which was to give the Commission the power of subpoena and examination in connection with any investigation or proceeding which it was authorized by law to conduct. The language in question is "for the purposes of this act;" and one of the purposes of the act was to vest the Commission with adequate powers to conduct investigations and proceedings with respect to restraints of trade and unfair competition. When duties of investigation or enforcement are imposed upon the Commission by another act or acts, the reasonable intendment is that it shall exercise the power conferred upon it by law in the discharge of such duties. As was well said in the opinion of the Commission:

"The Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act were enacted as remedial measures designed to correct apparent deficiencies in the Sherman Act through administrative proceedings. They are statutes in pari materia which were enacted in the same session of Congress and, therefore, are to be construed together so as to reinforce their common legislative purpose.

"The Federal Trade Commission was designated as a major agency for enforcement of sections 2, 3, 7 and 8 of the Clayton Act. That designation necessarily implied that the Commission was to be aided in the effective discharge of its duties in adversary proceedings by the compulsory processes which were being made available to it under its organic act. That Congress thus intended is clear because section 11 of the Clayton Act provides for quasi-judicial hearings culminating in findings as to the facts and orders, including orders to cease and desist, and, without the power to compel the production of evidence in the course of proceedings thereunder, the danger of improvident orders lacking bases in fact would be great. We hold, therefore, that there is sound legal basis for the issuance and enforcement of the Commission's processes requiring the production of appropriate information in Clayton Act inquiries and adjudicative proceedings."

It is conceded that if the Commission were conducting an investigation under section 5 or section 6 of the Trade Commission Act into the discriminatory practices of the corporations here being investigated, it would have power to issue subpoenas under section 9 of the Act and to use the information thus obtained in a subsequent proceeding to enforce the provisions of the Clayton Act. Certainly the power of the Commission to issue subpoenas and conduct the investigation is not less because of the fact that it gives notice in advance that the information obtained is to be so used; and the filing of the complaint under the Clayton Act amounts to no more than this. To deny such power to the Commission would in large measure defeat the purpose which Congress manifestly had in mind in the enactment of these statutes; and we find nothing in the language or history of either statute which at this late day requires such a result.

[Constitutional Objections]

The contention that the subpoenas authorize searches and seizures violative of the Fourth Amendment is so lacking in merit as not to warrant discussion. See United States v. United States District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia, 4 Cir. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,540] 238 F. 2d 713; Oklahoma Press Co. v. Walling, 327 U. S. 186, 202-211; Endicott Johnson Corp. v. Perkins, 317 U. S. 501, 510. As said in the case last cited:

"The subpoena power delegated by the statute as here exercised is so clearly within the limits of Congressional authority that it is not necessary to discuss the constitutional questions urged by the petitioner, and on the record before us the cases on which it relies are inapplicable and do not require consideration."

The subpoenas did not violate the rule of reasonableness laid down in Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43. They ask for records containing information clearly relevant to the charges being investigated and describe the records as accurately as they could be described under the circumstances. The order of the court below directed that none of the records be made public unless and until received in evidence and that documents containing trade secrets be placed in a confidential file in accordance with the practice followed by the Commission in such cases. There was further provision for the examination of records in the offices of the corporations being investigated and for the production before the Commission of only such as were material to the matter under inquiry.

[Orders Affirmed]

The orders appealed from will accordingly be affirmed, and, in order that there may be no more delay than necessary in the proceedings before the Commission, mandate will issue twenty days after entry of the judgment of this court and will not be further stayed unless the appellants shall in the meantime have filed applications with the Supreme Court of the United States for writ of certiorari to review the judgment.

Affirmed.

[¶ 68,649] United States v. International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., International Boxing Club, Madison Square Garden Corporation, James D. Norris, and Arthur M. Wirtz.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 74-81. Dated March 8, 1957.

Case No. 1122 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Practices—Acquisition of Control of Professional Boxers, Promoters, and Arenas—Legality—Restraint of Trade.—Two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, a corporation engaged in the operation of an arena, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations were held to have engaged in a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests in the United States. The intent of the defendants and the necessary result of their activities, including (1) their acquisition of contracts from champion boxers and leading contenders requiring them to box exclusively for the promotion corporations as a condition of participating in title bouts, (2) their acquisition of competing promoters of championship boxing contests, and (3) their acquisition of control of key arenas and stadia for the presentation of championship boxing contests, was to combine in order to obtain control of, and exclude others from, the promotion of championship boxing contests in the United States. Various agreements and understandings entered into by the defendants for the purpose of excluding others from promoting championship contests were found to have substantially lessened competition. During certain periods of time, the defendants controlled or participated in 81 per cent and 93 per cent of the championship boxing contests presented in the United States. Also, various contracts and understandings of the defendants with respect to the sale of television, radio, and motion picture rights to such contests were held to have unreasonably restrained trade.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.460, 2005.690.

Monopolies—Conspiracy to Monopolize—Acquisition of Control of Professional Boxers, Promoters, and Arenas—Intent.—Two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, a corporation engaged in the operation of an arena, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations were held to have engaged in a combination and conspiracy to monopolize trade in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests in the United States. The intent of the defendants and the necessary result of their activities, including (1) their acquisition of contracts from champion boxers and leading contenders requiring them to box exclusively for the promotion corporations as a condition of participating in title bouts, (2) their acquisition of competing promoters of championship boxing contests, and (3) their acquisition of control of key arenas and stadia for the presentation of championship boxing contests, was to combine in order to obtain control of, and exclude others from, the promotion of championship boxing contests in the United States. Various contracts and understandings entered into by the defendants were found to have substantially lessened competition and to have unreasonably restrained trade. During certain periods of time, the defendants controlled or participated in 81 per cent and 93 per cent of the championship boxing contests presented in the United States. The defendants, by their concert of action and agreements, were found to have intended to exclude others from the promotion of, exhibition of, or sale of television, radio, and motion picture rights to, championship boxing contests. A specific intent to monopolize must be proved to establish a conspiracy to monopolize.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520, 2610.120, 2610.300, 2610.800.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Acquisition of Control of Professional Boxers, Promoters, and Arenas—Power to Exclude Competition.—Two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, a corporation engaged in the operation of an arena, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations were held to have monopolized trade in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests in the United States. The court found that the intent of the defendants and the necessary result of their activities, including (1) their acquisition of contracts from champion boxers and leading contenders requiring them to box exclusively for the promotion corporations as a condition of participating in title bouts, (2) their acquisition of competing promoters of championship boxing contests, and (3) their acquisition of control of key arenas and stadia for the presentation of championship boxing contests, was to combine in order to obtain control of, and exclude others from, the promotion of championship boxing contests in the United States. The defendants, as a result of their activities, which included agreements and understandings in unreasonable restraint of trade, acquired the power to exclude competitors from the promotion of championship boxing contests. During certain periods of time, the defendants controlled or participated in 81 per cent and 93 per cent of the championship boxing contests presented in the United States. The defendants, by their concert of action and agreements, were found to have intended to exclude, and to have excluded, others from the promotion of, exhibition of, or sale of television, radio, and motion picture rights to, championship boxing contests.

To establish monopolization, it must be proved that the defendants were able, as a group, to exclude actual or potential competition from the field.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.275, 2510.500, 2610.120, 2610.300, 2610.800.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Relevant Market—Promotion of Professional Championship Boxing Contests.—The exhibition of professional championship boxing contests was held to constitute a market separate and distinct from the exhibition of professional boxing contests, sporting events, and other forms of public shows, spectacles, and entertainment. Likewise, the sale of television, radio, or motion picture rights to professional championship boxing contests was held to constitute a market separate and distinct from the sale of such rights with respect to boxing contests and other forms of public entertainment. Non-championship boxing contests, in their promotion and exhibition, including the sale of tickets, television rights, movie rights, and radio rights, do not have a reasonable interchangeability with championship boxing contests as a financial proposition and as an entertainment media. In matters of public appeal as well as financial return, championship contests are on a plane which clearly distinguishes them from non-championship boxing contests. The promotion of chaimpionship boxing contests constitutes a distinct, unique, and relevant market for the purpose of testing violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2540.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Interstate Trade or Commerce—Promotion of Championship Boxing Contests.—The promotion of professional championship boxing contests, including the sale of radio, television, and motion picture rights thereto, constitutes trade or commerce among the several states within the meaning of the Sherman Act. While the business of staking and promoting championship boxing contests may formerly have been "purely local affairs," modern management has made them vehicles by which television and radio programs may be broadcasted and advertising presented with an attractive nationwide appeal. The promotion of such contests was on a multistate basis, and it was coupled with the sale of rights to televise, broadcast, and film the contests for interstate transmission. The contention that a broad attack upon all professional sports, except baseball, may develop as a result of the instant ruling was answered by the court as follows: (1) the promotion of professional championship boxing contests is a pure and simple money-making, profit-seeking business, and (2) the United States Supreme Court, in its baseball decisions, never held "that all businesses based on professional sports are outside the scope of the antitrust laws."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153, 2035.213, 2035.219.

For the plaintiff: Herbert Brownell, Jr., Attorney General; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; and Victor H. Kramer, Richard B. O'Donnell, John D. Swartz, William J. Elkins, Lawrence Gochberg, Frank D. Curtis, and Edward F. Corcoran, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett (Whitney North Seymour, Benjamin C. Milner, Armand F. Macmanus, and Newell G. Alford, Jr., of counsel) for Madison Square Garden Corporation and International Boxing Club of New York, Inc.; and Reid & Priest, and Peabody, Westbrook, Watson & Stephenson (Charles H. Watson and Ralph M. McDermid, of counsel), for International Boxing Club, Inc., James D. Norris, and Arthur M. Wirtz.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,941; and for a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,758.

OPINION

[Nature of Suit]

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: This civil anti-trust suit was filed on March 17, 1952 by the United States under Section 4 of the Sherman Act (C. 647, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. Sec. 4), as amended, to prevent and restrain violations by the defendants of Sections 1 and 2 of the Act. The amended complaint alleges, in substance, that the defendants combined and conspired in restraint of, and to monopolize, and have monopolized, interstate and foreign commerce in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, including the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights thereto.

[Prior Proceedings]

Defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, i.e., for lack of interstate commerce and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, was granted on February 8, 1954. The United States appealed directly to the Supreme Court, which reversed the judgment of dismissal and remanded the suit for trial (United States v. International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236 (1955)). This determination was a holding that accepting the allegations of the complaint, a claim was stated entitling the Government to some form of relief and that ". . . the Government is entitled to an opportunity to prove its allegations . . ."

I note, with gratitude and appreciation, that I have had the utmost cooperation from counsel both in the pre-trial hearings and at trial. This expedited the presentation of the evidence and shortened the trial.

1.

THE ISSUES PRESENTED

[Complaint]

The complaint alleges that the defendants, beginning in 1949, combined and conspired in restraint of and to monopolize interstate trade and foreign commerce in the promotion, exhibition, broadcasting, telecasting and motion picture production and distribution of professional championship boxing contests in the United States. The Government contends that the combination and conspiracy resulted in a monopolization, and that it consisted of a concert of action among the defendants to exclude others from the promotion and exhibition of and the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights in professional championship boxing contests in the United States.

The acts alleged to have been committed by the defendants, pursuant to the conspiracy and combination, are: (1) purchasing of promotional control of certain championships, (2) acquiring the assets of competitors, (3) acquiring the exclusive use of principal stadia and arenas, and (4) requiring each of certain contenders for a title, as a condition of being afforded an opportunity to engage in a championship contest, to enter into a contract pursuant to which the contender, if he won the contest and thereby became champion, was required to engage in title bouts only under the promotion of defendants for a period of from three to five years.

The complaint alleges that defendants have promoted, or participated in the promotion of, 80% of all championship contests presented in the United States during the period between January 1, 1949 and May 15, 1953.

Specifically, then, the complaint alleges that the trade and commerce involved in suit is the business of promoting championship boxing contests on a multi-state basis, which includes the staging of the boxing contest in a suitable arena, the sale of tickets of admission, and the negotiations and sale of rights to broadcast, televise and to make and distribute motion pictures of such contests. This, the Supreme Court has held, "constitutes 'trade or commerce among the several states' within the meaning of the Sherman Act" (U. S. v. International Boxing Club, supra p. 240). The complaint further alleges that, in addition to monies received from the sale of tickets of admission, a substantial portion of the total revenue from championship fights comes from the sale of rights involving radio, television and motion pictures.

[Defenses]

The answers deny that defendants have unlawfully conspired or combined, or that they have, either individually or collectively, a monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman Act. The main thrust of the defense lies in the contention that championship boxing contests are not independent of and would not exist without non-championship contests and, therefore, the promotion of championship boxing contests does not constitute a relevant "market" for purposes of testing violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

The Government argues that the promotion and exhibition of, and the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights in professional championship boxing contests constitute a "market" for purposes of determining whether there were restraints of trade and monopoly as alleged. The defendants urge that the relevant market is the entire entertainment field (or, at the very least, the promotion of all boxing contests). They contend that if the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights with respect to championship bouts have material significance, such a finding would serve only to establish that the correct and relevant market is the entire entertainment field.

[Burden of Proof]

The Government, charging the defendants, as it does, with having violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Act, has the burden of establishing the relevant market as well as the elements of the offense as set forth in the Act. Thus, to sustain its charge that the defendants conspired to monopolize, the Government must prove that the defendants had a specific intent to monopolize (Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 396 (1905)); and to establish that the conspiracy charged was successfully consummated, that the defendants did in fact monopolize the relevant market, that they were ". . . able, as a group, to exclude actual or potential competition from the field" (American Tobacco Co. v. United States [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 809 (1946)).

[Basic Issues]

The basic issues presented for determination as they have been framed and submitted by the defendants are:

1. Were the activities of defendants in connection with the promotion and exhibition of championship boxing contests interstate trade and commerce within the meaning of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act? and

2. If the defendants' activities were interstate trade and commerce, was Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act violated by them?

[Evidence]

The Government called eight witnesses and introduced 268 exhibits; defendants called seven witnesses and offered 13 exhibits. On consideration of all this evidence, I make the following findings of fact.

2.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. Description of Defendants and Others.

1. Defendant International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as IBC(NY)), is a New York corporation with offices and principal place of business in New York, New York. It was formed on March 14, 1949. From about July 1949 to May 15, 1953, the end of the period covered by the Amended Complaint (hereinafter referred to as Complaint), about 80% of its voting stock was substantially equally divided between defendants Wirtz and Norris and the defendant Madison Square Garden Corporation, while the remaining approximate 20% was owned by Joe Louis or Trustees for his benefit. It has been engaged in the promotion of professional boxing contests including professional world championship contests. During the period July 1949 to the present it has held a license to promote boxing matches in New York issued by the New York State Athletic Commission. It is found and transacts business in this District.

2. Defendant International Boxing Club, Inc., an Illinois corporation (hereinafter referred to as IBC(Ill.)), has offices and principal place of business in Chicago, Illinois. It was formed on March 1, 1949. From about July 1949 to May 15, 1953, about 80% of its voting stock was substantially equally divided between defendants Wirtz and Norris and the defendant Madison Square Garden Corporation, while the remaining approximate 20% was owned by Joe Louis or Trustees for his benefit. It has been engaged in the promotion of professional boxing contests including professional championship boxing contests. During the period July 1949 to the present it has held a license to promote boxing contests in Illinois issued by the Illinois State Athletic Commission.

3. Defendant Madison Square Garden Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Garden), is a New York corporation with offices and principal place of business in New York, New York. It was organized to own and operate the arena building in New York City known as Madison Square Garden which was built in 1925-6. Throughout the period covered by the Complaint, it has engaged, among other things, in the management and operation of the Madison Square Garden Arena including the promotion of various spectacles and contests held there. It is the foremost indoor sports arena in New York City and is utilized for various indoor sports events, including professional boxing contests and other events and spectacles. It is found and transacts business in this District.

4. Defendant James D. Norris, a resident of Chicago, Illinois, was president and a director of IBC(Ill.) and IBC(NY) from March 24, 1949 and July 8, 1949, respectively, and thereafter throughout the period covered by the Complaint and since. He has been a director of IBC(Mich.) since its incorporation and the president of that corporation since August 11, 1949. He has also been the president and a director of IBC(Mo.). He has been a director of the Garden since December 19, 1950, and has been its president since June 9, 1955. At all times mentioned in the Complaint he had a substantial stock interest in the Garden.

5. Defendant Arthur M. Wirtz, a resident of Chicago, Illinois, was a director of IBC(Ill.), of IBC(NY), and of the Garden from March 24, 1949, July 8, 1949, and December 19, 1950, respectively, and thereafter throughout the period covered by the Complaint and since. He has been a director of IBC(Mich.) since its incorporation; he has also been a director of IBC (Mo.) since September 26, 1950, and vice-president and secretary since January 12, 1950. At all times mentioned in the Complaint he had a substantial stock interest in the Garden.

6. The International Boxing Club, Inc., a Michigan corporation (hereinafter referred to as IBC(Mich.)), was organized under the laws of the State of Michigan on July 12, 1949 to promote professional boxing matches in Michigan. It was a wholly owned subsidiary of IBC(Ill.) until December 28, 1950, and thereafter throughout the period covered by the Complaint, it was jointly controlled by the Defendants Wirtz and Norris.

7. The International Boxing Club, Inc., a Missouri corporation (hereinafter referred to as IBC(Mo.)), was organized under the laws of the State of Missouri. From October 23, 1950 and thereafter throughout the period covered by the Complaint, it was jointly controlled by defendants Wirtz and Norris.

8. The defendants Norris and Wirtz participated in the direction and management of the defendants IBC(NY), IBC(Ill.), IBC(Mich.), IBC(Mo.) and, since December 19, 1950 of the defendant Garden, and particularly in those affairs, policies, and acts of the said corporations described more fully in these Findings of Facts. Each of the individual defendants has authorized, ordered, or done some or all of the acts hereinafter described.

II. Professional Boxing.

9. Professional boxing is a legalized sport which has become a business and which is conducted as a form of public entertainment. All who engage in it, either as boxer participants, managers or promoters are motivated to some extent by the desire of profit or monetary gain. It consists of a contest between two individuals each of whom uses his fists, bandaged, taped and encased in padded gloves, to attack his adversary with blows above the waist line and to ward off his adversary's blows. The winner is the boxer who either renders his adversary unable to continue, or failing that, receives the decision of the official judges at the end of the contest. A boxer may also win by the disqualification or default of his adversary.

10. The contest takes place on a square, covered, platform, enclosed by ropes, located in an arena to which members of the public are admitted upon presenting tickets of admission, which may be purchased at the gate.

11. The contestants are matched according to weight classes. There are eight recognized weight classes: flyweight (to 112 lbs.); bantamweight (to 118 lbs.); featherweight (to 126 lbs.); lightweight (to 135 lbs.); welterweight (to 147 lbs.); middleweight (to 160 lbs.); light heavyweight (to 175 lbs.); and heavyweight (over 175 lbs.). In the United States the two lightest classes have little practical importance. No flyweight championship bout has been held in the United States since 1935, and no bantamweight championship has been held in the United States since 1947.

12. In each weight class there is at any one time ordinarily one recognized world champion. Recognition as a world champion is a lucrative asset to any professional boxer and attaining the world championship is generally sought by all professional boxers in the division in which they compete. It places the individual so recognized in a position to obtain more for his services than those who have not been so recognized. Contests in which these champions participate have greater box-office appeal, arouse greater public interest, have larger audience participation and bring in more revenues from sale of admission tickets, or "gate," and sale of other rights to the contest. There are other emoluments which come to the recognized world champion by way of commercial endorsements and advertising programs.

13. The champion becomes such either by defeating the existing champion in a recognized title contest, or, if the champion has retired or his title is declared vacated, by engaging with one or more recognized top contenders in a contest, or series of contests, recognized as title, or title elimination contests by authorities such as the New York State Athletic Commission and the National Boxing Association (an association of the state and municipal boxing commissioners, hereinafter referred to, from time to time, as NBA). Although there are sometimes differences of opinion as to who is the champion, such differences are infrequent. The field of champions and potential champions is limited by reason of the prowess of the few who have gained the public recognition of those who are "fans" or followers of the contests. It is reasonable to say that, at any one time, there are at most only six or so professional boxers who can defend a world championship title.

14. A boxing contest is a single bout between two boxers. Depending upon the circumstances it may be scheduled for 4, 6, 8, 10, 12 or 15 rounds of three minutes duration with rest periods of one minute between rounds.

15. A boxing contest is not staged in an arena except as part of a program or series of boxing contests, known as a boxing card. Each boxing card includes a main event. The professional championship boxing contests are generally staged with a number of "preliminaries," minor or insignificant contests, usually five or six in number. The minor contests have little or no interest to those who attend the championship contests; they have no drawing power or box-office appeal, and are staged only that the main or championship event may be orderly presented and allow for the entrance and exist of the spectators with a minimum of confusion.

16. Promoting professional boxing contests includes negotiation and execution of contracts with the boxers, the arranging of details necessary to the exhibition of the contest, the selling of tickets of admission, the staging of the contest, and the sale, if any, of radio, television, or motion picture rights to such contents.

III. State and Municipal Regulation of Professional Boxing.

17. Professional boxing is conducted in many of the states and localities under rules and regulations of governmental authorities; in many instances under a licensing system by which control and supervision is exercised over the boxers and their managers, promoting corporations, the referees, judges, match-makers, time-keepers and those in charge of the sale and distribution of admission tickets. This governmental regulation ofttimes extends to specific proposed boxing contests and boxing cards. Under the law of New York and Illinois, and in certain other states in which professional boxing is permitted, a promoter's license may be issued only to a corporation organized under the laws of that State.

18. In New York the governing authority is the State Athletic Commission which is a Division of the Department of State. In Illinois that authority is the State Athletic Commission.

19. In New York the boxers and their managers, promoting corporations, the referees, judges, match-makers, timekeepers, box office employees, ticket takers, trainers, and announcers, among others, must be licensed by the Commission. The proposed boxing card must be submitted to the Commission for approval by it. From time to time the Commission disapproves proposed boxing contests.

20. In New York, the rules and regulations provide, among other things, for: the filing and some of the terms of the contracts between boxers and the promoter, and between boxers and their managers; the printing and handling of tickets; the actual conduct of the bout; the rules governing the functioning of officials, including the judges, referee, and timekeeper; the manner of scoring the contest; the classification of contestants on a weight basis; and medical examinations of the contestants. The rules and regulations in Illinois are similar and apply to the same subjects generally.

21. In New York all judges and referees must be assigned by the Commission. In any principal or main bout the contestants must be paid on a percentage basis and the licensed promoting corporation, without advance approval of the Commission, cannot pay the contestants an amount in excess of 50% of the net proceds of the boxing program after the State tax and the compensation of the ring officials have been deducted.

22. Licensed promoting corporations are not allowed to conduct more than one program per week without the special permission of the Commission, and no such program may be called off or adjourned without the consent of the Commission.

23. It does not lie within our jurisdiction, to interfere with or attempt to modify or dictate the conditions under which those engaged in this professional boxing business shall operate on a local basis. It is our sole concern to inquire into such activities only insofar as they affect the interstate trade and commerce which has grown up and become an integral part of these activities; to that extent our jurisdiction is limited and by that limitation our inquiry is bound.

IV. The Trade and Commerce Involved.

24. The trade and commerce involved in this suit is the promoting and holding of professional championship boxing contests and all the commercial activities, which are an important and integral part of a successful and complete operation of such business. This includes the staging of such championship boxing contests in a suitable arena or stadium; the sale of tickets of admission; the negotiation and sale of rights to broadcast and to telecast through home television consumption or closed circuit theatre television consumption:; and to make and distribute motion pictures.

25. Each of these business phases of the professional championship boxing contests provides substantial sources of revenue for the promoters and participants; not the least of which are the payments received from the sale of rights involving broadcasts by radio and television and the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures of the events.

26. The efficient promotion of these professional boxing contests includes the negotiation and execution of contracts with the boxers, the arranging of details necessary to the exhibition of the contests, the selling of tickets of admission, the staging of the contests, and the sale, if any, of radio, television or motion picture rights to such contests.

V. The Interstate Character of This Trade and Commerce.

27. The defendants IBC (NY) and IBC (Ill.), in promoting professional world championship boxing contests, have made frequent use of the mails, the telephone, telegrams, cablegrams, radiograms, and their officers and agents have travelled across state lines and, in some cases, to foreign nations, to negotiate between themselves, with other promoters, and with boxers and managers. The defendant IBC (NY), in promoting championship contests, has sold a substantial number of admission tickets to professional world championship contests through the use of the mails to customers located in states other than those states in which the contests were held. A substantial number of people who purchased tickets in that manner crossed state lines to be present at such professional boxing contests.

28. Likewise, the defendants IBC (NY) and IBC (Ill.) have negotiated and executed contracts for the sale of rights to broadcast and telecast championship contests. Such negotiations have involved the frequent use of the mails, telephone and telegrams, and means of personal travel across state lines. The purchasers of such rights have broadcast and telecast, or caused to be broadcast and telecast, descriptions and views of such professional world championship boxing contests to private homes located throughout the United States and in the case of some radio broadcasts, in foreign countries.

29. The telecasting of championship contests is of such significance and importance that championship contests held outside the Eastern time zones are staged at unusual times, sometimes as early as 7 p.m. in order to be seen on television in the East at the traditional time of 10 p.m.

30. The locality in which a championship contest is presented is frequently "blacked out," i.e., the contest is not televised in such particular locality.

31. The defendants IBC (NY) and IBC (Ill.), in promoting professional world championship boxing contests, have, in some instances, negotiated and entered into contracts to sell the right to telecast professional world championship boxing contests, under which the contract purchaser agreed to arrange for the exhibition of such telecasts in motion picture theatres located in various states throughout the United States.

32. The defendants IBC (NY) and IBC (Ill.), in promoting professional world championship boxing contests, have, in some instances, negotiated and entered into contracts to sell the rights for the distribution of motion picture films of such contests, under which the contract purchaser agreed to arrange for the distribution of motion pictures of such contests for exhibition in theatres located throughout the United States and in foreign countries.

33. The thirty-six championship boxing contests which defendant promoted or had an interest in during the period June 1, 1949 through May 15, 1953, were held in the States of New York, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Massachusetts, Florida, Pennsylvania, Ohio and California.

34. The defendants, as promoters of championship contests, derive substantially all of their revenue from the sale of tickets of admission and from the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights to such contests, on the occasions when such rights are sold. The sale of tickets of admission and of the radio, television and motion picture rights are in the control of the promoter.

35. The gross gate receipts plus monies received from the sale, if any, of rights to television, radio and motion pictures for the 44 professional championship boxing contests held in the United States during the period June 1, 1949 to May 15, 1953, were $8,759,326. Of that amount $6,347,594 or 72.4% was attributable to ticket sales and $2,411,740 or 27.6% was attributable to sale of said rights. In arriving at this gross receipts figure, and in making this comparison, gate receipts before payment of federal admission tax figures have been used because the price on the tickets includes such taxes.

36. The revenues derived from sales of tickets of admission to those 44 contests varied between $27,166.56 and $768,719.32.

37. The revenue derived from the sale of television, radio and motion picture rights to those 44 contests varied between $4,650 and $386,413.92 in the 29 bouts in which one or more of these rights were sold.

38. The 36 championship contests which the defendants promoted or had an interest in during the period June 1, 1949 through May 15, 1953, produced a total revenue of $7,100,944.92, of which $2,391,740.92 was derived through the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights.

39. During 1949 four championship contests promoted by the defendants, or from which defendants received income, produced total revenues of $569,859.73, of which $59,650.00 or about 10% was attributed to the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights to such contests.

40. During 1950 seven championship contests promoted by the defendants, or from which defendants received income, produced total revenues of $856,752.72, of which $215,000 or about 25% was derived from the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights.

41. During 1951 thirteen championship contests promoted by the defendants, or from which defendants received income, produced total revenues of $2,365,536.37, of which $946,531.92 or 40% was derived from the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights to such contests.

42. During 1952 nine championship contests promoted by defendants, or from which defendants received income, produced total revenues of $2,398,030.89, of which $863,558.00 or about 36% was derived from the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights to such contests.

43. The sale of television and radio broadcast rights to championship contests plays an important role in the promotion and staging of these contests, and is a matter of prime business importance. This is evidenced by the fact that the revenue from the sale of home television and radio rights to the Maxim-Murphy light-heavyweight championship contest, promoted by IBC (NY) in the Garden on August 22, 1951, was two and a half times greater than the revenues from the gate receipts after deduction of federal admission taxes, and in the Gavilan-Graham welterweight championship bout, promoted by IBC (NY) at the Garden Arena on August 29, 1951, the revenue from the sale of home television and radio rights produced approximately twice as much revenue as the sale of tickets of admission after deduction of federal admission taxes.

44. The telecasting of championship contests is of such significance and magnitude to the promoter that the presentations of such contests in New York City have become fewer because of the fact that with so many home television receivers in the New York metropolitan area, that area cannot be blacked out without materially reducing the value of the television rights to the sponsors.

45. The business of promoting championship contests is substantially dependent upon revenue from the sale of radio and television rights thereto and that fact is responsible, in great measure, for the manner in which the business is presently conducted.

46. The revenue received by defendants through the sale of motion picture rights to six championship contests presented between June 16, 1949 and May 15, 1953 and their participation in the filming and distribution as described in Finding 33, amounted to $616,560.19.

47. The income of the defendants from such a film usually depends on the amount of revenue derived from the distribution of the film in theatres located throughout the United States in foreign nations.

48. The income of the defendants from the sale of rights to televise a championship contest through closed channels in moving picture theatres is based on a royalty for each seat in each theatre to which the bout may be transmitted or on the number of tickets sold to each such theatre.

49. A professional championship boxer, directly, or through his managers, negotiates with promoters on a bout-by-bout basis for a percentage of the gate receipts, plus a share of the revenue, if any, from the sale of radio, television or motion picture rights.

50. The revenues received by such boxers from the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights to the contests in which they engage represent a substantial part of the revenues received by the boxers from such contests.

VI. The Promotion of Championship Contests—a Separate Part of This Interstate Commerce.

51. The gross income from gate receipts (less federal admission taxes) and from the sale of radio and television rights, and the distribution of motion pictures from all championship bouts promoted by the defendants from June 1, 1949 to March 17, 1952, averaged, as to each bout, $154,000. The gross income, computed in the same manner, from non-championship bouts promoted by defendants at the Garden Arena, Chicago Stadium, Yankee Stadium, and the Polo Grounds, all important stadia, between June 1, 1949 and March 17, 1952, averaged, as to each bout, $40,000.

52. The Charles-Maxim heavyweight championship bout held in the Chicago Stadium on May 30, 1951 was promoted by IBC (Ill.) and radio and home television rights to this bout were sold to Pabst Brewing Company for $100,000. However, similar rights to a non-championship heavyweight bout between these same contestants held about seven months later on December 12, 1951 were purchased by Pabst from defendant IBC (Ill.) for less than half of that price, i.e., for $35,000 in addition to a payment made on a series contract of about $10,000, or a total of $45,000.

53. The Nielsen Average Audience rating is a percentage which purports to show the number of residential television sets that were tuned in to the program expressed as a percentage of the total residential television sets, whether turned off or on, which were in areas into which the program was telecast.

54. The average "Nielsen Share of the Audience ratings" (which are generally accepted by sponsors of television programs as accurate) for the non-championship contests presented beginning September 27, 1950 through May 15, 1953 by IBC (NY), IBC (Ill.), or by any promoter in connection with either of the IBCs, and on which a "Nielsen" rating was made, is 57.7%, while the same average for championship contests presented during the same period is 74.9%.

55. The preceding Finding and the other "Nielsen" average ratings reflect that several million more television viewers watch championship contests than watch major non-championship contests.

56. The televising of championship boxing contests has a particular demand and peculiar qualities in contradistinction to the televising of non-championship boxing contests.

57. The defendants recognized the special attractiveness and peculiar qualities incident to the promotion of championship contests, and in the agreement between Wirtz-Norris and the Garden to promote boxing contests jointly, they specifically allocated the promotion of championship contests between them.

58. The defendants expressly limited their contingent, exclusive contracts with contenders for championships to championship contests, making it clear that they were not interested in obtaining exclusive rights to the promotion of non-championship bouts.

59. The intent of the defendants to confine such exclusive agreements to only championship contests was made clear by IBC (NY) reassuring Gavilan that his exclusive agreement was to become operative only if he won his contest with the then champion and thereby became champion himself and that the contract thereafter would not relate to any boxing contest other than championship contests.

60. Sponsors of televised boxing contests recognize that the televising of a championship contest has a unique advertising value for a sponsor in contradistinction to the televising of a non-championship contest.

61. A particular and special demand exists among radio broadcasting and telecasting companies for the rights to broadcast and telecast championship contests in contradistinction to similar rights to non-championship contests

62. A particular and special demand exists among moving picture companies for the rights to make and distribute films of championship contests in contradistinction to similar rights to non-championship contests.

63. Although during the period June 1, 1949 through May 15, 1953 one or more of the defendants sold motion picture rights to 6 of the 44 championship contests presented, for amounts varying between $500.00 and $272,892.42 and for a total of $616,560.19, during the same period no full-length motion picture rights were sold to a non-championship contest.

64. A particular and special demand exists among promoters for championship contests in contradistinction to non-championship contests.

65. A substantial number of persons purchase tickets of admissions to attend profesional championship contests who do not do so to attend non-championship contests.

66. A particular and special demand exists among spectators for championship contests in contradistinction to non-championship contests. Spectators pay substantially more for tickets of admissions to professional championship boxing contests than they pay for tickets to non-championship contests.

67. A separate, identifiable market exists for professional world championship boxing contests among boxers, spectators, sponsors of radio and television programs, owners of radio broadcasting and telecasting stations, moving picture companies, and promoters of professional boxing contests.

68. Professional boxing contests are staged or presented in arenas or stadiums.

69. A large variety of events can be and are staged, presented or held in arenas, where professional boxing contests are presented.

70. In a typical year there are about 2,000 professional boxing shows presented in arenas in the United States, of which approximately 9 to 13 are professional championship boxing contests.

71. There is a number of arenas in the United States where sporting events including boxing contests are presented in which none of the defendants has an interest.

72. The exhibition of professional championship boxing contests does constitute a market separate and distinct from the exhibition of professional boxing contests, sporting events, and other forms of public shows, spectacles and entertainment.

VII. The Sale of Television and Broadcast Rights to Championship Contests Is a Separate Part of This Interstate Commerce.

73. The fact that a professional boxing contest is a show staged for public entertainment presents those who have an immediate financial interest in the contest, including the boxers, their managers, and the promoter, with the opportunity, if purchasers are available, to sell the right to come upon the premises, with the necessary equipment, and pick-up or describe the contest for ultimate transmission to the public through various media of communication.

74. The most commonly sold rights during the period June 1, 1949 through May 15, 1953 and since, were television rights. Radio rights have been sold with television rights on a number of occasions. Theatre television rights and motion picture rights have also been sold.

75. The right to pick-up through cameras and telecast electronic reproductions of professional boxing contests, when sold, is sold to sponsors, or to advertising agencies for the account of their clients, who are sponsors, or to telecasting corporations for a resale to sponsors.

76. The sponsor is a commercial organization which uses advertising media to strengthen and increase public awareness and acceptance of its product or services.

77. Sponsors who have used the telecasting of boxing contests for advertising have, at the same time, used other advertising media. There is a large variety of shows and events available for television advertising sponsorship. Various sponsors choose various types of television programs as the most satisfactory competitive instrument to interest the public.

78. The general market that the sponsor seeks to reach is the television viewer who is free to watch its program and other programs which are being telecast at the same time.

79. There is a separate audience for championship contests as distinguished from the sports audience that is interested in viewing non-championship contests and other sporting events regularly or from time to time.

80. It is desirable for successful television advertising that the sponsor establish in the television user a continuity of viewing habit, if at all possible.

81. Continuity of viewing habit is established by making the viewing public aware that if it turns to a particular television channel at a particular time each week, it will see a television show of a kind and type which it will prefer to other programs available at the same time.

82. The sponsors who have purchased the television rights to the regular Friday night series of boxing contests of IBC(NY) and the regular Wednesday night series of boxing contests of IBC(Ill.), have purchased their telecasting time on a 52 week a year basis.

83. With infrequent exceptions, weekly boxing contest television shows have non-championship bouts as the main event. All championship boxing contests held in a given year if broadcast alone would not provide continuity to a television advertising program

84. The sponsor of a boxing contest television show program has great interest in sponsoring the televising of a world championship boxing contest but endeavors to have such contest brought within its regular weekly series of boxing shows.

85. The purpose of including championship boxing contests among those shown on a regular television series is to bolster the viewing audience, by presenting to the public a special show which appeals to an additional separate audience in the hope that it will attract the attention of that separate group to the other programs regularly broadcast.

86. The sale of television, radio, or motion picture rights to professional championship boxing contests does constitute a market separate and distinct from the sale of such rights with respect to boxing contests and other forms of public entertainment.

VIII. The Defendants' Position in the Professional Boxing Business in 1949.

87. Madison Square Garden is the foremost sports arena in New York City and is the best known arena of its kind in the United States, if not the world. It was built in 1925 and succeeded to the name and tradition of old Madison Square Garden.

88. The Garden building is located in the hotel and theatrical district of mid-town Manhattan. It contains a very large arena with an exhibition hall in the basement. The arena's seating capacity is 18,000 for boxing shows, meetings and rallies; 15,000 for basketball and hockey, and 14,000 for the circus and rodeo.

89. The Garden has the facilities for the staging of a great variety of sports events, spectacles, meetings and rallies. Approximately 500 employees are employed at the Garden on a full or part time basis of whom about 50 are engaged in promotional activities including activities relating to the promotion of boxing. It is necessary for successful operation of the Garden that it have available each year a large number of events of outstanding quality which will maintain its prestige and attract adequate publicity and patronage.

90. Continuity in scheduling events is a vital part of the operation of the Garden. Sports events, in season, are held on particular nights of the week. Sunday and Wednesday nights are hockey nights, Thursday is basketball night, and Friday boxing night. Annual events which interrupt the regular schedule are known well in advance as to season and period of interruption. This continuity is maintained so that people can become accustomed to it.

91. The net income of the Garden from all events including boxing, reached a peak in 1947 and has declined steadily since that year. The net income for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1947 was $1,246,000. The net income for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1950 was $646,000. The net income for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1955 was $311,000. During the years 1950-1953 inclusive, IBC(NY) operated at a loss; in 1954 its net income was $37,000 and in 1955, $32,000.

92. Television was a major factor which accounted for the Garden's decline in income in the period 1947-1955. The advent of television affected unfavorably the gate receipts at the Garden as, indeed, it has many other forms of public entertainment. The Garden was able to offset this loss in patronage, to some extent, by the sale of television rights. This income began in 1947 and 1948 and reached a peak in 1952.

93. In 1935 Norris and Wirtz first acquired their interests in Chicago Stadium. The Stadium was completed in 1929 and has a seating capacity slightly larger than that of the Garden. The problem of getting profitable events into the Stadium is similar to the problem of getting such events for the Garden except that it has to finance a greater percentage of its attractions than the Garden. The entertainment provided by television as with the Garden has adversely affected the Stadium operation.

94. In 1933 Norris and Wirtz first acquired their interests in the Detroit Olympia which has a seating capacity of 12,000-14,000. Its operations are somewhat similar to the Garden but on a substantially reduced scale. It has about one-third as many bookings as the Garden, including hockey and ice shows and an occasional boxing match. Since 1954 Wirtz has had no stock interest in the Detroit Olympia.

95. In 1946 Norris and Wirtz first acquired their interest in the property of which the St. Louis Arena is a part. The property comprises 70 acres of ground on which there is the Arena, an amusement park, and two industrial buildings. The Arena operation is secondary in this acquisition. The Arena has seating capacity of 14,000 or 15,000. It is not profitable. There are not over six boxing shows a year there. The Arena has not more than 30 or 35 dates a year of any kind.

96. For many years prior to April 1949, the Garden had been in effect a partner of the promoter, Michael S. Jacobs, and of his corporation Twentieth Century Sporting Club, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Twentieth Century), in the promotion of professional championship, as well as non-title boxing contests, and the Garden had shared in the profits of those promotions on a 50-50 basis.

97. During the period from 1937 to 1949 Jacobs through Twentieth Century promoted professional boxing contests, including a number of championship boxing matches, in the Garden Arena.

98. In 1946 the Garden had extended its existing agreement leasing its arena exclusively to Jacobs and Twentieth Century for boxing contests, and such agreement was effective in accordance with its terms until May 31, 1951.

99. Jacobs in early 1947 suffered a severe illness, and thereafter the Garden's income from boxing declined. Jacobs was unable thereafter to take personal and active charge of the management and direction of Twentieth Century. Jacobs spent much time in Florida in 1948 and in January 1949 cut the salaries of his staff at Twentieth Century.

100. By January 1949, the defendants Wirtz and Norris for many years had, among their varied business enterprises, been engaged in the operation of the following indoor arenas: Chicago Stadium, Detroit Olympia, and St. Louis Arena, all of which were then owned and controlled by them jointly with Norris' father, James Norris. The investments of Wirtz, Norris and Norris' father in these arenas amounted to more than ten million dollars.

101. From time to time, prior to January 1949, corporations owned by Wirtz and Norris had been associated with the promotion of an occasional professional boxing contests for exhibition in one of the said arenas. Prior to January, 1949 Wirtz and Norris had also rented the Chicago Stadium from time to time to persons who wished to promote professional boxing contests. The results of these ventures had not been successful and comparatively few boxing contests had been staged there.

102. In January 1949 and prior thereto, defendants Wirtz and Norris directly and indirectly owned more than 50,000 shares of the stock of Madison Square Garden Corporation.

103. In 1948 Wirtz had been informed that the Columbia Broadcasting System was prepared to lose a substantial sum of money in order to obtain control of boxing television, and Wirtz and Norris were concerned that television companies might control the broadcasting of boxing events to the detriment of the indoor arenas in which they were interested.

104. In and after 1948 Wirtz and Norris were also aware of the increasing difficulties of the Garden, in connection with its boxing events, resulting from the impairment of Jacobs' health.

105. Prior to January 1949, Wirtz and Norris had, on several occasions, proposed in general terms to the Garden management a working program. The Garden management, however, refused to discuss such proposals because of the Garden's long term commitment to Jacobs.

IX. The Unlawful Combination and Conspiracy.

a. The defendants combine and conspire.

106. In 1948, Joe Louis Barrow (hereafter Joe Louis), was the Heavyweight champion of the world. He began to make plans for his retirement from the field and in this he was counselled and advised by Truman K. Gibson, Jr. and Harry Mendel. It was part of the plan ultimately formulated by Gibson that Louis, on his retirement as Heavyweight champion, should endeavor to obtain a continuing financial interest and source of income by the formation of an organization which would promote future professional championship boxing contests. It was further contemplated that the success and continuity of operation of this organization should be achieved by obtaining exclusive options on the professional championship boxing engagements of all reasonably qualified contenders for the title Louis held. To accomplish this, Gibson and Mendel approached Norris to discuss the matter generally. At Norris' suggestion, they later met with Wirtz in Chicago. This occurred in January 1949.

107. In about late January of 1949, Wirtz and Norris entered into an agreement with Louis, then Heavyweight Champion of the World, under which—

(a) Joe Louis or his practically wholly-owned company Joe Louis Enterprises, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Enterprises) agreed to sign the four leading heavyweight contenders to agreements which would vest in Louis, or his assignee, the exclusive right to promote their professional boxing matches, and all radio, television, and motion picture rights to such contracts.

(b) Joe Louis would then resign as Heavyweight Champion.

(c) Joe Louis would assign the four exclusive contracts to a corporation to be formed by Wirtz and Norris for the purpose of promoting professional boxing matches.

(d) Joe Louis would be employed by this corporation, at a salary of $15,000 a year and would receive $150,000 and part of the stock in the promoting corporation to be formed by Wirtz and Norris, for assigning the exclusive contracts with the said contenders and resigning as Heavyweight Champion.

(e) The said contenders were to engage in contests to determine, with approval of the National Boxing Association, the new Heavyweight Champion.

108. A condition precedent to consummation of this agreement and to the $150,000 obligation of Wirtz and Norris was that the National Boxing Association recognize the winner of the first contest engaged in by the said contenders as the new Heavyweight Champion of the World.

109. In or about February 1949, Enterprises entered into contracts with the four contenders Ezzard Charles, Joe Walcott, Lee Savold and Gus Lesnevich.

110. Each of the four contracts provided, in substance, that the boxer concerned would render services as a professional boxer exclusively to Enterprises or its assignee and would not during the term of the contract engage in any professional boxing contest or boxing exhibition for others without the consent of Enterprises; that, subject to the approval of the boxer concerned or his manager and to the approval of the athletic commission or governing body of boxing of the state, county, city or place where any such boxing contest was held, each opponent of the boxer in all of his contests and exhibitions would be designated by Enterprises or its assignee; that the boxer concerned would receive for his services in each contest engaged in under the agreement a percentage of the gate receipts not less than 25% and not less than 25% of any revenue from the sale of motion picture, radio, or television rights to such contest, if such rights were sold; that Enterprises would stage and conduct all boxing contests and exhibitions in which the boxer concerned should be matched during the term of the agreement, the time and place of each such contest or exhibition to be fixed by Enterprises subject to the approval of the boxer or his manager; that Enterprises guaranteed that the earnings of the boxer concerned during the term of the agreement would be at least $5,000 per year; that Enterprises would have the exclusive radio, television and motion picture rights to all contests of the boxer concerned during the term of the agreement; that the term of each agreement was for a period of two years from February 14, 1949, subject to an option to renew the contract for a period of two years and for further two year periods thereafter on the expiration of that term to which the agreement might be extended; and, the four contracts taken together provided for three specific boxing contests between the four boxers concerned, each boxer agreeing especially to engage in such match and Enterprises agreeing to stage and conduct each such match, provided that each such match should receive the National Boxing Association's designation as a contest for the world heavyweight championship.

111. On March 1, 1949, Joe Louis resigned his title as heavyweight champion of the world, and the National Boxing Association announced that it had approved the plans offered by Louis and had agreed to recognize the winner of the first elimination contest between contenders Charles and Walcott as the new heavyweight champion of the world provided that Savold and Lesnevich should each have an opportunity to fight for the title within a reasonable time thereafter.

112. Wirtz and Norris, as a result of the agreement described in Finding 107 and the execution thereof, caused IBC(Ill.) to be organized on March 1, 1949 for the purpose of promoting professional boxing contests in Illinois.

113. On or about March 24, 1949, Enterprises assigned its exclusive contracts with Charles, Walcott, Savold and Lesnevich to IBC(Ill.) and received, in pursuance of the agreement with Wirtz and Norris $150,000.

114. On March 24, 1949, at a Board of Directors meeting of IBC(Ill.) plans were made for the promotion of championship boxing contests in Michigan and Missouri. Thereafter, on July 12, 1949 Wirtz and Norris caused the formation of the International Boxing Club, Inc., a Michigan corporation, and on October 23, 1950, caused the name of an existing Missouri corporation to be changed to International Boxing Club, Inc., for the purpose of promoting championship boxing contests as well as other boxing contests in those States.

115. In order to promote championship contests in New York, Wirtz and Norris caused the formation of IBC(NY) on March 14, 1949.

116. As the result of the consummation of their agreement with Joe Louis, Norris and Wirtz in March 1949 were in a position to promote boxing contests in which the heavyweight championship title would be at stake.

b. The Garden joins the combination and conspiracy.

117. During a twelve-year period, from 1937 through 1948, about 45% of all championship contests presented in the United States were held in New York City and, of these, about 75% were held in the Garden Arena.

118. The existence and operation in 1948 and through March 1949 of Tournament of Champions, Inc. (a promoter of professional boxing contests of which the Columbia Broadcasting System, an operator of a radio and television network, was part owner) caused Wirtz and Norris to be concerned about CBS obtaining control of championship boxing matches.

119. In 1948 both Wirtz and Norris conferred with John R. Kilpatrick, then president of the Garden, and suggested a joint program between them that would prohibit Columbia Broadcasting System from obtaining control of the promotion of championship boxing contests. A few months thereafter a representative of Wirtz stated to an officer of the Garden that the televising of a championship contest from the Garden in early 1949 had seriously affected attendance at professional boxing contests presented by Wirtz and Norris in their arenas in Chicago and Detroit.

120. Shortly after the arrangements between Wirtz-Norris and Joe Louis were made, Wirtz proposed by letter of March 13, 1949 to the Garden that he and Norris, and the Garden "should work together now and keep the events for our buildings and not create a competitive situation that would be harmful to all."

121. It was arranged that Jacobs should come from Florida to discuss with the Garden management a possible termination of his lease, and on April 5, 1949, the Garden received Jacobs' consent to enter into discussions with Norris and Wirtz.

122. In mid-April 1949, Wirtz and Norris and the Garden negotiated regarding their jointly owning corporations to conduct boxing contests in their respective arenas and outdoors. Thereafter, Wirtz and Norris, and the Garden, on or about May 5, 1949, arrived at an agreement to combine and join forces.

123. Pursuant to this agreement, common boards of directors, consisting of Wirtz, Norris, Louis, Kilpatrick, and Irish an official of the Garden, were designated for both IBC(NY) and IBC(Ill.). The personnel of these boards of directors remained the same from about July 1949 and thereafter throughout the period covered by the complaint, except that Joe Louis was replaced by Truman K. Gibson, a trustee for his benefit, in about August 1950.

124. Prior to this agreement, Wirtz and Norris, through their promoting corporation IBC(Ill.), were in a position to compete with the Garden in the promotion of championship contests.

125. The terms of this agreement included the following:

(a) Wirtz and Norris would be entitled to 80% of the profits of IBC(Ill.); the Garden would be entitled to 80% of the profits from IBC(NY); and Joe Louis would be entitled to 20% of the profits from each;

(b) Championship contests would be allocated between the IBCs—two-thirds of them to IBC(NY) and one-third to IBC(Ill.); and

(c) Garden would contribute to the venture an amount substantially equal to the payment by Wirtz and Norris of $150,000 to Joe Louis for the assignment of the exclusive contracts which Louis had obtained from Charles and Walcott.

126. A prerequisite to the Garden joining in the agreement with Wirtz and Norris was that it obtain a cancellation of its lease to Jacobs and Twentieth Century, and on May 5, 1949 the Garden entered into an agreement with Jacobs and Twentieth Century, under which it agreed to pay $100,000 to Jacobs or his estate, over a period of five years for the cancellation of the lease held by Jacobs and Twentieth Century on the Garden Arena, which agreement was subsequently formalized on May 27, 1949.

127. One of the purposes of the defendants in the making of these agreements was to acquire and retain for the defendants' joint control of the promotion of championship contests and to exclude others, particularly telecasting companies, from promoting championship contests.

X. The Conspiracy Afoot.

a. Elimination of competitors.

128. Aside from any of the defendants, the only significant promoters of professional championship boxing contests in the United States existing in early 1949 were Michael S. Jacobs and a corporation with which he was associated, Twentieth Century; and Tournament of Champions and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Sporting Events, Inc.

1. Michael S. Jacobs and Twentieth Century Sporting Club, Inc.

129. In addition to the lease arrangement with the Garden, Jacobs and Twentieth Century in May, 1949 had exclusive leases on the Yankee Stadium and St. Nicholas Arena for the presentation of professional boxing contests. These leases were for terms expiring on December 31, 1950 and September 14, 1949, respectively.

130. Jacobs and Twentieth Century also were parties to a contract for the exclusive services in title contests of the then Welterweight Champion, Ray Robinson.

131. On May 5, 1949, for a consideration of $10,000, Jacobs and Twentieth Century agreed on or before June 1, 1949 to assign to the Garden the exclusive leases for professional boxing in the Yankee Stadium and St. Nicholas Arena, to sell to the Garden his aluminum ring and other equipment for outdoor bouts, and to assign or make available the contract between Jacobs and the Welterweight Champion Robinson, and any other contracts with professional boxers or leases for professional boxing sites as the Garden might request.

132. In this same agreement Jacobs and Twentieth Century agreed that for a period of ten years neither of them would engage in the promotion of any professional boxing matches in the United States, nor at any time thereafter cause or permit or consent to the use of the name of Michael S. Jacobs or Twentieth Century in connection with professional boxing matches without the written consent of Garden.

133. Jacobs and Twentieth Century were thus eliminated as competitors in the promotion of championship contests. The agreements between the defendant Garden and Jacobs and Twentieth Century were made for the purpose of eliminating competition in the promotion of championship boxing contests and did substantially lessen competition in the promotion of championship boxing contests.

2. Tournament of Champions, Inc., Sporting Events, Inc., and Columbia Broadcasting System.

134. Tournament of Champions, Inc., was formed on December 29, 1947, as a New Jersey corporation, and was licensed to promote boxing in New Jersey. In 1948, a New York affiliate of Tournament of Champions, ultimately named Sporting Events, Inc., was licensed to promote boxing matches in New York.

135. TofC promoted two championship contests in New Jersey prior to October 1948 and sold moving picture rights to one of them for $25,000 and to the other for $22,500, and sold radio rights to each for $45,000, but it had lost over $30,000 on these promotions.

136. On November 26, 1948 Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (CBS), Management Corporation of America (MCA) and Allied Syndicates, Inc. each invested $25,000 to obtain a 25% stock interest in TofC. Thereafter until May 27, 1949, these three corporations, together with George Kletz, whose stock interest was also 25%, remained the owners of TofC.

137. The principal business and business experience of Kletz had been and remained in plastics manufacturing. The principal business and business experience of CBS had been and remained the operation of a radio and television network. The principal business and business experience of Allied Syndicates had been and remained in the field of public relations.

138. The purpose of Columbia Broadcasting System, in purchasing an interest in the TofC, was to obtain radio and television rights to a series of weekly boxing contests and to good fights including championship contests.

139. On March 15, 1949, TofC obtained an exclusive lease on the Polo Grounds in New York City for the promotion of boxing contests for a term expiring on July 1, 1950.

140. For some months prior to March 15, 1949 the TofC had an agreement with the then Middleweight Champion, Cerdan, giving it the right to promote his next two middleweight championship contests.

141. TofC shortly after March 15, 1949 began negotiations to stage two championship contests at the Polo Grounds during the Summer of 1949. TofC intended that one of these bouts would be between Sugar Ray Robinson, the then welterweight champion and Kid Gavilan. On April 7, 1949, Kletz secured Robinson's signature to a contract for such a contest although Robinson at that time had an exclusive service contract with Jacobs. Kletz was unable to get Gavilan to agree to this contest and on May 8, he asked Robinson's manager to accept another opponent. Robinson's manager asked that the proposed bout be called off. TofC intended that the other of these bouts would be between Cerdan and Tony Zale, but by May 9, 1949 had been unable to complete arrangements for the bout.

142. Wirtz, Norris and Garden, in April 1949, recognized the threat of Tournament of Champions as a competitor in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests.

143. TofC had sustained increasing financial losses in its operations. By April 7, 1949 MCA had indicated to CBS that it was interested in getting out of TofC. Kletz had earlier indicated his discouragement with the enterprise and had resigned as president and director on January 14, 1949. On April 7, 1949 Lawrence Lowman, the CBS executive closest to the operation of TofC, suggested to the President of CBS that CBS should consider getting out of TofC. Thereafter, Lowman began negotiations with the Garden looking toward the sale of the assets of TofC.

144. These negotiations were carried on and in accordance with an understanding reached with Wirtz and Norris, on May 27, 1949, the Garden, acting for IBC(NY), purchased from CBS, MCA, Allied Syndicates and Kletz all the stock and certain notes of TofC for $100,000 and 25% of the net profits of the next two middleweight championship contests promoted by IBCs or those associated with them.

145. In connection with the purchase of TofC, the Garden entered into a separate agreement with CBS in which the Garden agreed that CBS, for a term of 5 years beginning June 1, 1949, should have a right of first refusal of the purchase of radio and television rights to a series of boxing contests to be presented weekly on a night other than Friday from September to May of each year during the term of the agreement and should also have a right of first refusal of the purchase of radio and television rights to 50% of all outdoor boxing contests and indoor boxing contests not presented as part of a weekly series during such term. The Garden was not obligated either to promote any such contest or to sell such rights, and CBS was required to exercise its right of refusal within a reasonable time after the rights to each annual series or single contest, as the case might be, had been offered to it. In return CBS agreed that it would not, during the five year term of the agreement, invest in any professional boxing matches or in the promotion or staging thereof, or have any proprietary interest therein, except with the Garden's consent. The agreement did not bar CBS from purchasing television or radio rights to boxing contests not promoted by the defendants nor did it require CBS to purchase such rights from the defendants.

146. CBS broadcast an annual series of boxing contests promoted on Wednesday nights by the defendants up to 1955 and at that time CBS discontinued its broadcasting of boxing.

147. The defendants' purchase of TofC's stock and indebtedness from Kletz, CBS, MCA and Allied Syndicates was made with the intent of, and for the purpose of, eliminating competition in the promotion of professional boxing contests and did result in substantial lessening of such competition. As a result of the acquisition of the assets of Tournament of Champions and the procurement of the agreement not to compete from Columbia Broadcasting System, both of them were eliminated as competitors in the promotion of championship contests.

b. Defendants' control of important stadia and arenas.

148. For many years prior to 1949, and during the complaint period defendants Wirtz and Norris were in effect proprietors of and controlled the Chicago Stadium, the St. Louis Arena, and the Detroit Olympia, and defendant Garden owned and controlled Madison Square Garden.

149. One reason which prompted the Garden to join with Wirtz and Norris in promoting boxing contests was the importance of the arenas controlled by Wirtz and Norris.

150. On September 1, 1949, IBC(NY), lessee, and St. Nicholas Sports Center, Inc., lessor, entered into a lease for a term commencing September 15, 1949 and ending September 14, 1950 under which IBC(NY) was granted use of St. Nicholas Arena for at least 42 nights during that year for professional boxing matches and the exclusive right to conduct such matches at the said Arena during the term of lease. In 1950, 1951 and 1952 similar leases for one year terms were thereafter entered into between IBC(NY) and St. Nicholas Sports Center, Inc. for the years 1950-1951, 1951-1952 and 1952-1953.

151. On July 15, 1949, IBC(NY), lessee, and the New York Yankees, Inc., the owners of the Yankee Stadium and National Exhibition Company, the owners of the Polo Grounds, lessors, entered into a lease under which IBC(NY) was licensed to use those arenas for not more than 4 professional boxing matches a year and was granted the exclusive right to hold boxing matches at those arenas during the term of the lease. The term of the lease commenced January 1, 1950 and ended December 31, 1952.

152. The City of New York has the largest concentration of population in the United States. It is the most important site in the United States for the staging of championship boxing contests.

153. The City of Chicago, Illinois, in which the Chicago Stadium is located, has the second largest concentration of population in the United States and Detroit, Michigan, and St. Louis, Missouri, respective sites of the Detroit Olympia Arena, and the St. Louis Arena, also have large concentrations of population. These arenas are also important sites of championship contests.

154. St. Nicholas Arena is the only indoor arena other than the Garden in New York City which was used for the promotion of a championship boxing contest during the period from 1937-1948.

155. The Yankee Stadium and the Polo Grounds are the most suitable outdoor stadia for the presentation of professional championship boxing in the United States.

156. Fifty percent of all championship contests held in the United States from 1937 to 1948, inclusive, were held in the Garden Arena, Yankee Stadium, Polo Grounds, St. Nicholas Arena, Chicago Stadium, Detroit Olympia, and St. Louis Arena.

157. During the period from January 1, 1937 to 1948, inclusive, forty-five percent of all the championship contests presented in the United States were held in New York City, and, of these, seventy-five percent of them were held in the Garden Arena. Of the remaining bouts held in New York City, all were held at the Yankee Stadium, St. Nicholas Arena, and Polo Grounds, with but a single exception.

158. Beginning in about May 1949 and continuing throughout the period covered by the Complaint, the defendants had control of the Garden Arena, Yankee Stadium, Polo Grounds, St. Nicholas Arena, the Chicago Stadium, the Detroit Olympia, and the St. Louis Arena, which are key stadia and arenas for the presentations of championship boxing contests in the United States.

159. The defendants in March 1949 considered that the pooling of these stadia and arenas would be instrumental and effective in excluding other promoters from the promotion of championship contests.

160. As a result of the control exercised by the defendants over their own arenas and the exclusive leases of other arenas and stadia, all other promoters have been excluded from promoting championship boxing contests in said arenas and stadia during the period June 1949 through May 15, 1953.

c. Defendants' exclusive contracts with contenders for championship.

161. A term of the agreement between defendants was that they would require from each contender in a championship contest, over which defendants had promotional control or had an exclusive contract with the existing champion, a contract providing that, if he won and thereby became champion, he would engage in championship contests for a period of three, or sometimes five, years, solely under the promotion of one of the defendant IBC's or its designees. This term of the agreement between defendants was effectuated and consistently followed by them in the vast majority of instances.

162. The contingent, exclusive contracts between the defendants and a contender provided that if he won a championship title in a specific contest which IBC(NY) or IBC(Ill.) planned to promote or to have promoted between such contender and the champion, the contender would be employed exclusively by the defendants in all his matches, or in all matches in defense of his title, for a period of 3 years. Subject to the approval of the boxer and his manager and to that of the local boxing commission concerned, the employer was to select the boxer's opponents. The right to dispose of radio, television and motion picture rights was given exclusively to the defendants. A minimum annual compensation was guaranteed to the boxer.

163. These contracts were obtained by defendants from the contender as a condition precedent to such contender having the opportunity to win a title by engaging in a championship contest.

164. The defendants' practice of so obtaining such contingent, exclusive contracts from the contenders served as a device for perpetuating their control of professional world championship contests as the title passed from one boxer to another.

165. From time to time, IBC(NY) and IBC(Ill.) have made advances and loans to professional boxers and their managers. Such advances and loans outstanding at any one time have amounted to approximately $39,000 for IBC (NY) and about the same amount for IBC(Ill.). Such advances and loans are sought by the boxers and managers to meet financial emergencies, to pay taxes and hospital bills, to pay training expenses in advance of boxing contests and for related purposes, and they are made by the defendants.

166. There is no evidence that such advances or loans were used by the defendants to exert economic pressure on any boxer or manager.

XI. The Results of Defendants' Conspiracy.

167. The intent of the defendants and the necessary result of their activities during the period covered by the Complaint as set forth in these Findings, including their acquisition of the contracts with the four heavyweight contenders from Joe Louis; their elimination from the promotion of championship contests of Jacobs, Twentieth Century, Tournament of Champions and Columbia Broadcasting System; their control of key stadia and arenas for the presentation of boxing contests and their procurement of the exclusive contracts with champions and contenders in championship contests, was to combine in order to obtain control of, and exclude others from, the promotion of championship boxing contests in the United States.

168. The defendants, as a result of their activities acquired power, during the period covered by the Complaint, to exclude competitors from the promotion of championship contests in the United States.

169. Beginning June 16, 1949, the date of the first championship contest promoted by defendants through May 15, 1953, the end of the period covered by the complaint, there were 44 professional championship boxing contests promoted in the United States. The defendants promoted 25 of the said 44 professional world's championship bouts.

170. As to 11 of the other 19 championship contests, viz:

Charles-Valentino of October 1949
Charles-Beshore of August 1950
Charles-Barone of December 1950
Walcott-Charles of July 1951
Carter-Aragon of November 1951
Gavilan-Dykes of February 1952
Salas-Carter of May 1952
Walcott-Charles of June 1952
Gavilan-Turner of July 1952
Marciano-Walcott of September 1952
Carter-Collins of April 1953

one of the defendants had an agreement in effect at the time of each such contest with the Champion involved, which required the Champion to engage in world championship contests only under the promotion of a defendant or its designee.

171. As to each championship contest referred to in Finding 170, the contender, prior to engaging in such contest, executed an agreement which provided that if he won, and thereby became Champion, he would engage in world championship contests only under the promotion of a defendant or its designee.

172. One or more of the defendants received revenue from the promotion of all but one of the contests referred to in Finding 170. As to this single exception, the defendant IBC(NY) permitted another promoter, Dewey Michaels of Buffalo, New York, to promote the contest on the condition, however, that the said Michaels pay 5% of all monies received from the sale of tickets, and radio, television, and motion picture rights, if any, to IBC(NY), and this defendant made a strong effort to collect the said 5%. Because of the refusal of the said promoter Michaels to pay 5% of all monies received to IBC(NY), this defendant threatened not to permit Michaels to promote any other contest over which it had promotional control.

173. One or more of the defendants had control of the promotion of each of the eleven championship contests referred to in Finding 170.

174. Of the 44 professional championship contests presented in the United States between June 16, 1949, the date of the first championship contest promoted by defendants, and May 15, 1953, the defendants promoted, or controlled the promotion of 36, or approximately 81% of them.

175. The defendants exercised this promotional control by either promoting the contests themselves or by permitting another promoter to do so in consideration of one or more of the defendants receiving part of the revenue from the promotion of such contests.

176. From January 1951, eighteen months after the defendants promoted their first championship contest, to May 15, 1953, the end of the period covered by the Complaint, 27 championship contests were presented in the United States, and as to 25 of such contests, or about 93% of them, the defendants controlled the promotion of them, and either promoted or participated in the revenues from the promotion of them.

177. The defendants did by their concert of action and agreement intend to, and did in fact exclude others from the promotion of, exhibition of, or sale of television, radio and motion picture rights to, professional championship boxing contests.

178. The defendants did combine and conspire to acquire and secure and did in fact acquire and secure unto themselves the power to exclude others from the promotion of, exhibition of, or sale of television, radio and motion picture rights to, professional championship boxing contests.

179. The contracts, agreements, and understandings of and between the defendants with respect to the promotion, exhibition or sale of television, radio, and motion picture rights to championship boxing contests have unreasonably restrained trade or commerce.

With these findings made, we come to consideration of the Conclusions of Law to be drawn from them.

3.

THE LAW APPLICABLE TO THE FINDINGS OF FACT

[Defense]

The defendants argue that (1) the promotion of championship boxing contests does not constitute the "relevant market" for purposes of determining monopoly power; (2) they have not in fact combined and conspired in restraint of or to monopolize, trade in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; and (3) their activities are not in interstate trade or commerce.

[Relevant Market]

Defendants' first point relating to the relevant market is predicated almost exclusively on the recent decision in United States v. E. I. DuPont de Nemours and Company—the so-called Cellophane case—[1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369] 351 U. S. 377. That case is the Supreme Court's latest exposition on the subject of the relevant market for Sherman Act consideration. Although the prevailing opinion did not command the assent of a majority of the Court (it being divided 4-3, with two Justices not participating), nevertheless, it is the precedent upon which both sides in this case have relied.

In the Cellophane case, the Court, following earlier precedents, ruled that:

> "a party has monopoly power if it has over 'any part of the trade or commerce among the several States', a power of controlling prices or unreasonably restricting competition. . . . Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition."

The Supreme Court made clear that price and competition both must be considered in finding monopoly power. However, the "relevant market" for monopoly power considerations.

> "will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced—price, use and qualities considered."

This determination, as the Court points out, is basically a factual one, which is resolved by the "varying circumstances of each case." In DuPont, the Supreme Court found the defendant's factual argument sustained by the evidence; here we do not.

Cellophane was proved to be but a part of the market for flexible package materials which included other products that had reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they were produced. The question here comes down to this: Do non-championship boxing bouts, in their promotion and exhibition, including the sale of tickets, television rights, moving rights, radio rights, have a reasonable interchangeability with championship boxing contests both as a financial proposition and as an entertainment media? Based upon the factual findings we have made in this case, it is established that this query must be answered in the negative.

The defendants themselves by concentrating their activities in the sphere of championship fights have recognized the unique qualities of these bouts which generate a special demand for them by boxing enthusiasts. A world championship in any of the recognized classifications is clearly the peak sought by the many boxers in each class. When attained, the champion has an asset which gives him not only the epitome of prestige, but also a most lucrative future so long as he wears the championship crown.

In matters of public appeal as well as financial return, championship contests are on a plane which clearly distinguishes them from non-championship fights. The great public interest in a championship match was shown to generate a separate and distinct public demand which attracts many spectators who do not patronize non-championship fights.

Defendants do not seriously challenge the financial facts adduced by the Government. The average gross revenue of a championship fight promoted by defendants was almost four times that of an ordinary fight. Breaking down these overall figures, it appears that a championship contest generates three times the television, radio and movie revenues, and five times the box office receipts of non-championship fights.

Qualitatively, a championship boxing bout is so different from a non-championship fight as to establish an identity of the one distinguished from the other. Defendants themselves demonstrated their awareness of this by exacting their contingent exclusive contracts from championship contenders limited to future championship fights. Similarly, championship bouts were treated as outside the agreements with television sponsors for the regular weekly fight series. Indeed, the substantially higher prices paid by such sponsors and broadcasters for the right to broadcast or televise a championship bout is manifest evidence of their special audience appeal, and serves to explain why defendants concentrated their activities in this sphere.

The Court concludes that the promotion of championship boxing contests does constitute a distinct, unique and relevant market for Sherman Act consideration.

[Conspiracy—Monopoly]

The second point urged by defendants is strictly a factual argument to the effect that they have not combined or conspired in restraint of or to monopolize trade or commerce. Having found the factual allegations of the complaint sustained by the proof submitted on trial, more need not be said here except to observe that the Supreme Court in this case has stated:

> "And the defendants do not deny that the allegations state a cause of action if their business is subject to the Sherman Act." (United States v. International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236 at page 240.)

[Interstate Commerce]

We turn, then, to defendants' final argument that their activities were not engaged in interstate trade or commerce. Based on my factual findings, this contention has been answered with finality by the Supreme Court.

While the business of staging and promoting these championship boxing contests may formerly have been "purely local affairs" (Federal Club v. National League, 59 U. S. 200, 208 (1921)), modern management has made them vehicles by which television and radio programs may be broadcast and advertising presented with an attractive nationwide appeal. The Government has established, and I have found, that the promotion of professional championship boxing contests was had by the defendants on a multistate basis, and that it was coupled with the sale of rights to televise, broadcast and film the contests for interstate transmission. This, the Supreme Court has held, "constitutes 'trade or commerce among the several states' within the meaning of the Sherman Act" (United States v. International Boxing Club [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236, 240). More recently, the Supreme Court in Radovich v. National Football League et al. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,628], decided February 25, 1957 had occasion to say:

> "We did not extend them (the baseball decisions) to boxing or the theatre because we believed that the volume of interstate business in each—the rationale of Federal Baseball—was such that both activities were within the act."

My factual findings here justify and sustain this view.

Defendants seek refuge in the argument that the "far-reaching implications of this case . . . may well be the opening skirmish of a broad attack upon all professional sports, except organized baseball." The answer to this is two-fold: (1) the promotion of professional championship boxing contests is a pure and simple money-making profit-seeking business, and (2) the Supreme Court, in the so-called "baseball cases," has never held "that all businesses based on professional sports are outside the scope of the anti-trust laws." United States v. International Boxing Club of N. Y., Inc., supra. The Supreme Court went on to say:

> "it would be sufficient, we believe, to rest on the allegation that over 25% of the revenue from championship boxing is derived from interstate operations through the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights."

As I have found in the factual findings, the Government has sustained the allegations of the complaint relating to the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights to championship boxing fights. This, the Supreme Court has held, without considering their many other interstate aspects, is sufficient to bring the business of promoting championship boxing contests within the Sherman Act's trade and commerce concept.

4.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. This Court has jurisdiction over the defendants.

2. Beginning sometime in 1949 and continuing thereafter, the defendants have been engaged in a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests among the several states of the United States, and were parties to contracts, agreements, arrangements, and understandings in unreasonable restraint of such trade and commerce, all in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

3. Beginning sometime in 1949 and continuously thereafter, the defendants have been engaged in a combination and conspiracy to monopolize trade and commerce in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests among the several states of the United States in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

4. Beginning sometime in 1949 and continuing thereafter, the defendants have been monopolizing trade and commerce in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests among the several states of the United States in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

5. The plaintiff is entitled to relief by appropriate decree of this Court.

Proposed decrees may be filed within thirty days from the date of the filing of this opinion and thereafter all will be heard on due notice.

[¶ 68,650] Charles Walder, et al. v. Paramount Publix Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 69-217. Filed March 12, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Bring Suit—Lessor-Owner of Motion Picture Theatre.—On a motion for reargument, a trial court adhered to its original decision that (1) a corporation, as the lessor-owner of a motion picture theatre, had no standing to maintain a treble damage action because it was only incidentally and not directly injured by alleged antitrust violations, and (2) although the corporation, as the lessor-owner of the theatre, might be in a position to maintain an action under the antitrust laws to recover for the alleged loss of a reasonable rental during a period of time when there were direct dealings between the corporation and an alleged co-conspirator, the corporation suffered no damage during this period because it admittedly received a fair rental for its theatre. The court ruled that its ruling did not conflict with an earlier ruling in the action, that it correctly construed the rulings of two other courts, and that the testimony of the president of the corporation as to the reasonableness of the theatre's rental was both relevant and competent.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.55.

For the plaintiffs: Claudia Pearlman, in care of Edgar A. Buttle, New York, N. Y. (Claudia Pearlman and Edgar A. Buttle, of counsel).

For the defendants: Louis Phillips for Paramount Pictures Inc. (In Dissolution), Paramount Pictures Corporation, and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation. J. Miller Walker for RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. Robert W. Perkins for Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation. Herbert B. Lazarus for American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc. (formerly named and referred to in the complaint as United Paramount Theatres, Inc.). Robert W. Perkins for Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation.

Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, a New York corporation (In Dissolution). Schwartz & Frohlich for Columbia Pictures Corporation. E. Compton Timberlake, John F. Caskey, Myles J. Lane, and Everett A. Frohlich, of counsel. All of New York, N. Y.

Denying a motion for reargument of a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,572; for prior opinions of the Court, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,275 and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,170, 68,097.

[Summary Judgment]

LEIBELL, District Judge [In full text]: On January 26, 1957, The Walwal Corporation filed a motion for leave to reargue a motion of March 12, 1956, which had been made by the defendants for summary judgment against The Walwal Corporation. The grounds of the defendants' motion were (1) that "The Walwal Corporation has not suffered legal injury to its business or property within the meaning and intent of the anti-trust laws"; and (2) "Any claims for damages prior to January 27, 1952 asserted by The Walwal Corporation are barred by the Federal four (4) year statute of limitations." I granted the motion for summary judgment on the first ground. It was unnecessary to consider the defense of the statute of limitations. The motion to reargue was referred to me by Judge Weinfeld on January 31, 1957.

[Prior Opinion]

In an opinion dated December 14, 1956 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,572], I considered the three alleged damage periods involved in the claim of The Walwal Corporation, to determine whether The Walwal Corporation has been directly injured in its business or property within the meaning of the Federal anti-trust laws. The three damage periods were: 1931 to 1937, while Tivoli Theatre, Inc. was the lessee-operator; 1937 to 1947, while Tivoli Operating Corporation, was the lessee-operator; and 1947 to date, during which time Tivoli Amusement Company, Inc., has been the operating lessee.

In the opinion of December 14, 1956, I stated: For the periods 1931 to 1937, and 1947 to the present, "The Walwal Corporation as lessor-owner of the Tivoli Theatre, has no standing to sue, because at best it was only incidentally and not directly injured". For the remaining period of 1937 to 1947, I held that because "there was direct dealing between one of the alleged co-conspirators, Paramount Enterprises, Inc. and The Walwal Corporation" in relation to the lease for this period, The Walwal Corporation might be in a position to maintain an action to recover for loss of a reasonable rental, if any loss was actually sustained. However, the depositions, admissions and affidavits before me showed that there was "no genuine issue as to what constituted a reasonable rental for the years 1937 to 1947, and that admittedly The Walwal Corporation received a fair rental from Tivoli Operating Corporation, and suffered no damage." I accordingly granted defendants' motion for summary judgment as against The Walwal Corporation for all three periods.

[Re-argument]

In an affidavit sworn to January 21, 1957, attached to the moving papers, the attorney for The Walwal Corporation, sets forth the following grounds on which the present motion for re-argument is based:

"1. That annexed hereto are a copy of an opinion previously rendered by Hon. Edward Weinfeld, a Judge of this Court on the 24th day of June, 1955, and a copy of a judgment signed and entered thereon on the 12th day of September, 1955.

"That it is respectfully submitted that examination of these documents discloses that judgment has already been made and entered denying a previous motion of the defendants for summary judgment against the plaintiff Walwal Corporation.

"2. Furthermore, deponent respectfully prays that permission to re-argue be granted, since oral argument was not heard on the original motion."

On January 31, 1957, representatives of the attorneys for the parties visited by Chambers to apprise me of the present motion. At the time, the motion papers on the reargument had not yet been forwarded to me. The defendants submitted a memorandum in opposition to the motion in Chambers, but the plaintiff did not have any memorandum ready to submit at that time. It was then agreed that the plaintiff would submit a memorandum in the nature of an answer to defendants' memorandum by February 8, 1957 and that the defendants would serve a reply thereto by February 15, 1957. This has been done.

Although the moving papers of the plaintiff set up the claim of "law of the case doctrine" and failure to grant and hear oral argument on the original motion, the brief submitted by the plaintiff states "that the Court has overlooked salient facts in granting the defendants' motion for summary judgment as to the Walwal Corporation"; has "inaccurately appraised * * * the holding * * * of F. E. Harrison v. Paramount Pictures, Inc.," [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,568], 115 F. Supp. 312, aff'd [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,721], 211 F. 2d 405, cert. denied 348 U. S. 828; that the Court "has completely overlooked the case of Camrel Co. Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corporation et al., CCH 1944-1945 TRADE CASES par. 57,233, which is the ruling law in the Second Circuit"; and finally that > "The Court inaccurately states that the testimony of Mr. Charles Walder indicates that the rent paid the Walwal Corporation was fair. * * * Mr. Walder merely indicated that he was not sure that the rent paid was fair. * * * In any event, since Mr. Walder is not a real estate expert, * * * he would be entirely incompetent to testify as to the fair and reasonable rental value of the premises involved".

There is nothing in plaintiff's brief on this motion for a reargument which discusses the grounds urged in its moving papers.

[Timeliness of Motion]

The defendants in opposing plaintiff's motion for a reargument put in issue the timeliness of the motion seeking leave to reargue, citing F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Co. v. United States, 2 Cir., 1956, a hearing en banc, reported in 236 F. 2nd 889 [a petition for certiorari filed February 8, 1957] and United States v. Wissahickon Tool Works, 2 Cir., 1952, 200 F. 2d 936.

Defendants contend that plaintiff's time to appeal (and similarly the time for seeking a reargument) should run from the date my opinion was filed, December 17, 1956, and not from the date of the order dismissing the Walwal claim was signed and filed, January 10, 1957. My opinion of December 14, 1956 contained a direction to "Seattle orders in accordance with the conclusions set forth in this opinion disposing of both motions of the defendants". The cases cited by the defendants and the recent case of Matteson v. United States of America, 2 Cir., decided December 31, 1956, are distinguishable on the facts. In each of those cases the trial judge made no direction for the submission of a proposed order, or for the settlement of an order by counsel. Our Local Rule 10(a) provides that "the memorandum of the determination of a motion, signed by the judge, shall constitute the order * * *." In the present case my opinion of December 14, 1956, called for a settlement of an order by counsel thereby bringing into play the latter part of Local Rule 10(a) "but nothing herein contained shall prevent the court from making an order, either originally or on an application for resettlement in more extended form." See United States v. Roth, 2 Cir., 1953, 208 F. 2d 467 (cited with approval in the Schaefer Brewing Co. case, supra) wherein the Court of Appeals for this Circuit, in a Petition for Rehearing, held on page 470:

> "In seeking a rehearing * * * petitioner-appellant attempts to show by an analysis of all the cases on our current docket that we have gone against the current practice of the judges in the Southern District of New York in making effective their decisions on motions. It finds 39 appeals from such decisions in the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York and makes its deductions from those cases. * * * Of the cases thus collected, the greater number were those wherein the deciding judge called for the submission of a proposed order, or directed settlement of an order, as is, of course, his undoubted right and power. See F. R. 58. Indeed, district judges have it in their control to remove all doubt by making explicit and beyond misunderstanding their directions either for immediate judgment or for later settlement of a formal decree."

My opinion of December 14, 1956, called for a later settlement of a formal order.

Plaintiffs' attorney of record died in March 1956. Final briefs were not submitted until late October 1956. An order on the decision of December 14, 1956 was not submitted until January 1957 and was signed January 10, 1957. From that date plaintiffs' time to appeal or seek a reargument began to run. Therefore, plaintiff's motion seeking leave to reargue, served on January 22, 1957, was timely within Local Rule 9(h). The notice was not filed until January 26, 1957. But Local Rule 9(h) speaks of "service" and not of "filing" the notice of motion for a reargument.

[Decision Not Erroneous]

I will therefore entertain plaintiff's motion seeking leave to reargue and consider the application on its merits. It is not necessary that the case be reargued orally. See Rule 9(h) of our Local General Rules. The court is of the opinion that its decision of December 14, 1956 is not erroneous on either of the grounds advanced in the notice of motion herein. Nor was the decision of December 14, 1956, erroneous for any of the reasons advanced in the brief submitted by plaintiff on this motion for leave to reargue.

[Prior Summary Judgment Motion]

Plaintiffs claim that my order of January 10, 1957, granting summary judgment in favor of the defendants as against the plaintiff, The Walwal Corporation, in effect overrules the prior order of Judge Weinfeld, dated July 22, 1955, which denied an earlier motion for summary judgment as against The Walwal Corporation, is without merit.

On July 19, 1954, the defendants moved on motion papers for summary judgment against all the plaintiffs herein. As against The Walwal Corporation, defendants claimed (1) that its action was completely barred by the Statute of Limitations, and (2) because The Walwal Corporation, on August 17, 1948, had executed a general release in favor of Paramount Enterprises, Inc., one of the alleged co-conspirators.

The motion was heard by Judge Weinfeld on April 19, 1955. He filed an opinion dated June 24, 1955 [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,097] [132 F. Supp. 912] denying defendants' motion with respect to The Walwal Corporation, holding as to both contentions, that there existed substantial and disputed issues of fact which required the denial of the motion for summary judgment as against The Walwal Corporation.

On September 13, 1955, the defendants continued to take the deposition of Mr. Charles Walder, president of The Walwal Corporation. The deposition in final form was signed by Mr. Walder on September 30, 1955.

On November 7, 1955, the defendants filed another motion seeking summary judgment, part of which was directed against The Walwal Corporation. The defendants claimed that "The Walwal Corporation has not suffered legal injury to its business or property within the meaning and intent of the antitrust laws". As stated above, that motion was referred to me on consent of the attorneys, because the pretrial conference in this case had previously been assigned to me.

The first pretrial conference was held on November 18, 1955. At that session the Court was apprised of all the factual issues present in the case, which would require consideration by the Court. A second conference was held on December 2, 1955. At that session the attorneys for the respective parties were given an opportunity to present orally their arguments on the defendants' motion of November 7, 1955.

On the third session, December 16, 1955, I ruled from the Bench that, as to The Walwal Corporation, it had no legal claim which was enforceable under the Federal Antitrust Laws. After that ruling was made, The Walwal Corporation moved for a reargument of the motion of November 7, 1955, which I granted. Further argument was permitted and received at the fourth pretrial session held on January 13, 1956, and at that conference I stated to the attorneys that I intended to file an opinion in which I would discuss all the contentions of the respective parties.

On January 17, 1956, I filed my first opinion in this matter, holding "that the complaint herein does not allege any claim on which The Walwal Corporation would be entitled to any relief". However, in order to give The Walwal Corporation another opportunity to amend its pleading, I permitted it to serve an amended complaint, and that was done on January 27, 1956.

On February 3, 1956, a fifth pretrial conference was held. At that session the defendants made oral motions with respect to the amended complaint of January 27, 1956. They renewed their motion as against The Walwal Corporation. After hearing arguments of both counsel it was agreed that counsel for the defendants would serve formal motion papers in the motion part of the Court and that the motion would be referred to me.

On March 12, 1956, the defendants filed a motion seeking summary judgment against

The Walwal Corporation on the grounds made in their motion of November 7, 1955, and in addition on the ground that any claims for damages by The Walwal Corporation arising prior to January 27, 1952, were barred by the new Federal four year statute of limitations. That motion was referred to me on March 30, 1956. A disposition of that motion was delayed for reasons stated above.

In a second opinion dated December 14, 1956, I granted summary judgment against The Walwal Corporation as to all three periods of its claim, 1931 to 1937, 1937 to 1947, and 1947 to date. An order to that effect was filed on January 10, 1957.

The grounds upon which I granted summary judgment as against The Walwal Corporation for the 1937 to 1947 period were not before Judge Weinfeld, and some of them could not have been before Judge Weinfeld because the deposition of Mr. Walder was not completed until after Judge Weinfeld had filed his opinion. Nowhere in Judge Weinfeld's opinion is there any holding that The Walwal Corporation was a proper plaintiff under the provisions of Section 15 of Title 15, U. S. C., or that it had suffered a loss of a reasonable rental for the periods in question, particularly the period of 1937 to 1947. He considered only the statute of limitations and the general release. His decision was not the law of the case on the points advanced on the motion before me. For a recent discussion of "the law of the case" doctrine, as applied in this Second Circuit, see Dictograph Products Company v. Sonotone Corporation, 1956, 230 F. 2d 131.

[Oral Argument]

Plaintiff's second contention, failure to permit oral argument on the original motion, is without merit. A reading of the above chronological history will indicate that the court extended ample opportunity to all counsel to present their arguments fully to the Court.

[Harrison Case]

Plaintiff next contends that the Court inaccurately construed the holding of the Harrison case, supra, in that "the Court has overlooked the fact that the [Harrison] rule * * * applies where no direct dealing is involved." Assuming the plaintiff is correct in its interpretation of the Harrison case, I applied its doctrine only with respect to the alleged damage periods of 1931 to 1937, and of 1947 to date, wherein there were no direct dealings between The Walwal Corporation and any of the alleged co-conspirators. As to those periods I held that The Walwal Corporation was at best "only incidentally and not directly injured." I did not apply the Harrison doctrine to the period of 1937 to 1947, because I held "there was direct dealing between one of the alleged co-conspirators, Paramount Enterprises and The Walwal Corporation" for that period which "may make inapplicable the holding of the Harrison and Productive Invention, Inc., cases and might put The Walwal Corporation in a position to maintain an action for this particular period * * *." It was not because of the Harrison doctrine that I granted summary judgment as against The Walwal Corporation for the period of 1937 to 1947, but because, as I stated, the "depositions, admissions and affidavits before me show that there is no genuine issue as to what constituted a reasonable rental for the years 1937 to 1947, and that admittedly The Walwal Corporation received a fair rental from Tivoli Operating Corporation, and suffered no damage."

[Camrel Case]

It is also urged by plaintiff that the Court in granting summary judgment against The Walwal Corporation, has completely overlooked the holding of the unreported case of Camrel Co., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, et al., supra. On page 23 of my first opinion dated January 16, 1956, I discussed the Camrel holding and held it to be inapplicable.

Plaintiff further contends that paragraph 79 of the amended complaint alleges injury not only to rental value but also to market value, credit and capital, and that the Court in considering rental value only has completely disregarded injury to market value, and impairment of credit and capital.

It will suffice to state that paragraph "Seventy-Ninth" of the amended complaint speaks of alleged injuries incurred by The Walwal Corporation for the period 1931 to 1937, and does not deal with the period of 1937 to 1947. I held that for the period 1931 to 1937, The Walwal Corporation has no standing to sue. When I discussed the issue of "reasonable rental" I was referring to the alleged damage period of 1937 to 1947 only. For that period The Walwal Corporation did not allege any injury to its credit or capital, and no discussion of any such element of damage was necessary. However, even if The Walwal Corporation had alleged injury to market value and impairment of credit and capital for the period of 1937 to 1947, it would be entitled to no relief on these elements of damage, because it suffered no such damage. It appears from the testimony of Mr. Walder, president of The Walwal Corporation, that for this period The Walwal Corporation, as lessor of the Tivoli Theatre, received a fair rental therefor from the Tivoli Operating Corporation. If the rental paid to The Walwal Corporation was admittedly fair, how could the making of the lease injure the market value of the realty or impair the credit or capital of the corporation?

[Relevancy of Testimony]

Plaintiff's final contention is that the Court erred when it considered admissions made by Mr. Walder, president of The Walwal Corporation, that the rent paid under the agreement of February 10, 1937, was fair, as showing the lack of a genuine issue as to what constituted a reasonable rental for the years 1937 to 1947. Plaintiff's attorney argues that Mr. Walder is not a real estate expert, so that his testimony in this respect would be "entirely incompetent."

The Walwal Corporation in its amended complaint alleged that because of "economic duress" imposed upon it by the defendants, it executed the agreement of February 10, 1937, which fixed the amount of rental The Walwal Corporation was to receive from Tivoli Operating Corporation, as lessee-operator of the Tivoli Theatre. The Walwal Corporation further alleged that "in a free market unhampered by defendants' conspiracy and illegal acts" it could have received as a reasonable rental approximately $20,000 per year, and therefore sought to recover in this action the difference between what it could have received under normal conditions and what it actually received under the agreement of February 10, 1937.

The testimony of Mr. Charles Walder, who had personal knowledge of all the preliminary negotiations leading to the execution of the February 10, 1937 agreement, as president of The Walwal Corporation, was both relevant and competent on this issue as to rental value. He had been operating the Tivoli Theatre since 1930. He testified that the rental his corporation received for the 1937-1947 period was fair.

The Court did not inaccurately state the testimony of Mr. Charles Walder. The voluntariness of the act on the part of The Walwal Corporation, in executing the agreement of February 10, 1937, is readily seen in the light of the following statement made by Mr. Charles Walder when he was examined by the defendants on whether $800.00 rental per month was a fair return:

> "Offhand it is hard to me to answer, but I will tell you what I did do. I did eventually accept $800, then reduced to $700 when I made a deal with Paramount—I mean when we formed this Tivoli Operating Corporation against a percentage—because we felt that that was what it was about worth, * * *." [Italics added.]

Mr. Walder owned almost all the stock of Walwal and of the Tivoli Theatre Corporation which had operated the theatre up to the time in 1937 when he made a deal with Paramount for a 50-50 ownership of a new operating corporation, Tivoli Operating Corporation. He, as president of The Walwal Corporation, believed he was receiving as a rental what a lease of the theatre was worth. Hence there was no damage suffered by The Walwal Corporation, the lessor.

[Motion Denied on Merits]

For the reasons above stated, although the motion of The Walwal Corporation seeking leave to reargue, is entertained by the Court as timely made, it is denied on the merits.

I again direct counsel's attention to the decision of the United States Court of Appeals in the Roth case, 208 F. 2d 467. This opinion shall constitute the order of this Court denying the motion of The Walwal Corporation. The Clerk of the Court shall promptly call the attention of the attorneys to the filing of this opinion and to the provisions of this last paragraph.

[¶ 68,651] Clarence Ryan v. The California Company, J. M. Foster, Phillips Petroleum Company, Continental Oil Company, Standard Oil Company, Carter Oil Company, The Texas Company, and The Union Oil Company of California.

In the United States District Court for the District of Montana, Helena Division. No. 686. Dated March 5, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Proof of Damages—Relation Between Antitrust Violation and Damages—Refusal to Sell—Demand.—Where a service station operator charged that oil companies and a distributor conspired to prevent him from selling their nationally advertised brands of gasoline because he sold one brand of such gasoline at less than the prices allegedly fixed by the oil companies, the oil companies and the distributor were granted summary judgments. The operator's deposition indicated that he was supplied with all of the unbranded gasoline of one of the companies he ordered from the defendant-distributor of such oil company, and that he never sought to purchase gasoline from any of the other oil companies. Since the gravamen of the operator's complaint was that his damage resulted from the alleged conspiracy to prevent him from selling nationally advertised brands of gasoline, he had to show that he requested the companies to supply him with gasoline in order to recover any damage alleged to have been caused by the alleged conspiracy. The operator failed to show that he made such a request.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Construction of Sherman Act—Interstate Commerce—Direct Restraint of Commerce—Effect upon Commerce.—A service station operator's complaint charging that oil companies conspired to prevent him from selling their nationally advertised brands of gasoline because he sold one brand of such gasoline at less than the prices allegedly fixed by the oil companies sufficiently alleged the involvement of interstate commerce. The Sherman Act extends to restraints on transactions which are themselves in the stream of interstate commerce and to restraints on intrastate commerce which have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. The operator alleged that he was engaged in interstate commerce, and it appeared that the dealer might be able to show that he was a link in the chain of interstate transactions involving the shipment of gasoline and the use of cutsomer credit cards. Also, the operator alleged that the acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy have had an effect on interstate commerce.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Proof of Damages—Loss of Profits and Customers.—Where a service station operator charged that oil companies conspired to prevent him from selling their nationally advertised brands of gasoline because he sold one such brand of gasoline at less than the prices allegedly fixed by the oil companies, the motions of the oil companies for summary judgments on the ground that the operator did not show that he was injured or damaged were denied. Although the operator's sales and gross profits increased during the existence of the alleged conspiracy when he was selling unbranded gasoline, such increases resulted from the decreased price at which he sold such gasoline and not from the fact that he was selling unbranded gasoline. If the operator had been selling a nationally advertised brand of gasoline at such decreased prices, he would have sold more gasoline than he actually did. To the extent that he would have sold more nationally advertised gasoline than he actually sold of unbranded gasoline, the operator was injured and would be entitled to recover if he was deprived of the sale of the nationally advertised brands of gasoline in violation of the antitrust laws. Also, the operator claimed that he lost 30 customers who traded with him before the removal of a credit card service he had had with one of the companies.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.200.

For the plaintiff: Leif Erickson, Charles V. Huppe, and Jerrold R. Richards, Helena, Mont.

For the defendants: Ralph J. Anderson and Stanley P. Sorenson, Helena, Mont., for The California Co.; Toomey & Hughes, Helena, Mont., for Standard Oil Co.; Keller & Magnuson, Helena, Mont., for J. H. Foster; Corette, Smith & Dean, and James O. Sullivan, Butte, Mont., for The Texas Co.; Jardine, Stephenson, Blewett & Weaver, Great Falls, Mont., for Union Oil Co.; and Coleman, Jameson & Lamey, Billings, Mont., for Continental Oil Co., Phillips Petroleum Co., and Carter Oil Co.

Order

[Summary Judgment]

W. D. Murray, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff brings this action to recover treble damages for injury alleged to have been suffered by him as the result of an alleged conspiracy by the defendants to prevent him from advertising and selling through his service station in Helena, Montana, Chevron or any other nationally advertised brand of gasoline, in violation of the Anti-Trust laws of the United States (Sections 1-7, 12, et seq., Title 15, U. S. C. A.). Defendants separately answered and separately moved for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The motions for summary judgment are based upon the complaint, the deposition of plaintiff, taken by defendants, and the deposition of C. E. Tedrow, District Manager for the defendant The California Company, taken by the plaintiff.

Plaintiff filed a purported affidavit in opposition to the motions for summary judgment. This affidavit utterly fails to to comply with the provisions of Rule 56(e) F. R. C. P. requiring that such affidavits be made on personal knowledge, set forth facts that would be admissible in evidence, and show affirmatively that affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein. The rule further requires that sworn or certified copies of all papers or parts thereof referred to in the affidavit shall be attached thereto or served therewith, and the affidavit likewise fails to meet this requirement, nor does it show that the document referred to therein is unavailable to the affiant as required by Rule 56(f). Therefore the purported affidavit is of no assistance to the Court and the motions for summary judgment will be considered upon the complaint and depositions of Ryan and Tedrow.

[Alleged Conspiracy]

Plaintiff alleges in his complaint, which is far from a model pleading, that he operates a retail service station, in Helena, Montana, where he sells gasoline, oil and allied products, and that as operator of such service station, he is engaged in interstate commerce. He further alleges that because of the small margin of profit at which he sold his merchandise, he depended for the successful maintenance of his business upon his ability to sell nationally known brand gasoline in large volume, including the Chevron gasoline of the defendant The California Company. Then appears allegations to the effect that through newspaper advertising and otherwise, plaintiff had developed a large and lucrative business in the sale of Chevron gasoline, and that but for the acts and facts alleged he would have continued to enjoy such business and increased his profits and prospered accordingly.

The corporate existence of the corporate defendants is then alleged, followed by the allegation that they comprise the major oil companies doing business in Helena, Montant, and that they sold over 90% of the petroleum products sold in the area.

There are then allegations to the effect that the defendants combined and conspired together to fix and control the resale and retail prices of their gasoline, oil and allied products in restraint of free trade and enterprise; that on April 13, 1955, plaintiff announced to the public generally and advertised Chevron gasoline for sale at 3¢ a gallon less than the established rates in Helena; and that the defendants thereupon entered into a conspiracy to prevent the plaintiff from advertising and selling Chevron gasoline or any other nationally advertised brand of gasoline.

Plaintiff further alleges that he was advised by the defendant The California Company that unless he brought his price of gasoline up to the regular price in the County in which he operated, they would remove all Chevron signs from his property, take away Chevron credit cards, refuse plaintiff the usual and normal profits given to gasoline retail dealers selling Chevron gasoline and deprive plaintiff of other services, supplies and advertising media; that upon plaintiff's refusal to raise his price of gasoline, the defendant The California

Company, pursuant to said conspiracy, removed its credit card service and refused to extend credit on the sale of gasoline and other merchandise by plaintiff, and removed the Chevron signs from his premises and deprived him of other services, supplies and advertising media.

It is further alleged that these acts have damaged plaintiff to the extent of $90,000, and have resulted in the restraining of interstate commerce in the City of Helena, in the County of Lewis and Clark, in the State and District of Montana, and elsewhere, and have tended to and actually created a monopoly in the line of interstate commerce within that district, all in violation of the Anti-Trust laws.

[Motions]

The facts disclosed by the depositions of the plaintiff and C. E. Tedrow, District Manager of the defendant The California Company, in the district in which plaintiff operates, will be referred to hereafter in the course of the discussion concerning the motions for summary judgment.

The motion of the defendant The Texas Company for summary judgment was argued orally to the Court and a brief in support thereof was filed. The motions of the other defendants for summary judgment were submitted upon the argument and brief of The Texas Company.

Is There Sufficient Involvement of Interstate Commerce to Sustain Action

[Scope of Sherman Act]

One of the principal grounds urged for the granting of summary judgment is that from the complaint and the depositions, it affirmatively appears that interstate commerce is not sufficiently involved to warrant a recovery by the plaintiff herein under the Anti-Trust Laws.

Upon this basis the motions for summary judgment are not good.

The Anti-Trust laws extend to (1) restraints on transactions which are themselves in the stream of interstate commerce, and (2) to restraints on intrastate transactions which have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. Myers v. Shell Oil Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,816], 96 Fed. Supp. 670; Brenner v. Texas Co. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,314], 140 Fed. Supp. 240; Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n. v. U. S. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,673], 210 Fed. (2d) 732; Mandeville Farms v. Sugar Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,251], 334 U. S. 219.

As noted before, the complaint in this case is not a model pleading. It is either inartfully drawn, or so artfully drawn as to make it difficult for the Court to understand clearly whether plaintiff has intended to allege a conspiracy directly affecting interstate commerce, or conspiracy affecting intrastate commerce, which in turn has a substantial effect on interstate commerce or both. The defendants not having seen fit to attack the complaint, we are faced with it as it exists, and regardless of what type conspiracy plaintiff intended to allege, the Court feels that under the allegations proof of either or both types of conspiracies would be admissible, and further that there is nothing disclosed by the depositions which forecloses such proof.

[Direct Restraint]

With respect to a conspiracy directly restraining interstate commerce, the plaintiff alleges that in operating his gas station, he is engaged in interstate commerce. If this be so, the alleged price fixing conspiracy directed at plaintiff is a violation of the Sherman Act per se (U. S. v. Chrysler Corp., etc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,576], 180 Fed. (2d) 557; Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n. v. U. S., supra; U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150), and if plaintiff proved damage as a result thereof, he would be entitled to recover. The possibility of plaintiff proving this allegation is not foreclosed by any facts appearing in the depositions. It appears from his deposition that he was buying and selling gasoline from the California Company distributor in Helena, Montana, and from the deposition of Mr. Tedrow, it appears that The California Company gasoline in Helena, Montana, came via pipeline from Billings, Montana, but that is as far as the testimony goes. For all that appears, the gasoline which plaintiff was buying and selling may have been refined in another state, shipped to Billings, Montana, by a method other than pipeline, and thence in a continuous movement to Helena, Montana, via pipeline, and then distributed to plaintiff. Likewise, insofar as the record here shows, the crude oil from which the gasoline was refined may have been brought to Montana from other states by The California Company, refined by that company and distributed in a continuous flow to plaintiff. These possibilities considered in connection with the credit card process, under which the plaintiff sold gasoline on credit, to a customer locally and the invoices showing such sale were sent to The California Company in Denver, Colorado, and the customer was billed for such sale from Denver, Colorado, by The California Company, might be sufficient to establish that plaintiff was a link in the chain of interstate transactions, under the definition of interstate commerce found in U. S. v. Swift & Co., 122 Fed. 531.

> "Commerce, briefly stated, is the sale or exchange of commodities. But that which the law looks upon as the body of commerce is not restricted to specific acts of sale or exchange. It includes the intercourse—all the initiatory and intervening acts, instrumentalities and dealings—that directly bring about the sale or exchange. Thus, though sale or exchange is a commercial act, so also is the solicitation of the drummer, whose occupation it is to bring about the sale or exchange. Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 14 Sup. Ct. 829, 38 L. Ed. 719. The whole transaction from initiation to culmination is commerce.
>
> "When commerce, thus broadly defined, is between parties dealing from different states—to be effected so far as the immediate act of exchange goes by transportation from state to state—it is 'commerce between the states', within the meaning of the constitution, and the statute known as the Sherman Act. But it is not the transportation that constitutes the transaction interstate commerce. That is an adjunct only, essential to commerce, but not the sole test. The underlying test is that the transaction, as an entirety, including each part calculated to bring about the result, reaches into two or more states; and that the parties dealing with reference thereto deal from different states.
>
> "An interstate commercial transaction is, in this sense, an affair rising from different states, and centering in the act of exchange, each essential part of the affair being as much commerce as is the center."

That case was modified and affirmed by the Supreme Court in Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 375, but the modification did not touch the above quoted definition. See also with respect to what constitutes interstate commerce the discussion in Toulmin's Anti-Trust Laws, Vol. 1, Sections 7.2 et seq.

Defendants rely on the cases of Myers v. Shell, supra, and Brenner v. Texas Co., supra, as authority for the proposition that the allegation in the complaint that plaintiff is engaged in intertsate commerce is not true. However, the credit card feature did not appear in those cases.

[Effect upon Commerce]

In addition, the complaint contains the following allegations, in effect, which would bring the case under the Anti-Trust laws on the basis of conspiracy involving intrastate commerce which affects interstate commerce (Mandeville Farms v. Sugar Co., supra); it alleges a conspiracy to fix and maintain gasoline prices in the Helena area, and further alleges that the acts done in furtherance of that conspiracy have had an effect on interstate commerce.

There is nothing in the depositions which forecloses plaintiff from proving these allegations. Indeed the evidence in Tedrow's deposition as to his conversations with officials of certain of the other defendant companies, concerning the "price situation" in Helena brought about by plaintiff's reduction of prices, and his assurance to them that the situation would be brought under control, is some evidence that a conspiracy to maintain the retail price of gasoline in the Helena area did exist. If such a conspiracy to fix and maintain the retail price of gasoline in the area of Helena, Montana, did exist there is nothing now before the Court which would preclude proof that the fixing of retail gasoline prices in the entire Helena area would have a substantial effect on retail prices in other states.

By the above discussion, the Court does not intend to rule that the evidence now before the Court proves either a restraint on interstate commerce, or a restraint on intrastate commerce substantially affecting interstate commerce, nor has the Court any opinion as to whether either or both of such restraints could in fact be proved upon a trial. The only purpose of the discussion is to point out that in the Court's view under the complaint as it stands, the plaintiff would be entitled to offer such proof, and that nothing in the depositions before the Court would foreclose such proof.

Is Plaintiff Foreclosed from Proving Injury and Damage to His Business

[Necessary Proof]

In an action brought, as this one is, under the Anti-Trust laws, the plaintiff must allege and prove damage to himself resulting from a violation of the Anti-Trust laws, injury and damage to the public alone not being sufficient. Peller v. International Boxing Club [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,080], 135 Fed. Supp. 942, affirmed [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,202] 227 Fed. (2d) 593, Revere Camera Co. v. Eastman Kodak Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,317], 81 Fed. Supp. 325, Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros., 41 Fed. Supp. 757.

As another ground for granting summary judgment, defendants urge that by reason of plaintiff's testimony in his deposition it is affirmatively shown he has suffered no injury or damage to his business caused by the alleged acts of defendants in violation of the Anti-Trust laws.

[Profits]

From the plaintiff's deposition it appears that prior to the time when the alleged acts of defendants took place, plaintiff had sold through his service station an average of 2700 gallons of gasoline per month at an average gross monthly income of $202.50, and that after that time his average monthly sales increased in 10,600 gallons and his average monthly gross income increased to $508.80.

It is apparent, however, that this increase in sales and gross profits, resulted from the decrease in price which plaintiff made, and not from the fact that he was then selling an unbranded gasoline. Indeed, had plaintiff been selling gasoline under the Chevron or any other nationally advertised brand at the same price he was selling the unbranded gasoline, it is obvious that he would have sold far more gasoline than he did. To deny this is to deny the efficiency of modern advertising, and defendants would be among the last to question the benefits of advertising.

To the extent that he would have sold more Chevron or other nationally advertised brand of gasoline than he actually sold of unbranded gasoline, plaintiff has been damaged and would be entitled to recover therefor, if he was deprived of the sale of Chevron or [any] other nationally advertised brand in violation of the Anti-Trust laws. The amount of such damage may be uncertain and difficult to prove, but the fact of such damage is certain, and that is sufficient. Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251, Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U. S. 555, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Brookside Theatre Corp. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,218], 194 Fed. (2d) 846.

[Loss of Customers]

There is in addition, evidence in plaintiff's deposition of the loss of some 30 customers who traded with him before the removal of the credit card service and who ceased to trade with him after the service was removed.

[No Refusal to Sell]

However, the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint is that his damage resulted from the conspiracy, in violation of the Anti-Trust laws, to prevent him from selling Chevron or any other nationally advertised brand of gasoline. In order for him to recover any damage alleged to have been caused by such conspiracy, he must show he requested the defendants to supply him with such gasoline. Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Lowe's, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,891], 190 Fed. (2d) 561, Cert. denied 342 U. S. 909; J. J. Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,757], 212 Fed. (2d) 840; Vilastor Kent Theatre Corp. v. Brandt [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,102], 18 F. R. D. 199.

It appears from the deposition of the plaintiff that ever since the alleged acts of the defendants in violation of the Anti-Trust laws, he has been supplied with all of the gasoline that he has ordered by the defendant J. H. Foster, The California Company distributor; that such gasoline is delivered to him in tank wagons bearing the signs "Chevron" and that he is billed for the same on invoices bearing the word "Chevron."

It further appears from his deposition that he has continued to purchase for resale The California Company's oil and other lubricating products; it likewise appears that since the alleged wrong complained of, the plaintiff has never sought to purchase a nationally advertised brand of gasoline from any of the other corporate defendants, nor has he sought to purchase from any of the other corporate defendants, except the Texas Company, any products, and that with regard to the Texas Company, he has from time to time ordered kerosene, and it has always been delivered to him.

In view of this testimony by the plaintiff, it affirmatively appears that he will be unable to meet the requirement laid down in Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's Inc., supra, J. J. Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., supra, and Vilastor Kent Theatre Corp. v. Brandt, supra, and for that reason summary judgment must be granted.

[Summary Judgment Granted]

While the motions are granted for the reason just mentioned, the Court has endeavored to rule upon and discuss all the points presented so that in the event an appeal is taken all the points may be decided.

[Other Motions]

There are presently pending before the Court in this case at this time, numerous interrogatories propounded to defendants, motions of several defendants with respect to said interrogatories, and a motion of the plaintiff to strike from the answer of defendant Standard Oil Company. In view of the Court's ruling herein with respect to the motions for summary judgment, the other matters pending have become moot. Nothing in the interrogatories or motions could furnish the demand for nationally advertised gasoline of the other defendants which plaintiff failed to make.

The defendants and each of them are ordered to prepare forms of judgment and submit the same to the Court.

[¶ 68,652] Herren Candy Company v. The Curtiss Candy Company, Raymond G. Wiggins, James W. Lowe, Joseph D. Fields, and Aubrey H. Wood.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division. Civil Action No. 5413. Filed March 8, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Termination of Distributorship—Refusal to Deal—Conspiracy Between Corporation and Its Agents.—A candy company, one of its sales managers, and three of its route-salesmen did not unlawfully terminate a company's distributorship of the candy company's products pursuant to a conspiracy to fix prices and to allocate territories. The candy company had no monopoly in the trading area, and the purpose of the company in terminating the distributorship was in furtherance of a policy which it deemed necessary in order to promote and increase the sale of its products. Neither the fixing of the policy which led to the termination of the distributorship nor the termination itself constituted an antitrust violation, and there was no evidence of a conspiracy to fix prices or to allocate territories. The candy company had the right as a single manufacturer to select its customers and to refuse to sell its goods to anyone, for any reason. Also, the sales manager and the route-salesmen were the agents of the candy company, and the company could not conspire with itself.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.400, 2005.785.

For the plaintiff: Gambrell, Harlan, Russell, Moye & Richardson, Atlanta, Ga.

For the defendants: Spalding, Sibley, Troutman, Meadow & Smith, Atlanta, Ga.

[Complaint]

BOYD SLOAN, District Judge [In full text]: In the complaint here, in brief, plaintiff partnership seeks to recover damages claimed to have been sustained by it as a result of the alleged violation by defendants of § 1 of the Sherman Act.[1] Plaintiff alleges that it is engaged in the business of distributing confections to retailers for resale and that the defendant Curtiss Candy Company is engaged in the manufacture and distribution of confections and that the transactions between plaintiff and said candy company were in interstate commerce; that the defendants Lowe, Fields and Wood are independent dealers who distribute the products of said candy company to retail dealers in competition with plaintiff and that defendant candy company, through its agent, defendant Wiggins, and the defendants Lowe, Fields and Wood entered into a conspiracy and combination to maintain and fix prices on said confections and to lessen competition in interstate commerce through allocation of territories, such conspiracy consisting of an agreement between them to accomplish such ends by securing the termination of plaintiff as a jobber of the confections manufactured by such candy company and that as a result thereof the public generally has been injured and plaintiff has been damaged. The defendants deny the material allegations of the amended petition.

[1] 15 U. S. C. A. § 1.

[Stipulation]

The parties to this cause have stipulated the evidence consisting of summaries of the depositions of a number of witnesses, a stipulation of facts and a stipulation of documents and have agreed that the Court may make findings of fact and conclusions of law from the evidence contained therein and enter its judgment in accordance therewith as to the question of liability.

From such evidence, the Court makes the following:

Findings of Fact

[Plaintiff]

Plaintiff herein is engaged in the sale of confections to retailers in 17 Georgia counties, selling to approximately 750 retail dealers.

Plaintiff purchased from Curtiss Candy Company certain items of the products manufactured by it continuously from prior to 1942 up to about March, 1955, except for the period during World War II when the candy company discontinued shipping to all jobbers because of war shortages.

[Route-Salesmen System]

Prior to 1938 the principal method of distribution of its products by Curtiss Candy Company was through chain stores and jobbers throughout the country, but about that time it began experimenting with a system of distribution through route-salesmen who are now denominated by it as "Curtiss Food Service Distributors." Shortly after the end of World War II, Curtiss, having found the route-salesmen system to be a more successful method of distribution, developed such system throughout the country, covering all states east of the Rocky Mountains except three New England States.

[Jobbers]

In 1950 the management of the defendant candy company decided that there was some outlets which were not being adequately covered by the route-salesmen system of distribution and it was determined to selectively take on jobbers who would give emphasis to its products and add to the better distribution thereof. As a result of this decision quite a number of jobbers were placed on the "direct" selling list among which was the plaintiff, Herren Candy Company.

[Conflict Between Route-Salesmen and Jobbers]

Plaintiff was one of a number of jobbers who distributed the products sold by it through "wagon distribution" and shortly after Curtiss resumed selling to jobbers it became apparent to it that there was a conflict in the distribution of its products between its route-salesmen and those jobbers who sold by wagon distribution, by reason of the fact that these jobbers were using its product, Baby Ruth and other leaders, to give support to their own or other allied lines in competition with the full Curtiss line, the Curtiss route-salesmen carrying the Curtiss products exclusively, whereas the other wagon distributors carry a great number of products in lines competing with Curtiss products. The Curtiss route-salesmen found that customers assigned to them were getting such leaders through other distributors, such as plaintiffs, foreclosing them from sales to such customers, not only on these products but of the full Curtiss line. Because of this, the route-salesmen made complaints to Curtiss. This was not a localized condition but was one found to exist in other sections of the country.

[Partial Termination of Jobbers]

After resumption of sales to jobbers a substantial turnover in the employment of route-salesmen developed in the Atlanta District and because of this turnover and the dissatisfaction among the route-salesmen, it was determined by the management of Curtiss Candy Company that this duplication of effort should be eliminated, and following a policy of selective determination of which jobber accounts should be retained, and which should be terminated, many wagon jobbers were terminated. This termination was not wholesale, but was accompanied by a thorough examination of each jobber account as to his contribution to the overall distribution of the products of Curtiss Candy Company. Plaintiff was not the only jobber whose account was terminated. All wagon jobbers in the Atlanta vicinity were terminated, as well as in several other cities in the Southeast, and Curtiss retained in Atlanta only four jobbers who take orders and deliver later.

[Procedure for Removal of Jobbers]

The evidence shows that the normal procedure for the removal of jobbers which had been previously set up by Curtiss Candy Company was followed with reference to the plaintiff here. Under this procedure a standard printed form is used in connection with adding, cutting off or reinstating jobbers. It is required that two of these forms be filled out, one of which clears through the district manager and the other through the regional direct sales manager, and both forms, after such clearance, are forwarded to Chicago, Illinois to Mr. Phillip Schnering, who is vice-president in charge of sales for the entire domestic and foreign market for Curtiss Candy Company, and any discontinuance or adjustment of a district account must have his final approval. The procedure followed with reference to Herren Candy Company was as follows:

The conflict in the method of distribution of Curtiss products in the Atlanta territory was brought to the attention of Mr. Raymond C. Wiggins who was district sales manager for Curtiss Candy Company through complaints to him by the route-salesmen, and early in March, 1955, after having discussed the matter with Mr. J. H. McInteer, division sales manager, Mr. Wiggins went to the place of business of plaintiff for the purpose of advising, and did advise, Mrs. Herren that there was a duplication of service and a conflict in the method of distribution of the products of Curtiss Candy Company and that they would have to withdraw the account of Herren Candy Company. Mr. Wiggins thus initiated the decision to withdraw the account of plaintiff as a jobber and initiated the request for termination of the account by requesting that Mr. George Mobley, the special accounts salesman who called on Mrs. Herren, fill out the forms. Mr. Mobley did so and recommended thereon that Herren Candy Company be reinstated. One copy of the form was then sent to Mr. Wiggins, the district sales manager, and the other to Mr. Ed Turner, regional direct sales manager. Mr. Turner also recommended on the copy of the form sent to him that plaintiff be reinstated and retained and gave as his reason that the extra volume Curtiss was receiving from plaintiff at that time. After Mr. Wiggins and Mr. Turner had entered their recommendations on the forms, they were forwarded to Mr. Phillip Schnering, the vice-president of Curtiss Candy Company at Chicago, Illinois. Mr. Schnering took them along with him to a company meeting at Asheville, North Carolina and the matter was discussed there, and after such discussion, Mr. Schnering concluded that plaintiff's account was not needed and that Curtiss Candy Company would benefit by terminating the account. The senior regional manager of Division Four and Division Eight, Mr. Perry N. Kasson, who was also present at the Asheville meeting, and with whom the matter was discussed, also agreed that it would be to the best interest of the company that Herren Candy Company should remain cut off as a jobber.

[Purpose of Termination]

The purpose of Curtiss in terminating plaintiff as a jobber was in furtherance of a policy which it deemed necessary in order to promote and increase the sale of Curtiss products.

[Salesmen]

The salesmen defendants here involved are employed by the defendant Curtiss Candy Company under contracts which can be terminated at will by either party. Under these contracts they are required to devote their full time to the sales of Curtiss products and are prohibited from dealing in other products, and agree upon termination of the contract not to engage in a business competitive to Curtiss for a period of two years in the territory in which they worked while so employed. The contract provides that such "Curtiss Food Service Distributors" shall operate exclusively in the territory assigned to them and that any customer lists developed by them shall be the property of Curtiss.

The contract provides that Curtiss will sell to such food distributors their requirements of its products and that title to such merchandise passes to the distributors at the time of delivery, and that the merchandise bought is to be paid for at the end of the week in which purchased, Curtiss to pay such distributors a commission of 15% on all money remitted to it. Under the contract Curtiss furnishes to its food distributors a truck for their use in selling and delivering such merchandise and pays all expenses incident to the operation of such truck except for gas. It is required that such truck have Curtiss advertising thereon and the distributors are required to place with customers not less than 25 pieces of Curtiss advertising per week as instructed by it. It is required that each distributor execute a bond to indemnify Curtiss, and Equipment Finance Company, the owner of the trucks, against damage to the truck on account of the distributors' negligent operation thereof.

After employment each such distributor is given at least a week's training by a supervisor. No definite hours of work are required of them, but the territories assigned and the customer lists are so set up as to require five or five and one-half days per week to fully cover such territory and each salesman is expected to call upon all of the customers in his territory at least once a week. While it is suggested that he sell at the prices charged him, he may, and such distributors sometimes do, sell for less in order to get a large order, but when he does so, the discount he gives to such customers necessarily comes out of his 15% commission.

Sales meetings for such distributors in the Atlanta territory are held once a month by Mr. Wiggins, and if a distributor fails to attend a meeting, he attempts to find out the reason therefor.

Each distributor is required to make weekly reports to the company showing his calls and sales for each day and the totals for the week and they are also required to make a monthly inventory report to the supervisor which is subject to audit by such supervisor periodically. They are required to put out Curtiss advertising in retail stores and to hold special promotions at stores in their territory. Income taxes are withheld from their commissions by Curtiss and they participate in the company's group insurance plans and are covered by workmen's compensation, and all but one of the distributors here involved participate in the company's profit sharing plan.

[No Monopoly]

Curtiss Candy Company has no monopoly in the candy market in the Atlanta area and gets only 11% of the local candy dollar. It sells about 90% of its merchandise through its route-salesmen or Food Service Distributors as compared to jobbers, and the average route-salesman sells about six times the annual sales volume which plaintiff produced for Curtiss Candy Company.

[No Conspiracy]

From a careful consideration of the evidence in this case, the Court finds that it fails to show, by a preponderance thereof, that there was any conspiracy or agreement between any of the defendants to fix or maintain prices or to allocate markets for the sale of its products in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, as alleged in the complaint.

Conclusions of Law

This being an action against defendants to recover damages allegedly sustained by plaintiffs as a result of alleged violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1) by defendants, this Court, by virtue of the provisions of Title 15 U. S. C. A. § 15, has jurisdiction of the case.

Neither the fixing of the policy which led to the termination of plaintiff as a jobber nor the termination itself was under the evidence in this record a violation of the antitrust laws. See Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip, 5 Cir. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,694], 211 F. 2d 268, 272.

A corporation has the right as a single manufacturer to select its customers and to refuse to sell its goods to any one, for any reason, and does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibiting conspiracy when it exercises that right through its own officers and agents.

The individual defendants were the agents of the corporate defendant and the corporation could not conspire with itself. See Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola, 5 Cir. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386] 200 F. 2d 911.

No conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws has been shown and no violation of such laws has been established.

The plaintiff can not recover.

A judgment in conformity with the findings and conclusions here reached may be prepared and presented.

[¶ 68,653] Gerald B. Waldron, individually and doing business as Consolidated Brokerage v. British Petroleum Co., Ltd., Cities Service Co., Gulf Oil Corp., Socony Mobil Oil Co., Inc., Standard Oil Co. of California, Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), The Texas Co.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 110-223. Filed March 18, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—Corporations—Transacting Business Through Subsidiaries.—An integrated oil company, which did little, if any, business directly in the Southern District of New York, was held to be transacting business in the District by reason of the activities of two of its wholly-owned subsidiaries in the District, and, therefore, a private antitrust action could be brought against the company in the District under Section 12 of the Clayton Act. The activities of the two subsidiaries in the District were activities which in another less elaborate corporate set-up would be conducted directly by branch offices or agents within the District. The fact that the company decided to fragmentize its operations into numerous corporate subsidiaries does not make the resulting operations of the subsidiaries any the less a part of transaction of business by the company. "A corporation may be a fiction of the law but there is no reason to carry the fiction to the extreme of saying that a corporation which has wholly owned subsidiaries performing services in the local jurisdiction which ordinarily would be performed by service employees, or making sales which ordinarily would be made by a sales department, is in fact not transacting business in that jurisdiction, particularly when the entire corporate set-up of the defendant shows that it is designed to operate to a substantial degree through separate corporate entities responding to the wishes and directions of the parent and providing the revenues sought by the parent."

The court also noted that officers and employees of the company frequently found it necessary to come within the District on business. However, the court rejected the plaintiff's contention that many acts of the company in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the complaint were committed in the District, and, therefore, venue is established in the District. "The mere allegation of conspiracy would hardly seem sufficient to establish venue in the absence of some showing that the defendant was found in the District or was transacting business in the District."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Corporations—Service of Process Outside of District.—Where an integrated oil company was found to be transacting business in the Southern District of New York by reason of the activities of two of its wholly owned subsidiaries in the District, service of process upon an officer of the company in California, where the company's principal place of business was located, was valid. Section 12 of the Clayton Act provides that in an action under the antitrust laws, all process may be served in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. The company was found in the district where the service of process was made, and under Section 12, process can be validly served in a district other than that in which the action is pending.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.350.

For the plaintiff: Casey, Lane & Mittendorf (Samuel M. Lane and Robert P. Beshar, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendant (Standard Oil Company of California, appearing specially): Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey (John F. Caskey, William W. Owens, John R. McCullough, and Herbert C. Earnshaw, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

[Motions]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: These motions seek (1) an order dismissing this private anti-trust action on the ground of improper venue, and (2) an order vacating the purported service of process.

[Issue]

The issue is primarily whether the defendant, an integrated oil company, which does little, if any, business directly in this District, is subject to jurisdiction in this District in an anti-trust action, under the provisions of § 12 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. 22) by reason of certain activities in this District of its wholly owned subsidiaries.

[Defendants—Complaint]

The movant, Standard Oil Company of California (hereinafter referred to as "Socal") is one of seven defendant oil companies against whom this treble damage, private anti-trust action has been brought by Gerald B. Waldron, doing business as Consolidated Brokerage. The other defendants are British Petroleum Co., Ltd., Cities Service Co., Gulf Oil Corp., Socony Mobil Oil Co., Inc., Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), and The Texas Co. The complaint alleges that the defendants' actions in regard to the production and distribution of Middle East oil have violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act as well as § 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act.

[Clayton Act]

The principal issue now before the Court is one of venue. Section 12 of the Clayton Act, reading as follows, states the districts in which an action under the anti-trust laws can be brought against a corporate defendant:

> "Any suit, action, or proceeding under the anti-trust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business . . ."

In support of its motion, Socal contends that it (1) is not an inhabitant of this District, being incorporated in Delaware, (2) was not and could not be found here, and (3) does not transact business here.

[Defendant's Business]

Socal is a large integrated company in the petroleum industry. In certain of the Western States it operates directly, but it is also a holding company, owning numerous subsidiaries which produce and market petroleum products in various areas of this country and in foreign countries. The company, in a map which is included in its 1955 Annual Report, referred to the area which encompasses the Southern District of New York as one of its "principal marketing areas." The Annual Report also points out that during the year 1955 the company and its subsidiaries had engaged in exploratory and drilling activities in thirty-three States and Alaska, in six Canadian provinces and territories, and in fifteen countries of Latin America. In its exploration, drilling and marketing activities the company operated to a substantial extent through wholly owned subsidiaries.

[Subsidiaries in District]

Socal has two wholly owned subsidiaries admittedly doing business in the Southern District of New York. They are the California Commercial Company, Inc. and the California Oil Company.

The California Commercial Company, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as "Commercial") is a New York corporation having its principal place of business within the Southern District of New York at 30 Rockefeller Plaza. Commercial is described in the 1955 Annual Report of Socal as a "Service Company" operating principally in New York and Washington, D. C. All of its capital has been provided by Socal which has continuously owned all of its stock. Commercial occupies substantially the same business suite, retains the same telephone number, and uses the same office equipment as that occupied and used by Socal prior to the organization of Commercial in January 1940. However, Commercial maintains its own books of account, has its own employees and its own bank accounts. It attempts to preserve, from a corporate standpoint, an identity of its own separate and apart from the parent company. Nevertheless, its inter-connection with Socal is active insofar as business operations are concerned.

[Listings]

The door at Commercial's main office in New York City currently bears this legend:

California Commercial Company, Inc.
A Subsidiary of Standard Oil Company of California

And on the tenants' directory in the main concourse of the building appears: "Standard Oil Company of California. See California Commercial Company, Room 4507". Furthermore, in addition to listings under its own name in the New York City telephone directory, Commercial has also maintained this listing: "Standard Oil Co. of California. Call California Coml. Co. Inc.—CIrcle 6-4043". Socal's President and Chairman of the Board are directors of Commercial.

[Services Rendered]

Although the certificate of incorporation of Commercial includes the power to engage in a wide variety of business activity, including the manufacture, mining, pumping, drilling, refining and distribution of petroleum, Commercial has in fact done none of these. Instead it receives almost $400,000, its entire revenue exclusive of income from securities, for services rendered to Socal and its subsidiaries. By contract, Commercial is compensated for its facilities and services at the rate of cost plus 25%. In each of the last five years, Socal's payments under this contract have aggregated over 95% of the revenue earned by Commercial. Conversely, over 95% of the time expended by Commercial's officers and employees has been consumed in rendering services on behalf of Socal.

As indicated by the papers, the services rendered by Commercial under the contract with Socal may be described as follows:

1. From time to time Commercial receives inquiries from prospective purchasers looking toward the purchase of Socal petroleum products to be delivered almost entirely outside of the Southern District of New York. These inquiries are forwarded to Socal's principal office located in San Francisco, California.

2. Commercial maintains contact with the executive offices of certain business enterprises to which Socal sells petroleum products for delivery and use outside of the Southern District of New York. Customer good will is cultivated by the President and Secretary-Treasurer of Commercial who call at the New York City offices of these business enterprises. These ambassadors of good will possess severely circumscribed power as neither is authorized to accept any order on behalf of Socal or to commit it in any way whatsoever.

3. Responsibility for the distribution of Socal news releases to the Eastern daily and trade press rests upon Commercial which also services all inquiries made by the press regarding the operations of Socal and its subsidiaries. Some of these inquiries are transmitted to Socal's public relations department in San Francisco. In addition, for the use of this department, Commercial maintains a clipping service of New York newspapers on items relating to Socal and the oil industry in general.

4. Infrequently, Commercial ascertains and forwards credit information about a prospective customer. But these inquiries, however, do not relate to purchases ultimately delivered in this district.

5. When Socal's eastern customers erroneously address orders to Commercial, the practice is for Commercial to transmit them to Socal for acceptance or rejection. Occasionally Commercial returns these orders to the customer for proper readdressing. On no occasion, however, would Commercial accept an order.

6. When in New York the employees of Socal and its subsidiaries are assisted by Commercial. It arranges itineraries, purchases transportation and other accommodations, and obtains necessary reservations. In addition, telephone service, office space and secretarial assistance are made available by Commercial.

7. As to four Socal affiliates having offices in New York, Commercial acts as liaison with respect to operational activities in the Middle East. These affiliates are the California Texas Corporation (known as "Caltex"), Bahrein Petroleum Company, Arabian American Oil Company (known as "Aramco"), and Trans-Arabian Pipe Line Co. (known as "Tapline").

[Sales Subsidiary]

While Commercial does not directly engage in petroleum marketing, another wholly owned subsidiary does. California Oil Company (hereinafter referred to as "California Oil") is a Delaware corporation all of whose capital stock is owned by Socal. While California Oil maintains an office in this District at 45 Rockfeller Plaza and is qualified to do business in New York State, its principal place of business is in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. Engaged in the business of processing and selling petroleum in the eastern part of the United States, California Oil sells petroleum products to wholesalers in the State of New York.

Often such sales are made in bulk, with the wholesaler receiving authorization to resell the product under the trademark "Calso." Consequently "Calso" trade-marked petroleum products are warehoused by wholesalers in the Southern District of New York, where retail sales are made by filling station operators. In the aggregate the sales volume in this District of "Calso" petroleum products is substantial. The "Calso" trade-mark is registered with the United States Patent Office by Socal, which has authorized California Oil to use the registered trade-mark. With the permission of Socal, California Oil has also registered the trade-mark "Calso" in accordance with the laws of the State of New York, as well as other States in which it operates. Although owned by Socal, "Calso" is not the trade-mark used by Socal in the sales of gasoline which it makes directly in the Western States.

To aid sales, California Oil distributes certain advertising materials which are forwarded by the wholesalers to retailers for public display and distribution. This material includes calendars, maps, porcelain signs, cardboard placards, as well as other appropriate items, promoting the sale of "Calso" gasoline and RPM lubricating oils.

[Other Activities in District]

In addition to its subsidiaries, Socal has other contacts with this District. While the headquarters of Socal is in San Francisco, its officers and employees find it necessary frequently to come within the District on business. During 1955 the principal representatives of Socal made eleven trips, during which a total number of thirty-two business days were spent in the Southern District of New York. The term "principal representative" is limited to the Chairman of the Board, President, Directors, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Treasurer and Controller.

To establish that venue is in this District, plaintiff, by his attorney, also urges that many acts in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the complaint were committed in this District.*

A person would have to be blind to the economic facts of business life if he did not recognize that the activities of Commercial and California Oil in this District are activities which is another less elaborate corporate set-up would be conducted directly by branch offices or agents within the District. It is Socal, and not the subsidiaries, which is the defendant in the present action. What is Socal? It is a large aggregation of invested capital which transacts its business through officers, agents, employees, and through subsidiaries, which in the drilling, production and marketing of oil operate as agents, employees or branch offices would operate. Does the fact that this large business entity, for tax reasons or otherwise, decides to fragmentize its operations into numerous corporate subsidiaries, make the resulting operations of the subsidiaries any the less a part of transaction of business by Socal?

[Early Rule]

In the early days of the anti-trust laws it was held that for a corporation to be sued in a district in which it did not reside required that it be present in the district by its officers and agents carrying on the business of the corporation in that district, this being the only way in which it could be said to be "found" within the district; that to make it amenable to service of process in the district, the business must be of such nature and character as to warrant the inference that it had subjected itself to the local jurisdiction, and was present in that district by its duly authorized officers or

* The mere allegation of conspiracy would hardly seem sufficient to establish venue in the absence of some showing that the defendant was found in the District or was transacting business in the District. "Support for the plaintiff's contention that the allegation of conspiracy is sufficient to bring a conspirator under this court's aegis cannot be found in the applicable statutes." Knox, J. in Hansen Packing Co. v. Armour & Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,127], 16 F. Supp. 784, at p. 787 (S. D. N. Y. 1936). See to the same effect Independent Productions Corporation v. Loew's Incorporated [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,615], — F. Supp. — (S. D. N. Y. McGohey, J., Feb. 5, 1957) but cf. United States v. Watchmakers of Switzerland Information Center [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,145], 134 F. Supp. 710, 712 (S. D. N. Y. 1955).

agents. People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 246 U. S. 79 (1918).

[Rule Under Clayton Act]

However, by the Clayton Act, which supplemented the earlier anti-trust laws, the local jurisdiction of the district courts was materially enlarged with reference to suits against corporations. Thus § 12 of the Clayton Act provides that a suit, action or proceeding under the anti-trust laws against a corporation, may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it was an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business. The United States Supreme Court has pointed out that this amendment broadened the venue provisions for anti-trust actions so that even if the corporation was not present by agents carrying on the business for such parent in the sense that it is "found" therein, it would nevertheless be subject to jurisdiction if in the ordinary and usual sense it "transacts business" therein of any substantial character. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359 (1927).

This still left open the question as to whether a corporation could be deemed to be transacting business through the instrumentality of a wholly owned subsidiary in the local jurisdiction. In cases outside the area of the anti-trust laws, the rule had long been established that a foreign corporation which had a wholly owned subsidiary in the local forum which engaged in local activities of soliciting, selling and distributing products, was not amenable to suit in the local forum, provided the separate identity of the two corporations was maintained. Cannon Mfg. Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 267 U. S. 333 (1925). See Berkman v. Ann Lewis Shops, 142 F. Supp. 417 (S. D. N. Y. 1956).

The amendment to the anti-trust laws brought about by the adoption of § 12 of the Clayton Act resulted in a more liberal venue provision in anti-trust actions than in most other types of action, and this liberality was intentionally sought by Congress. See discussion of the Congressional history in United States v. National City Lines [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,259], 334 U. S. 573, at 583-588 (1948). The Supreme Court gave effect to this liberality of venue by holding that the "transacting business" test was fulfilled if the corporate defendant were engaged "in any substantial business operations" in the local jurisdiction. United States v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795, 807 (1948). The Supreme Court indicated that "practical, business conceptions" should be substituted "for the previous hair-splitting legal technicalities encrusted upon the 'found'—'present'—'carrying on business' sequence." Id. at 808. See Note, Doing Business as a Test of Venue, 56 Colum. L. Rev., 394, 416 (1956).

A corporation may be a fiction of the law but there is no reason to carry the fiction to the extreme of saying that a corporation which has wholly owned subsidiaries performing services in the local jurisdiction which ordinarily would be performed by service employees, or making sales which ordinarily would be made by a sales department, is in fact not transacting business in that jurisdiction, particularly when the entire corporate set-up of the defendant shows that it is designed to operate to a substantial degree through separate corporate entities responding to the wishes and directions of the parent and providing the revenues sought by the parent. We would be exalting fiction over fact if we were to conclude that under those circumstances the parent company was not in fact transacting business in this District through the instrumentality of its wholly owned subsidiaries.

[Prior Decisions]

There have been two occasions in the past where Socal has successfully contested venue in this jurisdiction. Amtorg Trading Corp. v. Standard Oil Company of California, 47 F. Supp. 466 (S. D. N. Y. 1942), was an action in admiralty started by a libel by Amtorg Trading Corporation. The court held that doing of business by a foreign corporation through a subsidiary does not constitute doing business within the State, so as to make the foreign corporation amenable to process in this State in such an action.

The other action was one brought under the anti-trust laws. Winkler-Koch Engineering Co. v. Universal Oil Products Co. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,500], 70 F. Supp. 77 (S. D. N. Y. 1946). In that case it was contended that Socal was transacting business in this District through California Commercial Company, Inc., its subsidiary. The court in that case held that the word "found" is synonymous with "doing business" under § 12 of the Clayton Act, and held that the transaction of business in a district by a subsidiary does not constitute business done by the parent if the subsidiary maintains separate legal entity. Hence it was held that Socal was not subject to jurisdiction in the action.

[Scophony Case]

Subsequent to the decision in that case the United States Supreme Court had occasion to consider the meanings of the words "found" and "transacting business" in § 12 of the Clayton Act. United States v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795 (1948).

The Supreme Court pointed out that § 12 of the Clayton Act is an enlargement of § 7 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, which had provided for suit in the district in which the defendant "resides or is found." The Court held that the question to be determined was whether the corporation in fact transacted business in the district where venue was sought. It said that this was to be determined by substituting practical business conceptions for the hair-splitting legal technicalities encrusted upon the "'found'—'present'—'carrying on business' sequence."*

It is doubtful if a court today, guided as it must be by these later opinions of the United States Supreme Court, could reach the same conclusion as Judge Bright did in the Universal Oil Products case.

[Transacting Business]

It is the conclusion of the Court that Socal is transacting business in the Southern District of New York and that therefore the instant action may be brought against it in this District under the provisions of § 12 of the Clayton Act.

Nor can Socal properly contend that it would be a violation of due process to find that it is subject to jurisdiction in this District. Certainly Socal has more than "minimum contact" with this jurisdiction which due process might require as a basis for asserting jurisdiction over it. See International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U. S. 310, at p. 316 (1945); nor should the maintenance of the action here offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. See Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U. S. 457, at p. 463 (1940).

[Related Actions]

Currently Socal is a defendant in this court in two pending cases which have some relationship with the subject matter of this action:

(1) United States v. Standard Oil Company of California, Civil Docket No. 78-152; and

(2) United States v. Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) et al., Civil Docket No. 86-27.

In the first mentioned action, the United States seeks to recover from Socal and others certain overcharges alleged to have been made in connection with the purchase of Middle Eastern oil under the ECA and MSA Economic and Military Aid Programs. Defendant did not contest the jurisdiction or venue of this Court in that case.

In the second case, the Government has charged the Standard Oil Company of California and four other American oil companies with monopoly and conspiracy to restrain trade in oil production, refining, transportation and marketing in foreign areas, the major one of which is the Middle East area. The action was originally filed in the District of Columbia. Socal joined in defendants' motion to transfer that action to this court on the basis of trial convenience. The trial court found that the vast preponderance of the documentary evidence and principal witnesses were located here and hence granted the motion. Defendant's moving papers contained an affidavit by a Socal Vice-President providing a geographic self-portrait:

> "In statistical terms, San Francisco is the headquarters for companies in which Socal's interest in net assets represents less than 25 per cent of our overseas investments, and New York, New York, is the United States headquarters for companies in which our interest in net assets represents more than 75 per cent of such overseas investments. In terms of our equity in income rather than net assets, San Francisco is the United States headquarters for companies producing about 10 per cent of such overseas income, and New York, New York, the United States headquarters for companies producing 90 per cent of such income."

[Service of Process]

The second motion presented is a motion to vacate and set aside the service of process

* "The practical, everyday business or commercial concept of doing or carrying on business 'of any substantial character' became the test of venue." (p. 807.)

upon Socal resulting from the service of process upon G. M. Foster, an officer of said company, in San Francisco, California. The argument is made that extra-territorial service of process is void unless plaintiff can establish that venue is properly laid in this District. As the Court has held that venue is properly laid in this District this argument falls of its own weight. The motion papers show that process was served upon an officer of Socal in San Francisco, California. The papers also show that Socal is a Delaware corporation whose principal place of business is in the State of California. Section 12 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. 22) provides that in an action under the anti-trust laws "all process . . . may be served in the district of which it [the defendant] is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found." The papers show that Socal is found in the district where the service of process was made and under § 12 process can be validly served in a district other than that in which the action is pending. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 357 (1927). Therefore the service of process was properly made.

[Motion Denied]

The motions to dismiss this action on the ground of improper venue and to vacate the purported service of process are denied. So ordered.

[¶ 68,654] Sunbeam Corporation v. Hess Bros.

In the Court of Common Pleas of Lehigh County, State of Pennsylvania. September Term, 1956. No. 14. In Equity. Dated March 11, 1957.

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses —Enforcement Policy.—In an action to enjoin a retailer from selling a fair trader's products at less than their established prices by accepting trade-ins which were not permitted under the fair trader's contracts, the retailer was held to be entitled to a list of the fair trader's known retail outlets in the trading area and to learn what notices of violations have been reported to the fair trader and what action has been taken by the fair trader pursuant to such notices. However, shopping reports and any communications between officials of the fair trader or with other retailers made or secured in anticipation of litigation did not have to be produced. Also, it was held that where the defense of non-enforcement set forth in the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act is asserted, specifications of persons and dates must be made. However, the general defense of lack of enforcement can be pleaded without the specification of details.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.40.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses —Antitrust Violations.—In an action to enjoin a retailer from selling a fair trader's products at less than their established prices by accepting trade-ins which were not permitted under the fair trader's contracts, the retailer was not entitled to the production of documents of the fair trader for the purpose of establishing its defense that the fair trader was violating the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and the McGuire Act. The retailer contended that the fair trader sold its products direct to chain stores at the same price at which it sold to distributors, and, therefore, it violated provisions against "horizontal" agreements against competition and treating differently persons in competition with each other. The court ruled that the question of whether or not the fair trader has violated any federal laws need not be determined because any such violations, if they do exist, bear no relation to the fair trade agreement in the suit. Also, the question whether there is unlawful discrimination as to wholesale costs between chain stores and other retailers did not have to be decided because the retailer could not complain that chain stores enjoyed a higher margin of profit.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3428.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Trade-in Policy.—Where a fair trade agreement allowed for no trade-ins upon certain articles, the trade-in policy on other articles was held to be irrelevant unless there is evidence of lack of enforcement against known violators of trade-in restrictions. The fact that distributors did not probe retailers and that the fair trader did not probe wholesalers to determine whether or not trade-ins were received in accordance with the fair trade agreement was irrelevant, since each had the right to assume that there were no violations of the trade-in restrictions.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3292, 3440.40.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Proof of Damage.—In a fair trade enforcement action for injunctive relief, the question whether or not the fair trader lost business in the trading area by reason of a retailer's violations of the fair trader's contract was held to be irrelevant. The public policy of the state in enacting the fair trade act supplies the proof of loss.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3362.40.

For the plaintiff: Butz, Hudders, Tallman & Rupp, by Donald E. Wieand, Allentown, Pa.

For the defendant: Orrin E. Boyle, Allentown, Pa.; and Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis, Philadelphia, Pa.

Opinion

[Fair Trade Action]

JAMES F. HENNINGER, President Judge [In full text]: Sunbeam has brought this complaint in equity to enjoin Hess Bros. from selling Sunbeam products at less than listed fair trade prices, namely, by accepting the trade-in of an electric shaver against the purchase price of products, for which trade-ins are not permitted under Sunbeam's published price lists.

A preliminary injunction was issued and continued and the case set for final hearing beginning February 26, 1957. When this hearing date was fixed, it was discovered that two essential witnesses, Blackburn and Ploner, officials of Sunbeam could not be present at that time because of previous compelling commitments.

I. APPLICATION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER

[Depositions—Production]

On January 4, 1957, Hess filed notice of depositions of these witnesses at Allentown, Pa., on January 14, 1957 under Pennsylvania Rule of Civil Procedure 4003 relating to depositions for use at trial and Pennsylvania Rule of Civil Procedure 4007, depositions for discovery. On January 14, 1957, Hess applied for production by Sunbeam on January 30, 1957 of

(a) correspondence, reports and records relating to shoppings of plaintiff's products between June 1954 and the present date and

(b) books, invoices, correspondence and other records showing shipments of Sunbeam products by plaintiff in or to the Allentown-Bethlehem trading area since January 1955 until the present date;

(c) list of retailers selling plaintiff's products in the Bethlehem trading area;

(d) list of retailers to whom direct sales are made;

(e) schedules of prices to distributors;

(f) correspondence and records concerning allegations of fair trade violations;

(g) plaintiff's instructions to and correspondence with distributors and retailers concerning trade-ins.

[Protective Order]

Sunbeam has asked for a protective order under Pa. R. C. P. 4012(a) averring (1) depositions sought in bad faith for irrevelant information (2) unreasonable expense to the witnesses, residents of Illinois to come to Allentown (3) if permitted, the depositions ought to be taken in Illinois (4) if in Illinois, plaintiff should receive reasonable attorney fees (Pa. R. C. P. 4008) or (5) pay the witnesses traveling expenses to Allentown (6) determine whether the depositions are to be taken under Pa. R. C. P. 4003 or 4007 (7) that depositions be limited to fair trade and trade-in policies.

Simultaneously with the filing of the notice for taking depositions, defendant's answer was filed to which plaintiff filed preliminary objections. This made it impossible to hold the final hearing beginning February 26th because the preliminary objections had not been disposed of. Since the original purpose of the depositions was to take the testimony of witnesses who could not personally attend Court on February 26th and since presumably these witnesses will be able to attend a future hearing in person, the necessity of taking their depositions for trial no longer exists. If at a later date plaintiff states that it does not intend to produce these witnesses at trial, a renewed application can be made to take their testimony by deposition for use at trial.

[Witnesses]

We take it then that the application for depositions as it stands today is for purposes of discovery under Pa. R. C. P. 4007 and no longer under Pa. R. C. P. 4003. Under these circumstances, we believe that defendant cannot compel plaintiff to produce these witnesses within the jurisdiction of this Court and defendant has produced no authority to indicate any obligation on the part of a litigant to produce his witnesses for discovery purposes at the behest of the adverse party. It is enough that the litigant informs his adversary of the identity and whereabouts of witnesses. The procuring of the witnesses under Pa. R. C. P. 4007(b) for the discovery of facts is up to the party desiring the testimony. Anderson, Pennsylvania Civil Practice, Vol. 5, page 217, and cases therein cited.

On the other hand, we are not inclined to grant plaintiff any attorney fees to attend the taking of depositions in Chicago, because plaintiff's headquarters are in Chicago and its principal counsel resides there.

[Documents]

When we come to the petition for production of documents under Pa. R. C. P. 4009, we weigh the demands in the light of relevancy and of the restrictions of Pa. R. C. P. 4011.

Pa. R. C. P. 4011 in its present form, reads as follows:

> "No discovery or inspection shall be permitted which
>
> "(a) is sought in bad faith;
>
> "(b) causes unreasonable annoyance, embarrassment, expense or oppression to the deponent or any person or party;
>
> "(c) relates to matter which is privileged or would require the disclosure of any secret process, development or research;
>
> "(d) would disclose the existence or location of reports, memoranda, statements, information or other things made or secured by any person or party in anticipation of litigation or in preparation for trial or would obtain any such thing from a party or his insurer, or the attorney or agent of either of them, other than information as to the identity or whereabouts of witnesses; or
>
> "(e) would require the making of an unreasonable investigation by the deponent or any party or witness."

[Enforcement Campaign]

It is our opinion that defendant is clearly entitled to a list of plaintiff's known retail outlets in this trading area. It is further entitled to learn what notices of violations have been reported to plaintiffs and what action has been taken by plaintiff pursuant to such notices of violation. This might involve the text of warning letters to determine whether there has been a bona fide campaign of enforcement.

Shopping reports and any communications between officials of the company or with other than retailers, would be memoranda or statements made or secured in antipication of litigation and therefore not demandable under Pa. R. C. P. 4011(d). Defendant invokes the authority of Bradley v. Phila. Transportation Co., 87 D&C 548, 550; Stebelski v. Phila. Transportation Co., 6 D&C 2nd 627, 631, which held that information received in the general conduct of one's business must be made available, although similar reports made in view of litigation are exempt. We would hold, however, that all reports on shoppings made after complaint by defendant are shoppings in preparation for litigation, because of the defense of failure to enforce. The fact that the shoppings might also give rise to litigation with the violating retailer does not make it any the less a shopping in relation to the present litigation. Furthermore, if the reports were made for any litigation, they would be immune for otherwise one litigant could procure what was inviolate to another and vice versa and the rule of exclusion would be a nullity.

We see no reason, however, why defendant should not have access to any reports or letters that have already been exhibited to its counsel in previous hearings or that may eventually be produced, despite their present immunity under Pa. R. C. P. 4011(d).

Item "(b)" concerning shipments of Sunbeam products to this area will be refused, because of unnecessary expense and irrelevancy; and items "(d)", "(e)" and "(g)" because of irrelevancy. These items also concern Preliminary Objections Nos. 1 and 2 to defendant's New Matter in its Answer.

[Antitrust Violations]

Defendant, in Requests Nos. "b, d, e and g", is seeking to discover evidence that plaintiff itself is violating the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U. S. C. 1-8, the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U. S. C. 13, 13a, 13b and 21a and the McGuire Fair Trade Act, 15 U. S. C. 45.

As we understand defendant's contention, it is that plaintiff has violated above Federal Acts because it has sold its products direct to chain stores at the same price at which it sold to distributors, thus, in defendant's opinion, violating the provisions against "horizontal" agreements against competition and treating differently persons in competition with each other. This is, of course, not strictly a horizontal agreement for the party of the one part is never in the same class as the parties of the other part, although the parties of the other part are not in the same class with each other, some being distributors and other retailers. It is treating persons in the same class differently and the question might arise whether there is a valid distinction, recognizable under these Acts to justify a difference in prices or whether it is unjust discrimination.

This case differs from U. S. v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305, in which a resale price agreement with wholesalers was stricken down because the manufacturer was also a wholesaler and, therefore, the contract was condemned as one between persons in the same class.

We do not intend, however, to go into the question of whether or not plaintiff has violated any Federal laws, because we believe that any such violations, even if they exist, bear no relation to the agreement in suit and therefore cannot be here interposed as a defense. We find support in this in obiter dictum in the McKesson & Robbins case, supra, where it is stated (p. 309),

"The Government does not question the so-called vertical 'fair trade' agreements between McKesson and retailers of McKesson brand products. It challenges only appellee's price-fixing agreements with independent wholesalers with whom it is in competition."

If there is unlawful discrimination as to wholesale costs between chain stores and other retailers, that is for the Federal Courts to supervise. So long as the chain stores adhere to the fair trade retail prices established by plaintiff—and we have not been informed of any such violation—defendant may be prejudiced in its profits but not in its competition. Since defendant by cutting prices wants still less profits than it would be allowed at fair trade prices, it can hardly complain in this action that the chain stores enjoy a higher margin of profit than it is permitted.

[Trade-Ins]

If this were a situation in which trade-ins were permitted, we might have to look into the vexing problem of trade-ins. We can recognize the reason for accepting trade-ins on the purchase of a similar article in order to stimulate earlier discarding of a used device. We are disturbed by the placing of an arbitrary value on a useless article to the prejudice of a cash buyer. We have seen the abuses that have arisen from this practice. It is time enough, however, to pass upon this question when it arises.

In our case the agreement voluntarily entered into by defendant with the current price list allowed for no trade-ins upon the articles listed and therefore the trade-in policy on other articles is irrelevant unless there is evidence of lack of enforcement against other known violators of trade-in restrictions.

We use the expression "known violators" deliberately. Defendant stresses the point that distributors did not probe retailers and that plaintiff did not probe wholesalers to determine whether trade-ins were received strictly in accord with price list regulations. While the duty is laid on those who wish to maintain fair trade prices to police violations, we are not convinced that business must be conducted upon a basis of suspicion rather than on that of "credit," in the broader use of the latter term. Until, therefore, suspicions were aroused, each had the right to assume that the other was dealing fairly.

[Loss of Business]

This leaves the problem of whether plaintiff must demonstrate that it has lost business in this community by reason of defendant's violations of the fair trade agreement.

We consider this irrelevant for several reasons. In the first place, loss of business is a relative matter. Although plaintiff's business may have been the same or greater than before, it might have been still greater but for cheapening of its brands by discount sales. Furthermore, it is more than likely that a price war would cause a flurry of increased sales in the war area.

The real reason, however, why a showing of immediate loss to the manufacturer is unnecessary is because the public policy of the state in enacting the law protecting trade-name brands supplies the proof of loss. The title on the basic Act of Assembly of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266, 73 P. S. 7 ff., reads:

> "An act to protect trade-mark owners, distributors and the public against injuries and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark, brand or name."

The effect of cheapening a brand name may take years to be felt, just as it may take years to establish its standing. The immediate effect of a price war, therefore, is of no moment. To make proof of immediate loss an issue of fact in each case would be to substitute our own economic theories for the declared public policy established by the General Assembly.

Recognizing the superior knowledge of the parties as to the problems involved we shall first give them an opportunity to draft an order in accordance with this opinion, without prejudice to the right of either to except to the rulings of the Court.

II. Preliminary Objections

Preliminary Objections Nos. 1, 2, 3(c) and (f) have been considered in what has been stated concerning a protective order. It is true that one does not ordinarily prejudge sections of a pleading any part of which asserts a valid claim or defense and we do so now only because we have had to decide the issue on the protective order and in order to save the parties the necessity of producing evidence which would be rejected at trial.

Defendant has suggested that we should allow all proof so that any error can be corrected upon appeal. Unfortunately, the trial courts must make decisions whenever called upon to do so and stand by them and then take the consequences of their correctness upon appeal.

Preliminary Objection 3(a) must be sustained. In paragraph 1 of defendant's new matter it is interposing the defense added to the Fair Trade Act of 1935 by the Act of 1956, F. [P.] L. 1756, 73 P. S. 8, which reads,

> "It shall, however, be a complete defense to such an action for the defendant to prove that the party stipulating such price, after at least seven days' written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action, failed to take reasonable and diligent steps to prevent the continuation of such advertising, offering for sale or selling, by those in competition with the defendant, who were specified in such notice."

Assuming that mere averment of nonregulation could be proved under a general statement to that effect, we are of the opinion that the language quoted, calls for specification of persons and dates if that absolute defense is being relied upon.

In line with the above assumption, we believe that the general defense of lack of enforcement can be pleaded without specification of details and that defendant's paragraphs 2 and 5 of new matter will suffice. We arrive at this conclusion the more readily, since the preliminary hearing has apprised the parties of the charges of nonenforcement.

Nor are we concerned about Preliminary Objection 3(e) raising the defense that plaintiff's trade-in policies are a subterfuge. We have thoroughly explored those policies at the preliminary hearing and what remains is mostly a matter of interpretation rather than one of proof. We are assuming that defendant is referring to the application of trade-ins to other products than shavers. We are not now concerned with plaintiff's trade-in policy as related to shavers, for shavers are not a part of this litigation. Nor are we impressed by the contention that since distributors paid $5 apiece for used shavers, they had that value and that defendant bought a valuable article from purchasers of other products and that the purchaser then paid full price. All of the advertising and display cards negate that theory.

Now, March 11, 1957, a protective order will be issued in accordance with this opinion; both parties may submit a draft of such order within fifteen (15) days after date without prejudice to their right to except to such order.

It is further ordered that Preliminary Objections Nos. 1, 2 and 3(a), (e) and (f) are sustained and paragraphs 4 and 12 of new matter in defendant's answer are stricken and it is ordered that defendant amend paragraph 1 of its new matter, specifying the names and dates of alleged violators of the Fair Trade Act as provided to plaintiff after the effective date of the Act of 1956, P. L. 1756. The other preliminary objections are dismissed.

[¶ 68,655] E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company v. Edward Miller, individually and doing business as Miller's Washer Sales & Service.

In the Court of Common Pleas of Schuylkill County, State of Pennsylvania. November Term, 1956. No. 9. Dated March 4, 1957.

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act—Nonsigner Provision.—The contention that the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act as applied to nonsigners of fair trade contracts is unconstitutional was rejected. While such statutes had been declared violative of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the McGuire Act made fair trade laws such as the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act constitutional as to the sale of products in interstate commerce. Also, the preponderance of opinion in the lower federal courts has sustained the constitutionality of the McGuire Act.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3040.40, 3085.40, 3258.40.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Enforcement Policy.—A nonsigner's contention that, under the 1956 amendment to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, he must have notice of a violation of the Act before any legal proceeding can be instituted against him was overruled because the fair trader alleged that it gave such notice to the nonsigner.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.40.

For the plaintiff: Hicks, Williamson, Freidberg & Jones, and Richard H. Klein.

For the defendant: William J. Krencewicz.

[Fair Trade Action]

PALMER, Presiding Judge [In full text]: On October 21, 1956, the plaintiff, E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company, a corporation, filed a complaint in equity asking for an injunction under the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act and alleging that the defendant, Edward Miller, individually and doing business as Miller's Washer Sales & Service, had sold products manufactured by the plaintiff corporation known under the trade names of "Zerex" and "Zerone" at prices less than the minimum retail sale prices stipulated in Fair Trade Contract made between the plaintiff and various dealers.

A hearing was held before this Court and an injunction was granted restraining defendant from selling the stipulated products at a price less than the established price. On November 19, 1956, the defendant filed preliminary objections to the complaint.

[Verification of Complaint]

The defendant's first preliminary objection is that the verification to the complaint does not comply with Rule 1024 of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The verification in this case was made by Chalmers H. Tilley, Jr., who is designated as Sales Representative of the Polychemical Department of the plaintiff corporation, for Central Pennsylvania. He avers that "the averments contained in the foregoing complaint of which he has personal knowledge are true and correct and those averments of which he has information from others he verily believes to be true."

This constitutes substantial compliance with Rule 1024 supra. The contention of the defendant that the verification must be made by an officer of the plaintiff corporation is without merit. It is highly improbable that an officer of the plaintiff corporation in this case could honestly make a verification, in which he stated that he had personal knowledge of the facts in a case of this kind. By necessity, an agent of the corporation familiar with all the facts must make the verification.

[Notice]

The second Preliminary Objection of the defendant is in the form of a demurrer and relates to the fact that the defendant is not the signer of a sales contract with the plaintiff corporation and therefore under the amendment of the Act of June 5, 1955 [1935], P. L. 266, 73 P. S. sec. 8, as amended by the Act of May 25, 1956, 8 Purdons Legal Service p. 1961, the defendant must have notice of a violation of the above Statute before any legal proceeding can be instituted against him. The defendant complains that the complaint does not aver such notice to him.

This objection is overruled as the plaintiff clearly avers that it gave such notice in paragraph 6 of the complaint. If the defendant denies having received said notice or alleges that the notice was not in proper form, it may be raised in the defendant's answer as a matter of defense. It is not properly raised as a preliminary objection.

[Constitutionality]

The third and final preliminary objection of the defendant attacks the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act of 1935, and its amendments, the Act of 1935, supra. The defendant alleges that the Statute is unconstitutional as to non-signers of sale agreement with the manufacturer. The Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act of 1935 supra, and its amendments, was declared constitutional in the case of Burche v. General Electric Company [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370, in so far as it applies to non-signers of sales agreements products in interstate commerce. Statutes of this nature had been declared unconstitutional in their application to non-signers of sales agreements engaged in interstate commerce in the case of Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distillery Corporation [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384. The statutes were declared in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

In 1952, Congress amended the Federal Trade Commission Act by a statute known as the McGuire Amendment for the express purpose of setting aside the ruling in Schwegmann Brothers & Calvert Distillery Corporation, supra. This amendment made Fair Trade Practice Acts such as the Pennsylvania Statute of 1935, supra, constitutional as to sale of products in interstate commerce.

The constitutionality of the McGuire Act has not been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. The preponderance of opinion in the lower Federal Courts has sustained its constitutionality. For this reason, this preliminary objection is overruled.

And now, March 4, 1957, the defendant's preliminary objections are overruled and defendant is granted twenty days from this date to file an answer on the merits.

And now, March 4, 1957, on motion of W. J. Krencewicz, Esq., attorney for defendant, an exception is allowed.

[¶ 68,656] United States v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Equity 87-273. Filed March 19, 1957.

Case No. 434 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Consent Decree—Intervention.—An operator of motion picture theatres was not permitted to intervene in a Government antitrust action in which an application for additional time to dispose of certain theatre interests was pending. Since this was an action pursuant to Section 4 of the Sherman Act, and hence enforced by the United States in the public interest, intervention by private persons must be denied for reasons of sound public policy. The retention of jurisdiction clauses of the final decrees entered in the action exclude intervention by private persons. Also, the operator's request to be heard as amicus curiae was denied.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8381, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice.

For the intervenor: Socolow, Stein & Seton (Monroe E. Stein, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Syndicate Theatres, Inc.

For the applicants: O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery (Edward C. Raftery, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Lucille A. Reagan and Charles M. Reagan.

For a consent decree entered in the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,228.

[Intervention]

PALMIERI, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion by Syndicate Theatres, Inc., (Syndicate) an Indiana corporation, to intervene, pursuant to Rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, in the pending application of Lucille A. Reagan, and her husband, Charles M. Reagan, for additional time to dispose of Mrs. Reagan's stock in Denham Theatres, Inc.

[Disposition of Theatre Interests]

Charles M. Reagan is General Sales Manager of Loew's, Inc. Mrs. Reagan has a 50% interest in a first-run theatre in Denver, Colorado, and a 25% interest in four first-run theatres in Indianapolis, Indiana, through ownership of 50% of the stock of Denham Theatres, Inc. At the time of the entry of judgment in this action, an undertaking was secured requiring the disposition of Mrs. Reagan's interest in these theatres by February 6, 1955. The purpose of this undertaking was to eliminate any preferment of these theatres in the licensing of pictures distributed by Loew's, Inc. Extensions of time have been heretofore granted and on adequate grounds. The present posture of the matter is that there is a pending application for a further extension of time beyond April 6, 1957, for the disposition of Mrs. Reagan's stock in Denham Theatres, Inc. It should be noted that the licensing of any Loew's pictures at the Regan threatres has been subjected to continuous scrutiny by the Attorney General and has been so restricted as to provide competitors with advantages which perhaps exceed those contemplated by the judgment and undertaking.

[Intervenor]

Syndicate, the proposed intervenor, does not operate any theatres either in Denver, Colorado, or in Indianapolis, Indiana. It asserts that it operates motion picture theatres in cities located from 20 to 80 miles outside of Indianapolis. It is also plaintiff in a private antitrust suit pending in the Southern District of Indiana, in which Loew's Inc. is one of the defendants.

Mr. and Mrs. Reagan oppose granting intervention to Syndicate, and further oppose its being permitted to appear as amicus curiae. The Attorney General opposes intervention by Syndicate but does not oppose its being heard as amicus curiae.

[Indiana Suit]

An examination of the pleadings in the private antitrust suit pending in the Indiana District Court indicates that a substantial basis for the proposed intervention by Syndicate here rests upon several of the allegations and charges contained in its complaint in the Indiana action. Inasmuch as that action is being actively litigated and will be tried before a jury demanded by Syndicate, I cannot escape the conclusion that Syndicate's application for intervention is motivated by its desire to give aid and comfort to its position in its private antitrust suit in Indiana. Moreover, a very considerable and unwarranted inconvenience would be foisted upon the litigants as well as the Courts if Syndicate were permitted, in effect, to accomplish simultaneous litigation of the same issues before two district courts.

[Federal Rules]

Rule 1 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that the rules be construed so as "to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action." Quite the opposite result would be reached by the granting of intervention here, since Loew's Inc. would be compelled to meet the same issues in two distant courts at the same time. I cannot conceive of any useful purpose being served by such a procedure. But it is plain that the occasions for harassment, delay and inconvenience would be innumerable.

[Government Decree]

Moreover, the retention of jurisdiction clauses of the final decrees entered on February 8, 1950, and substantially incorporated in the consent judgment as to Loew's, Inc. provide:

> "Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this decree, and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief."

Clearly, intervention such as that now sought was expressly excluded by these clauses. Since this is an action pursuant to Section 4 of the Sherman Act, and hence enforced by the United States in the public interest, intervention by private persons must be denied for reasons of sound public policy. See United States v. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,898], 11 F. R. D. 511 (S. D. N. Y. 1951); United States v. Bendix Home Applicances [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,546], 10 F. R. D. 73 (S. D. N. Y. 1949); United States v. General Electric Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,731], 95 F. Supp. 165 (D. N. J. 1950). Intervention in the Paramount case has been denied on a number of occasions on the same grounds. United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 176-78 (1948); Sutphen Estates, Inc. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,936], 342 U. S. 19 (1951); Partmar Corp. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,497], 338 U. S. 804 (1949).

In United States v. Loew's, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,220], 136 F. Supp. 13 (S. D. N. Y. 1955), intervention was denied to an exhibitor allegedly in competition with Loew's, Inc. on the basis of the retention of jurisdiction clauses hereinabove quoted.

Intervention in this complex litigation by Syndicate will tend to prolong and protract the proceedings. Moreover, it will inflict an additional and heavy burden upon the Government and impair its control over these proceedings.

It is plain that if intervention were permitted, it could not be of right, but only by permission of the Court. Rule 24(b) enjoins the Court, in exercising its discretion, to "consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties." For the reasons indicated, permission must therefore be withheld.

[Right To Be Heard]

I have considered the alternative of permitting the proposed intervenor to be heard as amicus curiae, and I feel constrained to decline to do so; first, because it has made plain that it seeks nothing short of the opportunity to conduct what it terms "a vigorous adversary proceeding" under circumstances which would effectively displace the Attorney General as vindicator of the public interest; and second, because its effectiveness as amicus curiae is impaired in view of its current position as an adverse party litigant in the private antitrust suit in Indiana.

Motion denied. Submit order on notice.

[¶ 68,657] Connie G. Sheffield v. The Texas Company.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana, Shreveport Division. Civil Action No. 5458. Filed March 4, 1957.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Sufficiency of Complaint.—A complaint in a private antitrust action was dismissed on the same grounds that the complaint in Alexander v. Texas Co., 1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,643, was dismissed. Except for non-essential differences in dates, the amount of alleged price discrimination, gallonage handled, location of the service station, and identity of parties with whom the defendant allegedly conspired to fix prices, the averments in the instant complaint were substantially the same as those in the Alexander case.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol 1, ¶ 2005.355, 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720; Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.365, 3505.390; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.170, 9009.275, 9009.475, 9011.200, 9011.640.

For the plaintiff: Malcolm E. Lafargue, Shreveport, La.

For the defendant: John T. Guyton, of Hargrove, Guyton, Van Hook and Hargrove, Shreveport, La.; A. B. Steed, New York, N. Y.; and Jack D. Childers, Houston, Tex.

Ruling on Motion to Dismiss

[Complaint Dismissed]

BEN C. DAWKINS, JR., Chief Judge [In full text]: Except for non-essential differences in dates, the amount of alleged price discrimination, gallonage handled, location of the service station, and identity of parties with whom defendant allegedly conspired to fix prices, the averments of this complaint are substantially the same, and it contains the same defects and inadequacies, as those found in "Alexander v. The Texas Company" No. 5432 on our docket [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,643], upon which we rendered a decision granting an identical motion to dismiss on March 1, 1957.

For the same reasons as given in that opinion, a copy of which is attached hereto, we find that this complaint, as now presented, fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss will be granted, with leave to plaintiff to file a supplemental and amended complaint within thirty days.

[¶ 68,658] Sperry Rand Corporation v. Nassau Research and Development Associates, Inc. and John C. McGregor.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil No. 16151. Dated February 26, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defenses—Filing of Counterclaim.—Defendants were permitted to file an amended answer and counterclaim, which purported to set up claims against the plaintiff for violation of the Sherman Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and the Clayton Antitrust Act, on the condition that they serve and file an amended answer and counterclaim which complies with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9046.

For the plaintiff: Campbell, Brumbaugh, Free & Graves.

For the defendants: Smith & Auslander.

[Amended Answer and Counterclaim]

RAYFIEL, District Judge [In full text]: The defendants move, pursuant to Rule 13(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for leave to serve and file an amended answer and counterclaim.

The proposed amended pleading purports to set up counterclaims against the plaintiff for violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, Title 15 U. S. C. Section 1, et seq; the Robinson-Patman Act, Title 15 U. S. C. Section 13, and the Clayton Act, Title 15, U. S. C. Section 15 et seq.

Although the affidavit submitted by the attorney for the defendants in support of the motion could well have been more extensive, a liberal interpretation of the rules obliges me to grant the relief sought. However, a reading of the proposed counterclaim reveals that it is so indefinite, and so utterly lacking in specificity as to be defective on its face.

[Motion Granted]

Accordingly, the motion is granted, with the proviso, however, that the defendants serve and file, within twenty days after the entry of the order herein, as amended answer and counterclaim which complies with the Rules. This is without prejudice, of course, to the plaintiff's right to make any appropriate motion with respect to such amended answer and counterclaim.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 68,659] Quality Oil Company, Inc. v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Co., et al.

In the Kansas District Court, Shawnee County, Third Division. No. 78302. Filed January 7, 1957.

Kansas Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality—Kansas Fair Trade Act.—A trial court ruled that the Kansas Fair Trade Act could not be declared unconstitutional for any of the reasons advanced by a plaintiff.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3085.

For the plaintiff: Raines, Glenn & Cornish, Topeka, Kan.

For the defendants: Lillard, Eidson, Lewis & Porter, Topeka, Kan.

[Briefs]

DEAN MCELHENNY, District Judge [In full text]: On June 13, 1956, the above case was tried upon a stipulation of fact contained in pleadings. At that time the case was argued and taken under advisement, each side being given time to serve and file briefs. Voluminous briefs were eventually filed by both sides. I have finally had an opportunity to study and consider the briefs and authorities cited.

[Constitutionality]

The case involves the constitutionality of the Kansas Fair Trade Act found in General Statutes of 1949, 50-301 through 50-309. Plaintiff claims the Act unconstitutional for the four (4) reasons mentioned in its brief.

I have carefully considered all the reasons suggested, argued and briefed by the plaintiff and have concluded that the Act cannot be declared unconstitutional for any of the reasons advanced by the plaintiff. Judgment is therefore being entered for the defendant this date as well as judgment for the defendant for its costs.

[Order]

Proper Journal Entry should be submitted for signature. The original of this letter is being filed with the Clerk of District Court so that it will become a part of the record.

[¶ 68,660] Norman M. Morris Corporation v. Hess Brothers, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 11,966. Argued November 15, 1956. Filed March 26, 1957.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

McGuire Act and Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality—McGuire Act.—A nonsigner's contention that the McGuire Act, insofar as it exempts nonsigner provisions of state fair trade laws from the effect of the Sherman Antitrust Act, is unconstitutional was rejected. The nonsigner based its contention on Sunbeam Corp. v. Richardson, et al., 1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,407, wherein it was held that the McGuire Act contravenes the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution because it seeks to impose fixed prices upon nonsigners.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3040.20.

Fair Trade—Constitutionality—Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.—A nonsigner's contention that, if the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act is interpreted to authorize one who is not the owner of a trade-mark to stipulate a resale price binding upon a nonsigner, the Act violates the Constitutions of the United States and Pennsylvania was rejected. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has held that the Pennsylvania Act is constitutional, and a Federal court is bound by that determination. The fact that the owner of a trade-mark stipulated the resale price in the case determined by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court was held to be without significance. Also, the United States Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of a state fair trade law substantially identical to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3085.40, 3258.40.

Fair Trade—Person Who May Establish Fair Trade Prices—Seller of Commodity.—An exclusive distributor of a manufacturer's trade-marked watches for the entire United States may stipulate fair trade prices for such watches under the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, which does not specify the person who may stipulate the resale price beyond the word "vendor." The word "vendor" in the Pennsylvania Act is broad enough to include such a distributor. The party stipulating such prices was the exclusive distributor of the trade-marked watches over the entire United States, the distribution of such watches was the distributor's only business, and the distributor expended sums of money to enhance the value of the good will attached to the trade-mark. Therefore, any lessening of the value of this good will affected the distributor adversely. An exclusive distributor over the entire United States, by virtue of his very franchise, is impliedly authorized by the owner of the trade-mark to set the resale price. The Pennsylvania Act does not require a specific authorization from the owner of the trade-mark.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3170.

For the appellant: Irving Coleman, Northampton, Pa.

For the appellee: Thomas A. Rothwell, New York, N. Y.

Before BIGGS, Chief Judge, and McLAUGHLIN and STALEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Fair Trade Action]

By STALEY, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Defendant has appealed from the issuance of a preliminary injunction restraining it from selling trade-marked "Omega" watch products at prices below those stipulated by plaintiff such course of conduct being made actionable by the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

The facts are virtually without dispute. Plaintiff, a New York corporation, is the exclusive distributor in the United States of "Omega" watches. It neither produces the watches nor owns the trade-mark. Defendant, a Pennsylvania corporation, is the owner of a department store in Allentown, Pennsylvania. Plaintiff entered into a number of resale price contracts with various retail dealers in which it stipulated the minimum prices at which "Omega" watches might be sold. It appears that the price stipulation was initiated by the plaintiff alone, and not by the producer or owner of the mark. Defendant did not sign any contract with plaintiff but was fully aware of the minimum prices. Defendant also knowingly advertised for sale and sold "Omega" watches at prices lower than the resale prices stipulated by plaintiff.

[Defenses]

Appellant makes three salient contentions. First, it argues that the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act authorizes only the producer or owner of the trade-mark to stipulate fair trade prices, and not an exclusive distributor. Next, it argues that if a distributor is authorized to stipulate the resale price, then the Act contravenes both the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and that of the United States. Third, it contends that the McGuire Act, which exempts nonsigner provisions from the effect of the Sherman Antitrust Act, is unconstitutional.

[Fair Trade—History]

Brief allusion to the historical development of Fair Trade Acts is expedient at the threshhold of this discussion. In 1911, the United States Supreme Court in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 407-408, struck down an agreement to maintain resale prices as an unlawful restraint of trade violative of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 et seq. (1952 ed.). It was decided that vertical price fixing between manufacturer and retailer is equivalent in effect to horizontal price fixing among the retailers themselves, and therefore against public policy. It was intimated in the opinion that vertical price fixing might be valid if authorized by statute.[1]

The economic depression of the thirties, with its attendant price cutting and "loss-leader" practices at the retail level, prompted state legislatures to enact Fair Trade statutes for the avowed purpose of maintaining resale prices and rescuing small business from failure which it was thought would otherwise inevitably follow. The early statutes purported to bind only signers of resale price maintenance contracts. Underselling by those who did not sign such contracts threatened to frustrate the purpose of the Fair Trade Acts, so that today every operative state statute contains a nonsigner clause. This clause binds every vendee to sell at the minimum price or more whether or not he has signed a contract with the supplier, provided only that he have knowledge that the supplier has entered into a price stipulation contract with any vendee. This concept, alien to the law, whereby a person may be bound by a contract to which he did not give assent, indicates the desperation which impelled state legislatures in their struggle to combat a disastrous depression.

In Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram-Distillers Corp. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,144], 299 U. S. 183, 198 (1936), the Supreme Court upheld the Illinois Fair Trade Act,[2] including its nonsigner provision, as affording "a legitimate remedy for an injury to the good will which results from the use of trade-marks, brands or names * * *." As an appropriate exercise of state police power in protecting the supplier's continuing property interest from price-cutting and "loss-leader" practices, the Court held that the act violated neither the due process nor the equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Sherman Act was changed by the Miller-Tydings Amendment, 15 U. S. C. § 1 (1952 ed.), which validated resale price maintenance contracts in interstate commerce, thus placing them beyond the sanctions of the Sherman Antitrust Act. It was thought that the amendment affected nonsigners as well as signers; however, the Supreme Court in Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384 (1951), decided that the Miller-Tydings Amendment applied only to consensual contracts and not to nonsigner provisions. In 1952, the McGuire Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a)(3) (1952 ed.), specifically exempted nonsigner provisions from the Sherman Act.

[Distributor's Right To Fix Prices]

We proceed now to discuss the question of whether an exclusive distributor for the entire United States may stipulate fair-trade prices in Pennsylvania, or whether the pricing program may be initiated only by a producer or owner of the identifying mark or brand. The Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act has been characterized as an "old-type" statute in that it does not specify who may stipulate the resale price beyond the word "vendor." The pertinent provisions of the Pennsylvania Act follow:

"§ 1. Sale of goods bearing, or vending equipment of which bears trade-mark, etc.; permissible provisions

"No contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or content of which bears, or the vending equipment from which said commodity is sold to the consumer bears the trade-mark, brand or the name of the producer or owner of such commodity, and which is in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others, shall be deemed in violation of any law of the State of Pennsylvania by reason of any of the following provisions which may be contained in such contract:

[1] "Nor can the manufacturer by rule and notice, in the absence of contract or statutory right, even though the restrictions be known to purchasers, fix prices for future sales." Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 405 (1911), emphasis supplied.

[2] Old Dearborn construed the Illinois Fair Trade Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. 1935, p. 3091, c. 140, ¶ 8 et seq., Smith-Hurd Annot. Stat. c. 121½, § 188 et seq. It is substantially identical to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

"(a) That the buyer will not resell such commodity, except at the price stipulated by the vendor.

* * *

"§ 2. Unfair competition, defined

"Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale, or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of section one of this act, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale, or selling is, or is not, a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of such vendor, buyer or purchaser of such commodity." Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266, §§ 1 & 2, as amended June 12, 1941, P. L. 128, No. 66, § 1, 73 Purdon's Pa. Stat. Annot. §§ 7 & 8.

The Pennsylvania Act, in providing that the "vendor" may initiate the pricing program, is similar to the statutes of twenty-four other states. See 1 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS ¶ 3003. The "new-type" statutes provide, typically, that the resale price may be stipulated only by the owner of the trade-mark or by a distributor specifically authorized to establish said price by the owner of such trade-mark. Twenty-two states have adopted the "new-type" statute. Our research discloses no Pennsylvania case deciding whether the word "vendor" includes an exclusive distributor. Several other jurisdictions with statutes similar to Pennsylvania have discussed the problem. Appellant urges for our consideration a lower court opinion from New York, Automotive Electric Service Corp. v. Times Square Stores Corp., 175 Misc. 865, 24 N. Y. S. 2d 733 (Supreme Ct., 1940), in which it was held that a distributor of spark plugs may not stipulate fair-trade prices. The holding of that case must be confined to its factual situation; it appeared that plaintiff was only one of more than a dozen distributors for the State of New York alone. It was the fear that each might stipulate a different price which prompted this decision.[3] There are indications that the court would have reached a different result if the plaintiff were an exclusive distributor over a large area.[4] In Bourjois Sales Corp. v. Dorfman [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,155], 273 N. Y. 167, 7 N. E. 2d 30, 110 A. L. R. 1411 (1937), plaintiff was exclusive distributor for the State of New York and defendant was a nonsigner who sold below prices stipulated by plaintiff. The lower court had dismissed the complaint, although the Supreme Court of the United States at its October Term had decided Old Dearborn which, as we have said, held that a distributor may stipulate resale prices binding upon nonsigners with knowledge without constitutional violation. The New York Court of Appeals, feeling bound by Old Dearborn, reversed the lower court judgment. It would seem that in New York an exclusive distributor may stipulate resale prices, at least where he was authorized to do so by the owner of the trade-mark.[5] Continental Distilling Sales Co. v. Famous Wines & Liquors, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,267], 274 App. Div. 713, 80 N. Y. S. 2d 62 (Supreme Ct., App. Div. 1948).

The position of New Jersey, which also has a similar statute, is made clear by the court syllabus in Frank Fischer Merchandising Corp. v. Ritz Drug Co., 129 N. J. Eq. 105, 19 A. 2d 454, 455 (Ch. 1941):

"1. Price maintenance contracts made under the Fair Trade Act * * * by a distributor of products sold under the trade-mark of a manufacturer or producer are valid although the distributor acts without the authority or consent of the owner of the trade-mark. Schenley Products Co. v. Franklin Stores Co., 124 N. J. Eq. 100, 199 A. 402, followed."

---

[3] The court stated the rationale of the case at 24 N. Y. S. 2d 740: To permit the distributor to establish the retail price "would produce intolerable confusion and very largely defeat the purpose of the statute, for if a person other than such owner can do it then a hundred others may do it and each may fix different prices. Under such a holding the owner of the trade-mark might find his prices fixed for him by the very cut-raters against whom the statute aims to protect such owner."

[4] The court found it necessary to distinguish the opinion of Bourjois Sales Corp. v. Dorfman, [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,155], 273 N. Y. 167, 7 N. E. 2d 30, 110 A. L. R. 1411 (1937), in which the New York Court of Appeals reversed the dismissal of a fair trade complaint. At 24 N. Y. S. 2d 739, the court said the case being considered differed from Bourjois in that there "the plaintiff had the sole and exclusive right to use in the State of New York the trademarks, * * * and also that the plaintiff was the owner of the business and the good will in the State of New York associated with the sale and distribution of said articles. Record on Appeal, fols. 29, 30."

[5] It will be observed that this result reads into an "old-type" act the "new-type" provision that a distributor may establish resale prices if he is specifically authorized by the owner of the mark. A lower court in Wisconsin reached the same conclusion. Hiram Walker, Inc. v. Goldman (Wisc. Cir., Milwaukee County, 1938) 1 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS ¶ 3172.53.

In New Jersey, then, any distributor may stipulate resale price regardless of whether he was authorized to do so by the owner of the trade-mark.[6]

One of the ostensible purposes of a Fair Trade Act is to protect the good will inherent in a trade-marked brand from what is considered uneconomic practices, deemed in one way or another to lessen the value of the commodity in the eyes of the public. This being so, its provisions inure to the benefit of those persons affected by the diminution in the value of the good will. In most situations, this will be the producer or owner of the trade-mark. However, it is quite apparent that an exclusive distributor for a large geographic area would be affected quite seriously by the value of the good will inherent in the trade-mark.[7] In the case under consideration here, for example, plantiff is the exclusive distributor of "Omega" watches over the entire United States. This is plaintiff's only business, and the annual sales run to several million dollars. It spends approximately $750,000 a year in advertising, designed to enhance the value of the good will attached to the "Omega" name. Certainly, any lessening of the value of this good will affects plaintiff adversely.

We do not consider it of any importance that the owner of the trade-mark here did not initiate the resale price maintenance contracts, or that the record does not disclose that the owner specifically authorized plaintiff to do so, for the Pennsylvania statute, unlike the "new-type" act, does not require specific authorization. We are of the opinion that an exclusive distributor over the entire United States,[8] by virtue of his very franchise, is impliedly authorized by the owner of the mark to set the resale price (see 1 Callmann, Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks, 2d ed. 1950, § 24.1(b), pages 468-469), and that the term "vendor" in the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act is broad enough to embrace the plaintiff.

[Constitutionality]

The second principal contention urged by appellant is that if the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act is interpreted to authorize one who is not the producer or owner of the mark to stipulate a resale price binding upon a nonsigner, then the Act violates the Constitutions both of Pennsylvania and the United States.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court in Burche Co. v. General Electric Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370, 115 A. 2d 361 (1955), held the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act constitutional, and insofar as Pennsylvania's highest court interprets its own constitution, we are bound by that determination. It is contended, however, that in both the Burche case and the Old Dearborn case the owner of the mark set the resale price. That is accurate as to the Burche case; it is not accurate as to the Old Dearborn case, for in the latter it was the distributor who set the price. 299 U. S. at pages 186-187.[9] The distinction nonetheless is without significance for Old Dearborn decided that a distributor had a proprietary interest in the trade-mark and could stipulate the resale prices against nonsigners without violating the due process or equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, and it was the existence of

[6] This broad interpretation of the "vendor" who may stipulate fair trade prices is shared by a lower court in California. Parrott & Co. v. Somerset House, Inc. (Calif. Super. for Los Angeles, 1937), 1 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS ¶ 3170.05. The court there said: "The statute is sufficiently broad to include any contract made by any owner with any vendee."

[7] The Supreme Court in Old Dearborn alluded to the fact that a distributor has a proprietary interest in the good will created by the trade-mark: "* * * Good will is a valuable contributing aid to business—sometimes the most valuable contributing asset of the producer or distributor of commodities." 299 U. S. at p. 194. By way of comparison, see also Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos & Rubber Works, 257 Fed. 937 (C. A. 2), cert. denied, 250 U. S. 644 (1919), where the court decided that an exclusive United States distributor for a foreign manufacturer had enough interest to register the trade-mark as its own.

[8] There is no basis here for the fear expressed in some decisions that various distributors may stipulate different prices and thereby render a fair trade act a travesty of its purpose. Here the plaintiff is the exclusive and sole distributor.

[9] Old Dearborn decided two cases considered together. The reports in the Illinois Supreme Court discuss the facts more fully and indicate clearly that it was the distributor who fixed the resale price and not the producer or owner of the trade-mark. See Joseph Triner Corp. v. McNeill, 363 Ill. 559, 2 N. E. 2d 929, 930-931 (1936). At pages 937 the court said: "* * * Vertical price maintenance merely enables a producer, or his distributor, to set a price at which the trade-marked commodity shall be sold to the consumer." See also Seagram-Distillers Corp. v. Old Dearborn Distributing Co., 363 Ill. 610, 2 N. E. 2d 940, 941 (1936), as an indication again that it was the distributor, and not the producer, who stipulated the resale price.

such a proprietary interest which was the basis of the Burche decision.

Appellant intimates that Schwegmann invites us to restudy the economic foundation of Fair Trade Acts.[10] It is true that the Schwegmann case used strong language in criticizing the nonsignor provisions in interstate commerce,[11] but until Old Dearborn is overruled it remains the law and we are bound by it. See Sunbeam Corp. v. Wentling [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,739], 185 F. 2d 903 (C. A. 3, 1950).

The constitutionality of the McGuire Act is also challenged by appellant. The attack is based on reasoning expressed in the case of Sunbeam Corp. v. Richardson [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,407], 144 F. Supp. 583, 592 (W. D. Ky. 1956). There the court held:

> "* * * [N]either the McGuire Act nor the Fair Trade Statute of Kentucky is a lawful exercise of the police power. The portion of the McGuire Act which seeks to impose fixed prices upon nonsigners of contracts contravenes these constitutional provisions [the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments] and is invalid."

The court felt free to hold this, because it was of the opinion that Old Dearborn was concerned only with the signers of fair trade contracts, and therefore not controlling as to nonsigners. With this we do not agree. Although Old Dearborn concerned a defendant who did in fact sign a resale contract, the defendant questioned the contract's validity, and the Supreme Court assumed, for purposes of decision, that he was a nonsigner. It said, at 299 U. S. 187:

> "* * * The contract was assailed by appellant below [defendant] as ineffective, and for present purposes we accept that view. It is plain enough, however, that appellant had knowledge of the original contractual restrictions and that they constituted conditions upon which sales thereafter were to be made."

This quotation, attended by the over-all rationale of the opinion based upon a continuing property right in the good will proprietor, not dependent upon contract, indicates to us that the case decided the question of constitutionality as to both signers and informed dealers alike.[12] See Sunbeam Corp. v. Wentling [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,739], 185 F. 2d 903, 905 (C. A. 3, 1950), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 341 U. S. 944 (1951) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,840], 192 F. 2d 7 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,935], (C. A. 3, 1951).

[Intrastate Transactions]

We do not now consider the problem which confronted us in Sunbeam Corp. v.

---

[10] The Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (March 31, 1955), page 154, concluded that the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Act amendments should be repealed:

"* * * [T]he throttling of price competition in the process of distribution that attends 'Fair Trade' pricing is, in our opinion, a deplorable yet inevitable concomitant of federal exemptive laws. Moreover, whatever may be the underlying legislative intent, any operative 'Fair Trade' system facilitates horizontal price-fixing efforts on the manufacturing and each succeeding distributive level. And the prominent existence of a federal price-fixing exemption not only symbolizes a radical departure from National antitrust policy without commensurate gains, but extends an invitation for further encroachment on the free-market philosopy that the antitrust laws subserve.

"We therefore recommend Congressional repeal both of the Miller-Tydings amendment to the Sherman Act and the McGuire amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act, thereby subjecting resale-price maintenance, as other price-fixing practices, to those Federal antitrust controls which safeguard the public by keeping the channels of distribution free." See also Note, 16 U. of Pitt. L. Rev. 50 (1954).

[11] "* * * If a distributor and one or more retailers want to agree, combine, or conspire to fix a minimum price, they can do so if state law permits. Their contract, combination, or conspiracy—hitherto illegal—is made lawful. They can fix minimum prices pursuant to their contract or agreement with impunity. When they seek, however, to impose price fixing on persons who have not contracted or agreed to the scheme, the situation is vastly different. That is not price fixing by contract or agreement; that is price fixing by compulsion. That is not following the path of consensual agreement; that is resort to coercion.

"* * * Therefore, when a state compels retailers to follow a parallel price policy, it demands private conduct which the Sherman Act forbids. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U. S. 341, 350. Elimination of price competition at the retail level may, of course, lawfully result if a distributor successfully negotiates individual 'vertical' agreements with all his retailers. But when retailers are forced to abandon price competition, they are driven into a compact in violation of the spirit of the proviso which forbids 'horizontal' price fixing. A real sanction can be given the prohibition of the proviso only if the price maintenance power granted a distributor is limited to voluntary engagements. * * *" Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 388-389 (1951) (italics in original).

[12] On the general question of the constitutionality of the Fair Trade Acts and the McGuire Act, see Schwegmann Bros. Giant Super Markets v. Eli Lilly & Co., [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,516], 205 F. 2d 788 (C. A. 5), cert. denied, 346 U. S. 856 (1953).

Wentling [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,739], 185 F. 2d 903, that is, the applicability of the Pennsylvania statute to interstate transactions, for the injunction in question is limited to "intrastate transactions."

[Affirmed]

For the foregoing reasons, the issuance of the preliminary injunction will be affirmed.

[¶ 68,661] United Grocers' Company v. Sau-Sea Foods, Inc., and Ernest Schoenbrum and Abraham Kaplan, doing business as Shore Distributors.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 114-365. Filed March 22, 1957.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Price Discrimination—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Two Purchasers.—Where it could be inferred from a distributor's complaint that a processor and its selling agent would sell their products to a distributor only on the condition that the distributor adhere to their suggested resale prices, the distributor might argue that the defendants were discriminating in price because they sold their products to others without imposing that condition. However, no cause of action for unlawful price discrimination was stated since the plaintiff distributor did not allege that any other purchaser of the defendants was treated differently.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.585.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Refusal to Deal.—A distributor, by alleging a conspiracy between a processor and its selling agent to create an unreasonable restraint of trade and to fix the resale prices at which their products would be sold by the distributor, did not sufficiently charge that the defendants had gone beyond the mere refusal to sell to those who would not observe the suggested retail prices and had, by contracts or combinations, unduly hindered or obstructed the free flow of commerce. The phrase "in furtherance of their conspiracy to create an unreasonable restraint of trade" was merely a conclusion in the language of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce.—A distributor's complaint, alleging that a processor and its selling agent violated the antitrust laws when they refused to sell to the distributor unless it adhered to the resale prices suggested by them, was held insufficient on the ground that interstate commerce was not adequately alleged. The complaint merely alleged that the products sold by the defendants were shipped and distributed in interstate commerce. The fact that the defendants distributed some of the product, which they allegedly refused to sell to the distributor, in interstate commerce would not be sufficient to bring under Federal jurisdiction their relations with the distributor, if the product was not distributed to the distributor or to the distributor's customers in interstate commerce.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.600.

For the plaintiff: Manes, Sturim, Donovan & Laufer, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Louis G. Greenfield, New York, N. Y.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,639.

Opinion

[Motion To Dismiss]

DIMOCK, District Judge [In full text]: According to an allegation of the complaint, this action arises under sections 13 and 15 of title 15 of the United States Code. Section 13 is that part of the Clayton Act which makes unlawful price discriminations the effect of which may be substantially to lessen competition, tend to create a monopoly or injure competition. Section 15 is the section which gives a private right of action for threefold damages. Defendants move that the complaint be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) F. R. C. P. and Rule 12(h)(2) on the grounds that it fails to state a claim under which relief can be granted and it appears that the Court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Plaintiff opposes the motion on the ground that a motion by defendant for summary judgment has already been denied. It was denied, however, on the ground that issues of fact were presented. It may well be that issues of fact were joined by the parties in affidavits submitted on the motion for summary judgment without there being any statement in the complaint of a claim on which relief could be granted and without the Court's having jurisdiction of the subject matter. It does not appear from the Court's opinion that it accepted the complaint as defining plaintiff's charge. Indeed, in stating plaintiff's charge, the Court included material not alleged in the complaint and which must have been obtained from plaintiff's affidavits and a deposition of one of plaintiff's officers which were before the Court. The sufficiency of the allegations of the complaint have thus not been passed upon and the way is open for the prosecution of this motion to dismiss the complaint.

[Defendants]

The complaint alleges that defendant corporation, with its principal place of business in Yonkers, New York, at all of the times therein mentioned, manufactured, packed, processed and distributed certain frozen food products, among which were frozen shrimp; that the two individual defendants, at all such times, were partners, with their principal place of business with defendant corporation, and were engaged in the sale and distribution of frozen foods.

[Plaintiff]

Plaintiff, with its principal place of business in Brooklyn, New York, is alleged to be engaged in the business of distributing frozen food products to over 5,000 small independent retail food merchants who are in active competition with other larger units owned and operated by chain store corporations. The complaint says that plaintiff, at all the times therein mentioned was and is in competition with other distributors of frozen food products and "is required to" purchase on equal terms with other buyers of the same class free from discriminatory trade practices; that it is essential to plaintiff's business that it be enabled to supply its said customers prices low enough to permit competition with large chain store retail operators.

[Alleged Cause of Action]

Plaintiff alleges that, from April 10, 1956, to July 10, 1956, it purchased from individual defendants, as the sales agents of corporate defendant, packages of frozen shrimp; that on or about May 21, 1956, "in accordance with plaintiff's policy as aforementioned", it reduced its price to its customers from $4.60 per dozen packages to $4.15 per dozen, which price was above cost plus a reasonable mark-up.

Then come paragraphs 11, 12 and 14 which contain every word in the complaint addressed to the statement of any legal wrong committed by defendants. They follow:

> "11. That defendants, acting in concert with other persons engaged in the business of distributing frozen food products, on or after the 21st day of May, 1956, objected to the price at which plaintiff sold the said commodities and requested and demanded of plaintiff that it increase its price to the suggested resale price of $4.60 per dozen, to which demands and requests plaintiff refused to accede."
>
> "12. That defendants, acting in concert and in furtherance of their conspiracy to create an unreasonable restraint of trade and to fix the resale price at which the said commodities would be sold by plaintiff, in violation of the aforesaid Section 13 of Title 15 of the United States Code Annotated, refused and still refuses to sell to plaintiff any of the aforedescribed products, and that plaintiff is and continues to be injured and damaged in its business by reason thereof."
>
> "14. That the aforesaid products manufactured, processed, distributed and sold by defendants are products shipped and distributed in interstate commerce."

I cannot but think that the draftsman of these paragraphs was proceeding under the rule of Dioguardi v. Durning, 2 Cir., 139 F. 2d 774, and was unfamiliar with the host of cases * which require that the complaint in an antitrust case state a cause of action instead of merely stating a claim.

[Price Discrimination]

The pleader does not tell us who the other persons were with whom defendants acted in concert in objecting to plaintiff's reduced price and demanding that the suggested price be restored.

He next alleges that "defendants, acting in concert and in furtherance of their conspiracy to create an unreasonable restraint of trade and to fix the resale price at which the said commodities would be sold by plaintiff" refused to sell to plaintiff. This is the first time that it is charged that defendants acted in conspiracy.

No connection between defendants' conspiracy to restrain trade and fix prices, on the one hand, and the competitive position of plaintiff and plaintiff's customers on the other, is alleged or suggested. It is not alleged that defendants knew anything about plaintiff's competitive position.

We have the bare allegation that defendant corporation and defendants its selling agents, acting in concert with other persons in the business, objected to plaintiff's price cut and demanded the restoration of a suggested price and that defendants, presumably after the refusal to restore the price, refused to sell to plaintiff in furtherance of a conspiracy between them to create an unreasonable restraint of trade and to fix the resale price. Construing the complaint with great liberality one might say that it alleged that defendant seller and defendants sales agents conspired to restrain trade and fix the resale price of the frozen shrimp that they sold and that, on plaintiff's refusal to adhere to the resale price that they suggested, they refused to sell to plaintiff. From this one might infer that defendants would sell to plaintiff on condition that plaintiff adhere to the resale price. So, if it were alleged that defendants sold to others without imposing that condition, it might be argued that defendants were "discriminating" in price between different purchasers contrary to section 13 relied on by plaintiff. There is, however, no suggestion in the complaint that any other purchaser is treated differently.

[Conspiracy]

While there is thus no cause of action stated under section 13 on which plaintiff purports to rely, plaintiff's allegations, by employing the words "conspiracy to create an unreasonable restraint of trade," hint at some wrong under section 1, the Sherman Act, which makes such conspiracy illegal.

As Mr. Justice Day said in Federal Trade Comm. v. Beech-Nut Co., 257 U. S. 441, 452, "it is settled that in prosecutions under the Sherman Act a trader is not guilty of violating its terms who simply refuses to sell to others, and he may withhold his goods from those who will not sell them at the prices which he fixes for their resale." That is not the whole story, however. Mr. Justice Day went on, "He may not, consistently with the act, go beyond the exercise of this right, and by contracts or combinations, express or implied, unduly hinder or obstruct the free and natural flow of commerce in the channels of interstate trade." That latter statement raises the question before me: has plaintiff by alleging, in those bare words, a conspiracy between corporate defendant and its selling agents to "create an unreasonable restraint of trade and to fix the resale price at which the said commodities would be sold by plaintiff" sufficiently charged that defendants have gone beyond the mere refusal to sell to those who will not observe the suggested retail prices and have by contracts or combinations, express or implied, unduly hindered or obstructed the free and natural flow of commerce.

There is nothing in the pleading to suggest this except the words "in furtherance of their conspiracy to create an unreasonable restraint of trade." That is the most naked of conclusions and a conclusion in the language of the statute is insufficient as a pleading. Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Admiral Corporation, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,046], 132 F. Supp. 150, and cases cited.

* E. g. Bader v. Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,277], 12 F. R. D. 437; Dublin Distributors v. Edward & John Burke, Limited, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,398], 109 F. Supp. 125; New Dyckman Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orph. Corp., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,853], 16 F. R. D. 203; Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren-Connelly Company, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,285], 19 F. R. D. 108. Even under the Dioguardi rule plaintiff would have been sailing very close to the wind. See United States v. Lamont, 2 Cir., 236 F. 2d 312, 317.

CASES ¶ 68,088], 132 F. Supp. 412, and cases cited.

[Interstate Commerce]

In another respect the complaint is deficient in stating a claim under the Federal antitrust acts. Its only reference to interstate commerce is paragraph 14 reading as follows:

> "That the aforesaid products manufactured, processed, distributed and sold by defendants are products shipped and distributed in interstate commerce."

The fact that defendants distributed some of the frozen shrimp in interstate commerce would not be sufficient to bring under Federal jurisdiction their relations with plaintiff if none of the shrimp were distributed to plaintiff or to plaintiff's customers in interstate commerce. Can such a strong presumption in favor of the pleader be brought to bear as to permit the construction that all shrimp distributed by defendants are distributed in interstate commerce? It is conceivable that defendant corporation's processing plants are located in some state within which none are distributed. While the conclusory statement might thus be consistent with a state of affairs where all defendants' relations with plaintiff were interstate, conclusory allegations are not enough for a complaint under the antitrust laws.

[Motion Granted]

It is regrettable that under our procedure a plaintiff can extemporize such an effusion as this complaint and by filing it in a public office compel the defendant to retain counsel and the court to spend the time of the public in attempting to supply by inference allegations which plaintiff, if it had facts to support them, could have actually set out in small fraction of the time.

The motion to dismiss the complaint is granted.

In view of this disposition, plaintiff's motion to compel defendants to submit to examination is denied.

[¶ 68,662] United States v. Central States Theatre Corporation, Center Drive-In Theatre Co., and Midwest Drive-In Theatre Co.

In the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska. Civil No. 0117. Filed September 7, 1956.

Case No. 1276 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Motion To Strike Portions of Answer.—A Government motion to strike portions of a defendant's answer was granted where such portions of the answer were found to be argumentative and exculpatory, scandalous and impertinent, redundant and scandalous, or immaterial. Generally, the stricken portions of the answer attempted to plead evidentiary items and advanced argumentative positions. Also, they distracted attention from the issues tendered in the complaint, to which alone the answer should respond. It is sound judicial administration to restrain each case within its own logical bounds and to discourage impertinent excursions into alien fields.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.200.

For the plaintiff: Earl A. Jinkinson, Attorney, Department of Justice, Chicago, Ill., and William C. Spire, United States Attorney, Omaha, Neb.

For the defendants: Yale C. Holland (Kennedy, Holland, DeLacy & Svoboda) for Central States Theatre Corp.; Edward G. Garvey for Center Drive-In Theatre Co.; and Eugene N. Blazer and Gale Richards for Midwest Drive-In Theatre Co.; all of Omaha, Neb.

Memorandum

[Motions]

DELEHANT, Chief Judge [In full text]: Mention may approximately be made of certain issues pending in this action which are not yet submitted or being determined. They arise out of separate motions served and filed by plaintiff, (a) To Add an Additional Defendant and To Amend the Complaint (filing 20), and (b) For a Preliminary Hearing on Certain Defenses Raised by Defendant Central States Theatre Corporation (filing 21), Both motions concern directly only defendant Central States Theatre Corporation, among the several named defendants. The court understands that counsel for the interested parties are in agreement upon a program for the allowance of the first motion, and that although they do not agree respecting the appropriate disposition of the several defenses within the reach of the second motion, they do concur in an understanding that a preliminary hearing should be held on those defenses. But some material required for that hearing has thus far been impossible of production. Accordingly, the disposition of both motions will undoubtedly await the contemplated preliminary hearing, and is not now in order.

What is already submitted and ready for ruling is a Motion To Strike Certain Matter From the Answer of Defendant Midwest Drive-In Theatre Co., served and filed by plaintiff (filing 18). Oral argument of counsel and their typewritten briefs upon that motion have been presented and fully considered.

[Complaint]

This is a civil action brought by the United States under Section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. Section 1 et seq., against the three designated defendants, of which the first allegedly operates two, and each of the others one of the so-called drive-in theatres in the vicinity comprising Omaha, Nebraska and Council Bluffs and Carter Lake, Iowa, which in its complaint plaintiff defines as included within the term, "Omaha area." The complaint charges defendants with engagement in a combination and conspiracy consisting of a continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action whereby they agree (a) to fix, establish and maintain uniform and non-competitive prices to be charged for (1) admission to their theatres, and (2) for food and beverages sold thereat, and (3) maximum dollar amounts for newspaper advertising to be expended by or on behalf of their theatres, and also (b) to threaten to refrain from dealing with distributors who or which provide pictures to drive-in theatres for exhibition at admission prices below those agreed upon by defendants. And plaintiff prays that the alleged combination and conspiracy be adjudged violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, for injunctive relief against the continued, revival or renewal of such alleged combination or conspiracy, and for appropriate general relief.

[Answer]

Defendant, Midwest Drive-in Theatre Co., answered separately (filing 15). In its answer, it admitted certain allegations of the complaint, denied others including generally those averring its participation in the alleged combination and conspiracy, and, in considerable detail made certain allegations in affirmative language manifestly designed to support its denials, or to explain supposed acts on its part on which it may expect plaintiff to rely. It is towards some of those affirmative allegations, challenged separately, that the motion to strike is directed. The individual sections of the motion will now be considered very briefly. It is claimed not in order to expand this announcement by quoting all of the questioned material in the answer sentence by sentence. Sufficient identification of most of it may be made by brief references, in association with which counsel will understand the court to have in view the entire portions of the answer at which the several items of the motion are respectively pointed.

[Motion to Strike]

ITEM 1. Here is requested the striking of all of paragraph 10 of the answer except its first sentence on the ground of immateriality and impertinence. Paragraph 10 of the answer responds to paragraph V(12)(a) of the complaint which alleges as one of the substantial terms of the charged agreement, understanding and concert of action of defendants, an undertaking "to fix, establish and maintain uniform and non-competitive prices to defendants' theatres." The first sentence of paragraph 10 of the answer categorically denies that charge. Then, in the remaining and challenged part of the paragraph, the answering defendant proceeds to assert that the producers and distributors of the pictures by it licensed and to be licensed on a percentage basis have at all material times demanded and exacted from it a statement of the prices it will charge its customers for admissions, "presumably for the purpose of securing a maximum license fee or rental," and that this demand and exaction have occurred with the complete consent and approval of plaintiff through its Department of Justice, which Department also consents to, and approves of, a program whereby, if the answering defendant should violate its undertaking as to admission prices, the producer or distributor may consider such violation in negotiations or dealings touching later pictures.

The matter thus affirmatively stated adds nothing to the denial already made in direct language, and is argumentative and exculpatory in its nature. It is clearly vulnerable to the motion made against it; and the motion in that respect is being granted and sustained.

ITEM 2. This portion of the motion asks for the striking as scandalous and impertinent of all but the first sentence of paragraph 11 of the answer. The answer's paragraph 11 has to do with paragraph V(12) of the complaint, wherein plaintiff charges as another feature of the agreement, understanding and concert of action, an agreement by defendants "to fix, establish and maintain dollar amounts for newspaper advertising to be expended by or on behalf of" their theatres. The first sentence of the answer's paragraph 11 squarely denies the allegation. For the rest, the paragraph, at considerable length, asserts that over an unspecified period of years, the newspaper field in the Omaha area was progressively contracted from an earlier position in which there were three competing publications to the present situation in which one paper, which is mentioned by name both in the complaint and in the answer and is owned and operated by a designated corporation monopolizes the field, and that, since achieving its monopoly that organ has held the answering defendant and the other defendants at its mercy in the matter of advertising rates and has made repeated and some recent increases in such rates, and that it now constitutes a monopoly in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

It is not now said by the Court that absolutely no evidence of the character foreshadowed by the language just referred to may in any circumstances be received upon the trial. But if any of such evidence be receivable at all it will have to be such as may repel the existence of agreement charged against defendants by plaintiff. The remaining newspaper and its owner are not parties to this proceeding and are not to be subjected to trial in it upon the basis of any diversionary or "back fire" pleading. The matter moved against is, in its context, scandalous and impertinent; and the motion for its exclusion is being granted and sustained.

ITEM 3. This item of the motion seeks the striking as redundant, immaterial, impertinent and scandalous of the following language from paragraph 14 of the answer:

> ". . . except as admission prices for exhibition demanded by the producers and distributors of the motion pictures exhibited and to be exhibited in defendant's theatre have been determined by the distributor and under compulsion and with the assent of the plaintiff and the defendant was left with no further choice except to comply . . . For further answer alleges that films are licensed by the distributors on a competitive or negotiated basis, that this defendant has competed with others in an effort to secure the said motion pictures from time to time as the same were available in competition with all other exhibitors including all drive-in theatres, all indoor theatres in the so-called Omaha area. For further answer alleges that each and every motion picture released by the various distributors for exhibition in the Omaha area or territory during all times herein mentioned have been exhibited and there has actually been a dearth or a shortage of motion pictures available for exhibition."

The language thus quoted appears in the answer between explicit denials of paragraph VI(14)(a) and VI(14)(c) of the complaint averring respectively as effects of the alleged combination and conspiracy, (a) the denial to members of the public of the opportunity to see pictures at drive-in theatres in the Omaha area at prices determined in a free competitive market, and (c) the substantial reduction in volume of theatre advertising purchased by the defendants from newspapers circulating in interstate commerce. The language is principally, and it would appear entirely, oriented to the former of those charged effects and its denial.

Here again, so far, if at all, as the material objected to may be entitled to any consideration upon the trial it may be presented under the denial which it patently tries to support argumentatively. It states no defense apart from the denial itself. It is, accordingly redundant; and in its attempt to fasten responsibility on strangers to the suit, is scandalous, and on those accounts is being stricken by way of the allowance of that part of the motion.

ITEM 4. Finally, the motion asks that all of paragraph 15 of the answer be stricken as immaterial. It is immaterial; and, to that extent also, the motion is being granted and sustained. Paragraph 15 of the answer is an averment of the minimum present number of theatres in the Omaha area, both of the drive-in type and of all types, and of the comparative modesty of the proportion of the total theatre partronage in the area enjoyed, (a) by the answering defendant, and (b) by all the defendants. That is not a defense to the charges made against the answering defendant.

[General Observations]

GENERALLY. It may be observed broadly that the portions of the answer moved against, and now stricken upon the motion, are subject to the criticisms that they are (a) an attempt to plead evidentiary items, and such items largely of dubious allowability, and (b) the gratuitous advancement of argumentative positions. They also, and too obviously, undertake to distract attention from the issues tendered in the complaint, to which alone the answers should respond; and to do this by pointing out the supposed sins of others against whom plaintiff has not seen fit to proceed in this action. It is pretty sound judicial administration, at least to attempt to restrain each case within its own logical bounds and to discourage impertinent excursions into alien fields.

[Motion Granted]

An order allowing the motion in its entirety and striking from the answer all of the several portions of it identified in the motion is being filed herewith.

[¶ 68,663] Miller Motors, Incorporated v. Ford Motor Company.

In the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina, Winston-Salem Division. Civil Docket No. 563. Filed March 20, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies — Tie-in Sales — Manufacturer-Dealer Advertising Arrangement—Legality.—A manufacturer of automobiles did not engage in a conspiracy which unreasonably burdened interstate commerce in two makes of its automobiles or in the advertising of such automobiles by entering into an arrangement with dealer advertising organizations throughout the country, whereby it collected from each dealer assessments made by the dealer advertising organization to which such dealer belonged and turned such assessments over to such organization to be spent for advertising in the name of an individual dealer or of all dealers selling such automobiles. The manufacturer did not own or control the dealer advertising organizations, which were composed of dealers of two makes of the manufacturer's automobiles who were interested in promoting the sale of such automobiles against other automobiles produced by the manufacturer as well as against automobiles made by other manufacturers. Neither the manufacturer nor the dealer organizations sold advertising, and each dealer organization had the right to select its own advertising agency or agencies. Furthermore, the manufacturer did not require such dealers to use the advertising of the dealer organizations exclusively; and the manufacturer made nothing directly from dealer organization advertising—the indirect benefit received from such advertising was matched by the benefit the dealers received from the manufacturer's own advertising of the automobiles sold by the dealers. The dealer advertising program was a reasonable arrangement, designed to promote the interests of the dealers by furnishing them with effective advertising at a minimum of cost.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.848.

Monopolies—Conspiracy to Monopolize—Tie-in Sales—Manufacturer-Dealer Advertising Arrangement—Legality.—A manufacturer of automobiles did not engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize commerce in two makes of its automobiles or in the advertising of such automobiles by entering into an arrangement with dealer advertising organizations throughout the country, whereby it collected from each dealer assessments made by the dealer advertising organization to which such dealer belonged and turned such assessments over to such organization to be spent for advertising in the name of an individual dealer or of all dealers selling such automobiles. The manufacturer did not own or control the dealer advertising organizations, which were composed of dealers of two makes of the manufacturer's automobiles who were interested in promoting the sale of such automobiles against other automobiles produced by the manufacturer as well as against automobiles made by other manufacturers. Neither the manufacturer nor the dealer organizations sold advertising, and each dealer organization had the right to select its own advertising agency or agencies. Furthermore, the manufacturer did not require such dealers to use the advertising of the dealer organizations exclusively; and the manufacturer made nothing directly from dealer organization advertising—the indirect benefit received from such advertising was matched by the benefit the dealers received from the manufacturer's own advertising of the automobiles sold by the dealers. There was no claim that the effect of the arrangement was to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of automobiles in general, and every manufacturer has a natural monopoly in his own product, especially when sold under his trade name, but such a monopoly is not prohibited by the antitrust laws.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.850.

Exclusive Dealing—Tie-in Sales—Manufacturer-Dealer Advertising Arrangement—Legality.—A manufacturer of automobiles did not tie-in the sale of advertising with the sale of two makes of its automobile by entering into an arrangement with dealer advertising organizations throughout the country, whereby it collected from each dealer assessments made by the dealer advertising organization to which such dealer belonged and turned such assessments over to such organization to be spent for advertising in the name of an individual dealer or of all dealers selling such automobiles. The manufacturer did not own or control the dealer advertising organizations, which were composed of dealers of two makes of the manufacturer's automobiles who were interested in promoting the sale of such automobiles against other automobiles produced by the manufacturer as well as against automobiles made by other manufacturers. Neither the manufacturer nor the dealer organizations sold advertising, and each dealer organization had the right to select its own advertising agency or agencies. Furthermore, the manufacturer did not require such dealers to use the advertising of the dealer organizations exclusively.

The manufacturer did not attempt to tie-in the sale of one of its products to the sale of another of its products because the manufacturer was not engaged in the business of selling advertising. The manufacturer made nothing directly from dealer organization advertising—the indirect benefit received from such advertising was matched by the benefit the dealers received from the manufacturer's own advertising of the automobiles sold by the dealers. Even a true tie-in sale is not prohibited unless the effect of it may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The effect of such advertising was to promote competition and not to lessen competition in the sale of automobiles. Also, there was no restraint of competition in, or tendency toward monopolization of, advertising.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.580.

Exclusive Dealing—Tie-in Sales—Sales of Automobiles and Sale of Parts—Manufacturer's Stock Policy—Legality.—A manufacturer of automobiles did not require one of its dealers to purchase parts and accessories as a condition of its acceptance of individual orders for the purchase of automobiles, although the manufacturer did insist that the dealer purchase and carry a volume of parts and accessories satisfactory to it as a condition of continuing the dealer's franchise. The manufacturer had the undoubted right to require the dealer not to sell as genuine parts any parts that were not genuine. Such a requirement is designed to maintain the good will of the public toward the manufacturer's automobiles. Furthermore, under the circumstances in the instant case, the manufacturer had the right to require the dealer to carry a representative line of genuine accessories as a condition of continuing its franchise. The manufacturer had the right to select its customers and to refuse to sell its products to anyone, for reasons sufficient to itself; therefore, the manufacturer had the right to terminate the dealer's franchise when its performance with respect to the sale of parts and accessories was not satisfactory to the manufacturer. Also, the manufacturer did not enjoy a monopolistic position in the automobile industry, and the manufacturer did not restrain a substantial volume of commerce in parts and accessories.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.210, 4009.580.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Attempt to Monopolize—Market Domination and Distribution Control—Legality.—The "market domination or distribution control" claimed to have been exercised by a manufacturer of automobiles, or the "economic captivity" claimed to have been imposed on an automobile dealer, did not amount to a monopolization of, or an attempt to monopolize, any part of trade or commerce in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The dealer unsuccessfully contended that the existence of the power which the manufacturer possessed to control its dealers, and the manufacturer's exercise of this power, amounted to "economic slavery" and "market domination or distribution control," violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act, and entitled him to sue the manufacturer for any losses it may have sustained by reason of such domination. Congress, in passing the Automobile Dealer Franchise Act, does not share the dealer's view because, under this Act, automobile dealers are entitled to recover damages sustained by reason of an automobile manufacturer's failure to act in good faith in complying with a dealer franchise or in terminating such a franchise. There is no suggestion in the Senate and House reports that a dealer has such a remedy as the dealer sought to establish in the instant suit. Furthermore, there is no reported case which allows recovery to a dealer against a manufacturer under the "domination" theory advanced by the dealer.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2530, 2610.800; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9070.01.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Termination of Dealer Franchise—Refusal to Deal.—An automobile manufacturer's termination of a dealer's franchise was justified where such dealership was terminated because the dealer's performance was not satisfactory to the manufacturer, in that, among other things, the dealer did not sell enough automobiles, did not sell enough parts, and did not cooperate with the manufacturer's policies and programs. The manufacturer had the right to select its customers and to refuse to sell its automobiles to anyone, for reasons sufficient to itself. The dealer had claimed, among other things, that the manufacturer's arrangement with dealer advertising organizations was unlawful, that the manufacturer shipped defective automobiles, that the manufacturer discriminated against it by either giving it too many automobiles or not enough automobiles, that the manufacturer forced it to accept tie-in sales and to buy exclusively from the manufacturer, and that the manufacturer conspired with dealer advertising organizations to cancel its franchise.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Evidence—Public Injury.—Private antitrust suits are maintainable only when the defendant's conduct has caused some injury to the public generally, as distinct from purely personal or private damage. In holding that an automobile dealer did not show public injury in its suit against an automobile manufacturer, the court noted that "Suits by dealers against automobile manufacturers have been generally unsuccessful because the dealers have been unable to show any injurious effects on the public automobile market."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475.

For the plaintiff: Elledge and Johnson, Winston-Salem, N. C.

For the defendant: Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge and Rice, Winston-Salem, N. C.

[Treble Damage Action]

ROSZEL C. THOMSEN, District Judge, sitting by designation [In full text]: This is an action for treble damages under the antitrust laws brought against Ford Motor Company by a former Lincoln-Mercury dealer at Winston-Salem, N. C. No claim is made based upon any breach of contract or other cause of action except the alleged violation of the antitrust laws.

The complaint is elaborate and was amended twice before trial; so amended, it sets up six causes of action, alleges that all acts complained of in the several causes of action were done in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the first cause of action, and that the acts alleged in each cause of action violated Secs. 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Secs. 3[1] and 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 1, 2, 14, 15.

[Causes of Action]

The first cause of action alleges that Ford entered into an arrangement with the several Lincoln-Mercury Dealers Advertising Funds (LMDAs) throughout the country, under which Ford collected from each dealer the assessments made by the LMDA to which such dealer belonged, and turned the money over to that LMDA, to be spent by it for advertising in the name of the individual dealer or of Lincoln-Mercury dealers generally. The question is whether that arrangement was either (a) a conspiracy which unreasonably burdened the interstate commerce in Lincoln-Mercury automobiles or the advertising thereof, in violation of Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act, or (b) an attempt to monopolize the commerce in such automobiles or the advertising thereof, in violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act, or (c) a tie-in of the sale of advertising with the sale of automobiles, in violation of Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act.

The second cause of action alleges that Ford shipped to plaintiff many defective automobiles, required plaintiff to fix them, and refused to pay plaintiff's regular and customary charges for this type of work; that plaintiff did the work under duress, and because of the low rates allowed by Ford, frequently lost money on such repairs. On defendant's motion for summary judgment, I ruled that the second cause of action did not state a separate claim under the antitrust laws, but that plaintiff might offer evidence of the facts alleged therein, as means claimed to have been used to enforce the conspiracy alleged in the first cause of action and to effectuate the domination alleged in the fifth.

The third cause of action alleges that Ford discriminated against plaintiff by not giving plaintiff its proportionate number of cars at the beginning of new model years, but after automobiles became plentiful insisting that plaintiff accept and sell more automobiles than its territory would absorb; that this alleged discrimination was practiced against plaintiff because plaintiff would not submit to all of Ford's demands. At the end of plaintiff's case, its counsel conceded that it was not entitled to recover under the third cause of action as a separate claim, but argued that the evidence offered in support thereof should be considered in connection with plaintiff's claim that Ford dominated plaintiff's business.

The fourth cause of action deals with parts and accessories; it alleges that "defendant required the plaintiff wilfully, unlawfully and under duress to accept tie-in sales, and * * * to buy exclusively from the defendant, * * * in order to obtain automobiles from the defendant each model year." The issue is whether Ford's insistence that its dealers purchase and carry parts and accessories manufactured by or for it was so great and of such nature that it violated Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act.

The fifth cause of action alleges that "defendant wilfully, unlawfully and maliciously dominated and monopolized the * * * business of the plaintiff by holding a leaver (sic) over the head of the plaintiff due to the fact that the defendant had the exclusive sale and manufacture of Lincoln-Mercury automobiles." Violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act is claimed.

The sixth cause of action alleges that Ford, in conspiracy with LMDA, cancelled plaintiff's sales agreements, because of plaintiff's unwillingness to do the various things Ford insisted upon, as set out in the first five causes of action. At the end of plaintiff's case, its counsel conceded that it was not entitled to recover under the sixth cause of action as a separate claim, but argued that the evidence offered in support thereof should be considered in connection with plaintiff's claims of conspiracy, domination and monopolization.

In connection with each cause of action which is being pressed, the question arises whether plaintiff proved any damages resulting from alleged violations which occurred within the applicable period of limitations.

LIMITATIONS

The original complaint in this case was filed on July 29, 1955. The new Federal statute of limitations, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 15b, for claims under Secs. 15 and 15a, did not become effective until January 7, 1956, and provided that it should not revive any cause of action theretofore barred under existing law. It had been repeatedly held that 28 U. S. C. A. 2462 (R. S. 1047) was not applicable to actions under 15 U. S. C. A. 15, but that the court should apply the statutes of limitations of the state in which the action was commenced. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390; Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., (4 Cir.) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,062] 72 F. 2d 885.

[1] The second cause of action does not charge a violation of Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act.

Defendant contends that this action is barred by Sec. 1-54(2) of the General Statutes of North Carolina, which imposes a one year limitation on any action "upon a statute, for a penalty or forfeiture, where the action is given to the State alone, or in whole or in part to the party aggrieved, or to a common informer, except where the statute imposing it prescribes a different limitation." Failing this, defendant falls back upon Sec. 1-52(2), which imposes a three year limitation on any action "upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture, unless some other time is mentioned in the statute creating it."

It is not clear which of these two sections governs actions under the antitrust laws. It is clear, however, that in such a case as this, the sources of damage are separable for purposes of limitations. Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., (7 Cir.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,249] 229 F. 2d 714, and cases cited. It is also clear that plaintiff has not alleged or proved any such duress as would toll the statute, assuming it could be tolled by duress. To constitute duress, the threatened action must be unlawful. 54 C. J. S. p. 201. A threat to do what one has a legal right to do cannot constitute duress. Kirby v. Reynolds, 212 N. C. 271, 282, and cases cited. The alleged duress consisted of threats by Ford to terminate plaintiff's dealership, which Ford had the clear right to do. Ford Motor Co. v. Kirkmyer Motor Co., (4 Cir.) 65 F. 2d 1001. So, at a pretrial hearing, although withholding decision on the question of which section applies, I did rule: (a) that evidence with respect to damages should be limited to damages resulting from alleged violations of the antitrust laws during the period of three years before suit, and should also show what part of the damages so claimed were caused by alleged violations during the last year; and (b) that evidence of defendant's acts and conduct beyond the period of three years might be offered to prove a conspiracy, a course of dealing or other conduct relevant and material to any of the issues in the case.

FACTS

After oral argument, I dictated into the record rulings on many proposed findings of fact submitted by the respective parties; the following narrative statement, however, gives all the facts necessary to an understanding of the issues.

The Industry

The evidence in this case, like that given before the Congressional Committees in 1956, supports the following statement, which is quoted from the Report of the Senate Judiciary Committee, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., Rep. No. 2073.

> "The evidence indicated that great pressure had been exerted, at least by the dominant automobile manufacturers, upon dealers to accept automobiles, parts, accessories, and supplies which they did not need, did not want, or did not feel their market was able to absorb. * * * dealer witnesses asserted that while they were ostensibly independent businessmen, the factory dominated and controlled almost every phase of their operations at all times. The conflict in interest between factory and dealer is a conflict between parties of totally unequal economic power. Automobile production is one of the most highly concentrated industries in the United States * * *. Today there exist only 5 passenger-car manufacturers, 3 of which produce in excess of 95 per cent of all passenger cars sold in the United States. There are approximately 40,000 franchised automobile dealers distributing to the public cars produced by these manufacturers. Dealers have an average investment of about $100,000. This vast disparity in economic power and bargaining strength has enabled the factory to determine arbitrarily the rules by which the two parties conduct their business affairs. These rules are incorporated in the sales agreement or franchise which the manufacturer has prepared for the dealer's signature. Dealers are with few exceptions completely dependent on the manufacturer for their supply of cars. When the dealer has invested to the extent required to secure a franchise, he becomes in a real sense the economic captive of his manufacturer. The substantial investment of his own personal funds by the dealer in the business, the inability to convert easily the facilities to other uses, the dependence upon a single manufacturer for supply of automobiles, and the difficulty of obtaining a franchise from another manufacturer all contribute toward making the dealer an easy prey for domination by the factory. * * * The faults of the factory-dealer system are directly attributable to the superior market position of the manufacturer. This economic strength manifests itself in two principal ways: (1) Control and supervision of the dealer's business. (2) Power to terminate or refuse to renew the dealer's franchise. The threat of termination which the manufacturer holds over the dealer once the dealer commits himself to the requirements for entry into the industry permits the manufacturer to control the dealer and his operation. The dealer accepts this relationship in the expectation that it will be profitable. He later can reconsider his decision only with the knowledge that his business is specialized in nature and his capital not readily transferable to alternative uses. * * *"

The Defendant and Its Sales Agreements

Ford is the second largest producer of passenger automobiles, with assets of some 2½ billion dollars. It produced 22.78% of all new automobiles sold in the United States in 1952, 25.15% in 1953, and 30.84% in 1954. In 1953 it sold 1,443,153 cars, of which about 327,000 were Lincolns and Mercurys; in 1954 the corresponding figures were 1,706,617 and 306,000, respectively. It has 8,500 retail distributors, of whom 1,843 sold Lincolns and Mercurys.

Before 1946, Lincolns and Mercurys were sold by Ford car dealers. In October, 1946, Ford organized the Lincoln-Mercury Division, which is subdivided into regions, districts, and zones, with its own field organization. Winston-Salem is in the Atlanta District, which, in 1950, had been separated from the Jacksonville District, of which it had theretofore been a part.

The field organization serves two principal purposes: (1) obtaining information for the factory, or home office, at Detroit, and (2) helping promote the sale of Lincolns and Mercurys to franchise dealers, and by such dealers to the public. Members of the field organization call on each dealer, suggest how he may improve his operations, and take orders for automobiles, parts and accessories. The methods of car production and distribution are essentially those set out in U. S. v. General Motors Corp. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,120, 56,139], 121 F. 2d 376, at 386 to 388, and need not be detailed here.

Plaintiff, like other dealers, entered into separate but similar sales agreements covering Lincolns and Mercurys. Under these agreements, the dealer is obligated to maintain a place of business located in a place and equipped in a manner acceptable to Ford; to maintain tools, machinery and equipment recommended by Ford; to employ sufficient competent salesmen to solicit adequately all potential purchasers of the division's products in the community; to employ sufficient competent service mechanics to render prompt, efficient service to owners of Lincolns and Mercurys, and to render such service; to install and maintain an accounting system in accordance with a manual approved by Ford; to furnish Ford, at regular intervals, accurate financial statements, reflecting the financial condition of the dealer's business; to make available all records, contracts and accounts for examination by Ford at all reasonable times; to maintain a stock of automobiles, parts and accessories; to have available one or more new automobiles for demonstration purposes; to advertise the use of genuine parts in the repair of Ford's products only where such genuine parts are actually used; to advertise in no manner or method detrimental to Ford, or to which Ford may object as being detrimental to its name or good will. For its part, Ford agrees that if it terminates the sales agreement, it will re-purchase the dealer's stock, subject to payment of transportation costs by the dealer and certain other conditions. The agreements may be terminated at will by either party, but in case of termination by Ford, sixty days notice must be given. The agreements specify that the dealer is not an agent. Ford expressly reserves the right to refuse to deliver automobiles to the dealer for reasons satisfactory to it, and the agreement expressly provides that Ford shall not be liable for failure to ship or for delay in shipments, however caused.

The agreements provide for a cooperative advertising fund, to which each dealer contributes a certain amount and Ford a smaller amount for each new Lincoln or Mercury purchased by the dealer. The fund so established is controlled by Ford, but each dealer's contributions are spent in his territory. Plaintiff, like other dealers, was required to sign the co-op agreements.

Dealers employ various methods of paying for automobiles, of which the method used by plaintiff is the most common. Plaintiff had an open letter of credit with a finance company. Upon receipt from plaintiff of each order for a certain number of cars, Ford would draw a draft on the finance company, which would pay for each automobile at the time of its delivery to the convoy carrier at the factory. Ford engages the convoy carrier and pays the transportation charges; the dealer pays to Ford a charge for distribution and delivery, which includes an amount equal to railway freight from Wayne County, Michigan, to the dealer's place of business.

Under its "Warranty and Policy Procedure Manual," Ford warrants to the dealer parts of the automobiles for a period of ninety days from the date of original delivery to the ultimate purchaser, or until the vehicle has been driven 4,000 miles, whichever shall first occur. This warranty applies only to such parts as shall, under normal service, appear to Ford to have been defective in workmanship or material. The dealer makes the same warranty to the purchaser and delivers to him an "Owner's Service Policy," which obligates the dealer to deliver, without charge, replacement parts to which the purchaser is entitled under the terms of the warranty. The Manual sets forth a detailed procedure, under the terms of which Ford repays the dealer for parts used in warranty work and a specified percentage of the dealer's retail labor rate. This payment is intended to cover the dealer's costs, without any allowance for overhead or profit, and, because of specific time allowances for various jobs fixed by the manual, sometimes results in a small profit to the dealer, but more often resulted in a loss to plaintiff. The procedure has been modified from time to time. Unless the required procedure is followed, the dealer may encounter considerable difficulty or delay in securing reimbursement for warranty work done and parts used. Plaintiff consistently failed and refused to fill out the forms properly, and Miller abused Ford's representatives who attempted to show him how to do so.

An "Extended Adjustment Policy" was adopted, effective April 1, 1953, to assist the dealers in promoting customer good will and to protect the reputation of Ford's products.

When the factory turned out an unusually large number of cars with minor defects, as sometimes happened when substantial changes were made in the models, the factory had insufficient "hospital" space for the cars, and sent them on to the dealers in the expectation that the dealer would correct the defects in the "new car get ready" process. This practice cost conscientious dealers money. An inordinate proportion of the expenses of plaintiff's shop was spent on such work; but plaintiff spent considerably less money per car on such work than the average dealer in the district, region or country. The disproportion was principally caused by the lack of public repair work done by plaintiff at ordinary retail prices, which, in turn, was largely due to the fact that plaintiff did not make sufficient effort to sell shop service to the public.

Plaintiff's Dealership and Its Termination, Including Alleged Domination and Discrimination by Ford

Plaintiff was incorporated in 1946 as Davis-Miller Motor Company. Miller had been a Ford dealer before the war and was familiar with many of Ford's practices of which he now complains, including the policy requiring a dealer to purchase the number of cars Ford feels the territory should absorb, on pain of losing his franchise. Nevertheless, Miller solicited a Lincoln-Mercury dealership in 1946.

Plaintiff's net worth (original investment plus retained profits) varied considerably during the course of its operations, reaching a high of $133,000 in January, 1953; it was regarded as a large dealer though not a metropolitan dealer.

During the sellers' market following the war, plaintiff's business, like that of most automobile dealers, was very profitable; for the years 1946-1951, its profits totalled $113,733.75, after comfortable salaries to the two principal officers.[2] Thereafter, the business was not profitable; Miller was not capable of meeting the keen and ruthless competition which developed in 1953. His sales managers, parts managers, and service managers were not aggressive. Ford's representatives had frequently urged Miller to hire more forceful persons, and Miller had made a few changes, but not enough to secure an effective organization.

[2] Davis was the first president of the plaintiff; he was not a practical automobile man; his principal business was insurance; and Miller bought him out in 1949.

In 1952-53 the market shifted from a sellers' market to a buyers' market; but the automobile companies, particularly General Motors and Ford, seemed determined to sell ever more cars. Substantially increased quotas were presented to plaintiff and other dealers. Ford insisted that its dealers come close to meeting the new quotas if they were to hold their dealerships. In most cases the volume of cars could not be sold in the traditional manner; and the practice of holding blitz sales developed throughout the industry. Officers and employees of the manufacturers encouraged blitz sales, until they recanted during and after the Congressional hearings in 1956. At best, blitz sales meant that a dealer would sell an increased number of cars at a much smaller profit, sometimes at no profit. At worst, blitz advertising was dishonest; prices were padded in order to show apparent reductions in price. Dealers who did not engage in such practices found that their customers complained because they were not given large discounts and trade-in allowances. Ford did not suggest dishonest advertising; but continued to insist upon an increasing volume of purchases. Dealers in Lincolns and Mercurys, as well as in other makes of cars, in Charlotte, Greensboro, and other cities in North Carolina, engaged in blitz selling, to the detriment of plaintiff's business. Ford's field representatives urged Miller to undertake blitz sales, since it was apparent plaintiff could not meet its quota in any other way.

Despite Ford's insistence that its dealers order such a large number of cars that they could not be sold except at substantial discounts, especially toward the end of model years, Ford did not allow any reductions in its own prices to the dealers, except in cases where they exceeded special quotas set by the factory.

Ford's field representatives persuaded Miller to enlarge his facilities on a number of occasions, and insisted that he engage in various advertising and promotional programs. Miller frequently objected to these programs; he was uncooperative, critical of the policies of Ford and its representatives, and at times abusive, belligerent and threatening.

During the period December 1, 1951, to November 30, 1954, plaintiff lost $97,991.82. By far the greater part of this loss occurred after September 30, 1953, when Miller suggested to the Regional and District Sales Managers that they try to find a purchaser for his business. Miller ordered very few cars after September, 1953, and since his expenses were continuing, he had a large loss.

The complaint alleges numerous instances of discrimination against plaintiff by Ford and its representatives. But the evidence shows no real discrimination. There were the usual number, perhaps more than the usual number, of irritating mistakes and delays with respect to body types ordered by plaintiff, and similar matters, to which big business seems more prone than small. Some of the delays were due to strikes, changes in orders by Miller, and other causes beyond Ford's control. And in view of Miller's lack of cooperation, the field representatives would have been more than human if, when they had three show cars to divide between two dealers, they had not given the break to the more cooperative dealer. But the evidence does not support plaintiff's allegation that Ford discriminated against plaintiff by withholding from it new cars at the beginning of a new model year and loading it down with cars at the end of a model year, or in any other substantial manner. Plaintiff now admits that Ford did not conspire with LMDA to do any of the things alleged in the third cause of action.

In September, 1953, Miller wrote a long letter to the Atlanta District Manager complaining of alleged discrimination against him and other grievances. He sent a copy of this letter to Henry Ford, II. Following a very unsatisfactory conference on September 30, 1953, with the district and regional managers, he insisted that they produce a cash purchaser for his business or stop threatening cancellation if he did not sell more cars. From then on there was constant friction between Miller and most of Ford's representatives with whom he came in contact. In October, 1953, the Regional Manager recommended to the home office that plaintiff's franchise be terminated. On May 19, 1954, the General Sales Manager placed this recommendation before the Merchandising Committee, which authorized termination.

The notice of intention to terminate was dated June 1, 1954, and was received by plaintiff June 8, 1954. The letter actually terminating the dealership and sales agreements was dated August 4, 1954, and was received by plaintiff on August 19, 1954.

Plaintiff's dealership was terminated because its performance was not satisfactory to Ford, in that, among other things, plaintiff did not sell enough cars, did not sell enough parts, and did not cooperate with Ford's policies and programs, but was openly and avowedly antagonistic to them. Plaintiff's sales of new Lincolns and Mercurys were well below district, regional, and national averages, and below those of dealers in comparable North Carolina cities. Its operating expenses per new car, unabsorbed expenses per new car and direct selling expenses per new car were far higher than such averages; accordingly, plaintiff's net profit per new car and return on investment were far lower. Ford's termination of its sales contracts with plaintiff was well justified.

Only two out of the 100-odd Lincoln-Mercury dealers in the Southern region have been terminated in the last seven years; five others have resigned upon request. In other words, requested terminations have run about 1% per year.

LMDA

In 1934, while N. W. Ayer & Son was advertising counsel for Ford Motor Company, another agency, McCann-Erickson, solicited Ford dealers for their advertising, and the first Ford Dealers Advertising Fund (FDA) was organized. Thereafter, thirty-three FDAs were organized throughout the country; some used the same advertising counsel as Ford, some did not. During World War II there was no dealer advertising; Maxon, Inc., and later J. Walter Thompson handled Ford's institutional advertising. After the war, Maxon began reactivating FDAs throughout the United States and was appointed counsel by twenty-four of them, Thompson by nine. In 1946 Thompson acquired all of Maxon's FDA accounts.

When it was announced that the L-M Division would be set up in October, 1946, L-M dealers elected two representatives from each of the six L-M Sales Regions to form the first L-M Dealers National Advertising Council. These delegates met in Detroit in December, 1946, and were unanimous in their desire to form dealer advertising funds separate and distinct from FDAs. Shortly thereafter, LMDAs were organized throughout the United States. Thompson was then handling the Ford Division and the FDA accounts, and it solicited the newly-formed LMDAs; but after the L-M Division appointed Kenyon & Eckhardt (K&E) its advertising counsel, K&E solicited each LMDA separately and signed advertising agency agreements with all of them.

Ford cooperated with the interested dealers in the organization of FDAs and LMDAs. The Jacksonville LMDA was set up in April, 1947, at a meeting of L-M dealers. Some of the L-M dealers at the meeting were also Ford dealers, who had served on the FDA committee. The general plan of the FDA was satisfactory to the L-M dealers, but they wanted to administer their own advertising funds, since they considered themselves in competition with Ford dealers, as well as with dealers in Buicks, Pontiacs, and other makes. They decided unanimously to form an LMDA and elected six directors from their own number, on nominations from the floor.

The directors employed a Jacksonville attorney, who also represented the local FDA, to incorporate the Jacksonville LMDA (J-LMDA); it was incorporated under the laws of Florida as a non-profit corporation. Its charter and its by-laws were similar to those of the FDA. The by-laws provided for a self-perpetuating board of directors; but they were amended in 1954 to provide for the election of directors. The practice in this respect varies among LMDAs.

Before J-LMDA was organized, a charge for L-M dealer advertising had been collected by Ford on the sale of Lincolns and Mercurys and turned over to the district FDA to be administered along with similar charges collected on Ford cars. After J-LMDA was organized, an accounting was had and the unexpended money in the hands of the FDA which had been collected on Lincolns and Mercurys was turned over to J-LMDA.

J-LMDA employed K&E on March 8, 1948. Each LMDA had the right to select its own advertising counsel, but J-LMDA, like the others, selected K&E because it was then representing the L-M Division and had engaged a number of Thompson's employees, who were familiar with the account.

K&E is a well known advertising agency, whose stock is owned by its officers and employees. No officer or director of Ford is an officer or director of K&E.

When an L-M dealer signed his original sales agreements, the Ford representative usually presented him with an LMDA agreement for signature. This agreement recited that LMDA was organized for the mutual benefit of the dealers in the territory, and for the purpose of promoting the sale of new Lincoln and Mercury cars. It authorized the LMDA directors, or the executive committee, to employ an advertising agency, and to advertise Lincolns and Mercurys in various ways. The dealer agreed to contribute to LMDA a specified amount for each new Lincoln or Mercury purchased by the dealer from Ford, payment to be made in such manner as the directors or the executive committee should provide. In practice this provision was treated as an authorization, and the directors fixed the actual amount to be collected from time to time within the limits of the authorization. The amounts collected varied widely among the LMDAs throughout the country, and varied from time to time within J-LMDA. The LMDA agreement provided that it should continue until terminated, termination to be effective sixty days after receipt by the fund of a written notice from a majority of the members of their desire to terminate the agreement. On the other hand, the by-laws provided that an individual dealer might resign by giving sixty days written notice. After the organization of the Atlanta district by Ford, J-LMDA served both districts; its name was changed, but for convenience it will still be referred to as J-LMDA.

After its president executed the LMDA agreement, plaintiff made contributions to J-LMDA in varying amounts, until the termination of its dealership in September, 1954. At the request of J-LMDA, these contributions were included on the invoices for the automobiles delivered to plaintiff, and Ford transmitted the funds so collected each month to the treasurer of J-LMDA. Supporting data accompanied the check. A firm of certified public accountants employed by J-LMDA rendered periodic financial statements to the executive committee, and plaintiff makes no claim of dishonesty in the handling of these funds either by Ford or by J-LMDA.

Advertising was usually purchased by J-LMDA on a quarterly basis. Ford would forecast to K & E the production of Lincolns and Mercurys for the ensuing year; this forecast would be revised from time to time during the year in the light of actual production. Thus, the money available to J-LMDA for advertising would be estimated. K & E would then propose an advertising program for the ensuing quarter within the funds estimated to be available, and present the program to the J-LMDA advertising committee. In the case of newspaper advertising, K & E generally prepared 25 or 30 ads for consideration, from which a lesser number would be selected by the committee, after they had been submitted to Ford's advertising department for approval.

Other media employed by J-LMDA in its earlier years included radio spots and chain-break announcements, billboards, movie trailers, direct mail advertising, and banners announcing new models, for display by dealers. The advertising selected often referred to used cars, as well as to new Lincolns and Mercurys. Most LMDA advertising was bought either from K & E or at the suggestion of the defendant, but some was purchased from other sources. Television advertising was a later development.

The district and regional sales managers of the L-M Division had a standing invitation to attend J-LMDA meetings, and the district manager usually attended. They did not dictate the decisions made at those meetings, but were present mainly as a source of information regarding factory plans, new developments, production schedules, etc.

The J-LMDA committee kept minutes, and mailed to all L-M dealers in the district a report of each meeting and of the advertising plans for the ensuing quarter. When K & E placed newspaper or radio ads, the newspaper in the dealer's town was instructed to show the copy to the dealer in advance of publication; if the dealer did not like the ad, he had the privilege of substituting another. In the case of radio spots, the dealer could hear the various spot announcements on the platter sent by K & E to the radio station, and make his selection in advance of the broadcast. The advertising program adopted by J-LMDA was usually kept flexible, so that it could be changed to help a dealer with peculiar problems. In locations where newspaper or radio coverage was inadequate, billboard advertising to the same dollar amount as the proposed newspaper or radio advertising might be substituted. If a dealer preferred that his newspaper ads appear in the classified section, rather than in the display section, as was customary, his ads were changed accordingly. When "make your own deal" advertising and other blitz advertising commenced in 1953, with the change from a sellers' market to a buyers' market, the committee on a number of occasions permitted a dealer to substitute such advertising for more conventional advertising selected by the committee. K & E wrote "blitz" advertising for dealers who preferred it.

The J-LMDA committee did not always follow K & E's recommendations. While a basic theme usually ran through all advertising of Lincolns and Mercurys, each LMDA had the right not to follow that theme. The committee frequently made changes in the copy submitted by K & E.

That agency received its compensation in the customary manner; the advertising medium charged the advertisers the regular rate but allowed the agency a 15% commission. LMDAs paid the agency for art work.

J-LMDA first tried to keep accounts for each dealer, showing the amount generated by his purchases and the cost of his advertising. A year or two's experience showed that these amounts generally ran within 5% of each other; thereafter K & E kept records from which any particular dealer's account could be reconstructed to determine if such dealer was receiving his rightful share of advertising, but individual accounting was abandoned. Very few dealers ever asked for an accounting; when they did it was furnished them.

For a period of about two years J-LMDA set aside 40% of each dealer's contribution for the dealer to spend locally through any media he chose. Some of the dealers were lax about spending their money and the plan was abandoned, because the committee understood that tax considerations required it to spend each year substantially all money collected during that year. In January, 1949, J-LMDA increased its assessments $15 per Mercury and $20 per Lincoln for a period of six months, and donated the additional funds to Ford in recognition of the cost of producing and promoting the radically new 1949 line of cars. For a period of six months, in 1953 and 1954, the LMDA committees received $20 per car from the Co-op Fund; in effect, the LMDAs administered the Co-op Fund during that period, pursuant to an agreement signed by plaintiff and other dealers.

The Ed Sullivan TV show went on the air in March, 1949, over some 12 or 15 stations. Several L-M dealers in Atlanta wanted the show in 1949. J-LMDA paid for the show in Atlanta in lieu of newspaper advertising in that city, and the Atlanta dealers guaranteed to make good any excess of the cost of TV over the cost of newspaper advertising there. No other dealers paid any part of the cost of the show in Atlanta. From Atlanta the show gradually spread throughout the district. It went on the air in Greensboro and Charlotte on July 5, 1952. Winston-Salem is within the primary coverage of the Greensboro TV station. Before adding a station, the chairman of the J-LMDA committee would consult the dealers within the primary coverage of the station under consideration; the wishes of a majority of those dealers controlled. Dealers with TV coverage received less advertising through newspapers and other media.

The Ed Sullivan show was carried in all sections of the country, and other LMDAs contributed to its cost. It proved very popular, and as more and more stations were added, the cost exceeded normal LMDA advertising contributions. Beginning about 1951 or 1952, Ford underwrote the deficit between the cost of the show and the LMDA contributions. An L-M TV Fund was established in 1952 or 1953. This fund was administered by six L-M dealers, elected to represent each of the L-M sales regions. As the show became more popular and more expensive, Ford automobile dealers and others wanted to co-sponsor the show, but the LMDAs, with the support of Ford, succeeded in keeping it exclusively for L-M dealer advertising.

The advantages to dealers of LMDA advertising over individual dealer advertising include the following: (1) The cost of art work is shared by dealers in all the LMDAs.

(2) The research work and experienced personnel of a national agency produce better advertising copy than an individual dealer could obtain without spending large sums of money. (3) Many small dealers do not have the time or know-how to plan good advertising or to place it intelligently; usually they do not employ any advertising counsel. (4) A coordinated effort repeating a single advertising theme, which is an accepted fundamental of good advertising, can be obtained.

The advantages to dealers of LMDA advertising over co-op advertising administered by the factory include the following: (1) The LMDA committees are familiar with seasonal changes and local problems, such as closed textile mills. (2) The LMDA committees counsel directly with the dealers, and, being dealers themselves, have a better understanding of dealer problems. (3) Factory advertising tends to emphasize styling and comfort, while LMDA advertising tells the public that the automobile is for sale at a particular dealer's place of business. (4) LMDA advertising is more dynamic; it can strike harder and need not be as dignified as factory advertising. In practice, it was not submitted to legal counsel, as Ford's advertising was. (5) LMDA advertising included used car advertising, in which the interest of the dealer was more immediate than that of the factory.

The evidence does not disclose any substantial objection by L-M dealers to LMDA as such, at least until 1954, with the possible exception of Miller, who seems to have been opposed to any advertising of automobiles during the halcyon days following the war. Sometime during late 1953 or early 1954, Miller told one or more of Ford's field representatives that he did not like the Ed Sullivan show and thought it was a waste of money; that it gave the impression that if somebody came to plaintiff's place of business he could get an automobile for nothing and plaintiff would not make any profit.

In March, 1954, R. D. Nelligan, an L-M dealer in Greenville, S. C., asked W. A. Toms, manager of the Southern Region of the L-M Division, whether it was necessary for him to participate in LMDA in order to keep his franchise to sell automobiles; Toms told him to take the question up with his LMDA committee.

Later that evening, at a dealer meeting in Atlanta, Nelligan requested a ruling of the LMDA committee whether or not an individual member might resign from LMDA, because his information indicated there might be some official sanction which would make it mandatory that a dealer belong. K. M. Matthews, President of J-LMDA, replied that he could not say for sure, but in his opinion if a dealer did not contribute, he would be taking the risk of the factory cancelling his sales agreements. G. H. Schricker, manager of the Atlanta District of the L-M Division, was present, and was asked a few moments later what the repercussions would be if a dealer attempted to withdraw from LMDA. He gave an evasive answer. Toms, the Regional Manager, read the minutes of the meeting, and did nothing to correct the impression these questions and answers naturally conveyed.

In effect, participation in LMDA was compulsory. Like other dealers, Miller believed that plaintiff's sales agreements would be cancelled if he refused to pay his LMDA assessments.

If a majority of the dealers in any district became dissatisfied with LMDA advertising, because Ford dominated the agency, or for any other reason, they could have dissolved their LMDA. Indeed, it is hard to see how an LMDA could have been continued, even with Ford's support, against the determined opposition of a substantial minority of the dealers in any area. On the other hand, the pressure of the other dealers would and did require Ford to insist that an occasional recalcitrant dealer should be told that continued memberships in LMDA was a condition of continued dealership.

Only one Lincoln-Mercury dealer in the United States, Absey Motors, Inc., Grand Forks, N. D., did not belong to an LMDA between January 1, 1950, and November 4, 1954. Three other dealers were not members of an LMDA during some period between 1945 and 1956. Nelligan is the only dealer who ever requested to withdraw from the J-LMDA.

From 1947 through the end of 1954, total contributions by Lincoln-Mercury dealers throughout the United States to the various LMDA funds totalled approximately $38,790,000. In 1953, they were $8,807,000; in 1954, $7,582,000.

The total LMDA assessments paid by plaintiff after July 29, 1952, amounted to $8,330. These contributions did not deprive plaintiff of the financial means of carrying on his own independent advertising to the extent of $10,750.06 in 1952, $15,403.28 in 1953, and $8,368.47 in 1954. Plaintiff did not feel a need for the services of an advertising agency in preparing or placing this advertising. Over the past four years plaintiff has received not less than $716.37 of advertising in its name in excess of its contributions to the LMDA, and its co-op account had been overspent by more than $4,000. This advertising cost plaintiff no more than if plaintiff had purchased the advertising.

Parts and Accessories [3]

The first sales agreements between plaintiff and Ford, signed in 1946, obligated plaintiff not to sell any replacement parts for Lincolns and Mercurys except genuine Lincoln and Mercury parts, unless Ford was unable to supply the parts or unless a purchaser expressly requested plaintiff to use some other part. This was amended in 1949, to obligate plaintiff not to sell as a genuine Lincoln and Mercury part any part which was not in fact a genuine Lincoln or Mercury part. The agreements also obligated plaintiff to maintain a stock of genuine parts and approved accessories of an assortment reasonably comparable to current demand, equivalent to at least one-sixth of its sales of parts and accessories during the previous twelve months.

There was no contract or agreement, express or implied, requiring plaintiff to buy from Ford all or any given percentage of plaintiff's parts and accessories requirements; and, in practice, Ford did not require plaintiff to buy exclusively from it.

During the years 1946 through 1949, numerous accessories were shipped in the trunks of cars delivered to plaintiff, although no written order had been signed for these accessories. The officers of plaintiff, including Miller, and other dealers generally, were entirely satisfied with this practice and made no objection to it, since they made a large profit out of it. Beginning with the 1950 model year, this practice was discontinued and orders for accessories were obtained from plaintiff's parts department.

Certain parts and accessories, such as cylinder blocks and body parts for Lincolns and Mercurys were available only from Ford. Other accessories, such as tires and paint, and parts for other makes of cars, were not sold by Ford. Still other parts and accessories could be bought from either Ford or other suppliers. Examples of this third class were fuel pumps, spark plugs, ignition parts, windshield wipers, transmission gears, anti-freeze, water pumps, seat covers, undercoating, etc.

Plaintiff purchased about half of the third class from Ford and half from other suppliers; of all parts and accessories combined, plaintiff purchased a little more than half from Ford. Most of the parts and accessories purchased from other suppliers were used in the repair and reconditioning of used cars, accepted by plaintiff as trade-ins. However, except for fenders and body parts, plaintiff could buy practically everything it needed for Lincoln and Mercury automobiles from automobile supply houses in Winston-Salem; so could an individual motorist. There was not difficulty getting parts almost anywhere, both in and out of the city. Plaintiff listed over fifty suppliers in or near Winston-Salem from whom it purchased parts and accessories.

Ford's field representatives frequently objected to plaintiff keeping in its stockroom parts and accessories purchased from other suppliers, but never threatened to withhold cars or to terminate plaintiff's dealership for that reason. The field representatives made repeated efforts to sell plaintiff a larger quantity of parts. Miller was told that his purchases were substantially below the amount Ford considered satisfactory, and was urged both to increase the volume of his retail sales and to wholesale more parts to garages and other retailers.

Plaintiff would have preferred to purchase a larger portion of certain accessories from outside sources, but Ford's representatives insisted that its dealers were its only customers and that plaintiff had to carry a representative line of Lincoln-Mercury accessories if it was to continue as a franchise dealer. Near the close of model years, the field representatives would insist upon plaintiff buying its proportionate share of the remaining parts and accessories assigned to the region, district and zone, some of which were likely to be very slow sellers. Sometimes there was a reason for this other than the desire of Ford to make its dealers bear the financial load of carrying the parts, sometimes not. Carrying of warehouse stock is recognized by Ford as one of the major functions a dealer performs in the distribution of automobiles. On a number of occasions the General Sales Manager of the Lincoln-Mercury Division referred to the purchase of seat covers and other parts and accessories dealers didn't want as "franchise insurance."

[3] No definition of the word "accessories", as distinguished from the word "parts" is practicable. The use of the terms has varied from place to place and from time to time.

However, I find as a fact that Ford did not require plaintiff to purchase under duress parts or accessories or anything else as a condition of Ford's accepting any of plaintiff's monthly orders for the purchase of automobiles. Plaintiff never complained in writing to Ford about any requirement that it purchase parts and accessories, although Miller wrote numerous letters complaining about other matters.

Miller admits that plaintiff never bought any parts or accessories over the counter that it did not want after the fall of 1952. There is no evidence that plaintiff bought any particular parts or accessories that it did not want after July 29, 1952. After termination of its dealership, plaintiff sold for $15,421 its inventory of parts and accessories, most of which had been purchased since 1952 and which had a book value of $23,122.60; but there is no basis for any claim that this loss was caused by plaintiff's being required to purchase any accessories it did not want during the applicable period of limitations.

While I do not find that Ford required plaintiff to purchase parts and accessories as a condition of Ford's acceptance of individual orders for the purchase of automobiles, I do find that Ford insisted that plaintiff purchase and carry a volume of parts and accessories satisfactory to Ford as a condition of continuing as a franchise dealer. There is no basis for plaintiff's allegation that the pressure on plaintiff to take more parts and accessories had anything to do with the relationship of either plaintiff or defendant with LMDA.

DISCUSSION

I. LMDA—(First Cause of Action).

[General Motors Case]

Plaintiff's claim under the First Cause of Action is based primarily upon U. S. v. General Motors Corp., (7 Cir.) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,120, 56,139] 121 F. 2d 376, cert. den. 314 U. S. 618, reh. den. 314 U. S. 710. In that case the indictment charged and the evidence showed that General Motors Corp., General Motors Sales Corp., and General Motors Acceptance Corp. conspired to restrain unreasonably interstate trade and commerce in GM cars; that their purpose was to control the financing essential to the wholesale purchase and retail sale of GM cars; and that in furtherance of this purpose the conspirators devoted themselves to concerted action by which GMAC financing was imposed on dealers who were engaged in the purchase and sale of such cars.

There are many similarities between that case and the case at bar, but also many vital distinctions.

First, the similarities. Ford is one of three corporations holding dominant positions in the automotive industry. GMC was and is the largest. The facts set out above under the headings "The Industry" and "The Defendant and its Sales Agreements" are similar to those found in the GMC case.

In the General Motors case the court said, at p. 398:

> "The record leaves no doubt that the dealer body as a whole was made acutely aware and had knowledge of the set policy of the appellants with respect to use of GMAC financing facilities. The fear of cancellation or refusal to renew contracts was great, so much so that the dealer was reluctant to refuse the terms and policies dictated by the appellants."

In the instant case fear of cancellation was equally great; and the other dealers would no doubt have required Ford to terminate any dealer who refused to contribute to his LMDA, but sought to obtain a free ride on the TV and other LMDA advertising in his area.

But the distinctions between the General Motors case and the instant case are even more important.

GMAC was owned by GMC; the conspirators had identical interests, to make money for the GMC family. But the interests of Ford and the LMDAs are not identical. Ford does not own or control the LMDAs; they are composed of L-M dealers, who are interested in promoting the sale of Lincolns and Mercurys against Ford cars as well as against cars made by other manufacturers. Nor does Ford own any interest in the advertising agency used by the LMDAs.

GMAC was selling financing and was in active competition with other finance companies. Neither Ford nor LMDA is selling advertising. Both of them are buying advertising—sometimes in the same and sometimes in different media, usually through the same but sometimes through different advertising agencies. Each LMDA had the right to select its own agency or agencies; it usually selected the agency used by Ford, but this selection was made for sound business reasons advantageous to dealer members. Other agencies and all media had a right to compete for the advertising purchased by the LMDAs; many different media were used; and the LMDAs purchased some advertising from outside agencies.

The requirement of GMAC financing was an unreasonable arrangement, so far as the dealers were concerned; it was designed solely to promote the selfish interests of GMAC. LMDA advertising is a reasonable arrangement, designed to promote the interests of L-M dealers by furnishing them with effective advertising at a minimum of cost through cooperative effort.

GMC required dealers to promise to use GMAC financing exclusively. Ford did not require L-M dealers to use LMDA advertising exclusively or to promise to use it exclusively; in fact, it was not used exclusively by plaintiff, which spent many thousands of dollars for other types of advertising in local papers and other media. Plaintiff's officers signed the original LMDA agreement voluntarily without any threats from Ford. Although Miller now says that he was dissatisfied with some of the advertising in the early years and again in late 1953, neither he nor any other dealer ever sought to withdraw from LMDA until 1954.

GMAC financing was found to have prevented many members of the public from buying GMC cars. It has not been shown that the cost of LMDA advertising had any such effect. The purpose and effect of the advertising was to increase the sale of L-M cars.

Restraining of commerce in GMC cars through sale of financing was not necessarily inconsistent with the interests of GMC, for GMC made a profit directly from GMAC financing. The suggestion in the GMC case "Sometimes it is good business to sacrifice car sales in order to increase the sale of a complementary product or service" has no application here. Ford made nothing directly from LMDA advertising; the indirect benefit it got from LMDA advertising was matched by the benefit the dealers got from Ford's own advertising of Lincolns and Mercurys and by Ford's contributions to the cost of the Ed Sullivan show. Moreover, LMDA advertising promoted Lincolns and Mercurys against Fords, as well as against cars of other manufacturers; Ford car dealers had their own advertising funds, which promoted Fords as against Lincolns and Mercurys.

The Seventh Circuit held, p. 400 b, that the restrictions imposed upon the financing of the wholesale and retail sale of General Motors cars, bore no reasonable relation to manufacturer's goodwill. The court recognized, however, pp. 400 a, 403 b, that it is proper for a manufacturer to promote its goodwill and to protect itself against inefficient as well as unscrupulous dealers, citing Pick Mfg. Co. v. General Motors Corp., (7 Cir.) 80 F. 2d 641, aff'd [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,138] 299 U. S. 3; cf. International Business Machines Corp. v. U. S. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,112], 298 U. S. 131.

The Seventh Circuit also noted, p. 404 a:

> "The finance restriction operates on the retail purchaser as well as on the dealer, and the competing discount companies are unable to finance General Motors cars. The parts restriction in the Pick case operated on the General Motors dealer only, and the competition of other parts manufacturers was not completely destroyed."

The case at bar is similar to the Pick case in those respects, and not to the General Motors case.

[Monopoly]

Plaintiff does not claim that the effect of the LMDA arrangement was to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of automobiles, either nationally or locally, but "to create a monopoly in the interstate trade and commerce in Lincoln and Mercury automobiles and accessories and advertising used for the sale of said automobiles." However, as the Supreme Court noted in U. S. v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377, 393, every manufacturer has a natural monopoly in his own product, especially when sold under his trade-name, and such a monopoly is not prohibited by the antitrust laws. See also Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corp., (D. C. Md.) 26 F. Supp. 824; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., (D. C. Md.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292] 138 F. Supp. 899, aff'd [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564] (4 Cir.) 239 F. 2d 176. The issues arising out of the sale of parts and accessories will be discussed in the next section of this opinion.

[Tie-in Sales]

Ford manufactures and sells automobiles, not advertising; it is not seeking to enter the field of selling advertising. The LMDAs were organized for the purchase of advertising, not its sale. The TV and radio networks and stations, newspapers and other advertising media do the selling. All of the tying cases, which will be discussed below, involve efforts by a defendant to tie one of his own products to the sale of another of his products—never to the sale of somebody else's product; "the essence of illegality in tying agreements is the wielding of monopolistic leverage; a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next." Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, at 611. No such exploitation is involved in LMDA advertising. It is true that Ford obtained an indirect benefit from LMDA advertising; but that benefit is offset by the benefit obtained by dealers from Ford's advertising of L-M cars and by Ford's contribution to the TV advertising done by LMDA. Nelligan, the Greenville, S. C., dealer who has a similar suit against Ford, conceded that LMDA had "accomplished a necessary job" and had increased the sale of Lincoln and Mercury automobiles.

Even a true tie-in sale is not prohibited under Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act unless, in the language of the statute, the effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly * * *". The effect of aggressive advertising of L-M cars is to promote competition between those cars and other makes, not to lessen such competition.

Nor has there been any restraint of competition in or tendency toward monopolization of advertising. Each LMDA is free to choose its own agency and the media for its advertising. In practice, several agencies and many different media have been used, including newspapers and radio stations in the dealers' home towns. Some advertising agencies or advertising media may lose some dealer advertising as a result of coordinated LMDA advertising; that is true of any advertising by any association, because it is possible, indeed probable, that some members would do more individual advertising if they did not participate in coordinated advertising. But advertising by associations does not violate the Sherman Act unless it restricts competition or tends to create a monopoly to an extent far beyond anything suggested in the present case. In addition to its LMDA and co-op advertising, plaintiff spent locally each year substantial sums for advertising which plaintiff itself selected.

[Public Injury]

Finally, private suits under 15 U. S. C. A. 15 are maintainable only when the defendant's conduct has caused some injury to the public generally, as distinct from purely personal or private damage. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 236 U. S. 165; Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., (4 Cir.) [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,062] 72 F. 2d 885, at 889; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., et al., (D. Md.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292] 138 F. Supp. 899, at 903, aff'd [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564] (4 Cir.) 239 F. 2d 176; Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Co., (D. Md.) 26 F. Supp. 824, 826; Feddersen Motors, Inc. v. Ward, (10 Cir.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579] 180 F. 2d 519; Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip, (5 Cir.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,694] 211 F. 2d 268, cert. den. 348 U. S. 821; Shotkin v. General Electric Co., (10 Cir.) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341] 171 F. 2d 236. No such injury to the public has been shown in this case.

[No Antitrust Violation]

Defendant has not violated the antitrust laws with respect to any matter alleged in the First Cause of Action. It did not conspire with LMDA to restrain unreasonably interstate trade and commerce in L-M cars or accessories, or the advertising thereof, in violation of Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act. It did not conspire with or through LMDA or otherwise to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in L-M cars and accessories nor to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in the advertising of said cars and accessories, in violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act. LMDA payments made by plaintiff were not tied in with the sale of defendant's products to plaintiff, in violation of Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act.

II. Parts and Accessories—
(Fourth Cause of Action)

[Tie-in Sales]

Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 14, prohibits a lease or sale of goods "on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

Plaintiff admits that there was no express condition, agreement or understanding that plaintiff would not use or deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of Ford. Plaintiff further admits that it did so deal, to a substantial extent. Plaintiff also agrees that the sales agreements were not "requirements" contracts. Its counsel argues:

> "Thus the question of a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act must be viewed from the standpoint of each individual sale, and whether or not the sale of each individual automobile was made on the condition that the dealer also purchase advertising, parts and accessories bearing no reasonable relation to the protection of the manufacturer's good will. If such a condition existed, then it becomes immaterial whether or not the sale or condition was accompanied by threats or pressure. In such a case it is the condition itself that invokes the violation, and not the means by which the condition may have been enforced."

But Ford did not require plaintiff to purchase parts and accessories as a condition of Ford's acceptance of individual orders for the purchase of automobiles. Ford did insist that plaintiff purchase and carry a volume of parts and accessories satisfactory to Ford as a condition of continuing as a franchise dealer; and terminated plaintiff's franchise agreement because plaintiff did not sell enough automobiles and enough parts and accessories to satisfy Ford, along with other reasons.

The problem in the instant case is complicated by the fact that plaintiff occupied a dual role with respect to parts and accessories. In some instances it was the ultimate consumer, i.e., when it used parts to repair Lincolns, Mercurys or other makes of automobiles which it owned. In other instances it was a dealer, sometimes a wholesaler and sometimes a retailer, selling some parts and accessories purchased by it under its franchise agreement with Ford, and other parts and accessories purchased by it from other sources for resale to its customers.

[Good Will]

Ford had the undoubted right to require plaintiff not to sell as genuine parts any parts that were not genuine, and might have required plaintiff to use only parts and accessories supplied by Ford in repairing Lincoln and Mercury automobiles. Pick Mfg. Co. v. General Motors Corp., supra. Such a provision is designed to maintain the good will of the public toward the manufacturer's automobiles. Plaintiff does not question Pick, so far as the sale or use of genuine L-M parts is concerned, and Ford does not contend that the Pick doctrine extends to all accessories. Ford does argue that the same reasoning should extend to such accessories as rear view mirrors, seat covers, heaters and radios, which are frequently purchased as part of the car or installed by the dealer at the time of the sale.

Ford also contends that it had the right to require plaintiff to carry a representative line of L-M Division accessories, if it was to continue as a franchise dealer, since it was the only franchise dealer of that division in Forsyth County, in which Winston-Salem is located. There is considerable force in this argument, and I conclude that it justifies the pressures which Ford applied to plaintiff in this case. It is not necessary to decide how far the argument might support a manufacturer in a different case.

[Right To Select Customers]

It has been repeatedly held that a single manufacturer has a right to select its customers and to refuse to sell its goods to anyone, for reasons sufficient to itself. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300; Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Bros.-Clark Co., 263 U. S. 565; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594; Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat Co., (2 Cir.) 227 F. 46. A refusal to deal becomes illegal only when it produces an unreasonable restraint of trade or a monopoly forbidden by the antitrust laws. Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211; Lorain Journal Co. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., (D. Md.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292] 138 F. Supp. 899, aff'd (4 Cir.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564] 239 F. 2d 176. A manufacturer has the right to develop his enterprise intelligently by promoting productive business relationships and channels of distribution, while abandoning those which are relatively barren.

In Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip, (5 Cir.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,694] 211 F. 2d 268, cert. den. 348 U. S. 821, the court held that the exercise by Hudson of its right not to renew a dealer's franchise could not form the basis of a suit under Sec. 15, even if the evidence had shown that Hudson had done so only because the dealer had refused to give up in the future his other agencies and center his efforts on, and give his undivided attention to, Hudson and Hudson products. To the same effect is Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola, (5 Cir.) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386] 200 F. 2d 911, cert. den. 345 U. S. 925, where the court noted that in all of the cases decided by the Supreme Court involving Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act there was an agreement and not a mere refusal to deal. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, discusses the earlier cases, and they need not be reviewed here. There was also an express agreement in the later Supreme Court cases. Richfield Oil Corp. v. U. S. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,262], 343 U. S. 922, reh. den. 343 U. S. 958; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, supra.

The Nelson case was cited with approval in Allied Equipment Co., Inc. v. Weber Engineered Products, Inc., (4 Cir.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,502] 237 F. 2d 879. In that case Allied contended that Weber, by attempting to use the threat of cancellation to force Allied to enter into an illegal exclusive dealing contract, violated Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act. Judge Prettyman, writing for the Fourth Circuit, said, at p. 883:

> "Allied faces a dilemma on the point. If there was no contract denying it the right to handle products competitive to Weber, there was no violation of the antitrust laws. If there was such a contract, as we have already pointed out the breach was by Allied and so no damages accrued to it."

Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., (7 Cir.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,577] 181 F. 2d 70, [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,778] 340 U. S. 558, and [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,249] 229 F. 2d 714, may be in conflict with Allied v. Weber if the statement quoted above is taken to refer to all antitrust laws. But if the statement quoted is taken to refer only to the Clayton Act, which was the only act relied on by the plaintiff in that case, and not to the Sherman Act, there is no conflict between Allied v. Weber and Emich v. GMC. Emich owned his own finance company and insisted upon using it in preference to GMAC; his motor company did not enter into any agreement with GMAC. Both the motor company and the finance company were plaintiffs in the case, and GMC and GMAC were defendants. A prima facie case of conspiracy and coercion was made out by offering in evidence defendant's criminal conviction under the Sherman Act, U. S. v. GMC, supra. All Emich had to do was to show that his companies were damaged by the conspiracy. Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act was not involved in the case.

[Public Injury]

Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act was designed to protect the competitors of a seller from being foreclosed from the market. Hudson v. Waldrip, supra; Nelson v. Motorola, supra; Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co., (3 Cir.) [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,459] 155 F. 2d 99; Shotkin v. General Electric Co., (10 Cir.) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341] 171 F. 2d 236; Feddersen Motors, Inc. v. Ward, (10 Cir.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579] 180 F. 2d 519; Riedley v. Hudson Motor Car Co., (W. D. Ky.) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,369] 82 F. Supp. 8; Dublin Distributors, Inc. v. Edward & John Burke, Ltd., (S. D. N. Y.) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,398] 109 F. Supp. 125, 61 Yale Law Journal, 1010, 1048 (1952). Suits by dealers against automobile manufacturers have been generally unsuccessful because the dealers have been unable to show any injurious effects on the public automobile market. Schwing v. Hudson, supra; Feddersen v. Ward, supra; Riedley v. Hudson, supra. See also Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., (4 Cir.) [1932-1939

Trade Cases ¶ 55,062] 72 F. 2d 885, 889. None is shown here. There can be no recovery by a private litigant under the antitrust laws in the absence of a public injury. See cases cited on this point near the end of Section I of this discussion.

[Tests]

In Times-Picayune v. U. S. the majority opinion held that "the essence of illegality in tying agreements is the wielding of monopolistic leverage; * * * Solely for testing the strength of that lever, the whole and not part of a relevant market must be assigned controlling weight." [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494] 345 U. S. 594, 611.

> "When the seller enjoys a monopolistic position in the market for the 'tying' product, or if a substantial volume of commerce in the 'tied' product is restrained, a tying arrangement violates the narrower standards expressed in Section 3 of the Clayton Act, because from either factor the requisite potential lessening of competition is inferred." 345 U. S. 608, 609.

Ford does not enjoy a monopolistic position in the automobile industry. The total volume of its business in parts and accessories does amount to a substantial volume of commerce; but by far the greater part of that volume is represented by "genuine" parts and accessories, which it is conceded by everyone Ford has a right to require its dealers to handle and use. Pick v. GMC, supra. Ford's total commerce in seat covers, undercoating and similar accessories is not negligible, viewed on a national basis. But there was no evidence of any substantial restraint of commerce even in those items. Plaintiff bought seat covers, undercoating, etc., from many other sources as well as from Ford. It purchased from other sources nearly half of all the parts and accessories which it sold or used, more than half of all except "genuine" Lincoln-Mercury parts. Rival suppliers had no difficulty in securing consumer access. More than fifty suppliers in or near Winston-Salem sold parts and accessories to plaintiff. Ford's competitors were not foreclosed from the market. And there is no evidence that any parts or accessories were sold to plaintiff against the will of its officers within the three year period before this suit was filed.

[No Antitrust Violation]

Plaintiff admits that there was no express condition, agreement or understanding that it would not use or deal in parts and accessories supplied by others, except when it was undertaking to use or supply "genuine" Lincoln-Mercury parts or accessories. I find that there was no such implied condition, agreement or understanding, and that the sales agreements did not have that practical effect.

Plaintiff has not shown any violation by Ford of Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act in connection with the sale of parts and accessories, at least within a period of three years before the action was filed. Moreover, plaintiff has not shown that it sustained any damages in connection with parts and accessories as a result of anything done by Ford or its representatives within the three year period.

III. Domination and Monopoly—(Fifth Cause of Action)

["Domination" Theory]

The power which Ford possessed to control its dealers is shown by the facts set out under the heading "The Industry" in the statement of facts above. They are the same facts found by the Congressional Committees in 1956. Plaintiff contends that the existence of this power, and its exercise by Ford to the extent shown by the findings of fact, amounted to "economic slavery" and "market domination or distribution control," violated Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act, and entitled plaintiff to sue the manufacturer under that act for any losses it may have sustained by reason of such domination.

[Dealer Franchise Act]

Congress evidently did not share this view; it found it necessary to adopt an entirely new statute "to supplement the antitrust laws of the United States, in order to balance the power now heavily weighted in favor of automobile manufacturers, by enabling franchise automobile dealers to bring suit in the district courts of the United States to recover damages sustained by reason of the failure of automobile manufacturers to act in good faith in complying with the terms of franchises or in terminating or not renewing franchises with their dealers." See title of P. L. 1026, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., August 8, 1956, Chap. 1038, 70 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. A. 1221, et seq., U. S. C. Cong. & Adm. News, p. 6589.

Nowhere in the Senate and House reports is it suggested that a dealer has such a remedy as plaintiff seeks to establish under the fifth cause of action. On the contrary, the Senate Committee stated, Report No. 2073, p. 3:

"Dealers seeking redress for grievances under these franchises found themselves effectively foreclosed in attempting to bring suit upon the franchises. The terms of this one-sided document compelled the courts to conclude that, however, inequitable the consequences, the dealer executing such a franchise had, for all practical purposes, surrendered his right to litigate his grievance. This has been the prevailing view of courts, both Federal and State, in passing upon suits filed by dealers under the franchises. Representative of the thinking of the courts is the decision in Ford Motor Company v. Kirkmyer Motor Co., (65 F. 2d 1001, (CCA 4, 1933)), where the court stated: 'While there is a natural impulse to be impatient with a form of contract which places the comparatively helpless dealer at the mercy of the manufacturer, we cannot make contracts for parties or protect them from the provisions of contracts which have been made for themselves. Dealers doubtless accept these one-sided contracts because they think that the right to deal in the product of the manufacturer, even on his terms, is valuable to them; but after they have made such contracts, relying upon the good faith of the manufacturer for the protection which the contracts do not give, they cannot, when they get into trouble, expect the courts to place in the contract the protection which they themselves have failed to insert.'"

[General Motors Case]

Plaintiff's principal reliance is upon certain statements in the opinion of the Seventh Circuit in U. S. v. General Motors Corp. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,120, 56,139], 121 F. 2d 376. After recognizing that it is proper for General Motors (or Ford) to promote manufacturer's good-will and to protect the manufacturer against inefficient and unscrupulous dealers, the court said that "there is a limit to how far a manufacturer may go to control the whole process of distribution." 121 F. 2d at 400. It should be noted that the finance restriction in that case operated on the retail purchaser as well as on the dealer. There is no similar restriction in this case. Discussing the question of domination, the Seventh Circuit said:

"For that matter GMC has always dominated the market for General Motors cars to a considerable extent, but it was only when control of the marketing process was perfected by the appellants and was directed at the creation of an artificial non-competitive market for GMAC, that it extended beyond legitimate business demands and became a menace to the interests of the public." 121 F. 2d at 403.

The statement contained in the last quotation has been approved by the Fourth Circuit. Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., et al. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, 906, aff'd [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564] 239 F. 2d 176.

[No Antitrust Violation]

Plaintiff's counsel admit that no reported case allows recovery to a dealer against a manufacturer under the domination theory they advance. I conclude that such "market domination or distribution control" as Ford may have exercised, or such "economic captivity" as it may have imposed on the plaintiff, did not amount to a monopolization of, or an attempt to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, in violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover under any cause of action in this case. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to pass on the question of the applicable statute of limitations, to go more fully into the matter of damages, or to consider the question of plaintiff's attorneys' fees. Plaintiff is entitled to receive the $1,417.10 due it for repairs to automobiles, which defendant paid into court. I direct the Clerk to pay that amount over to the plaintiff forthwith.

Enter judgment for the defendant, with costs.

[¶ 68,664] United States v. Schenley Industries, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. Civil Action No. 1686. Dated April 3, 1957.

Case No. 1214 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Acquisitions of Stock or Assets—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Acquisition of Competitors—Producer-Distributor of Whiskey.—A producer-distributor of whiskey was prohibited by a consent decree, for a period of ten years, from acquiring, directly or indirectly, through subsidiaries or otherwise, the business of any corporation engaged in distilling and distributing whiskey in bottles in the United States by the acquisition of stock or other share capital or by the purchase of assets. However, if the producer-distributor desired to make any acquisition prior to the expiration of ten-year period, it could notify the Government of the proposed acquisition. If the Government does not object to the acquisition, the acquisition would be deemed not to be a violation of the consent judgment. If the Government objects to the acquisition, the producer-distributor could apply to the court for permission to make the acquisition, and such permission could be granted upon a showing that the acquisition would not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the distilling or distribution of whiskey.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4206, 4207, 4208.05; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Ephraim Jacobs, William H. McManus, John M. O'Donnell, and Charles F. B. McAleer, attorneys.

For the defendant: Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood by Leonard Joseph.

Final Judgment

CALEB WRIGHT, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff United States of America having filed its complaint herein; defendant Schenley Industries, Inc. (hereinafter "Schenley") having appeared and filed its answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof and denying any violation of law; and the parties herein, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party in respect to any such issue of fact or law,

Now, therefore, without any testimony having been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and on consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Clayton Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all parties hereto pursuant to Section 15 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, as amended, entitled "An Act to Supplement Existing Laws Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies and For Other Purposes," commonly known as the Clayton Act; and the complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted under Section 7 of said Act.

II

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall be binding upon said defendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees and subsidiaries, and upon those persons in active concert or participation with said defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

III

[Acquisitions Prohibited]

Schenley is enjoined and restrained until March 1, 1967 from acquiring, directly or indirectly, through subsidiaries or otherwise, either by acquisition of stock or other share capital, or by the purchase of assets, the business of any corporation engaged in distilling and distributing whiskey in bottles in the United States. Provided, however, that if at any time Schenley desires to make any acquisitions prior to March 1, 1967 which would be otherwise prohibited by the foregoing, it may submit disclosure of the facts with respect to such proposed acquisition and the reason therefor to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff shall not object to the proposed acquisition within 30 days after receipt of such notice, such acquisition shall be deemed not to be a violation of this Final Judgment. In the event the plaintiff shall object, defendant may apply to this Court for permission to make such acquisition, which may be granted upon a showing by the defendant to the satisfaction of this Court that the acquisition would not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the distilling or distribution of whiskey.

Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to prohibit the purchase by the defendant of bulk whiskey or other supplies or equipment in the normal course of business.

IV

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall be permitted, upon written request of the Attorney General, or of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant at its principal office, (1) to inspect during office hours all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the defendant relating to any of the subject matters contained in this Final Judgment; and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of the defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview any officer or employee of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; (3) and to require the defendant to submit such reports in writing with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment, as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section IV shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States of America is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

V

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any party to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,665] United States v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Equity No. 87-273. Filed March 27, 1957.

Case No. 434 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Divorcement—Court Appointment of Directors.—Where a motion picture company was required by a consent decree to separate its exhibition business from its production and distribution business, the court decided to appoint a special consultant and two directors of a new theatre company which was organized to take over the exhibition portion of the company's business. The consent decree provided that one-half of the membership of the board of the new theatre company was to be approved by the court and subject to its direction until the stock of the new theatre company is distributed to the stockholders of the motion picture company.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.10, 8421.

For the plaintiff: United States Attorney.

For the defendant: Leopold Friedman, New York, N. Y.

For the text of the consent judgment entered in the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,228.

[Decree—Divorcement]

EDMUND L. PALMIERI, District Judge [In full text]: This matter deals with the conditions which must be observed with respect to compliance with certain provisions of the Consent Judgment entered on February 6, 1952, relating to the divorcement of the exhibition business of Loew's Incorporated from its production and distribution business.

[Extension of Time]

On January 29, 1957, Loew's Incorporated and New Theatre Company, the theatre subsidiaries of Loew's Incorporated, jointly petitioned for an extension of time in which to comply with the Consent Judgment, and for modification of certain provisions thereof. This petition was necessitated by virtue of the time limitations contained in the Consent Judgment. That judgment provided that a division or refinancing to accomplish a division of its "present funded debt" (as of February 6, 1952) shall in any event be made no later than five years from the date of such Consent Judgment; and further, that Loew's Incorporated shall distribute the stock of New Theatre Company pro rata among its stockholders within thirty days after the division or refinancing of its present funded debt. These provisions of the judgment thus fixed February 6, 1957, the expiration of the five-year period, as the time limit for partial compliance and thirty days thereafter as the time limit for complete compliance.

Since the matter was one of considerable complexity and no proper disposition could be made without the careful study of many matters going back over a period of years, I thought it wise to obviate any further time limit until such time as I could formulate the bases for a decision. Accordingly, and on February 4, 1957, I entered a standby order providing in substance that the dates for compliance specified in the Consent Decree of 1952 for the division or refinancing and the stock distribution hereinabove referred to, be postponed sine die and until further order of this Court.

Since the entry of that order, further study of the problems involved has convinced me that the complexities of the matters with which I am required to deal are such that I cannot expect to arrive at expeditious solutions without the benefit of consultation with persons having financial and accounting expertise in matters of comparable scope. I am dismayed that so much time has already passed without definitive solutions and short of the accomplishment of total compliance with the Consent Decree. But I do not wish to imply that more could have been accomplished during the time that has passed since the entry of the Consent Decree. Any conclusions in this regard must necessarily await a thorough study of the problems which remain to be solved.

[Approval of Directorships]

The Consent Judgment as to Loew's Incorporated, as amended, provided that one-half of the membership of the boards of the theatre-owning subsidiaries were to be "approved by the Court and subject to its direction" until the capital stock of the New Theatre Company is distributed to the stockholders of Loew's Incorporated (Section V E, page 58 of the Consent Judgment and Order entered on June 24, 1954).

Approval of designated persons to serve as directors has invariably been given with the express reservation that it was to continue "unless otherwise ordered by this Court." Because I wish to avoid undue delay, expense and inconvenience and to reduce to a minimum the holding of court hearings and proceedings which might easily ensnare us in vexatious and time-consuming detail, I have decided to appoint a special consultant and two directors of the New Theatre Company, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the accompanying orders.

I wish to make plain that no disqualification must be deemed to attach to either of the two directors displaced by this decision. They may remain eligible to serve either by succession to company directors or by any enlargement of the board which preserves the balance between Court appointed and other directors.

[¶ 68,666] Maple Drive-In Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 96-101. Filed March 26, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Pretrial Hearing—Issues.—At a pretrial hearing, the court required the plaintiff (1) to submit in writing a detailed statement of the facts which it expects to prove upon trial relating to its charge of conspiracy and identify such documentary proof as it will offer on such issue and (2) to submit in writing a detailed statement of the facts which it expects to prove upon trial, and identify such documentary proof as it will offer, with respect to its claim that the defendants further delayed pictures beyond their availability.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.725.

For the plaintiff: Robert H. Ruskin, Flushing, N. Y.

For the defendants: Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey; R. W. Perkins; Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim; Adolph Schimel; Schwartz & Frohlich; Louis Phillips; Benjamin Melniker; Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine; O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery; and Herbert B. Lazarus, all of New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,456, 68,422 and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,972.

Memorandum

[Pretrial Order]

MURPHY, District Judge [In full text]: While sitting in Part I of the Jury Calendar Part of this court at the request of counsel an attempt was made on three separate hearings to pre-try this private antitrust cause.

At the last hearing on March 8, 1957, it was agreed that the court would resolve, on receipt of memoranda, what purported to be two remaining issues, to wit, (1) whether plaintiff should state each specific overt act on which it relies to show conspiracy and attach a list identifying clearly each document on which it will rely to prove its claim, and (2) whether with respect to plaintiff's claim that defendants further delayed pictures beyond their availability, plaintiff should advise defendants of the name of each such picture stating the date it claims it should have had it and the date it was afforded.

Memoranda, reply memoranda and numerous letters have now been submitted devoted not to such issues but a host of others, some previously ruled upon, others not heretofore raised and still others that properly belong before another court, all of which leaves with the court a suspicion which we have purposely refrained from recording.

As to the two issues it was agreed should be resolved it is ordered:

(1) Plaintiff shall within ten days of the date hereof state in writing a detailed statement of the facts it expects to prove upon the trial relating to its charge of conspiracy and identify by appropriate reference such documentary proof as it will offer on such issue.

(2) With respect to plaintiff's claim that defendants further delayed pictures beyond their availability plaintiff should within ten days of the date hereof state in writing a detailed statement of the facts it expects to prove upon the trial relating to such claim and identify by appropriate reference such documentary proof as it will offer on such issue.

This is an order. No settlement is necessary.

[¶ 68,667] J. Rose & Company, Inc. v. Unity Stove Company, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term. Dated December 23, 1955.

New York Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Practices—Refusal to Deal—Sufficiency of Counterclaim.—A counterclaim of a wholesaler-retailer of gas ranges charging that a manufacturer of gas ranges and three other wholesalers-retailers of gas ranges engaged in a conspiracy in which the manufacturer refused to sell its gas ranges to the wholesaler-retailer was held insufficient on the grounds that the wholesaler-retailer failed to allege that the manufacturer had a monopoly or that its product was not otherwise obtainable, or that the manufacturer's product was imperatively necessary for the continued maintenance of the competitive position of the wholesaler-retailer. Also, the wholesaler-retailer failed to allege that the manufacturer's action had a necessary and final effect unlawfully to stifle competition and produce injury.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2337.34, 2425.34.

For the plaintiff: Rosenblum & Hein.

For the defendant: Wolfe R. Charney.

[Nature of Action]

IRVING H. SAYPOL, Justice [In full text]: The plaintiff moves, pursuant to rule 113 of the Rules of Civil Practice, and section 476 of the Civil Practice Act, to strike out the answer and for judgment, and pursuant to rule 109 to strike out the counterclaim for insufficiency. The action is brought to recover a balance due upon the purchase price of gas ranges sold and delivered to the defendant. The claim is admitted. Although the counterclaim is stated in equity and seeks damages in an amount greater than the plaintiff's claim, it is nevertheless invalid. This counterclaim is an action within the purview of subdivision 3 of rule 113. (Salt Springs Nat. Bank of Syracuse v. Hitchcock, 144 Misc. 547, revd. on other grounds 238 App. Div. 150.) Here, the defendant has submitted no proof to support it.

[Antitrust Counterclaim]

The counterclaim is based on alleged conspiratorial violations of section 340 of the General Business Law and section 580 of the Penal Law and seeks equitable relief and damages. The defendant, a wholesaler and retailer of gas ranges alleges that the plaintiff, another manufacturer of gas ranges, and three wholesalers and retailers, competitors of the defendant, conspired that the plaintiff should refuse to sell ranges to the defendant and that the plaintiff failed and refused to do so pursuant to the conspiracy. Statement of facts of the tortious acts included in the conspiracy are essential to a validly stated cause of action (Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Assn., 175 N. Y. 1; Miller v. Spitzer, 224 App. Div. 39; McGrane v. McGrane, 195 Misc. 868). The defendant alleges the amount of business previously done with the plaintiff, without showing its relation to the whole of the defendant's business. It alleges further in general conclusory fashion that the plaintiff, in concert with others, conspired, by withholding its product from the defendant, to restrain and prevent competition by it and its freedom in marketing, purchasing, and selling gas ranges but without further factual allegations that the plaintiff's product was unique or indispensable to such activities or from which it could be inferred that the withdrawal of the plaintiff's product, whether voluntary or by concerted action, would have that effect. Further, the allegations do not lend support to any inference that the claimed concerted action brought to bear such economic power resulting in that magnitude of stifled competition necessary to constitute a violation of the statutes. Certainly there is no intimation in the counterclaim that the defendant was forced out of business. The claim of loss of profits realizable from the sale of ranges withheld is innocuous, for as has been said nothing contained in the pleading warrants the inference that the plaintiff's product was indispensable to the realization of such profits and that no other product was available, so that the defendant was thus ousted from a fair competitive position. In short, while the defendant was excluded by the plaintiff's exercise of competitive practice, it does not follow from the allegations that the defendant was also injured or ruined. There must be allegation that in addition to the mere exclusion there is proof which would sustain a claim that the action had a necessary and final effect unlawfully to stifle competition and produce injury. Here at most is the defendant's conclusory allegation of nothing more than plaintiff's acts in freely refusing to sell its products to the defendant (Alexander's Dept. Stores v. Ohrbach's Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,285], 266 App. Div. 535, appeal dismissed 291 N. Y. 707). The failure to allege either that the plaintiff had a monopoly or that its product was not otherwise obtainable or that the plaintiff's product was imperatively necessary for the continued maintenance of the defendant's competitive position is fatal (Locker v. American Tobacco Co., 121 App. Div. 443; cf. Alexander's Dept. Stores v. Ohrbach's Inc., supra). Furthermore, no proof of such facts is submitted in opposition to the motion pursuant to rule 113. The motion is granted. Settle order.

[¶ 68,668] J. C. Martin Corp.; Jack Kaslow and Seymour Orenstein, individually and as officers of J. C. Martin Corp.; Jack Kaslow, trading as K. W. Sales Company; and Seymour Orenstein, trading as L & S Sales Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. October Term 1956—January Session 1957. No. 11859. Dated April 3, 1957.

On petition to review and set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Lottery Devices—Element of Prize—Legality of Sales Method.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting a company from selling merchandise by means of a lottery scheme was set aside since the company's sales method did not constitute a lottery in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. A prospective purchaser had the option of purchasing directly from a descriptive list of merchandise or of pulling a tab to ascertain his purchase and the price to be paid. There was no price differential in regard to a particular article depending on whether a "straight" sale or a "pull tab sale" took place. Whether or not an individual elected to purchase the article identified by a tab he had pulled, he did not pay anything for the privilege of pulling the tab. In order to constitute a lottery, the elements of consideration, chance, and prize must be present. The pull tab device standing alone was not a lottery scheme since the company's sales methods did not incorporate the element of prize which is the motivating factor or the inducement that accounts, in large part, for the success of virtually all forms of gambling—the opportunity to get something for nothing. Where, as here, each participant in the scheme, would, in any event, receive the equivalent of the amount contributed by him, and where he was not under any hazard of pecuniary loss, nor offered the chance of receiving something of more value than the amount contributed by him, a lottery did not exist. The fact that an article may be of value or use to one recipient and not to another does not establish the element of prize.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5173.50.

For the petitioners: Edward L. Smith, Washington, D. C.

For the respondent: Robert B. Dawkins and John W. Carter, Jr., Washington, D. C.

Vacating and setting aside a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6145.

Before LINDLEY, SWAIM and SCHNACKENBERG, Circuit Judges.

[Review of FTC Order]

SWAIM, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This matter comes here on a petition to review and set aside an order to cease and desist issued by the Federal Trade Commission at the conclusion of an administrative proceeding in which petitioners were charged with having engaged in unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce by the sale and distribution of merchandise to the public by means of a game of chance, lottery or gift enterprise in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 52 Stat. 111, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45.

[Petitioners' Business]

Petitioners are engaged in the sale and distribution of numerous and varied articles of merchandise including, among others, jewelry, silverware, kitchen utensils and toiletries. Practically all of petitioners' sales are made through members of the public acting as distributors or sales agents for petitioners' merchandise. Petitioners obtain these agents or distributors by sending catalogues to persons whose names and addresses are obtained from mailing lists. The catalogues or sales circulars contain pictures and descriptions of various articles of merchandise offered as premiums or compensation to the distributor for his services in selling forty assorted articles of merchandise. The catalogue contains a list of forty articles of merchandise offered for sale with descriptive details for each item, including the name and price. There is a blank space opposite the name of each item for inserting the name of the purchaser. To the right of the articles listed for sale on the sales sheet there are forty perforated tabs. Each tab conceals the name and price of an article of merchandise corresponding to the name and price of an article in the list of merchandise offered for sale. Immediately above the blocks of pull tabs the following notice appears:

> "This is a sales sheet. It is not a punchboard or a gambling device. Do not construe or accept for use as a gambling device.
>
> * * *
>
> "Here's how it works. You may purchase from the list shown on the left where the merchandise is described or you may pull any one of the slips below on the back of which is printed the article and price. If not satisfied with the item you picked you are not obliged to buy it."

As provided by the notice, a prospective purchaser has the option of purchasing directly from the descriptive list of merchandise or of pulling a tab to ascertain his purchase and the price to be paid. There is no price differential in regard to a particular article depending on whether a "straight sale" or a "pull tab sale" takes place. A purchaser may buy as many of any particular article as he wishes either outright or by means of the tabs. Whether or not an individual elects to purchase the article identified by a tab he has pulled, he does not pay anything for the privilege of pulling the tab. After a sale has been consummated, the name of the purchaser is written in the blank space opposite the name of the article purchased.

When the person operating the catalogue has sold all of the articles and remitted the purchase price of the articles to the petitioners, petitioners ship to this person the merchandise so sold together with a premium as compensation for his services in operating the catalogue or sales circular. The distributor then delivers this merchandise to the respective purchasers whose names appear on the list which was filled out at the time the purchases were made.

If the complete assortment is disposed of the distributor would collect $29.99 to remit to the petitioners. The distributor may elect to retain a specified percentage of this amount in lieu of the premium. In the event the distributor does not succeed in selling the complete assortment, he is not entitled to a premium but receives a cash commission on the articles sold. In the event that the distributor's sales exceed the amount represented by the complete assortment, he receives in addition to the regular premium a cash commission on the excess. Approximately 70 per cent of petitioners' sales made by means of the sales circular, which includes sales made through the use of the pull tabs and sales made outright, have been for the amount represented by a complete assortment of the forty items ($29.99), 20 per cent for amounts exceeding that figure and 10 per cent for amounts below that figure. Petitioners purchase the forty assorted articles as a complete, packaged unit and the success of their method of selling merchandise depends in large part upon the sale of not more nor less than a complete assortment. Otherwise inventories of the individual articles must be maintained and special packaging arrangements must be made when an order is to be filled.

[FTC's Findings and Order]

The Commission found that petitioners' sales methods involve and contemplate the use of lottery devices in the sale and distribution of their merchandise to the public and constitute unfair acts and practices in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Petitioners were ordered to cease and desist from:

> "1. Supplying to or placing in the hands of others pull cards or any other devices which are designed or intended to be used in the sale and distribution of [their] merchandise to the public by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, or lottery scheme.
>
> "2. Selling or otherwise disposing of any merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, or lottery scheme."

[Lottery Defined]

A lottery is a scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot or chance; it is a device whereby the amount of return an individual receives for the amount contributed by him is made to depend upon chance. Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel & Bro. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,042], 291 U. S. 304; Keller v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,322], 132 F. 2d 59; Hofeller v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,105], 82 F. 2d 647, certiorari denied 299 U. S. 557. The three essential elements of a lottery are: (1) the distribution of prizes (2) according to chance (3) for a consideration. Wolf v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,326], 135 F. 2d 564. Cf. United States v. Rich, E. D. Ill., 90 F. Supp. 624.

[Notice Disregarded]

Petitioners contend, inter alia, that the Commission's findings are unsupported by substantial evidence. Petitioners urge that the notice to prospective purchasers that they are not obliged to buy the article identified by a tab eliminates the element of chance and consideration because the purchaser is entitled to reject his purchase after he ascertains what it is and the price to be paid. A similar contention was advanced and rejected by this court in Wolf v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,326], 135 F. 2d 564, which involved an almost identical sales scheme. Petitioners insist, however, that there was a finding in the Wolf case that the notice was a subterfuge intended to avoid the consequences incident to the operation of a lottery scheme, whereas there is no such finding here. The difficulty with any argument based upon this notice is that it presupposes the very thing we are trying to decide. If the device constitutes a lottery, the law itself declares that a purchaser would not be bound to buy the article indicated by the tab. As was said in the Wolf case, 135 F. 2d at 566:

> "This is no more than a recognition of the common law rule that a gambling transaction is unenforcible, and 'only the loser has recourse to the courts.'"

If, on the other hand, the device does not constitute a lottery, then the legal significance of the notice would lie in the province of the law of contracts. Therefore, in regard to the issues presented by this case the notice may properly be disregarded.

[Element of Chance]

Petitioners next insist that since an individual has the option to purchase a desired article outright, rather than utilize the tab device, the element of chance is absent. This was also true in the Wolf case although the sales circular there did not contain a notice indicating to the purchaser that he had such an option as is the case here. In any event, we fail to see what comfort petitioners can gain from the fact that a prospective purchaser has this option. If an individual exercises his option to take a chance by pulling a tab can it be said that he has not taken a chance? The objection to the pull tab scheme cannot be removed by offering the individual an unobjectionable alternative.

[Element of Prize]

A more serious question is whether the pull tab device standing alone is a lottery scheme. We think it is not. Petitioners' sales method does not incorporate the element of prize which is the motivating factor or the inducement that accounts, in large part, for the success of virtually all forms of gambling—the opportunity to get something for nothing.

In order to constitute a lottery the elements of consideration, chance and prize must be present. The mere presence of chance does not constitute a lottery, nor will chance when coupled with consideration suffice. It is not chance in general with which we are concerned, but the chance of winning a prize, whether that chance be as to any return or merely as to the amount or value of the return. Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel & Bro. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,042], 291 U. S. 304; Keller v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,322], 132 F. 2d 59; Hofeller v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,105], 82 F. 2d 647, certiorari denied 299 U. S. 557. The only chance involved in the petitioners' scheme is as to the article to be purchased; there is no chance of prize in the sense of the amount or value of the thing to be received being dependent upon lot or chance. Of course, the mere fact that each purchaser receives a thing of value for his contribution does not negate the existence of a lottery. Keller v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,322], 132 F. 2d 59. But where, as here, each participant in the scheme will in any event receive the equivalent of the amount contributed by him, and he is not under any hazard of pecuniary loss, nor offered the chance of receiving something of more value than the amount contributed by him, a lottery does not exist.

The Commission was of the opinion that prize is present in petitioners' scheme

> "because the some forty articles which may be obtained through the pull card vary widely in nature and might well prove to be either valuable or worthless, depending upon the situation of the particular individual receiving them. An article regarded as a "prize" by one recipient might be wholly without use or value to another. For example, the cigarette lighter offered on one of [petitioners'] circulars would be of value to a smoker, while valueless to a nonsmoker. Again, a man receiving the ten packages of razor blades included in the list probably would get his money's worth if he used a safety razor rather than an electric shaver and if the blades would fit his razor; otherwise the blades would be wholly without value to him."

[Wolf Case]

We believe that it would be stretching the term lottery to the breaking point to sustain this finding of prize in petitioners' sales method. Admittedly, the Commission finds support for the validity of this finding in the Wolf case where a similar definition of "prize" is stated. The Commission in the Wolf case had found that some of the merchandise offered by the petitioner had greater value and ordinarily sold at higher prices than the prices listed, thereby inducing purchasers to pull tabs in the hope that they would receive those articles of greater value than the price designated to be paid for them. The petitioner there also complained of the Commission's effort to find the element of prize in his method of sales and distribution. The court, after noting the finding concerning the relative values of the merchandise, said:

> "We think we might go even further and find an element of prize in whether or not the purchaser drew a chance to buy an article that would be of any value to himself. To illustrate, a person needing razor blades might well consider himself a prize winner if he drew a chance to buy a package of them instead of a bottle of perfume which might be a total loss to him." (Italics added.) 135 F. 2d at 567.

We think the court went too far in defining "prize"—a definition which was not necessary to the court's decision. It was alleged in the complaint in the instant case that:

> "Some of [petitioners'] articles of merchandise have purported and represented retail values greater than the prices designated for them, but are distributed to the consumer for the price designated on the tab which he pulls. The prices of others of the articles are higher in proportion than the articles first mentioned. The apparent greater values of some of said articles induces members of the purchasing public to purchase the tabs or chances in the hope that they will receive articles of merchandise of greater value than the designated prices to be paid for same."

But the hearing examiner found that there was no evidence supporting these allegations. Since there is no finding here concerning the relative values of petitioners' merchandise, the Wolf case is not controlling.

[Other Contentions]

We are constrained to reject the finding of the Commission that petitioners' sales methods constitute a lottery scheme and, since our disposition of this issue is dispositive of the petition for review, we do not reach petitioners' other contentions.

[Order Vacated]

The petition for review is allowed and the Federal Trade Commission's order to cease and desist, entered in this matter on June 29, 1956, is vacated and set aside.

[¶ 68,669] Federal Trade Commission v. W. W. Tuttle, Resident Manager, Ernst & Ernst.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1956. No. 232. Docket No. 24325. Argued January 16, 1957. Decided April 2, 1957.

Appeal from an order of the United States District Court, Southern District of New York (Cashin, J.) denying the application of the Federal Trade Commission for enforcement of an administrative subpoena duces tecum, issued pursuant to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, directed to the respondent, W. W. Tuttle, a partner and resident manager of Ernst & Ernst, a firm of accountants and auditors. Reversed.

Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Anti-Merger Proceedings—Production of Documents—Subpoena Power in Clayton Act Proceeding and as to Persons Not Being Investigated or Proceeded Against.—In a Clayton Act anti-merger proceeding against a manufacturer of sporting goods, the Federal Trade Commission had the power, under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, to issue a subpoena duces tecum demanding an accounting firm to produce records which had been submitted to the firm by members of a sporting goods manufacturers' association for the purpose of preparing the association's annual census report. The Commission, in Clayton Act proceedings, may use the subpoena power vested in it by Section 9 of the FTC Act. While such power is not expressly granted to the Commission in Clayton Act proceedings, Congress evidently concluded that it was unnecessary to incorporate the full subpoena power in both the Clayton and the FTC Acts and was content to set it forth in Section 9 of the FTC Act. Furthermore, the Commission's power under Section 9 of the FTC Act is not limited to documents and records of the corporation being investigated or proceeded against by the Commission, in view of the provisions of Section 9 in general, the purpose and policy of the FTC Act, the legislative history of the Act, the Congressional intent, and the effect that such a limited construction of Section 9 of the Act would have upon the Commission's functions. "In the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 the words 'the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation' should be construed to mean 'the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation,' thus eliminating the word 'such.'" Also, the records submitted to the accounting firm were not privileged or confidential communications.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741, 8801.870.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Anti-Merger Proceeding—Production of Documents—Subpoena Power—Legality of Subpoena Served on Person Not Being Investigated or Proceeded Against—Reasonableness of Subpoena—Trade Secrets.—In a Clayton Act anti-merger proceeding against a manufacturer of sporting goods, the Federal Trade Commission was held to have the power, under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, to issue a subpoena duces tecum demanding an accounting firm to produce records which had been submitted to the firm by members of a sporting goods manufacturers' association for the purpose of preparing the association's annual census report. Section 9 of the FTC Act is not unconstitutional in authorizing the service of a subpoena demanding the records of corporations not being investigated or proceeded against by the Commission. The records submitted to the accounting firm were not privileged or confidential communications, and the records sought were relevant to the issues in the Commission's anti-merger proceeding against the manufacturer. The subpoena did not violate the Administrative Procedure Act, and it was not unreasonable nor oppressive. Also, the use of the subpoena would not be unconstitutional even if it indirectly had an adverse effect on a certain part of the accounting firm's business. There is no reasonable basis for the contention that the Federal Trade Commission or the United States is taking the accounting firm's property without due process of law.

Assuming that the records of the individual members of the association constituted trade secrets, Section 6(f) of the FTC Act does not prohibit the Commission from demanding the production of trade secrets. The section merely prohibits the publication of such secrets.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8701.92, 8741.10, 8741.55, 8741.70.

For the appellant: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, FTC; Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, FTC; and John T. Loughlin, Attorney (Daniel M. Friedman, Attorney, Department of Justice, of counsel), Washington, D. C.

For the appellee: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland & Kiendl (S. Hazard Gillespie, Jr., and Robert B. Fiske, Jr., of counsel), New York, N. Y.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,399, denying an application to enforce a Federal Trade Commission subpoena duces tecum in Dkt. 6478.

Before: MEDINA and HINCKS, Circuit Judges, and LEIBELL, District Judge.

[Issue]

LEIBELL, District Judge [In full text]: The question to be decided on this appeal concerns the power of the Federal Trade Commission under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, to subpoena documents and records of third parties "In the Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros. Inc.," a corporation against which the Commission had filed a complaint, charging it with a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (T. 15 U. S. C. § 18).[1] The District Court denied an application by the Commission for an order enforcing a subpoena duces tecum to compel Ernst & Ernst, the accountants for the Athletic Goods Manufacturers Association, to produce records of members of the Association in the possession of the accountants, and their own records relating thereto.

[FTC Complaint]

On December 8, 1955, the Commission issued a complaint against A. G. Spalding & Bros. Inc. charging it with a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act in that the Spalding corporation, one of the four largest manufacturers and distributors of athletic goods in the United States, had acquired on or about December 6, 1955, all of the outstanding capital stock of the Rawlings Manufacturing Company, which was also one of the four largest in that field. The complaint further charged, in some detail, that by the acquisition of the Rawlings stock, Spalding had eliminated a large competitor, and that the acquisition of the stock would have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in the manufacture and distribution of athletic goods.

[Work of Accounting Firm]

In the course of the hearing, which an examiner of the Federal Trade Commission conducted in relation to the charges contained in the complaint, a subpoena duces tecum was served upon W. W. Tuttle of the accounting firm of Ernst & Ernst. The accounting firm, under an arrangement made with the Athletic Goods Manufacturers Association, prepared annually so-called "Census Reports" for the Association, based on information the accounting firm received from the Association's members in the form of statistical data and memoranda. Under its arrangement with the Association's members, Ernst & Ernst were to keep in strictest confidence the data thus received and the data was to be destroyed as soon as it had served the accountants' purpose in the preparation of the annual census report. The accountants had been preparing these reports for the Association since 1949. The reports set forth the sales in units and dollars of various categories and types of athletic equipment.

[Subpoena—Compliance]

By a subpoena dated February 24, 1956, signed by the Federal Trade Commission Hearing Examiner and addressed to W. W. Tuttle, a partner and resident manager of Ernst & Ernst, at Boston, Mr. Tuttle was required to appear and testify at a hearing before the Examiner to be held in the United States Courthouse in New York City on April 30, 1956, in the "Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros. Inc."; and to bring with him the following books, papers and documents:

> "1. Such books, records and documents as will disclose all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda, statistics, work papers, bulletins, census and reports prepared, transmitted or received by Ernst and Ernst, its officers, agents, employees, boards, council, committee or member thereof for the past four years, in the possession or control of Ernst and Ernst and relate to census reports prepared for the Athletic Goods Manufacturing Association."

Ernst & Ernst only partially complied with the subpoena duces tecum. They produced the "census reports" and also, with the permission of the two corporations, so much of the data as the accounting firm had received from A. G. Spalding Bros. and Rawlings Manufacturing Company, for the years 1954 and 1955. Information as to individual companies for the years prior to 1954 had been destroyed before the institution of the Commission's proceedings against Spalding. But Ernst & Ernst did not produce any of the data and information they had received from the other individual companies who were members of the Association for the years 1954 and 1955, or their own records.

[1] "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

[Petition for Compliance]

The Federal Trade Commission on May 17, 1956, filed a petition in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, for an order compelling Mr. Tuttle, resident manager of Ernst & Ernst, to fully comply with the requirements of the subpoena duces tecum. The jurisdiction of the District Court to hear and consider the petition is derived from the third unnumbered paragraph of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[2]

[Defenses]

Mr. Tuttle filed an answer to the petition and set up three special defenses:

(1) That under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act the petitioner, the Commission, does not have the power or authority to obtain by subpoena duces tecum documentary evidence of any corporation not being investigated or proceeded against, and that therefore the Commission cannot obtain by subpoena from Ernst & Ernst the reports of individual companies other than Spalding and Rawlings; and that the Court does not have the power to order the Respondent Tuttle, or Ernst & Ernst, to produce the reports of those other companies.

(2) That Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act if it grants the Commission that power of subpoena violates the

---

[2] Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act provides (T. 15 U. S. C. § 49; Chap. 311, § 9, 38 Stat. 722):

"§ 49. Documentary Evidence; Depositions; Witnesses

For the purposes of sections 41-46 and 47-58 of this title the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. Any member of the commission may sign subpoenas, and members and examiners of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses and receive evidence.

Such attendance of witnesses, and the production of such documentary evidence, may be required from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpoena the commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

Any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any corporation or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before the commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

Upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the commission, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person or corporation to comply with the provisions of sections 41-46 and 47-58 of this title or any order of the commission made in pursuance thereof.

The commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending under sections 41-46 and 47-58 of this title at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the commission as hereinbefore provided.

Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the persons taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence before the commission or in obedience to the subpoena of the commission on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by it: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. Sept. 26, 1914, c. 311, § 9, 38 Stat. 722."

Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution, in that the Commission would be taking part of the business of Ernst & Ernst which it conducts as accountants for this Association and other similar groups, and would deprive Ernst & Ernst of a valuable business, without due process of law.

(3) That in view of the hardship it would impose on Ernst & Ernst if they are required to disclose this confidential information, which they assert is merely hearsay and not competent proof in the Spalding matter, enforcement of the subpoena would violate Section 6(c) of the Federal Administrative Procedure Act, as being unreasonable and oppressive and therefore not "in accordance with law."

[District Court Ruling]

The District Judge concluded "that the plain words of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act do not authorize the issuance of this subpoena." He held that the Commission's power of subpoena under Section 9 was limited to the production of any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; that the respondent (Mr. Tuttle as Resident Manager of Ernst & Ernst) is neither being investigated nor proceeded against (nor are the so-called other companies); and that "the subpoena is unauthorized and the application (of the Commission to enforce the subpoena) is denied."

[Contentions on Appeal]

The Commission on this appeal contends (1) that the District Court erred in its construction of the subpoena clause in Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act; (2) and that although the Court did not reach other objections to the subpoena raised by respondent, they are without merit and the subpoena should be enforced.

The respondent-appellee in addition to the contentions asserted in the special defenses set forth in their answer, argue that the Commission has no authority to issue a subpoena duces tecum in a proceeding brought by it to enforce the Clayton Act.

Before taking up the main issue presented by this appeal, the construction of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the collateral issues will be considered.

[Lawful Use of Subpoena Power]

Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act is not unconstitutional if its provisions permit the service of the subpoena duces tecum in this case. The petitioner is seeking the production by the respondent of 150 reports which were furnished by members of the Athletic Goods Manufacturers Association to Ernst & Ernst to enable it to prepare the annual "census report" for the industry. The 150 reports are not "privileged" or confidential communications. The data sought is relevant to the issues that will arise under the allegations of the complaint which the Commission has filed against Spalding, as a reading of the complaint will show. The "reports" have a bearing on the competitive relationship of the members of the Association and will serve to establish the extent of the market control that may have resulted from Spalding's purchase of the Rawlings stock. For those reasons also the subpoena does not violate the Federal Administrative Procedure Act (§ 5c) in relation to subpoenas.[3] The subpoena is not unreasonable in its scope, nor in any way oppressive, and it is in accordance with law, if the Commission had the power under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, to issue the subpoena.

The use of the subpoena would not be unconstitutional even if it indirectly had an adverse effect on a certain part of Ernst & Ernst's accounting business. The public interest to be served is superior. If the Association and similar groups wish to have the "census reports" prepared annually, accountants from convenient offices of Ernst & Ernst (they have 60 offices in the United States) could examine the necessary data at the offices of the Association's members. There appears to be no reasonable basis for respondent's contention that either the petitioner or the United States, of which it is an Agency, is taking respondent's property without due process of law.

[FTC Power to Issue Subpoena]

Defendant's contention that the Federal Trade Commission does not have the power to issue subpoenas in a proceeding under the Clayton Act, overlooks the fact that both the Clayton Act and Federal Trade Commission Act were under consideration by the Congress at the same time;[4] that the Congressional debates show that investigations under the Clayton Act were to be conducted by the Commission;[5] that the Commission is mentioned in Sections 2, 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act; and that under Section 11 of the Clayton Act (§ 21 of T. 15 U. S. C.) the Federal Trade Commission is authorized to enforce compliance with Section 7 of the Clayton Act (§ 18 of T. 15 U. S. C.). Likewise the Commission was granted the power under Section 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act (§ 13 of T. 15 U. S. C.) to investigate and institute proceedings to enforce the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act. The Supreme Court has held that the Commission possesses "broad power of investigation and subpoena" which it may use prior to the filing of a complaint for price discrimination, a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. Automatic Canteen Co. v. F. T. C. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,503], 346 U. S. 61, 79. The subpoena power necessary for that purpose is found in Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Robinson-Patman Act contained no subpoena powers.

[3] T. 5 U. S. C. § 1005; Chap. 324, 60 Stat. 237, June 11, 1946.

An adequate subpoena power is essential to any investigation of offenses under the Clayton Act[6] and to the enforcement of Section 7 of that Act. The Congress evidently concluded that it was unnecessary to incorporate the full subpoena power in both Acts and was content to set it forth in Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[7] The Congress followed a similar course in later anti-monopoly and unfair trade-practices Acts,[8] relating to certain specific industries or markets, and it did not in those Acts set forth the subpoena powers required for the investigations to be conducted by the Commission.

[Scope of Subpoena Power]

The main issue on this appeal is the scope of the subpoena power given the Federal Trade Commission in Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The argument of respondent on that point is that the subpoena power is limited to documents and records of the corporation being investigated or proceeded against, which in this case would be the Spalding corporation and possibly the Rawlings corporation. Respondents stress the use of the word "such" in the first sentence of Section 9, which states:

> "Sec. 9. That for the purposes of this Act the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation."

The word "'such' is a rather slippery word" as Judge Dobie remarked in United

[4] The Federal Trade Commission Act was enacted by the 63rd Congress (2nd Sess) on September 26, 1914, and the Clayton Act was enacted October 15, 1914.

[5] 51 Cong. Rec. 12918; 14475; 13214; 14090; 14222; 16162; 16319; 16332.

[6] Chap. 323, 38 Stat. 730 (Oct. 15, 1914)

The Federal Trade Commission Act supplements the Clayton and Sherman Acts; and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act "minimally registers violations of the Clayton and Sherman Acts." Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 609. The Federal Trade Commission has the power to suppress as unfair competition, practices of a combination that run counter to the public policy declared in the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,101], 312 U. S. 457, 463 (footnote 4).

[7] See opinion of Thomsen, C. J. (Md.) in Federal Trade Commission v. Menzies [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,478], 145 F. Supp. 164, 168 in support of this power, and opinion of Judge Dimock (S. D. N. Y.) in Federal Trade Commission v. Rubin [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,505], 145 F. Supp. 171, contra, presently on appeal to this Court (Docket #24449).

On appeal to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, that Court, in an opinion by Parker, C. J. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,648], affirmed on March 7th Judge Thomsen's decision in the Menzies case, and held that in a proceeding against three corporations, which were charged with the violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, the Federal Trade Commission could exercise its right to subpoena records under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

A recent (Feb. 15, 1957) opinion of Judge Hoffman (No. Dist. of Ill.) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,647], holds that the "subpoena power conferred upon the Commission is available to it in the discharge of its duties under this Clayton Act," citing F. T. C. v. Reed Candy Co., another Northern District Illinois case, decided June 12, 1956 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,551].

[8] The Acts under which the Federal Trade Commission exercises responsibilities are listed in Section 1.2 entitled "Laws Administered" under Subpart A of Part 1 (setting forth general procedures and rules of practice of the Federal Trade Commission) 15 U. S. C. A. § 1.2 of the 1956 Cumulative Annual Pocket Part for Title 15, §§ 41 to 80.

States v. Legg, 157 F. 2d 990, 992. Some of its many meanings, depending upon its context, are discussed in 83 C. J. S. p. 771. As a rule it is used to refer to an antecedent. The respondent argues that its antecedent in the first setnence of Section 9 is "documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against." That contention might appear to be reasonable if we read only the language of the first sentence of Section 9 disregarding the other provisions of Section 9; the purpose and policy of the Federal Trade Commission Act; its legislative history; the Congressional intent; and the effect of respondent-appellee's construction of Section 9, if adopted, upon the Commission's functioning under the Act. "There is sufficient ambiguity here to permit consideration of relevant legislative history." Mastro Plastics Corp. v. Labor Board, 350 U. S. 270, 287. In that case the Court ruled on "a narrowly literal construction of the words" of Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act, as the court observed in Labor Board v. Lion Oil Co., 352 U. S. 282, 288.

[FTC Act—Legislative History]

The Federal Trade Commission Act was the work of the 63rd Congress, 2nd Session. In April 1914, a bill known as H. R. 15613 was introduced in the House of Representatives and was referred to its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was passed by the House on June 5, 1914. On June 13, 1914, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which H. R. 15613 had been referred, reported as a substitute Senate Bill No. 4160 which had been reported favorably to the Senate on June 6th. The Senate and House bills went to conference and a conference bill emerged. The House conference report is No. 1142 and is dated September 4, 1914. The conference bill was passed by the Congress September 26, 1914, and as passed contained Section 9 in its present form.

H. R. 15613, in the Second paragraph of Section 10, provided:

> "For the purpose of prosecuting any investigation or proceeding authorized by this section the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against."

And in Section 16 provided:

> "Sec. 16. That for the purposes of this Act, and in aid of its powers of investigation herein granted, the commission shall have and exercise the same powers conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Acts to regulate commerce to subpoena and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths."

Senate Bill 4160 provided, in the second paragraph of Section 3(g):

> "For the purpose of prosecuting any investigation or proceeding authorized by this section the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documents or writings of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against."

And in Section 8 provided:

> "Sec. 8. The commission shall have and exercise the powers possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to subpoena and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence, and to administer oaths."

From the above it appears that the second paragraph of Section 10 of H. R. 15613 and the second paragraph of Section 3(g) of Senate Bill 4160 are almost identical. The words "any documentary evidence" appear in the House Bill and the words "and documents or writings" in the Senate Bill.

The substance of Section 16 of the House Bill is the same as Section 8 of the Senate Bill.

When it came to drafting Section 9 of the conference bill (which became the Federal Trade Commission Act), the language of Section 10 of the House Bill was followed in the first half of the first sentence of Section 9 of the Act, and then recourse was had to the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, Section 12, for the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 of the Act. The conference committee decided to have the Federal Trade Commission Act contain its own subpoena powers, without reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission Act.

The last part of Section 12 of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act (T. 49 U. S. C. § 12) states:

> "* * * the commission shall have power to require, by subpoena, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation."

Compare this with the last part of the first sentence of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act which provides:

> "* * * the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation."

What the draftsman did in incorporating the subpoena provisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act into the conference bill, which became the Federal Trade Commission Act, was to substitute the words "Such documentary evidence," for the words "Books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents" of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act. But by moving the subpoena provision from its place in Section 16 of the House Bill (#15613) to a position in the conference bill where it would immediately follow Section 10 of the House bill, relating to the Commission's right of access to "any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against," the draftsman introduced the word "such" which has given rise to the main issue on this appeal. The word "such" was placed in a position where it might be argued, as the respondents do here, that the word "such documentary evidence" in the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 of the Act were subject to the limitation that it must be the "documentary evidence of a corporation being investigated or proceeded against," mentioned in the first half of that sentence.

The draftsman of the conference bill that became the Federal Trade Commission Act took the first sentence of paragraph 2 of Section 12 of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act (without change) and made it the first sentence of the second paragraph of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, so that it reads: "Such attendance of witnesses, and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing." In the Interstate Commerce Commission Act the words "such documentary evidence" refer to "all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents." Section 12 of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act is also the source of other provisions of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, including those relating to recourse to the District Court to enforce the Commission's subpoenas and the taking of testimony by deposition.

[Construction of Section 9]

Respondent's narrow construction of the first sentence of the first paragraph of Section 9 is in direct conflict with the broad provisions of the fifth paragraph of that section, relating to the taking of testimony by deposition "in any proceeding or investigation pending under this Act." The word "such" is not used in relation to "documentary evidence" in any part of the fifth paragraph. That paragraph contains no limitation on the origin of the "documentary evidence"; and any person "may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the commission as hereinbefore provided." The compulsion would be supplied by an order of the District Court in the manner provided in the third paragraph of Section 9. If respondent's construction of the first sentence of Section 9 were correct, the result would be incongruous. A witness subpoenaed to produce documents at a hearing before an Examiner, could not be compelled to produce documents of persons other than the corporation under investigation; but if the testimony of the witness was being taken by deposition he could be compelled to produce the documents.

A provision appearing in the last paragraph of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act grants to natural persons testifying or producing documentary evidence under subpoena, immunity from prosecution or penalty or forfeiture "for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by it: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying."

A natural person does not have the protection of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution in respect to books and papers of a corporation which are in his physical possession, even though they contain matters which might tend to incriminate him. [Wilson v. United States, 221 U. S. 361.] The inference is warranted that the "immunity" provision was made part of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, in order that the Commission might compel the production of books and papers belonging to natural persons, or to partnerships being examined through a resident partner (Ernst & Ernst through Mr. Tuttle). That conclusion negatives the idea that the subpoena power of the Commission under Section 9 is limited to documents of a corporation under investigation or being proceeded against.

The limited construction of the word "such," contended for by the respondents, would also result in this anomalous situation—that oral testimony could be elicited by the Commission in examining a witness under subpoena, concerning transactions reported in the books and records of the individual or partnership, but the books and records themselves could not be subpoenaed.

If the power of the Commission to subpoena records is limited to records of corporations being investigated or proceeded against, and if there is no right to subpoena records of individuals or partnerships under Section 9 of the Act, how could the Commission fulfill its duties under Section 5 of the Act, relating to "unfair methods of competition," which specifically includes violations by a "person, partnership or corportion"? (§ 45 of T. 15 U. S. C. A.) This is further evidence of the destructive effect which the construction the respondents herein place upon the word "such," in the first sentence of Section 9 of the Act, would have upon the proper functioning of the Commission.

Further, if the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 limits the subpoena power of the Commission to documents of the corporation under investigation, to which the Commission is given access and the right to make copies under the first half of the sentence, of what use is the grant of the power of subpoena? The Commission could get all the information it wanted from the corporation under the access and copying power. Respondent's construction of the language granting the subpoena power, would in effect render the subpoena power useless—an absurd result never contemplated by the Congress.

As the Supreme Court has repeated several times: "In expounding a statute we must not be guided by a single sentence or member of a sentence, but look to the provisions of the whole law and to its object and policy." United States v. Boisdore's Heirs, 8 How. 113, 121, quoted in Mastro Plastics Corp. v. Labor Board, 350 U. S. 270, 285, and in Labor Board v. Lion Oil Co., 352 U. S. 282. To the same effect, see United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U. S. 534, 542 and 543.

Finally, the respondent's narrow construction of the words "such documentary evidence" as used in the first paragraph of Section 9 of the Act would impair the proper functioning of the Commission. The accounting firm, having in its possession data supplied by third parties "relating to the matter under investigation" by the Commission, would be immune from subpoena for the production of the data, and the third parties themselves would likewise be immune. The Commission would be limited to the documentary evidence of the corporation being investigated, even though the investigation concerned the effect of the monopolistic acquisitions or unfair competitive practices of that corporation on others in the industry. Proof of the extent of the monopolistic trend of acquisitions by a corporation and their effect on the industry might well be found in the records of other corporations in the same industry. Without those records the Commission might fail to establish important allegations of its complaint.

It was clearly the purpose of the Congress that the Commission should have adequate subpoena power to perform its duties. In reporting H. R. 15613 the House Committee stated (House Report 533):

> "In order that the Commission may have ample power of subpoena and production of books and papers the language of section 16 of the bill has been expressly made broad enough to permit a full exercise of that power in connection with any kind of investigation which may be undertaken."

The report of the Senate Committee (Senate Report No. 597) on the House bill as redrafted by the Senate, stated:

> "* * * it is indispensable that it (the Commission) should have extensive power of inquiry, with the right to subpoena witnesses and to require the production of books and papers. The powers which, according to this bill are granted to the commission, are practically the same as those now granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Bureau of Corporations * * *"[9]

In a report on the Conference Bill (Report No. 1142) made to the House on September 14, 1914, it was stated that in the Conference Bill "the administrative process for conducting investigations, summoning witnesses and punishing violations is substantially as in the House bill," i. e., the same as the power possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A correct interpretation of the long first sentence of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act should recognize the fact that it grants two separate powers to the Commission, and that the language granting those distinct powers is separated by a semi-colon. The first grants the right of access to and the right to copy any documentary evidence of the corporation being investigated or proceeded against. The second grants a subpoena power for the production of documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation.

In the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 the words "the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation" should be construed to mean "the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation," thus eliminating the word "such." That will comply with the policy and purposes of the Act itself.

The policy of the Act must be considered, and its purposes, in construing the powers given the Commission to function under the Act. Even if the plain meaning of the wording of a statute is apparent, the Supreme Court will not apply that meaning if that would lead to "absurd or futile results." The Court "has looked beyond the words to the purpose of the Act." And frequently, when the plain meaning produces "merely an unreasonable result which is plainly at variance with the policy of the legislation as a whole" the Supreme Court "has followed that purpose, rather than the literal words." United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U. S. 534, and cases cited on p. 543.

[Bowman Case]

In the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Fred J. Bowman, President, Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company, decided by Judge Hoffman on February 15, 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,647], the Federal Trade Commission had filed in the District Court, Northern District of Illinois, a petition for the enforcement of a subpoena duces tecum directing Wilson & Co. to produce certain records, in this same proceeding of Federal Trade Commission v. A. G. Spalding & Bros. Inc. In resisting the effort of the Federal Trade Commission to compel the production of the Wilson Company's records under subpoena in the "proceeding" against Spalding, the Wilson Company made the same contention advanced by the respondent in the case at bar, namely that the word "such" as used in the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, relates only to the records of a corporation being investigated or proceeded against. Judge Hoffman's opinion states:

> "It is unnecessary to decide whether the defendant's interpretation attaches more significance to the word 'such' than it can reasonably be made to bear. The argument fails upon another ground. Conceding that the Wilson company is not being 'proceeded against' within the meaning of the quoted portion of Section 9, the question remains whether the company is 'being investigated' as that term is used in the Act. Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 721, 15 U. S. C. § 46 * * *"

Judge Hoffman held that the Wilson company could be termed a corporation "being investigated."

Without expressing any opinion on the applicability of Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (relating to investigations by the Commission) to the records of a corporation whose officer is to be examined as a witness in a "proceeding" against another corporation, we conclude that the Bowman case is not a precedent contra to the construction we have given to the first sentence of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

---

[9] The Act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor (Ch. 552, 32 Stat. p. 827) enacted February 14, 1903, contained provisions for a Bureau of Corporations (§ 6); and that Bureau was given the same power to compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence as was conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

[Trade Secrets]

Section 6(f) of the Federal Trade Commission Act gives the Commission the power

> "(f) To make public from time to time such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, except trade secrets and names of customers, as it shall deem expedient in the public interest; and to make annual and special reports to the Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation; and to provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use."

The respondents contend that the information sought by the Commission under the subpoena in the case at bar would include the sales records of the individual companies and that those records may be properly classified as "trade secrets." Assuming, arguendo, that sales records of the individual companies are trade secrets under Section 6(f), all that that section forbids is the publication of "trade secrets and names of customers," in public reports that the Commission may make "from time to time" which it "shall deem expedient in the public interest." That does not mean that "trade secrets and names of customers" may not be subpoenaed by the Commission in any proceeding or investigation under the Act. They may be subpoenaed in litigation in the Federal Courts, if the information is relevant and necessary to the presentation of a case. 4 Moore, Federal Practice, § 26.22 p. 1087.

[FTC Practice]

The Clayton Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act have been in effect since 1914. The Commission has consistently followed the subpoena practice that is here challenged. Only within the last two years has the legality of that practice been questioned. An "administrative practice does not avail to overcome a statute so plain in its commands as to leave nothing for construction"; but an "administrative practice, consistent and generally unchallenged, will not be overturned except for very cogent reasons if the scope of the command is indefinite and doubtful." (Judge Cardozo in Norwegian Nitrogen Co. v. United States, 288 U. S. 294, 315.) And "Courts are slow to disturb the settled administrative construction of a statute long and consistently adhered to" especially where "the declared will of the legislative body could not be carried out without the construction adopted." (Mr. Justice Stone in Alaska Steamship Co. v. United States, 290 U. S. 256, 262.)

[Reversed]

For the reasons stated in this opinion, the order of the District Court is reversed and the mandate will direct that the District Court enter an order compelling the respondent to comply with the subpoena duces tecum at a time and place to be fixed by the Court.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MEDINA, Circuit Judge (dissenting):

Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 722, 15 U. S. C. Section 49, provides:

> "That for the purposes of this Act the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation." (Emphasis added.)

I think it clear beyond cavil, and my brothers seem to agree, that the phrase "such documentary evidence" is susceptible of no interpretation other than "documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against." Were the words capable of some other interpretation, it should not be adopted, for "the plain, obvious and rational meaning of a statute is always to be preferred to any curious, narrow, hidden sense that nothing but the exigency of a hard case and the ingenuity and study of an acute and powerful intellect would discover." Old Colony R. Co. v. Commissioner, 284 U. S. 552, 560; Lynch v. Alworth-Stephens Co., 267 U. S. 364, 370. See also Crane v. Commissioner, 331 U. S. 1, 6.

Nevertheless, my brothers have concluded that the word "such" crept into the statute inadvertently and that we have power to "eliminate" it in applying the statute. This they do, referring to the process as one of "construction." But the Supreme Court has indicated the proper bounds of "construction," declaring it permissible "To let general words draw nourishment from their purpose," but not "To draw on some unexpressed spirit outside the bounds of the normal meaning of words." Addison v. Holly Hill Co., 332 U. S. 607, 617. The Court condemned legislation in the guise of "construction," saying at p. 618:

> "While the judicial function in construing legislation is not a mechanical process from which judgment is excluded, it is nevertheless very different from the legislative function. Construction is not legislation and must avoid 'that retrospective expansion of meaning which properly deserves the stigma of judicial legislation.' Kirschbaum Co. v. Walling, 316 U. S. 517, 522. To blur the distinctive functions of the legislative and judicial processes is not conducive to responsible legislation."

And the Court said in Wisconsin R. R. Comm. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 257 U. S. 563, at pp. 588-9:

> "Great stress is put on the legislative history * * *. Committee reports and explanatory statements of members in charge made in presenting a bill for passage have been held to be a legitimate aid to the interpretation of a statute where its language is doubtful or obscure. Duplex Printing Press Co v. Deering, 254 U. S. 443, 475. But when taking the act as a whole, the effect of the language used is clear to the court, extraneous aid like this can not control the interpretation. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. International Coal Mining Co., 230 U. S. 184, 198. Caminetti v. United States, 242 U. S. 470, 490. Such aids are only admissible to solve doubt and not create it."

As the Court said in Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 327 U. S. 186, at p. 201, "This case presents an instance of 'the most explicit language' which leaves no room for questioning Congress' intent."

My brothers seek to justify departure from this rule by finding that limiting the powers of the Commission to those granted by the statute "would lead to absurd or futile results." With this conclusion I cannot agree.

First, it is said that it would be "absurd or futile" to provide that witnesses may be subpoenaed to produce only certain documents, whereas the provision of 15 U. S. C. Section 49, that "Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence * * *," "contains no limitation on the origin of the 'documentary evidence.'" This "incongruity," it is said, provides sufficient excuse and authority for a court to grant to the Commission a power not contained in the statute defining its powers. But the premise is faulty. My brothers' construction fails to take into account the qualifying words immediately following that part of the statute quoted above. The entire sentence reads as follows: "Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the commission as hereinbefore provided." (Emphasis added.) Thus, there is no "incongruity," "absurdity" or "futility": the power to require production of documents in connection with depositions is precisely the same as the power to require production of documents by subpoena; it is unlimited only if the subpoena power is unlimited.

It is further said that it would be "absurd" for the Congress to authorize the Commission to subpoena only those documents to which it had access, for this "would in effect render the subpoena power useless." But my brothers' construction must fall before the same argument that engenders it, for if the point has merit would not then the access power be useless, and would this not be "an absurd result never contemplated by the Congress"? The language of the statute and the legislative history make it clear, however, that the Congress considered the powers of access and of subpoena separate and distinct. For example, different penalties are provided for violations of these powers. 15 U. S. C. Section 50. I see no force in the argument that the subpoena power must be broader than the access power.

"Finally," my brothers assert, "the respondent's narrow construction of the words 'such documentary evidence' as used in the first paragraph of Section 9 of the Act would impair the proper functioning of the Commission." This conclusion stems, I think, from an erroneous reading of the Act as it stands. The Commission is undoubtedly empowered to subpoena documents of corporations "being investigated." My brothers give this term a narrow meaning; they consider that a corporation is "being investigated" only if the Commission is contemplating a proceeding against it. Yet Section 6(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 721, 15 U. S. C. Section 46, authorizes the Commission "to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce." Is not a corporation "being investigated" if it is the subject of a proper exercise of the Commission's powers under this section? It has been held that it is. F. T. C. v. Bowman, — F. Supp. — (N. D. Ill., decided February 15, 1957) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,647], and appellee agrees that this decision is correct. Nothing to the contrary may be found in F. T. C. v. Hammond, Snyder & Co., 276 U. S. 586, affirming 284 Fed. 886, and F. T. C. v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U. S. 298; those cases merely condemned "fishing expeditions into private papers on the possibility that they may disclose evidence of crime," 264 U. S. at 306, "when it [the Commission] has no reason to believe that any violation of law has been committed," 284 Fed. at 888. Thus, there is no need for a judicial redrafting of the statute, since the Commission is given ample power to obtain the documents of corporations. And this power is available in the case at bar. To the extent the Commission finds it necessary to investigate other corporations in connection with its proceeding against Spalding, it is empowered to subpoena their papers relating to the matter under investigation. The subpoena need not be addressed to the corporation being investigated; any person, including natural persons and partnerships, may be compelled to produce "such documentary evidence." Although there is a requirement that the documents belong to a "corporation being investigated or proceeded against," there is none that they be in the possession of such a corporation. Hence I would reverse the decision below and direct the enforcement of the subpoena insofar as it relates to documentary evidence of the member corporations pertinent to the matter at hand.

My brothers seem to be convinced that the word "such" was accidentally inserted by the Conference Committee and was unwittingly adopted by both Houses and by the President. While such a series of mistakes is of course not beyond the realm of possibility, it is not the only reasonable explanation for the late introduction of the word. As my brothers point out, in the earlier versions of the Act the access power and the subpoena power were found in different sections in different parts of the Act. It is not unlikely that when the Conference Committee incorporated both powers into a single section they noticed for the first time that the power to subpoena documents was broader that the access power and, since there was no apparent reason why that should be so, they deliberately correlated the two.

Although I agree there do exist indications that the Congress omitted to grant a power it had intended to grant, I am nevertheless unable to adopt the position taken by my brothers, for I do not understand that the intention of the legislators is law even though that intention has not found expression in legislation, or that the courts are free to grant to administrative agencies powers in excess of those specifically enacted by the Congress. "Legislation introducing a new system is at best empirical, and not infrequently administration reveals gaps or inadequacies of one sort or another that may call for amendatory legislation. But it is no warrant for extending a statute that experience may disclose that it should have been made more comprehensive." Addison v. Holly Hill Co., supra, at 617. Under our Constitution, that is the business of the Congress and the President, not of federal judges. See Schwegman Bros. v. Calvert Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 396-7 (concurring opinion):

> "The Rules of the House and Senate, with the sanction of the Constitution, require three readings of an Act in each House before final enactment. That is intended, I take it, to make sure that each House knows what it is passing and passes what it wants, and that what is enacted was formally reduced to writing. It is the business of Congress to sum up its own debates in its legislation. Moreover, it is only the words of the bill that have presidential approval, where that approval is given. It is not to be supposed that, in signing a bill, the President endorses the whole Congressional Record. For us to undertake to reconstruct an enactment from legislative history is merely to involve the Court in political controversies which are quite proper in the enactment of a bill but should have no place in its interpretation.
>
> "Moreover, there are practical reasons why we should accept whenever possible the meaning which an enactment reveals on its face. Laws are intended for all of our people to live by; and the people go to law offices to learn what their rights under those laws are. * * * Aside from a few offices in the larger cities, the materials of legislative history are not available to the lawyer who can afford neither the cost of acquisition, the cost of housing, or the cost of repeatedly examining the whole legislative history. Moreover, if he could, he would not know any way of anticipating what would impress enough members of the Court to be controlling. To accept legislative debates to modify statutory provisions is to make the law inaccessible to a large part of the country.

"By and large, I think our function was well stated by Mr. Justice Holmes: 'We do not inquire what the legislature meant; we ask only what the statute means.' Holmes, Collected Legal Papers, 207."

My brothers find support in the statement of the Supreme Court that "administrative practice, consistent and generally unchallenged, will not be overturned except for very cogent reasons if the scope of the command is indefinite and doubtful." Norwegian Nitrogen Co. v. United States, 288 U. S. 294, 315. I fully subscribe to this principle, but it has no application here, for the words of the statute "construed" are neither "indefinite" nor "doubtful." More in point are the accompanying statement that "administrative practice does not avail to overcome a statute so plain in its commands as to leave nothing for construction," and the language of the Court in United States v. Morton Salt Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,561], 338 U. S. 632 at p. 647:

"The fact that powers long have been unexercised may well call for close scrutiny as to whether they exist; but if granted, they are not lost by being allowed to lie dormant, any more than nonexistent powers can be prescripted by an unchallenged exercise." (Emphasis added.)

Hence I dissent from the broad ruling by my brothers but would reverse and remand the case with directions to require appellant to comply with the subpoena duces tecum only to the extent of producing documentary evidence of the various corporations which I believe fall into the classification of "any corporation being investigated," as I have defined that phrase in what I have already written, and in accord with the ruling of Judge Hoffman in the Bowman case. This interpretation of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. Section 49, harmonizes the various clauses of the Section and accords to the words, "such documentary evidence," their natural and plain meaning in their context.

[¶ 68,670] United States v. National Screen Service Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 75-138. Filed March 29, 1957.

Case No. 1128 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Acquisitions—Motion Picture Advertising Trailers and Accessories.—A producer-distributor of motion picture advertising trailers and accessories was prohibited by a consent decree from acquiring the ownership or control of the business, its physical assets or good will, or any stock of any person engaged in the production or distribution of motion picture advertising trailers or accessories, until after it has shown to the court that such an acquisition would not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the production and distribution of such trailers or accessories.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.833; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.120.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusive Dealing.—A producer-distributor of motion picture advertising trailers and accessories was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) entering into any agreement with any producer or distributor of motion pictures which has the effect of preventing such producer or distributor from licensing any other person to produce and distribute advertising trailers or accessories, (2) demanding or securing from any motion picture producer or distributor any right or license to produce and distribute advertising trailers or accessories on the understanding that the terms or conditions of such right or license shall not be available to any other person, or (3) entering into any agreement which prevents any person from licensing or obtaining advertising trailers or accessories from any other producer or distributor of such trailers or accessories, or which limits the distribution of such trailers or accessories licensed or obtained from the producer-distributor in a defined geographical area.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.300.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Tying Arrangements.—A producer-distributor of motion picture advertising trailers and accessories was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) conditioning the lease of any motion picture advertising trailer or accessory upon the lease of any other trailer or accessory, or discriminating against any motion picture exhibitor to induce him to lease any other trailer or accessory, or (2) requiring, as a condition of any contract, that any motion picture exhibitor lease any motion picture advertising trailer or accessory other than those he had bargained or contracted to lease. Also, motion picture producers and distributors were prohibited from (1) requiring, as a condition to the granting of a license to produce and distribute any type of trailers, that the applicant produce and distribute either accessories or any other type of trailers or (2) requiring, as a condition to the granting of a license to produce and distribute accessories, that the applicant produce and distribute any type of trailers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.848; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.850.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Discrimination.—A producer-distributor of motion picture advertising trailers and accessories was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) coercing or discriminating against any motion picture exhibitor for using motion picture advertising trailers or accessories produced or distributed by any other person or (2) discriminating against any motion picture exhibitor to induce him to lease motion picture advertising trailers or accessories. Also, motion picture producers and distributors were prohibited from discriminating among persons applying for licenses or holding licenses for trailers or among persons applying for licenses or holding licenses for accessories, where the discrimination gives any licensee a substantial competitive advantage over any other person holding a similar license.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.630; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.280.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing.—Motion picture producers and distributors were each prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with a licensee of motion picture advertising trailers or accessories which establishes the price at which the licensee will service motion picture exhibitors with trailers or accessories of any other motion picture producer, or distributor.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.860; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Specific Relief—Licensing of Copyrighted Material.—Motion picture producers and distributors were each ordered to grant to any qualified person a license (including a license under copyrights) to produce and distribute any type of motion picture advertising trailer or to produce and distribute motion picture advertising accessories relating to motion pictures released by any such producer or distributor so long as, and to the extent that, the producer or distributor licenses or otherwise authorizes any other person to produce and distribute the trailers or the accessories sought to be produced and distributed by the person applying for the license. A reasonable royalty could be charged for such licenses.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.30, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Homer W. Hanscom, Richard B. O'Donnell, John D. Swartz, Walter K. Bennett, E. Winslow Turner, and Elliott H. Feldman, Attorneys.

For the defendants: Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim for Natl. Screen Service Corp.; Schwartz & Frohlich for Columbia Pictures Corp.; Louis Phillips for Paramount Pictures Corp.; Joseph J. Laub for RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc.; Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp.; O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery for United Artists Corp.; Adolph Schimel for Universal Pictures Co., Inc.; and Bernard G. Segal and Edward W. Mullinix, of counsel, for Paramount Pictures Corp., RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., United Artists Corp., and Universal Pictures Co., Inc. R. W. Perkins (Louis Goffman, of counsel) for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,605.

Final Judgment

[Judgment as to Defendants Other Than Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.]

SUGARMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The United States of America, plaintiff, having filed its complaint herein on April 28, 1952 and a supplemental complaint on January 23, 1957 which, inter alia, added Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation as a defendant; the defendants signatory hereto having severally appeared and filed their respective answers thereto denying all of their substantive allegations; TCF Film Corporation (formerly known as and named in the original complaint herein as Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, a New York corporation) having dissolved and sold its motion picture production and distribution assets to Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and the plaintiff and the defendants signatory hereto by their respective attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, no testimony having been taken, and without admission by any of the parties in respect of any such issue; and plaintiff having moved the Court for the entry of this Final Judgment,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief may be granted under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Trailers" means motion picture films of short duration for the advertising of the exhibition of full length feature motion picture films, commonly referred to as "Coming Attractions", of the types generally known in the industry as "talking trailers" and "sound trailers", as well as any other type of trailer for the purpose stated above;

(B) "Accessories" means advertising materials used by motion picture theatres and generally known in the industry as "standard accessories" and "specialty accessories", including lithograph posters (in 1 sheet, 3 sheet, 6 sheet and 24 sheet sizes), 8 x 10 stills, photos [in sizes 11 x 14 (in sets), 22 x 28 and 14 x 36], window cards, slides, heralds, mats, 40 x 60's, 30 x 40's, 24 x 82 banners, 24 x 60 banners, 40 x 60 Hollywood displays, 40 x 60 specials, 40 x 60 transparencies, 30 x 40 specials, 8 x 10 title cards, 11 x 14 title cards, 24 x 24 title cards, standees, and any other similar materials;

(C) "Producer" means any person, including any affiliate thereof, controlling, controlled by or under common control with such person, engaged in the production or distribution, or both, of full length feature motion picture films;

(D) "Producer Defendants" means defendants Paramount Pictures Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc.; United Artists Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and each of them;

(E) "Exhibitor" means any person engaged in the operation of a motion picture theatre or theatres;

(F) "Person" means an individual, corporation, partnership, firm, association or any other legal or business entity;

(G) "Distribute" means to distribute to exhibitors;

(H) "Produce," when referring to trailers or accessories, means to design and manufacture or to assume responsibility for the procurement of design and manufacture;

(I) "National Screen" means the defendant, National Screen Service Corporation.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to each such defendant, its officers, agents, servants and employes, and to those persons in active concert or participation with any such defendant who receives actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service of otherwise.

IV

[Practices Enjoined]

National Screen is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Entering into, adhering to or claiming any rights under any term of any agreement with any producer which has the purpose or effect of preventing such producer from licensing any other person to produce and distribute trailers or accessories;

(B) Demanding or securing from any producer any right or license to produce and distribute trailers or accessories on the understanding that the terms or conditions of such right or license shall not be available to any other person;

(C) Acquiring, by purchase, merger, consolidation or otherwise, ownership or control of the business, its physical assets or good will, or any part thereof, or any stock of any person engaged in the production or distribution of trailers or accessories, until after National Screen has, upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity on the part of the latter to be heard, shown to this Court that such an acquisition would not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the production and distribution of trailers or accessories;

(D) Coercing or discriminating against any exhibitor for using trailers or accessories produced or distributed by any other person, including any producer; Provided, however, that this Subsection (D) shall not prevent National Screen from contracting with any producer with which it may have a license for the production and distribution of trailers or accessories, that the producer will not itself engage in the business of furnishing such licensed materials to exhibitors directly;

(E) Entering into, adhering to or claiming any rights under any agreement which prevents any person from licensing or obtaining trailers or accessories from anyone other than National Screen, or which limits the distribution of trailers or accessories licensed or obtained from National Screen in a defined geographical area; Provided, however, that this Subsection (E) shall not restrict National Screen's right to limit the use of leased materials by an exhibitor to a particular theatre or theatres, or for a specific time;

(F) Conditioning the lease of any trailer or accessory upon the lease of any other trailer or accessory, or discriminating against any exhibitor to induce him to lease any other trailer or accessory; Provided, however, that this Subsection (F) shall not be construed to prohibit National Screen from entering into service contracts at prices varying with the quantity of materials to be furnished;

(G) Requiring, as a condition of any contract, that any exhibitor lease any trailer or accessory other than those he has bargained or contracted for.

V

[Grant of Licenses—Prohibitions]

(A) Subject to the other provisions in this Section V, each Producer Defendant is ordered and directed to grant to any qualified person applying therefor a license (including a license under the Producer Defendant's copyrights) to produce and distribute any type of trailers or to produce and distribute accessories relating to motion pictures released by the Producer Defendant, so long as and to the extent that the Producer Defendant or its distributor (as provided for below) licenses or otherwise authorizes any other person [other than an affiliate as described in Section

II(C) hereof] to produce and distribute the trailers or the accessories sought to be produced and distributed by the person applying for the license; Provided, however, that any such license so granted may require reasonable terms and conditions (including payment of a reasonable royalty) agreed to by the Producer Defendant. In the event a Producer Defendant turns over distribution of its motion pictures to a nonaffiliated distributor not a defendant herein, such Producer Defendant must either itself license pursuant to this Subsection (A) or require such distributor so to do.

(B) No Producer Defendant shall be required to regard any person as a qualified applicant within the meaning of Subsection (A) of this section unless:

(1) The applicant can meet and will agree to meet reasonable business standards as to reliability, financial responsibility, ability, production facilities and a national distribution organization and facilities to service, with respect to all feature motion pictures released by the Producer Defendant, all exhibitors desiring such service. Provided, however, that the size of the organization and facilities of National Screen shall not be used as the standards for determining the adequacy of the applicant's qualifications.

(2) The applicant, in the case of accessories, agrees to produce and distribute at least the following accessory items:

(a) Lithograph posters (in 1 sheet, 3 sheet, 6 sheet and 24 sheet sizes).
(b) 8 x 10 stills.
(c) Photos [in sizes 11 x 14 (in sets), 22 x 28, and 14 x 36].
(d) Window cards.
(e) Heralds.
(f) Mats.

Provided, however, that the Producer Defendant may, in the reasonable exercise of its discretion, with notice to the Attorney General which shall also be filed with this Court, substitute for any of the foregoing items (a) through (f) any other accessory item for which there is a substantial demand on the part of exhibitors.

(C) Each Producer Defendant is enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Requiring, as a condition to the granting of a license to produce and distribute any type of trailers, that the applicant produce and distribute either accessories or any other type of trailers; or

(2) Requiring, as a condition to the granting of a license to produce and distribute accessories, that the applicant produce and distribute any type of trailers.

(D) Each Producer Defendant is enjoined and restrained from discriminating among persons applying for licenses or holding licenses for trailers or among persons applying for licenses or holding licenses for accessories, as to the royalties or other terms required or offered, as to the facilities, rights or privileges made available, or as to dealings under licenses and the enforcement thereof, where the discrimination gives or would give any licensee of the Producer Defendant a substantial competitive advantage over any other person holding a similar license from the Producer Defendant.

(E) Notwithstanding the other terms of this Section V, any Producer Defendant may contract with National Screen for the performance by National Screen of any obligation to the Producer Defendant which is substantially similar to an obligation which National Screen has heretofore agreed in a written contract with the Producer Defendant (or any predecessor or affiliate) to perform either for the benefit of the Producer Defendant or for the benefit of exhibitors.

(F) Each Producer Defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to or claiming any rights under any provision of any agreement with a licensee of trailers or accessories which establishes the price at which the licensee will service exhibitors with trailers or accessories of any other producer; Provided, however, that this Subsection (F) shall not be deemed to prohibit any Producer Defendant from using a license provision in substantially the form attached to this Final Judgment as Exhibit A, or as such form may be hereafter modified by this Court.

VI

[Foreign Activities]

Nothing contained in this Final Judgment shall apply to operations or activities of any defendant outside of the United States of America, its territories and possessions, or to the production of trailers or accessories for distribution outside such territory.

VII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to National Screen or any Producer Defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (a) access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employes of such defendants, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. National Screen or any Producer Defendant, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment and their successors bound hereby, and no one else, to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the purpose of enforcement of compliance therewith, and the punishment of violations thereof.

Exhibit A

Licensee agrees that in servicing exhibitors it will not discriminate in quality, service, price or otherwise against trailers or accessories licensed hereunder and in favor of trailers or accessories relating to motion pictures distributed by any person other than licensor, except that different prices may be charged where such difference reflects only differences in licensee's costs of production or service.

Final Judgment

[Judgment as to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.]

SUGARMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The United States of America, plaintiff, having filed its complaint herein on April 28, 1952 and a supplemental complaint on January 23, 1957 which, inter alia, added Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., organized in 1953, only Count II of which referred to Warner Defendant; Warner Defendant having appeared and filed their answer to Count II thereof denying all of its substantive allegations; and the plaintiff and Warner Defendant by their respective attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, no testimony having been taken, and without admission by any of the parties signatory hereto in respect of any such issue; and plaintiff having moved the Court for the entry of this Final Judgment, it is hereby Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims under Count II upon which relief may be granted under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Warner Defendant" means Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., organized in 1953, and Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation, and each of them;

(B) "Accessories" means advertising materials used by motion picture theatres and generally known in the industry as "standard accessories" and "specialty accessories," including lithograph posters (in 1 sheet, 3 sheet, 6 sheet and 24 sheet sizes), 8 x 10 stills, photos [in sixes 11 x 14 (in sets), 22 x 28 and 14 x 36], window cards, slides, heralds, mats, 40 x 60's, 30 x 40's, 24 x 82 banners, 24 x 60 banners, 40 x 60 Hollywood displays, 40 x 60 specials, 40 x 60 transparencies, 30 x 40 specials, 8 x 10 title cards, 11 x 14 title cards, 24 x 24 title cards, standees, and any other similar materials;

(C) "Producer" means any person, including any affiliate thereof, controlling, controlled by or under common control with such person, engaged in the production or distribution, or both, of full length feature motion picture films;

(D) "Exhibitor" means any person engaged in the operation of a motion picture theatre or theatres;

(E) "Person" means an individual, corporation, partnership, firm, association or any other legal or business entity;

(F) "Distribute" means to distribute to exhibitors;

(G) "Produce" means to design and manufacture or to assume responsibility for the procurement of design and manufacture;

(H) "National Screen" means the defendant, National Screen Service Corporation.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to Warner Defendant shall apply to each such defendant, its officers, agents, servants and employees, and to those persons in active concert or participation with such defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Grant of Licenses—Prohibitions]

(A) Subject to the other provisions of this Section IV, Warner Defendant is ordered and directed to grant to any qualified person applying therefor a license (including a license under Warner Defendant's copyrights) to produce and distribute accessories relating to motion pictures released by Warner Defendant, so long as and to the extent that the Warner Defendant or its distributor (as provided for below) licenses or otherwise authorizes any other person [other than an affiliate as described in Section II(C) hereof] to produce and distribute the accessories sought to be produced and distributed by the person applying for the license; Provided, however, that any such license so granted may require reasonable terms and conditions (including payment of a reasonable royalty) agreed to by the Warner Defendant. In the event Warner Defendant turns over distribution of its motion pictures to a non-affiliated distributor not a defendant herein, such Warner Defendant must either itself license pursuant to this subsection (A) or require such distributor so to do;

(B) Warner Defendant shall not be required to regard any person as a qualified applicant within the meaning of subsection (A) of this Section unless:

(1) The applicant can meet and will agree to meet reasonable business standards as to reliability, financial responsibility, ability, production facilities and a national distribution organization and facilities to service, with respect to all feature motion pictures released by Warner Defendant, all exhibitors desiring such service. Provided, however, that the size of the organization and facilities of National Screen shall not be used as the standard for determining the adequacy of the applicant's qualifications.

(2) The applicant agrees to produce and distribute at least the following accessory items:

(a) Lithograph posters (in 1 sheet, 3 sheet, 6 sheet and 24 sheet sizes).

(b) 8 x 10 stills.

(c) Photos [in sizes 11 x 14 (in sets), 22 x 28, and 14 x 36].

(d) Window cards.

(e) Heralds.

(f) Mats.

Provided, however, that Warner Defendant may, in the reasonable exercise of its discretion, with notice to the Attorney General which shall also be filed with this Court, substitute for any of the foregoing items (a) through (f) any other accessory item for which there is a substantial demand on the part of exhibitors;

(C) Warner Defendant is enjoined and restrained from discriminating among persons applying for licenses or holding licenses for accessories, as to the royalties or other terms required or offered, as to the facilities, rights or privileges made available, or as to dealings under licenses and the enforcement thereof, where the discrimination gives or would give any licensee of Warner Defendant a substantial competitive advantage over any other person holding a similar license from Warner Defendant;

(D) Notwithstanding the other terms of this Section IV, Warner Defendant may contract with National Screen for the performance by National Screen of any obligation to Warner Defendant which is substantially similar to an obligation which National Screen has heretofore agreed in a written contract with Warner Defendant (or any predecessor or affiliate) to perform either for the benefit of Warner Defendant or for the benefit of exhibitors;

(E) Warner Defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to or claiming any rights under any provision of any agreement with a licensee of accessories which establishes the price at which the licensee will service accessories of any other producer; Provided, however, that this subsection (E) shall not be deemed to prohibit Warner Defendant from using a license provision in substantially the form attached to this Final Judgment as Exhibit A, or as such form may be hereafter modified by this Court.

V

[Foreign Activities]

Nothing contained in this Final Judgment shall apply to operations or activities of Warner Defendant outside of the United States of America, its territories and possessions, or to the production of accessories for distribution outside such territory.

VI

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notices to Warner Defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (a) access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Warner Defendant, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VI shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

VII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties signatory to this Final Judgment and their successors bound hereby, and no one else, to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the purpose of enforcement of compliance therewith, and the punishment of violations thereof.

Exhibit A

Licensee agrees that in servicing exhibitors it will not discriminate in quality, service, price or otherwise against trailers or accessories licensed hereunder and in favor of trailers or accessories relating to motion pictures distributed by any person other than licensor, except that different prices may be charged where such difference reflects only differences in licensee's costs of production or service.

[¶ 68,671] Frank Solinski v. General Electric Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action No. 855-56. Filed March 26, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Federal Statute of Limitations—Applicability—Pendency of Government Action.—A treble damage action was held to be barred by the four-year Federal statute of limitations where (1) the plaintiff's claim for damages accrued in October, 1940, (2) the United States commenced a suit against the defendant in the instant action in January, 1941, (3) a final judgment in favor of the United States against the defendant was entered in December, 1953, and (4) the plaintiff commenced his action against the defendant in October, 1956. The Federal statute of limitations, which was enacted and became effective after the termination of the Government action but before the institution of the instant action, was applicable. Congress may shorten the time within which suits to enforce existing causes of action may be commenced, provided a reasonable time is given by the new law for the commencement of suit before the bar takes effect. The Federal statute of limitations did not become effective until six months after its enactment, and this left ample time for the plaintiff to institute his action, which was not commenced until after the effective date of the statute. Under the Federal statute of limitations, the plaintiff had to commence his suit within one year after the conclusion of the Government's action against the defendant because more than four years had elapsed since the date of accrual of the plaintiff's right of action. The wartime suspension of limitations was not applicable to the instant suit.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.

For the plaintiff: Louis Kraemer.

For the defendant: Toner, Crowley, Woelper & Vanderbilt (Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, of counsel).

Opinion

[Statute of Limitations]

THOMAS F. MEANEY, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action for treble damages brought by Frank Solinski against General Electric Company for alleged violations of the so-called antitrust laws, under section 4 of the Clayton Act. The question to be determined at this juncture is whether the action is barred by the statute of limitations applicable to the facts of the case.

It may clarify matters somewhat if a partial calendar of events be set up.

1. The claim for damages accrued in October, 1940.

2. The United States started suit against the defendant for violations of the Clayton Act on January 27, 1941.

3. There was a final judgment in favor of the United States against General Electric Company on December 6, 1953.

4. The plaintiff in the instant suit commenced his action against the defendant on October 26, 1956.

[Clayton Act]

Originally the Clayton Act provided that the statute of limitations obtaining in the state in which the action was initiated should apply to any case brought under the said Act. In New Jersey the statute is six years. The Act provided, however, that the running of the statute of limitations in respect of all private rights of action should be suspended during the pendency of any suit or proceeding, whether civil or criminal, brought by the United States for violation thereof. 15 U. S. C. A. § 16. (October 15, 1914). This section of the Act was amended July 7, 1955, continuing the suspension of the statute during the pendency of the Government's proceeding and for one year thereafter, with the proviso that the action must have been brought during the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued, else it would be barred forever. 15 U. S. C. A. § 16(b). (Italics supplied.)

[Issue]

In the case of Bascom Launder Corp. v. Farny [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,706], 10

F. R. D. 421, Electric Theatre Co. v. Twentieth Century-Fox F. Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,560], 113 F. Supp. 937, loc. cit. 944, and Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,592], 117 F. Supp. 747, all decided before the 1955 amendment to the Clayton Act, it was held that the statute of limitations was tolled by the provisions of the Clayton Act then prevailing and before the amendment above referred to, and that the total elapsed time was to be computed by deducting from the number of years since the accrual of the action to the time of beginning the suit, the time during which the Government's suit was pending.

The instant situation is complicated by the fact that after the determination of the Government's suit and before the institution of this suit, section 16 of the Clayton Act was amended as hereinbefore indicated.

What is now to be passed on is whether the amendment alters the situation to the extent that the suit must be brought within one year after the conclusion of the Government's suit against General Electric Company (more than four years having elapsed since the date of accrual of the plaintiff's right of action) or whether such part of the four-year period which had not elapsed at the time of commencement of the Government's suit was suspended by the federal statute of limitations, leaving the balance of the four years after the windup of the Government's suit as a period during which suit might be brought, and not the one year mentioned in the statute before the proviso in section 16(b).

[Wartime Suspension]

The 1942 Act and its 1945 amendment, providing for wartime suspension of limitations (Act Oct. 10, 1942, c. 589, 56 Stat. 781, as amended June 30, 1945, c. 213, 59 Stat. 306), have no bearing on the question at issue.

[Clayton Act Amendment]

While there may be seeming inconsistencies in the conclusions arrived at by this court, the legislative history of the amendment sheds much light on the purpose and effect of the amendment. There is no question that the tolling of the statute of limitations, whatever be its extent, is continued during the pendency of any action brought by the Government concerning the same subject matter as that which is the basis of a private action. But the Congress, while recognizing the desirability of such temporary defeasance of limitation, was concerned about any undue prolongation of proceedings and therefore decided to establish a uniform statute of limitations arriving at an average of all state periods, or four years. But the law-making body did not rest there. Having in mind the shortening of the time over which private treble damage actions might extend, it unequivocally required that such actions be brought within four years after their accrual or within one year after the Government's case has been concluded. Anomalous situations may be created by such a construction of the law, but it is the opinion of this court that Congress felt sufficient protection would be given to a potential litigant by the establishment of a four-year period, after accrual of a right of action, during which an action must be brought, with the additional safeguard that if before the expiration of that time a suit were begun by the Government, the private plaintiff would have such further time as the Government might take before conclusion of its case, plus one year, for the preparation and filing of such litigant's case.

From the legislative history and the express wording of the statute, it would seem clear that Congress intended to establish a uniform statute of limitations (Carter v. Atlanta Enterprises, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,312], 19 F. R. D. 362, and cases cited at 364; decided March 24, 1956), and a new method of calculation in its working.

[New Rule Applicable]

There remains the final question of whether the new rule applies to the case at bar. It is well settled that Congress "may prescribe a limitation for the bringing of suits where none previously existed, as well as shorten the time within which suits to enforce existing causes of action may be commenced, provided, in each case, a reasonable time, taking all the circumstances into consideration, be given by the new law for the commencement of suit before the bar takes effect." Wheeler v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 245. The amendment establishing the new limitation in the Clayton Act, passed July 7, 1955, was not to become effective until six months after its enactment. This left ample time for the plaintiff in the case at bar for the institution of suit. Suit was not begun until October 26, 1956, many months after the date upon which the amendment under discussion became effective.

[Action Barred]

Under all the circumstances obtaining, the plaintiff's action against the General Electric Company is barred by the statute of limitations, and the defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted.

This opinion may serve as findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Let an order be submitted.

[¶ 68,672] The California Oil Company v. Forrest W. Fitzgerald, individually and t/a Fitzgerald Service and Repair Center, and also t/a Montgomeryville Calso Station.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 21779. Filed January 7, 1957.

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Proof of Damage—Federal Court Action.—In a Federal court action, an oil company's motion for a preliminary injunction to enjoin a dealer from selling the company's gasoline below its established fair trade prices was denied because there was no sufficient credible evidence that the matter in controversy exceeded the amount of $3,000, and that the company was threatened with irreparable injury. The only witness for the company who testified as to the extent of the company's investment in promoting good will for its trade-mark, or as to the extent of harm done to the company's good will by the dealer's sales, was not an officer or director of the company and was not a person who was in a position to have personal knowledge of the facts to which he testified.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3362.40, 3410.40.

For the plaintiff: Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, by John W. Fawcett, III, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendant: Paul R. Beckert, Levittown, Pa., and William J. Toy, Philadelphia, Pa.

Findings of Fact

Conclusions of Law and Order

KRAFT, District Judge [In full text]: Hearing was had and argument heard on the plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction to enjoin alleged violation of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Law[1], and on the defendant's motion to dismiss this motion. From the evidence and the stipulations of the parties, the court makes the following

Findings of Fact

1. The plaintiff is a Delaware corporation.

2. The plaintiff has a valid trade-mark covering the names "Calso" and "Calso Supreme."

3. The plaintiff has sold and now sells gasoline in Pennsylvania to distributors but not to dealers.

4. A substantial part of this gasoline, directed to be made to the plaintiff's specifications, is obtained from the bulk plants of other refiners by the plaintiff's distributors, pursuant to exchange agreements, and the plaintiff furnishes to its distributors certain additives intended to be added to the gasoline by the distributor in conformity with plaintiff's instructions.

5. On September 4, 1956 the plaintiff executed a written agreement with one of the more than 350 Pennsylvania dealers who vend this gasoline. This agreement provided, inter alia, that this dealer would sell Calso (regular) gasoline at 27.9 cents per gallon and Calso Supreme gasoline at 30.9 cents per gallon unless and until otherwise instructed by the plaintiff; and, that this dealer would not sell such gasoline except at prices fixed by the plaintiff.

---

[1] Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266; 73 P. S. §§ 7-11, as amended by Act No. 589, May 25, 1956.

6. The defendant is a Pennsylvania dealer who sells gasoline so purchased from plaintiff's distributor.

7. There is no agreement, written or oral, between plaintiff and defendant.

8. On or about September 5, 1956 defendant received from plaintiff written notice of the aforesaid agreement.

9. The defendant was advised by letter, dated November 27, 1956, that defendant's failure to abide by the prices fixed by the plaintiff pursuant to the aforesaid agreement would result in legal action by plaintiff against defendant.

10. The defendant thereafter sold gasoline purchased from plaintiff's distributor at prices other than those fixed by the plaintiff in or under the terms of the aforesaid agreement.

11. The plaintiff seeks to prevent sales by the defendant at any prices other than those fixed by the plaintiff, from time to time, in accordance with the aforesaid agreement.

12. There is no sufficient credible evidence on the present record which convinces the court that the matter in controversy exceeds $3,000.

13. There is no sufficient credible evidence on the present record which convinces the court that the plaintiff is threatened with irreparable injury.

Discussion

The only witness for the plaintiff who testified to the extent of plaintiff's investment in promoting good will for its trademark, or to the extent of harm done to plaintiff's good will by the defendant's sales, was neither an officer nor director of the plaintiff nor one who was in a position to have or who did have personal knowledge of the facts to which he testified. Most of his testimony in this area was based on knowledge gleaned from reports by or conversations with others. While the testimony was admitted over objection, its probative value was for the court. See Olin Industries, Inc. v. Danoff et al. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,820], 122 F. Supp. 645 (D. C. M. D. Pa. 1954).

Defendant's counsel raised legal questions respecting the interpretation of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Law, as sought to be applied in the instant case, sufficient to raise serious doubt as to the extent of the plaintiff's ultimate rights against this defendant. See Henis et al. v. Compania Agricola de Guatemala et al., 116 F. Supp. 223, (D. C. D. Del. 1953, aff'd. 210 F. 2d 950 (Cir 3 1954)).

Conclusions of Law

I. Jurisdiction of this action, based on 28 U. S. C. § 1332(a)(1) is, on the present record, at best doubtful.

II. Plaintiff, on the present record, is threatened with no irreparable injury.

III. On the present record doubt exists as to the merits of the claim for relief.

Order

Now, January 7, 1957, the plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction is denied and defendant's motion for dismissal thereof is granted.

[¶ 68,673] Federal Trade Commission v. Scientific Living, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 5614. Filed April 9, 1957.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding—Production of Documentary Evidence—Compliance with Cease and Desist Order—Power To Issue Subpoena Duces Tecum.—A corporation was ordered by a Federal District Court to comply with a subpoena duces tecum served on the corporation by the Federal Trade Commission in the course of an investigation to ascertain whether or not the corporation was complying with a cease and desist order issued against the corporation under the Federal Trade Commission Act. Under Section 9 of the FTC Act, the Commission can have access to any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against and has the power to require by subpoena the production of documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. Having such power, the Commission can make rules regulating the procedure in connection with such power.

While such a subpoena is no more than a notice, a Federal District Court has the power to enforce the subpoena through its contempt powers. The Constitution does not forbid Congress to do this, and, without violating constitutional provisions concerning separation and delegation of powers or due process, an administrative agency may be given the power to require the attendance of witnesses in proceedings of a purely investigatory nature. The documentary evidence requested related to the matter under investigation over a reasonable period of time within a field of inquiry covered by the Act, and the demand did not amount to an unreasonable search and seizure under the Fourth Amendment. The corporation's contention that the subpoena violates the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment and the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act because it was not returnable before a member of the Commission or a qualified examiner or before one who was unbiased and independent was rejected. The Commission's rules of practice concerning the matter observed the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act and afforded a fair hearing. Also, a showing of probable cause preliminary to the issuance of the subpoena need not be made by the Commission, and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are not applicable. The Commission had the power to issue the subpoena for the above purpose, and the Commission's subpoena power is not limited only to formal hearings under Section 5(b).

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.10, 8741.55.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding —Production of Documentary Evidence—Compliance With Cease and Desist Order— Validity of Subpoena Directed to Corporation and to a Party Not a Witness.—A subpoena duces tecum served on a corporation by the Federal Trade Commission in the course of an investigation to determine whether or not the corporation was complying with a cease and desist order issued under the Federal Trade Commission Act was valid. While a corporation is incapable of testifying except through its authorized officers and agents, there is no reason why a subpoena duces tecum may not be directed to the corporation itself. A command to a corporation is, in effect, a command to those who are officially responsible for the conduct of its affairs. Also, the contention that the subpoena was invalid because it was addressed to a party and not to a witness was rejected.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding —Production of Documentary Evidence—Compliance with Cease and Desist Order— Service of Subpoena Duces Tecum on Corporation—Immunity from Prosecution.—Where a subpoena duces tecum was served on a corporation by the Federal Trade Commission in the course of an investigation to determine whether or not the corporation was complying with a cease and desist order issued under the Federal Trade Commission Act, a Federal District Court, which was requested by the Commission to enforce compliance with the subpoena, ruled that the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution gives no protection to corporations or their officers against the production of corporate records, that an officer of a corporation cannot refuse to produce such records upon the plea that they may either incriminate the corporation or himself, and that Section 9 of the FTC Act offers immunity to individual witnesses but not to corporations.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.20.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding —Production of Documentary Evidence—Compliance with Cease and Desist Order— Issuance of Subpoena Duces Tecum—Reasonableness of Return Day.—Where a subpoena duces tecum was served on a corporation by the Federal Trade Commission in the course of an investigation to determine whether or not the corporation was complying with a cease and desist order issued under the Federal Trade Commission Act, the corporation's contention that the time fixed for the return day was unreasonable because the subpoena was returnable the day before the corporation and its principal officers were to appear before a court for sentence in a criminal action was rejected. The documents could be produced by another agent, officer, or representative of the corporation.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding —Production of Ducumentary Evidence—Compliance with Cease and Desist Order— Motion To Quash before the Federal Trade Commission.—Where a motion by a respondent to quash a Federal Trade Commission subpoena duces tecum was denied by the Commission and the respondent was ordered to comply at a later hour on the return date, the respondent's contentions that the motion to quash stayed the subpoena, that the Commission did not deny the motion until after the return day, that the order to appear later that day was of no binding effect, and that the time fixed for the later appearance was unreasonable were rejected. The record did not support the respondent's contentions, and the respondent did not offer to appear at a more convenient time but merely denied the Commission's right, authority, and power to proceed.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.

For the petitioner: Joseph J. Gercke, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., and J. Julius Levy, United States Attorney, Scranton, Pa.

For the defendant: Raymond Bialkowski, Scranton, Pa., and Horace J. Donnelly, Jr., Washington, D. C.

Ordering compliance with a Federal Trade Commission subpoena duces tecum issued in Dkt. 6099.

Opinion

[FTC Subpoena]

JOHN W. MURPHY, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is an application by the Federal Trade Commission, an administrative agency of the United States, pursuant to § 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914, 15 USCA § 41-46 and 47-58, see Id. § 49, for an order requiring Scientific Living, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, having its office and principal place of business in this district, to comply with a subpoena duces tecum of the Commission duly authorized and served on the corporation in the course of an investigation, § 6(a), Id. § 46 (a), instituted to ascertain whether or not the corporation was complying with a cease and desist order of the Commission made at the conclusion of a formal hearing under § 5(b) of the Act, Id. § 45(b) and rules and regulations adopted by virtue of authority granted by § 6(g), Id. § 46(g).

The corporation, its officers and counsel having repeatedly refused to answer pertinent questions or to provide access to relevant specified corporate documents for inspection and copying, the Commission issued and served upon the corporation a subpoena duces tecum directing it to appear at a fixed time and place in this district to testify and produce documentary evidence specified therein, before a duly designated representative of the Commission.[1]

[Motion to Quash]

A motion by defendant to quash the subpoena was denied by the Commission and defendant ordered to comply at a later hour on the return date. Defendant did not comply on the date in question or at any time thereafter.

Defendant contends the motion to quash stayed the subpoena; that the Commission did not deny it until after the return day and that the order to appear later that day was of no binding effect, and, at all events, that the time fixed for the later appearance was unreasonable. There is nothing in the record to support defendant's contention. The evidence appears to be to the contrary. Defendant made no issue of the matter before the Commission or offered to appear at a more convenient time. On the contrary, it denied the Commission's right, authority or power to proceed. Defendant should have made reasonable efforts before the Commission to fix a more reasonable time. Cf. United States v. Morton Salt Co., 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,561], 338 U. S. 632 at 653, 70 S. Ct. 357, 94 L. Ed. 401. Administrative remedies must be exhausted. Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. Inc. v. FTC, D. C. D. C. 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,554], 88 F. Supp. 789, 790, and cases cited; Perkins v. Endicott Johnson Corpn., 2 Cir. 1942, 128 F. 2d at 213, affd. 1943, 317 U. S. 501, 63 S. Ct. 339, 87 L. Ed. 424;

[1] Compliance Order FTC Docket No. 6099, Scientific Living Inc., Adolph Hohensee, Mildred J. Walsh, Viola Heinzerling, individually and as corporate officers, Investigation FTC File No. 0206099.

Hagen v. Porter, 9 Cir. 1946, 156 F. 2d 362 at 366; Miles Laboratories Inc. v. FTC, D. C. D. C. 1944 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,206], 140 F. 2d 683 at 685.

Defendant moves to dismiss the application and to quash the order to show cause why an order to comply should not issue.

[Jurisdiction]

Jurisdiction arises once the circumstances fit into the provisions of § 9 and service is made upon the defendant within this district. A summary proceeding—making application through an authorized agent as provided by § 9, Par. 1, 2 and 3—is the approved method. Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 1946, 327 U. S. 186 at 200, 66 S. Ct. 494, 90 L. Ed. 614, 166 A. L. R. 531; United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,561], 338 U. S. 632 at 635, 640, 642; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Fleming, 8 Cir. 1941, 122 F. 2d 1005, 1007; Fleming v. Easton Pub. Co., D. C. E. D. Pa. 1941, 38 F. Supp. 677, 679. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are not applicable. Porter v. Mueller, 3 Cir. 1946, 156 F. 2d 278, 279; Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. v. NLRB, 6 Cir. 1941, 122 F. 2d 450 at 451; Perkins v. Endicott Johnson Corpn., supra, 128 F. 2d at 227; In re Wolrich, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1949, 84 F. Supp. 481-482; see and cf. Comment, Advisory Committee Rule 45 and 81, and see NLRB v. Kingston Trap Rock Co., 3 Cir. 1955, 222 F. 2d 299 at 302. There was no need to tender witness fees and mileage upon service of the subpoena. See and cf. 28 USCA § 1825, § 1821; United States v. Durling, D. C. Ill. 1869, Fed. Cas. No. 15010, 25 Fed. Cases 944; Norris v. Hassler, C. C. N. J. 1885, 23 Fed. 581.[2]

[Right to Enforcement]

Defendant urging failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted challenges applicant's right to enforcement contending: (1) that the Commission had no authority to issue a subpoena in an investigation under § 6(a) and § 9, Par. 1, 2, 3; a subpoena could only be used in connection with a formal hearing under § 5(b), and that § 1.35 of the Commission rules providing for the issuance of a subpoena for such purposes is contrary to Art. I and III of the United States Constitution; (2) that the subpoena was issued without notice or a showing of good cause; (3) did not show relevancy of the documents called for, and was nothing more than a "fishing expedition", citing FTC v. American Tobacco Co. (1924), 264 U. S. 298, 44 S. Ct. 336, 68 L. Ed. 696, 32 A. L. R. 786, and therefore constituted an unreasonable search and seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; (4) was served upon a party not a witness, citing United States v. Minker, 1956, 350 U. S. 179, 76 S. Ct. 281, 100 L. Ed. 185; (5) violates the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment and the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, as amended, 5 USCA § 1001 et seq., because it was not returnable before a member of the Commission or a qualified examiner as required by § 9, or before one who was "unbiased" and "independent"; finally, that the time fixed for the return day was unreasonable because the corporation and its principal officer were scheduled to appear before the court the following day for sentence in a criminal action.

[FTC Act, Section 9]

§ 9 specifically provides that the Commission or its duly authorized agent shall have access to any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against and that ". . . the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. . . ." (Italics supplied.) Having such power the Commission could make rules under § 6(g), Id. 46(g) regulating the procedure in connection therewith. See United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, at 647-651. Without the subpoena the power of investigation would in effect be only that of inspection, exercised only upon consent. See Cudahy Packing Co., Ltd. v. Holland, 1942, 315 U. S. 357 at 364, 62 S. Ct. 803, 86 L. Ed. —. The intention of Congress is clear. The subpoena power is given in aid of investigations by the Commission. As such the subpoena is no more than a notice. Federal Power Comm. v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 1938, 304 U. S. 375 at 386, 58 S. Ct. 963, 82 L. Ed. 1408; Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U. S. 41 at 49, 58 S. Ct. 459, 82 L. Ed. 638. See dissent Mr. Justice Douglas, Cudahy Packing Co. Ltd. v. Holland, supra, 315 U. S. at 371. In case of disobedience the district court may be called upon to enforce the subpoena through its contempt powers. "No constitutional provisions forbids Congress to do this. On the contrary, its authority would seem clearly to be comprehended in the 'necessary and proper' clause, as incidental to both its general legislative and its investigative powers." Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, supra, 327 U. S. at 214, and see Id. at 198, 199-201, and see United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 635, 640, 642-643; FTC v. Smith, 1929, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 34 F. 2d 323.

[2] As to mandamus by the Attorney General, see § 9, Par. 4, Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. FTC, 8 Cir. 1922, 280 Fed. 45, 48; Fleming v. Easton Pub. Co., supra, 38 F. Supp. 677, Id. Fleming v. Lowell Sun Co., D. C. D. Mass. 1940, 36 F. Supp. 320 at 325, rev. on other grounds, 1 Cir. 1941, 120 F. 2d 213, affd. 1942, 315 U. S. 784, 62 S. Ct. 793, 86 L. Ed. 1187, and see FRCP Rule 45.

[Power of Investigation]

Despite some indications to the contrary in earlier cases, it is now well settled that, without violating constitutional provisions bearing upon separation and delegation of powers or due process, an administrative agency may be given and may exercise the power to require the attendance of witnesses in proceedings of a purely investigatory nature." Note 27 A. L. R. 2d 1208, cited many cases.[3] Porter v. Mueller, 3 Cir. 1946, 156 F. 2d 278 at 280, and see FCC v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 1940, 309 U. S. 134 at 142-144, 60 S. Ct. 437, 84 L. Ed. 656.

[Reasonableness of Subpoena]

There is no subpoena here such as that involved in FTC v. American Tobacco Co., supra, 264 U. S. 298. The documentary evidence requested, see § 4, 15 USCA § 44, related to the matter under investigation over a reasonable period within a field of inquiry covered by the Act. See NLRB v. Northern Trust Co., 7 Cir. 1945, 148 F. 2d 24 at 29; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Fleming, supra, 122 F. 2d at 1009; Perkins v. Endicott Johnson Co., supra, 128 F. 2d at 211; Hagen v. Porter, supra, 156 F. 2d at 364-365; United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 642, 649, 650; Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, supra, 327 U. S. 200-201, 209, 215-216.

Defendant was fully apprised and cognizant of the purpose, nature and scope of the investigation, of the demands made upon it and of the provisions of §§ 6, 9 and 10. While the Commission resolution asserts reason to believe the corporation may have violated the cease and desist order, and that it was in the public interest to investigate the manner and form of compliance, a showing of probable cause preliminary to issuance of the subpoena was not required. United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 641-643; Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 327 U. S. at 209; NLRB v. Kingston Trap Rock Co., supra, 222 F. 2d at 301, 302; Fleming v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 7 Cir. 1940, 114 F. 2d 384 at 387-388.

Where relevant questions are asked in an authorized inquiry and a reasonable number of definitely described documents requested in a subpoena under § 9, it does not amount to an unreasonable search and seizure under the Fourth Amendment. Bowles v. Insel, 3 Cir. 1945, 148 F. 2d 91; A. Guckenheimer & Bros. Co. v. United States, 3 Cir. 1925, 3 F. 2d 786 at 789; Hagen v. Porter, supra, 156 F. 2d at 366; Bowles v. Glick Bros. Lumber Co., 9 Cir. 1945, 146 F. 2d 566 at 570-571; Wilson v. United States, 1911, 221 U. S. 361 at 380-382, 31 S. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D 558; Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 327 U. S. at 194, 195. Here it is really not a question of unreasonable search and seizure but a claim of immunity from the Act's provisions requiring it to submit its records for inspection "under every judicial safeguard . . . after an order of court made . . . in exact compliance with authority granted by Congress." Id. 196.

As to private corporations, see Id. at 204, ". . . it long has been established that Congress may exercise wide investigative power over them . . . when their activities take place within or affect interstate commerce."

"The gist of the protection is in the requirement . . . that the disclosure sought shall not be unreasonable . . ." Id. 208. Also see United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 651-653; Porter v. Mueller, supra, 156 F. 2d at 279, 280.

[3] For analogous situations see Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1934, 15 USCA § 78u(a)(b); McMann v. Engel, D. C. N. Y. 1936, 16 F. Supp. 446, affd. 87 F. 2d 377, 109 A. L. R. 1445; SEC v. Vacuum Can Co., 7 Cir. 1946, 157 F. 2d 530; Genecov v. Federal Petroleum Board, 5 Cir. 1945, 146 F. 2d 596; Application of Barnes, 2 Cir. 1955, 219 F. 2d 137, 143; Int. Rev. Code, 1954, § 7602, 26 USCA; Atomic Energy Act, 42 USCA § 1812(a)(3), now 42 USCA § 2201; Civil Aeronautics Act, 49 USCA §§ 642, 644(b); Public Utility Holding Act, 15 USCA § 79(r).

[Subpoena Directed to Corporation]

While a corporation is incapable of testifying except through its duly authorized officers and agents, McGarry v. SEC, 10 Cir. 1945, 147 F. 2d 389 at 391, 392, there is no reason why a subpoena duces tecum may not be directed to the corporation itself. See Wilson v. United States, supra, 221 U. S. at 374. A command to a corporation is in effect a command to those who are officially responsible for the conduct of its affairs. If they, apprised of the writ directed to the corporation, prevent compliance or fail to take appropriate action within their power for the performance of the corporate duty, they, no less than the corporation itself, are guilty of disobedience and may be punished for contempt. Wilson v. United States, supra, 221 U. S. at 376.

[Immunity]

The Fifth Amendment "gives no protection to corporations or their officers against the production of corporate records pursuant to lawful judicial order . . ." Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, supra at 196. ". . . an officer of the company cannot refuse to produce its records in his possession, upon the plea that they either will incriminate him or may incriminate it." Id. 205, 208. Porter v. Mueller, supra, 156 F. 2d at 280; A. Guckenheimer v. United States, supra, 3 F. 2d at 789; Genecov v. Federal Petroleum Board, 5 Cir. 1944, 146 F. 2d 596 at 597-598; Wilson v. United States, supra, 221 U. S. at 379, 382.

As to individual witnesses, § 9 offers immunity, see Lansky v. Savoretti, 5 Cir. 1955, 220 F. 2d 906 at 910; Sherwin v. United States, 1925, 268 U. S. 369, 45 S. Ct. 517, 69 L. Ed. 1001, not to corporations, United States v. Frontier Asthma Co., D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1947, 69 F. Supp. 994.

["Due Process"]

"When the Constitution requires a hearing, its requires a fair one, one before a tribunal which meets at least currently prevailing standards of impartiality." Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 1950, 339 U. S. 33 at 50, 70 S. Ct. 445, 94 L. Ed. 616.

The absence of merit in defendant's position as to lack of due process under the Fifth Amendment and the inapplicability of the Administrative Procedure Act of June 11, 1946, as amended, 5 USCA § 1001, et seq., which ". . . created safeguards even narrower than the constitutional ones . . .", United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 644, is clear when they are placed in their proper context and upon an understanding of the distinction between an investigation and a hearing which might eventuate in an order. Edwards v. United States, 1941, 312 U. S. 473 at 481, 61 S. Ct. 669, 85 L. Ed. 957; see FCC v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., supra, 309 U. S. at 143, 144,[4] ". . . The laws under which these agencies operate prescribe the fundamentals of fair play. They require that interested parties be afforded an opportunity for hearing and that judgment must express a reasoned conclusion." But see Id. as to the distinction between an investigation and a hearing, at p. 144. "Unless these vital differentiations between the functions . . . are observed courts will stray outside their province and read the laws of Congress through the distorting lenses of inapplicable legal doctrine."

See Morgan v. United States, 1936, 298 U. S. 468 at 476, 56 S. Ct. 906, 80 L. Ed. 1288, as to the constitutional requirements of due process, and at 480, 481, "The 'hearing' is the hearing of evidence and argument. If the one who determines the facts which underlies the order has not considered evidence or argument it is manifest that the hearing has not been given . . . The one who decides must hear . . ."

"This necessary rule does not preclude practicable administrative procedure in obtaining the aid of assistants . . . Assistants may prosecute inquiries. Evidence may be taken by an examiner . . ." Id. 481. ". . . to give the substance of a hearing which is for the purpose of making determinations upon evidence, the officer who makes the determinations must consider and appraise the evidence which justifies them . . ." Id. 481, 482. See Southern Garment Mfrs. Assn. Inc. v. Fleming, 1941, D. C. D. C. 122 F. 2d 622 at 626, 627.

[4] In re SEC, S. D. N. Y. 1936, 14 F. Supp. 417, affd. 2 Cir. 1936, 84 F. 2d 316, reversed as moot, Bracken v. SEC, 299 U. S. 504, 57 S. Ct. 18, 81 L. Ed. 374; Bowles v. Baer, 7 Cir. 1944, 142 F. 2d 787; Genecov v. Federal Petroleum Board, supra, 146 F. 2d at 597; Boehm v. United States, 8 Cir. 1941, 123 F. 2d 791 at 801, 807; Woolley v. United States, 1938, 9 Cir., 97 F. 2d 258 at 262; SEC v. Torr, D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1936, 15 F. Supp. 144; cf. Brown v. Baer, D. C. N. D. Ill. 1943, 54 F. Supp. 887, and see Annotations 85 L. Ed. 506 et seq.

As to the Administrative Procedure Act, cf. Tractor Training Service v. FTC, 9 Cir. 1955 [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,196], 227 F. 2d 420, where an investigation preceded a hearing. See Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, supra, 339 U. S. at 36-45, particularly at 44, quoting from the Final Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure, ". . . commingling of functions . . . should be avoided by appropriate internal division of labor . . ." While the minority favored an even more thorough separation, "The Act . . . adopts in general this recommended form of remedial action."

"The Administrative Procedure Act did not go so far as to require a complete separation of investigating and prosecuting functions from adjudicating functions." Id. 46. "The Administrative Procedure Act, § 5, establishes a number of formal requirements to be applicable 'In every case of adjudication required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing' . . ." Id. 48. That requirement is not applicable to an investigation as to compliance with an order of the Commission. Cf. United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 648.

[FTC Rules of Practice]

Over the years the Federal Trade Commission has separated these functions and pursuant to § 6 Id. 46, adopted rules of practice and procedure observing the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. See United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U. S. at 644. See Procedure and Rules of Practice for the Federal Trade Commission, published as revised on May 6, 1955, 20 F. R. 3055, effective May 21, 1955, and amended May 14, 1955, 20 F. R. 3303, effective May 21, 1955, Parts 1, 2 and 3, Code of Federal Regulations, Title 16, Commercial Practices, Federal Trade Commission, 15 USCA, following § 45, pocket supplement. Part I, General Procedure—Sub-Part D, Investigations, 1.31 to 1.42, pp. 30-31, Part 2, Rule Making Procedures, Sub-Part D, Rules of Practice and Procedure, § 2.41 at p. 43; Part 3, Rules of Practice for Adjudicative Proceedings; Sub-Parts A to G, pp. 43-56, as to hearings, see Sub-Part E at p. 49, Id. 15 USCA, pocket supplement.

In many respects the practice under the Federal Trade Commission Act was modeled after that of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, see FTC v. Gratz, 1920, 253 U. S. 421, 40 S. Ct. 572, 64 L. Ed. 693, dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Brandeis at 430, citing cases. Section 20 of the latter Act, 49 USCA § 20, Par. 10, provides, ". . . to carry out and give effect to the provisions of this chapter, . . . the commission is authorized to employ special agents or examiners who shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence."

Section 3 of the FTC Act ". . . the commission may, by one or more of its members or by such examiner as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties . . ."

Section 5 was a novelty. See FTC v. Gratz, supra at 432. Section 9 provides that inquiries may be conducted by the commission or duly authorized agent and that members and examiners may administer oaths, examine witnesses and receive evidence. While the distinction between a hearing under § 5 and an investigation under § 6 and § 9 has been maintained over the years "examiner" has on occasion been used to describe the person conducting the § 5 proceeding, see e. g., California Lumbermen's Council v. FTC, 9 Cir. 1940 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,307], 115 F. 2d 178 at 183, but see Arrow-Hart and Hegeman Elec. Co. v. FTC, 1933, 63 F. 2d 108 at 109.[5]

To remove any misunderstanding after passage of the Administrative Procedure Act, the commission changed its rules so that a person conducting an examination would be designated as representative rather than examiner. See and cf. 15 USCA following § 45, Rule 1, Sessions, ". . . or by such examiners . . ." with Id. pocket part § 1.8 ". . . or by such representatives as it may designate . . ." In the 1951 rules, supra, 3(b), investigational hearings are to be held before a "duly designated representative". Similarly in the rules adopted in 1955, supra, § 1.32, § 1.34(b), § 1.35.

The construction of this chapter presents a unique problem in which words derive vitality from the aim and nature of specific legislation. FTC v. Bunte Bros. Inc., 1941 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,098], 312 U. S. 349, 61 S. Ct. 580, 85 L. Ed. 881. In view of the long practice under the Act, see E. Griffiths Hughes Inc. v. FTC, D. C. D. C. 1933 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,021], 63 F. 2d 362, 363; United States v. Public Utility Comm. of Cal., 1953, 345 U. S. 295, 73 S. Ct. 706, 97 L. Ed. 1020; Sterrett v. United States, 1954, 216 F. 2d 659, and a study of the statute itself, see FTC v. Smith, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1929, 34 F. 2d 323 at 325, we find the subpoena properly returnable before a duly designated representative.

[5] The Trial Examiner's report is a part of the record on appeal. See Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulators Co. v. FTC, 7 Cir. 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,881], 191 F. 2d 786, and the rules of Universal Camera Corp. v. NLRB, 1951, 340 U. S. 474, 476, 71 S. Ct. 456, 95 L. Ed. 456.

While a proceeding must be before one who is unbiased and independent, see NLRB v. National Paper Co., 5 Cir. 1954, 216 F. 2d 859 at 868, there is nothing here to indicate any such situation. Cf. United States v. O'Rourke, 8 Cir. 1954, 213 F. 2d 759 at 763.

[Return Day]

We find no merit in defendant's claim of unreasonableness because the subpoena was returnable the day before the corporation and its principal officer were to appear in the District Court for sentence in a criminal proceeding. See and cf. NLRB v. Kingston Trap Rock Corp., supra, 222 F. 2d at 302; FTC v. Cement Institute, 1948 [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,237], 333 U. S. 683 at 692-695, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010. The documents could be produced by another agent, officer or representative.

[Subpoena Served on "Party"]

There is a similar lack of merit in the claim that the subpoena was invalid because it was addressed to a party not to a witness, citing United States v. Minker, 1956, 350 U. S. 179, 76 S. Ct. 281, 100 L. Ed. —, an investigation which was in effect a final step toward possible denaturalization, a proceeding calling for strict construction and in which the government carries a heavy burden. By contrast the present statute is aimed at requiring production of corporate records. The district court is authorized to require the "corporation or other person" to comply. As we have pointed out, supra, the corporation was amenable to service. It could only appear through agents or witnesses. Comparing the comparable powers of subpoena, see United States v. Minker, 3 Cir. 1955, 217 F. 2d 350 at 351, we find no analogy between the two situations.[6]

[Compliance]

In view of the foregoing, we have no alternative, see Bowles v. Baer, supra, 142 F. 2d at 789, but to order compliance.

[¶ 68,674] The Flintkote Company v. Elmer Lysfjord and Walter R. Waldron, doing business as Aabeta Co.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 15,005. Filed March 29, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division. Ernest A. Tolin, District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Refusal to Deal—Knowledge of and Participation in Conspiracy—Sufficiency of Evidence.—In an action charging that a supplier of acoustical tile refused to sell tile to an acoustical tile contractor pursuant to a conspiracy between the supplier and other acoustical tile contractors to restrain and monopolize trade in such tile, a reviewing court held that, assuming that all evidence which was introduced was properly before the jury, it could not hold as a matter of law that there was no substantial evidence from which a trier of fact could not have inferred the existence of the alleged conspiracy and that the supplier knowingly participated in the conspiracy. There was no direct evidence that the supplier had knowledge of or participated in the alleged conspiracy. However, neither knowledge of the conspiracy alleged nor participation therein need be proved by direct evidence. There was evidence from which an inference might have been drawn warranting the belief that the supplier, through acting as a supplier to the contractors, could have acquired knowledge of the conspiracy, and there was evidence which warranted the conclusion that the supplier, with such inferred knowledge, participated in the conspiracy and aided it by refusing to sell to the plaintiff-contractor. If the refusal to sell was not the result of the exercise of ordinary business judgment, but the result of threats made and pressure applied by the members of the known conspiracy to and against the supplier, the act of refusing to sell would constitute knowing participation.

[6] There is no merit in defendant's claim to a copy of an unpublished dissent, said to have been written by a member of the Commission, but never filed, in another proceeding.

Jury instructions which would permit a recovery against a defendant who refuses to deal if there has been a conspiracy, irrespective of whether or not the defendant participated in the conspiracy, and which authorized the return of a verdict against a defendant irrespective of whether or not the defendant ever participated in the conspiracy, were held to be misleading.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355, 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Evidence and Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Defendant Charged with Joining Existing Conspiracy—Order of Proof—Admissibility of Evidence.—In an action in which a supplier of acoustical tile was charged with joining an existing conspiracy, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to establish (1) the prior existence of the conspiracy, who were its supposed members, how they supposedly operated, what their conspiratorial purposes were, and how they brought about their alleged purposes; and (2) the supplier's subsequent connection with the conspiracy before evidence of the acts or statements of the alleged co-conspirators would be admissible against the supplier. However, it was not error for a trial court to admit statements of co-conspirators which were made in furtherance of the conspiracy before the conspiracy itself was established, where such statements were admitted subject to a motion to strike if the conspiracy was not subsequently established.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Evidence and Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Admissibility of Evidence—Declarations of Co-conspirator and Defendant's Employees.—A trial court erred in permitting the introduction of hearsay evidence, concerning a conversation between the plaintiffs and an employee of the defendant, without any foundation showing the extent and scope of the authority resting in the employee, if any, to act for and bind the defendant, and in refusing to grant the defendant's motion to strike such evidence. The statements of the employee could not be admitted either as an admission of a party's authorized agent or as a statement of a co-conspirator. The admission of the statements constituted prejudicial error in view of the importance of the statements to the establishment of the plaintiff's case. As to statements made by an alleged co-conspirator, it was held that if the plaintiff had made a prima facie showing that there was a conspiracy and that the defendant had joined the conspiracy, then statements made by a co-conspirator, if made during the existence of the conspiracy and in the execution of the common design, were admissible against all of the conspirators. Since the conspiracy was not established by admissible evidence and since the statements were made after the claimed termination of the conspiracy, the statements were inadmissible.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355, 2005.380.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable—Loss of Profits, Business Expenses, and Additional Expense of Purchasing Product.—In an action charging that a supplier of acoustical tile refused to sell to the plaintiffs pursuant to an unlawful conspiracy, a jury verdict awarding the plaintiffs damages for loss of profits was held not to be supported by the evidence. "Where, as here, the sole evidence as to loss of profits is the testimony of the plaintiffs, both inexperienced in business operations, stating what they had expected to make during the infancy of a newly-created enterprise based on inaccurate computations of the most money they had made working as salesmen for an established firm in years preceding those in question, with no attempt having been made to establish a comparison as to either the businesses or the years the jury verdict predicated on such evidence cannot stand." In seeking damages for loss of profits, a plaintiff is required to establish with reasonable probability the existence of some causal connection between the defendant's wrongful act and some loss of anticipated revenue. The fact of injury must first be shown before the jury is allowed to estimate the amount of damage. The plaintiffs, in the instant action, could not introduce evidence concerning their business or the business of a predecessor before the conspiracy arose, and they failed to introduce business records of comparative but unrestrained businesses during the particular period in question. However, evidence supported awards for out-of-pocket expenses incurred in establishing a business and for out-of-pocket expenses resulting from the increased cost of acoustical tile caused by the plaintiffs' inability to purchase their supplies from the defendant.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011, 9011.325.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable —Damage Period.—In an action in which a supplier of acoustical tile was charged with refusing to sell to the plaintiffs pursuant to an unlawful conspiracy, the trial court erroneously instructed the jury that it could award damages for injuries incurred up to the date the trial of the action began. As a general rule, a plaintiff is entitled to recover all damages for injuries proximately caused by the wrongful acts committed prior to the filing of the action, and, conversely, a plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for injuries resulting from wrongful acts committed subsequent to the filing of the action. The time of the wrongful act controls the measure of damages. Therefore, it is necessary to ascertain whether the plaintiffs' injuries were caused by a prior act or whether they are attributable to protracted conduct and repetitive acts which continued beyond the date the action was filed. In the instant action, the cause of action is founded on an act of a continuing nature. The express refusal to deal constituted no more than a refusal to deal at that time; therefore, the plaintiffs' injuries were not caused just by the announced refusal to deal but rather resulted from the explicit refusal coupled with the implied persistence in the announced course of conduct. Therefore, the plaintiffs could not recover for injuries incurred up to the date of trial. The proper procedure to be followed in seeking recovery for injuries caused by acts occurring after the filing of the action is to file a separate suit or a supplemental action or, as the administration of justice dictates upon the remand of the instant case, by a supplemental complaint.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.115.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable —Deductibility of Settlement with Joint Tortfeasors.—Where, prior to the trial of a treble damage action charging a conspiracy, the plaintiffs withdrew their action against certain of the alleged co-conspirators in consideration of the sum of $20,000, and expressly reserved their rights against one of the alleged conspirators, the amount of $20,000 should be deducted from a $150,000 treble damage judgment entered against the conspirator found guilty by a jury and should not be deducted from the jury's verdict of $50,000 before being trebled. Co-conspirators are jointly and severally liable, and the non-compensatory share of an award under the antitrust laws is akin to an award for punitive damages. In the case of punitive damages, joint tortfeasors are liable for the entire amount, not merely for the compensatory part. The collective liability for the alleged conspiracy was $150,000, and if no error was committed, this is the amount which the plaintiffs should receive. The plaintiffs having already received $20,000, it was proper to deduct that sum from the trebled amount. Any other method would result in the plaintiffs receiving less than the whole to which they were entitled under the antitrust laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.

For the appellant: Harold A. Black; G. Richard Doty; McCutchen, Black, Harnagel and Greene, Los Angeles, Cal.

For the appellees: Alfred C. Ackerson, Los Angeles, Cal.

Before: STEPHENS, BARNES and HAMLEY, Circuit Judges.

[Complaint]

BARNES, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Appellees as plaintiffs on July 21, 1952, filed a complaint under the Sherman Antitrust Act[1] against the Acoustical Contractors Association of Southern California, Inc., and certain members thereof, (six individuals, and eight corporations, individuals, or partnerships doing business under a fictitious firm name). The Flintkote Company and four John Does were also joined as defendants. The essential interstate commerce was alleged to have been in acoustical tile.

[1] Title 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, et seq. (Sec. 1, 2 and 7 of Sherman Act. Sec. 4, 5, 12 and 16 of Clayton Act.) 26 Stat. 209; 50 Stat. 693.

To understand this case, it is first necessary to look at the pleadings. All defendants, other than Flintkote, were charged with violating the law in the following particulars:

> "For some time prior to the date of the filing of this complaint and continuously since prior to January 1, 1951, the defendants herein, with the exception of Flintkote, well-knowing all of the foregoing facts have been engaged in a combination and conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in acoustical tile in violation of . . ."

the Sherman Act. The general plan and purpose was:

> "1. To maintain and adhere to non-competitive prices . . .
>
> "2. To refrain from competing with each other . . .
>
> "3. To allocate the sale and installation of acoustical tile among members of the defendant, The Association, . . .
>
> "4. To exclude non-member acoustical tile contractors from their legal right to compete in the purchase, sale, and installation of acoustical tile in Los Angeles and surrounding areas by use of the following means among others:
>
> "(a) By boycotting, threatening to boycott, and otherwise coercing manufacturers . . .
>
> "(b) By concertedly entering inordinately low bids for jobs . . ." [Tr. 10, 11]

It was then alleged that plaintiff entered into an agreement shortly prior to January 1, 1952, to buy from Flintkote "a continuous supply of a complete line of acoustical tile;" and that:

> "In or about March 1952, and solely because of the active and successful competition of plaintiffs with members of the defendant, The Association, and the effect of such competition on the illegal, non-competitive price fixing policies and activities of said members, the defendant Flintkote was induced to terminate its agreement to supply plaintiffs with acoustical tile products by reason and because of the concerted action and coercion exerted upon said defendant by members of the defendant, The Association, in the form of threats to boycott Flintkote products in the Los Angeles area and elsewhere in the State of California by said defendants in the event Flintkote continued supplying said products to plaintiffs." [Tr. 13, 14]

A First Amended Complaint was lodged January 28, 1953, and filed March 23, 1953, by appellees. Plaintiffs' theory of their case was changed to directly charge the defendant Flintkote Company, with agreeing to sell acoustical tile to plaintiffs in the latter part of 1951, and that "all defendants" from an unknown date "prior to the year 1951, and continuously thereafter to date of filing the complaint" conspired to restrain and have restrained trade and commerce, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Thus, the amended complaint charges Flintkote with being a member of the conspiracy.

In their original complaint, plaintiffs asked for $75,000 damages; that any award be trebled, for costs of suit and attorney's fees; and that defendants be enjoined from continuing any of the alleged unlawful practices.

In their amended complaint, plaintiffs asked for $100,000 damages, without any prayer for trebling the same; for costs of suit and attorney's fees; that defendants be enjoined from continuing any of the alleged unlawful practices; that the defendant Flintkote be enjoined from any agreement with other defendants to refuse to sell to plaintiffs, or in any way agreeing with other defendants, to perpetuate or assist in perpetuating the alleged conspiracies, their purposes or objects; and that Flintkote, finally, be required to > ". . . continue said contract and agreement so long as there exists no reason under sound business principles and practices for terminating the same."

[Answer]

Flintkote, answering the Amended Complaint, asserted with care and verbosity common to pleadings, a general denial; alleged it had not participated in any conspiracy in restraint of trade, or to create or maintain a monopoly; set forth that it sold tile to three of the defendant's contractors, and had at times sold to three others and to plaintiffs; admitted several sales of acoustical tile to plaintiffs; alleged it made no contract with plaintiffs of any kind, nor any contract to supply plaintiffs, either on any continuing basis, or any basis, or at all.

[Defense]

As a first and separate defense, Flintkote alleged that it sold one carload lot to plaintiffs for resale in the San Bernardino-Riverside area, (as distinguished from the Los Angeles area); that said sale was conditioned upon an understanding that plaintiffs would use the tile so sold in the San Bernardino-Riverside area, and not engage in the contracting business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area; that when plaintiffs breached said condition of sale, and contracted for installations in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, the defendant Flintkote Company refused to sell plaintiffs further tile.

[Partial Settlement]

This anwser was filed on June 26, 1953. On July 31, a stipulation and order was entered dismissing the cause of action as to all named defendants except Flintkote. On May 4, 1955, the jury trial commenced. At the start of the trial, it was brought to the court's attention that $20,000 had been paid to the plaintiffs in exchange for a covenant not to sue, running in favor of all defendants except Flintkote. It was stipulated that the court could advise the jury

> "that a settlement of the action had been made as between the plaintiff and all defendants except the defendant Flintkote, but the Court shall not state the monetary consideration, keeping that away from the attention of the jury."

Because of this settlement, some of the jury instructions requested by plaintiffs and filed by them on April 29, 1955, in their reference to defendants, were not accurate. Before the jury was empanelled, counsel for defendant called to the court's and opposing counsel's attention, "that it would be almost imperative that plaintiffs' instructions be recast," [Tr. 155] "because in some instances we even have a situation where you tell the jury that they could find against some but not all the defendants . . ."

[Trial]

It was further agreed by court and counsel, before trial, that because there were both legal and equitable issues in the case, the "first were to be handled by the jury and the latter by the judge." [Tr. 158 to 161, incl.] The record does not disclose that any action, affirmative or negative, was taken on the demand for injunctive relief.

[Trial Court Judgment]

Flintkote Company now appeals from a judgment against it, based on a jury verdict for $50,000, trebled by the court to $150,000, plus $25,000 attorney's fees, plus $165.70 costs, minus the $20,000 received by plaintiff-appellees from certain original parties defendant other than appellant, or a total judgment of $155,165.70.

[Grounds for Reversal]

Appellant urges fifteen grounds for reversal.

We believe we can best discuss these fifteen alleged errors by grouping them as follows:

First: The sufficiency of the evidence, (particularly as to knowledge by the defendant of the conspiracy, and its participation therein) to support a verdict of violation of the Antitrust Laws.

Second: Alleged errors in admission of evidence.

Third: Alleged errors in instructions, other than damages.

Fourth: Alleged error in refusing to grant a new trial, in instructions respecting damages, in the fixing of attorney's fees, and in the method of crediting the $20,000 payment.

FIRST: THE SUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE

[Knowledge and Participation]

Was there any substantial evidence properly before the jury from which it could reasonably draw the conclusion on an issue of fact, that defendant Flintkote had violated the Antitrust Laws?

Defendant maintained its refusal to deal with plaintiff was a legitimate business decision; that it had no part in the alleged conspiracy among the original "Association defendants" to restrain trade. Hence it is urged, the Flintkote refusal to sell cannot be participation in a conspiracy, and Flintkote having no knowledge that such a conspiracy existed, could much less have knowingly participated therein.

"The requirement is dual," says appellant, "It requires both knowledge and participation, and neither is sufficient without the other," relying on United States v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205, 61 S. Ct. 204 (1910), where the court said at page 210:

> "The gist of the offense of conspiracy . . . is agreement among the conspirators to commit an offense attended by an act of one or more of the conspirators to effect the object of the conspiracy. [Citing cases] Those having no knowledge of the conspiracy are not conspirators, [citing cases]; and one who without more furnishes supplies to an illicit distiller is not guilty of conspiracy even though his sale may have furthered the object of a conspiracy to which the distiller was a party but of which the supplier had no knowledge."; and on Wenigor v. United States, 47 F. 2d 692 at 693 (9 Cir.) where this Court said:

> "The failure of a person to prevent the carrying out of a conspiracy, even though he has the power so to do, will not make him guilty of the offense without further proof that he has in some affirmative way consented to be a party thereto. Neither will the commission of an overt act, though unlawful in itself, be enough to show that the actor was a party to the conspiracy. The law requires proof of the common and unlawful design and the knowing participation therein of the persons charged as conspirators before a conviction is justified."

[Direct Evidence]

We should first recognize that the cases cited by appellant correctly state the law. We must also agree that on the question of Flintkote's knowledge as to whether the admitted conspiracy did or did not exist, all direct evidence is that the officers and employees of Flintkote did not know. That is the unvarying testimony of all defendant's employees.

[Circumstantial Evidence]

But the problem is not that simply solved. Neither knowledge of the conspiracy alleged, nor participation therein, need be proved by direct evidence, even in criminal prosecutions where the rule of proof is more strict than in civil conspiracy cases, United States v. Univis Lens Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,571], 66 [88] Fed. Supp. 809, 813. As noted by the Supreme Court in Paoli v. United States, 352 U. S. 232, 25 L. W. 4077, 4078, note 4, decided January 14, 1957,

> "Participation in a criminal conspiracy may be shown by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. See, e.g., Blumenthal v. United States, 332 U. S. 539, 557; Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 80; Direct Sales Co. v. United States, 319 U. S. 703; United States v. Manton, 107 F. 2d 834, 839."

It is likewise true that:

> "A conviction resting solely upon circumstantial evidence is not an innovation. It is, we think, well established that the proof and evidence in an anti-trust conspiracy case is, in most cases, circumstantial. Proof of a formal agreement is unnecessary, and were the law otherwise such conspiracies would flourish; profit, rather than punishment, would be the reward. See American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 6 Cir., 147 F. 2d 93, affirmed 328 U. S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575." [C-O. Two Fire Equipment Co. v. United States, 9 Cir. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,290] 197 F. 2d 489 at 494.]

And see cases cited: Wharton's Criminal Evidence, § 179, p. 354, Note 20. Here the evidence before the jury showed the existence and operation of an allocation arrangement, by which acoustical jobs were assigned in rough rotation to one or another of the acoustical contractors who were members of the Acoustical Contractor's Association. There was evidence that bidders were told what to bid, not based upon what the cost of the job was, but to enable a certain contractor to get the job. Considerable time was spent in introducing and interpreting the contractor's "take off sheets," [1a] and what they meant to the workings of the conspiracy. Complimentary bidding by members of the group, other than the one designated to get the job, was engaged in. In fact, both plaintiffs had at one time worked for an employer engaged in such a conspiracy, and plaintiff Lysfjord had protested to his employer his inability to com- pete for installation jobs because of such conspiracy. There was no direct evidence that Flintkote, as a seller of tile and not an installer, participated directly in that original conspiracy between the dealers, but there was evidence from which an inference might have been drawn by the trier of fact warranting the belief that the defendant Flintkote, through acting as supplier to the conspirators on some of the jobs, could have acquired knowledge of the conspiracy; and there was evidence which warranted the conclusion that Flintkote, with such inferred knowledge, participated in the conspiracy, and aided it, by its refusal to sell to plaintiffs. If that refusal was not the result of the exercise of ordinary business judgment, but the result of threats made and pressure applied by members of the known conspiracy to and against Flintkote, the act of refusing to sell would constitute knowing participation. Because one is coerced by economic threats to participate in or aid and abet an illegal scheme does not excuse the actor.[2]

[1a] "Take off sheets" may be defined in the acoustical tile trade as referring to written estimates of the amount of acoustical tile required for a particular project. The contractor with the lowest figure on his take-off sheet would be dropped from the bidding list and the contractor with the next lowest estimate would be instructed to take the job. [Tr. 304, 494].

[Substantial Evidence]

There was before the jury substantial inferential evidence that Flintkote had knowledge of the conspiracy, and joined it and had acted in furtherance of it, when we view the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs. The verdict of a jury will be sustained if there is substantial evidence, properly before the jury, to support it. Glasser v. United States, (1942) 315 U. S. 60, 69; Woodard Laboratories v. United States, 9 Cir., 198 F. 2d 995; Las Vegas Merchants Plumbers v. United States, 9 Cir. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,673], 210 F. 2d 732, 742.

[Refusal to Deal]

Appellant, relying primarily on Johnson v. J. H. Yost Lumber Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,088], 117 F. 2d 53, 61-2, urges that the facts of threats (assuming there were threats), will not support an inference of knowledge of a conspiracy. Such a broad statement is too general and sweeping. Proof of the fact of threats might infer knowledge, or it might not, depending on the nature of the threats, their number, their frequency, and more directly and importantly, their content and what they disclosed, directly or by inference, to the defendant Flintkote, viewed in the then existing factual situation under which they were made and received.

Where there has been proof (a) that a conspiring group of tile dealers disclosed to a supplier, directly or by inference, an accomplished unlawful purpose and intent to boycott non-participating dealers, (and hence disclosed the existence of a conspiracy) and (b) thereafter one or more dealers had threatened the supplier on numerous occasions that they intended jointly and severally to refuse to buy from the supplier if the supplier continued to sell acoustical title to plaintiffs, and (c) if the supplier, having been selling to non-conspirators, thereafter refused to sell to non-conspiring dealers because of the threats, it could never be maintained, as a matter of law, that such decision not to sell was a lawful exercise of the supplier's business judgment.

It is true that one engaged in private enterprise may select his own customers, and in the absence of an illegal agreement, may sell or refuse to sell to a customer for good cause, or for no cause whatever. But it is not for the seller to finally decide that it was for a good business reason, or no reason, that he refused to deal. That decision, placed in its proper perspective of circumstances and facts known to the seller, must be judged by the trier of facts, to determine if it was an innocent and lawful exercise of the seller's private right, or an act which showed knowing participation in an unlawful conspiracy.

Were it otherwise, there could never be a civil judgment nor any criminal conviction against any manufacturer of products flowing in interstate commerce. He could merely state—"despite my knowledge of a conspiracy which existed, which I knew to be unlawful, I'm innocent and cannot be held liable because I say I exercised my business judgment, and I can refuse to sell to anyone, and that is lawful, no matter what the circumstances may be."

Our conclusion in this matter does no violence to the Yost case. There the court says:

> "From the mere fact of refusing to sell to plaintiffs, there can therefore arise no

[2] United States v. Paramount Pictures, et al. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470], 66 Fed. Supp. 323, 352; approved [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 161, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260.

inference of an unlawful agreement, because one may lawfully select his own customers. (cases cited) There must be substantial evidence furnishing some basis from which the alleged fact of such an agreement may reasonably be inferred. A fraudulent conspiracy may be shown by circumstantial evidence, but the facts and circumstances relied upon must attain the dignity of substantial evidence and not be such as merely to create a suspicion. Here, it appears that a number of these defendants had already refused to sell the plaintiffs even before the date of the alleged conspiracy. Others thought it bad business to sell them, and as plaintiffs themselves alleged, these defendants were coerced. Where there were two dealers in the same product at the same city, it was not thought good business to sell to both plaintiffs and the other dealer. In most instances, the other dealer had been handling the products before the arrival of plaintiffs. In some cases, plaintiffs had invaded the trade territory of established dealers handling products of these suppliers, and that was at least distasteful to these defendants and there seemed to have been ample reason of a business character for the suppliers to refuse to sell to plaintiffs." (Italics added.)

[Johnson v. J. H. Yost Lumber Co., supra, p. 61.]

The Yost case, relying on the Beech-Nut case (257 U. S. 441) specifically refers to facts which "went beyond the simple refusal to sell."

The rule of freedom of sale to anyone or no one is not absolute. Nor can it be tested in a vacuum. The Colgate case (250 U. S. 300),

"was not intended to give blanket sanction for individual discretion in refusal to deal. The Court soon determined that its holding did not extend to protect a course of dealing which inferentially spelled out the factor of agreement that Colgate lacked. More important, the Court's landmark decision in Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co. places any refusal to deal in its business perspective and then against the full facts scrutinizes all pertinent antitrust prohibitions the trade pattern suggests.

"Viewed in the larger business setting, even individually conceived refusals to deal may become an integral element in a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act . . . Also, Section 2 may forbid refusals to deal for monopolistic ends.

(Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359 (1927).)" [Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to study the Antitrust Laws, March 21, 1955.] [3]

[Jury Question]

The decisions have placed and evaluated refusals to deal in the business setting in which they appear. While refusals to deal in themselves are legally protected, they are examined in their market context. Only thorough-going factual inquiry into the surrounding business circumstances can characterize a refusal to deal as part of a restrictive course of conduct incompatible with antitrust objectives. If we assume, therefore, that all evidence which was introduced was properly before the jury, we cannot hold as a matter of law that there was no substantial evidence from which a trier of fact could not have inferred the existence of a conspiracy, and that the defendant Flintkote knowingly participated therein. Permitting this issue to go to the jury was not error.

SECOND: ALLEGED ERRORS IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Throughout the foregoing consideration of the first problem here presented, we have assumed all evidence before the jury was properly admitted. It is for this reason that the next point appellant raises—that evidence was erroneously admitted—must be considered most carefully. In doing so, we now reach appellant's point 2, (introduction against Flintkote of evidence of the conspiracy between the contractors); point 3, (the Waldron testimony respecting Ragland's alleged statements of alleged pressure by the conspiring dealers on Flintkote); and point 4, (the Lysfjord testimony respecting Ragland's alleged same statements). At this same time, we also will consider Krause's alleged telephone conversation with Lysfjord.

[3] It is with reluctance that the writer of this opinion makes reference to published statements for which he was, to a greater or lesser degree, partially responsible. It is comparable, but not parallel, to a judge citing a Law Review Article he had previously written, whether while on or off the bench. Yet such action has most respectable precedent and authority. For a most recent illustration see dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in Rogers v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 352 U. S. 447, 491, decided February 25, 1957. Upon occasion jurists may even revise their extra-judicial views. McGrath v. Kristensen, 340 U. S. 162, 176 (concurring opinion).

A. Introduction as Against the Sole Defendant, Flintkote, of the Facts Relating to the Alleged Conspiracy Between the Acoustical Contractors.

[Order of Proof]

We must first consider the unique factual situation in this case. The acoustical contractors originally sued had been paid, before trial, for a Covenant Not to Sue Further. This was accompanied by a dismissal. The gravamen of the amended complaint was that Flintkote had joined in an already existing conspiracy. It was therefore incumbent on plaintiffs (1) to establish the prior existence of the conspiracy; who were its supposed members; how they supposedly operated; what their conspiratorial purpose was; and how they brought about their alleged purposes; and (2) Flintkote's subsequent connection with it, before evidence of the acts or statements of alleged co-conspirators would be admissible against the defendant. Two different though not wholly unrelated problems were thus raised. One was the necessity of making a prima facie showing of Flintkote's knowing participation in the alleged conspiracy, and the other was the order of proof in which the evidence thereof would be introduced. We turn to the latter point first.

The rules relating to proof of a civil conspiracy take us into one of the most difficult areas of today's law. As Mr. Justice Jackson said, in his concurrence in the leading case of Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U. S. 440, at 452:

"When the trial starts, the accused feels the full impact of the conspiracy strategy. Strictly, the prosecution should first establish prima facie the conspiracy and identify the conspirators, after which evidence of acts and declarations of each in the course of the execution are admissible against all. But the order of proof in so sprawling a charge is difficult for a judge to control. As a practical matter, the accused often is confronted with a hodge-podge of acts and statements by others which he may never have authorized or intended, or even known about, but which help to persuade the jury of existence of the conspiracy itself. In other words, a conspiracy often is proved by evidence that is admissible only upon assumption that conspiracy existed." (Italics added.)[4]

[Discretion of Trial Court]

We are in an area of evidentiary law where much is left to the discretion of the trial judge. The trial court has a wide discretion in the admission of evidence which even remotely tends to establish conspiracy. Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 592, 593; Devoe v. United States, 8 Cir., 103 F. 2d 584, cert. den. 308 U. S. 571; Nee v. United States, 3 Cir., 267 Fed. 84, 87; United States v. Sebo, 7 Cir., 101 F. 2d 889, 891.

The trial court has absolute judicial discretion as to the order of proof. United States v. Manton, 2 Cir., 107 F. 2d 834; United States v. Newman, 9 Cir., 156 F. 2d 8. If he believes it better to allow evidence to be introduced, subject to its being connected up at a later time, that is his prerogative and such rulings are not error.

That procedure is what counsel for plaintiff proposed to follow in this case, when he preliminarily offered proof of conspiracy between the acoustical contractors before he had introduced any proof of the defendant Flintkote's participation therein.[5]

The court specifically deferred and reserved a final ruling on the admissibility of this evidence until after the plaintiffs' case was fully in; and advised counsel for the [4] Mr. Justice Jackson, because speaking in a criminal case, refers to the accused defendant. His conclusions are every bit as applicable to a defendant charged with an antitrust violation in a civil private treble damage action.

[5] "Mr. Ackerson: . . . but you can always introduce evidence as to purpose and design."

"The Court: Are you contending that the yielding to pressure makes the one who yields a party to the conspiracy?"

"Mr. Ackerson: If he knows the illegal design, and I can prove it."

"The Court: And is that going to be your evidence of connection of this defendant to the conspiracy?"

"Mr. Ackerson: Yes, that plus other knowledge, your Honor, that they knew the design."

"The Court: What other knowledge are you going to bring home to this particular defendant? And is that going to be your evidence of connection of this defendant to the conspiracy?"

"Mr. Ackerson: Yes, that plus other knowledge, your Honor, that they knew the design."

"The Court: What other knowledge are you going to bring home to this particular defendant?"

"Mr. Ackerson: Well, this defendant, the knowledge that I have already stated, that this defendant knew the setup, he knew the effect of the setup, and when he was asked to help and obeyed and, I say, joined the setup by eliminating the only competition in the field, unless he can show that he didn't know anything about it, that he wasn't helping these contractors at all, it is my theory that he joined the conspiracy.

"The Court: The court finds that the complexities of the case now on trial are such, the involvement of the alleged parties to the alleged defendant his rights to move to exclude the entire line of testimony were protected.

It was not error for the court initially to invoke this "rule of convenience," as it was denominated in the courtroom. The court had very carefully and properly brought home to counsel for the plaintiffs the necessity of proving by competent evidence that Flintkote "yielded to the combine, and became a member of it." [Tr. 294]

Was competent independent evidence ever introduced?

B. The Plaintiff's Testimony as to Statements of Others.

This brings us to a consideration of the alleged errors in admitting the testimony of Waldron and Lysfjord, as to the alleged statements of Ragland and others.

The only evidence that plaintiffs offered to prove defendant's "yielding," and the joining by Flintkote of the conspiracy, other than the act itself of refusing to sell, was the respective testimony of Waldron and Lysfjord relating to (a) alleged admissions of Baymiller; and (b) alleged admissions of Ragland; and (c) the testimony of Lysfjord with respect to a telephone conversation directly with Krause. These alleged statements or admissions can be divided into three conversations:

Conversation Number 1 was a hearsay statement largely made up by conclusions, by Ragland to Waldron and Lysfjord on or about February 1, 1952, at the Atlantic Avenue office of Aabeta Company covering (a) what Krause allegedly told Ragland on a previous date at the Flintkote office;[6] conspiracy is such, that it is necessary to invoke the rule of convenience, as you have referred to it, Mr. Black, and to allow the evidence of acts and declarations of other alleged conspirators to be admitted into evidence, subject to a motion to strike.

"I do not know just what the outcome will be when a motion is made to dismiss at the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case, which I assume will be, on the question of joining a conspiracy because of compulsion, if the compulsion is shown to be in the form of pressure from the Association, pressure from other vendors. That would be evidence, I take it, circumstantial evidence, or offered as circumstantial evidence, of the joining of a conspiracy, but you are going to have to have enough, Mr. Ackerson, that the reasonable inference to be drawn from all the facts is that it was a yielding to the combine and becoming a member of it, otherwise we will have to, in the language of the street, throw your case out."

"Mr. Ackerson: I realize that."

"The Court: But for the present we will follow the rule of convenience and admit the testimony."

[Tr. 293, et seq.]

"The Court: As a general principle of conspiracy law, every person who is a co-conspirator of course is presumed—that is, every person who is alleged to be a co-conspirator with the person on trial as conspirators, is deemed to be their agent once he is shown to be a member of the conspiracy, and statements which are made in furtherance of the conspiracy may be admitted.

"I think the courts here have generally been admitting statements and doing so subject to a motion to strike if it does not appear that there develops a jury question as to whether there was a conspiracy, as to whether the person who is on trial and the persons whose statements have been received, have been connected to it."

"Mr. Ackerson: I think that is right."

"The Court: Unless you have some other way you would like to handle it, I am disposed to adopt that as a policy of this case, as the other judges have done in the cases tried before them, and entertain a motion to strike if the connection is not provided by sufficient evidence to create a jury question."

"Mr. Ackerson: I don't know of any other way you can try a case like this, your Honor."

"Mr. Black: Your Honor please, it may be we are at that point where we should address ourselves to your Honor in the absence of the jury, because I think that we would like to be heard some what extensively on that proposition."

[Tr. 259, 260]

"The Court: Objection overruled. I will not have so many of these but what I can strike them, if it turns out to be illegal after hearing your argument, and I will hear you fully at the time the jury takes its morning recess."

"Mr. Black: Thank you."

"Mr. Ackerson: I am about through with this particular conversation. I think this is the last such conversation."

"Q. (By Mr. Ackerson): Will you relate that conversation with Mr. Ragland?

* * * [Conversation related] * * *

"Mr. Black: Just a moment. I wish the record to show we move to strike this answer in pursuance of our objection."

"The Court: Ruling will be reserved until after I hear your argument." [Tr. 262, 263]

[6] Mr. Waldron: "Mr. Ragland said that he (Krause) came to their office—or his office and his desk, and got so abusive that he had to tell him that he would have to leave him and when he could be more rational he would return.

"Now, he was telling him that they couldn't stand for us the Aabeta Co., selling accoustical tile." [Tr. 262, 263.]

"Q. [Asked of Mr. Lysfjord]: What about any statement to Mr. Ragland by Mr. Gustave Krause?"

"A. I don't recall that he said any more at that time. However, there was another meeting where Mr. Gustave Krause did state very violently what he thought of us going into business."

"Q. Who told you that?"

"Mr. Black: That is objected to."

"Mr. Ackerson: Yes, you may strike that."

* * *

(b) what Howard had "complained" to someone about, at or about that date, perhaps in the hearing of Ragland, at the Flintkote office;[7] (c) about conversations occurring at an alleged meeting of certain of the conspirators, (Krause, Howard, Newport and Lewis) wherein "boycott" was threatened by Mr. Newport, and objections were voiced by others.[8]

"Q. (By Mr. Ackerson): Did Mr. Ragland relate this conversation to you by Mr. Krause?"

"A. Yes, sir."

"Q. Will you state what Mr. Ragland told you, what he said as nearly as you can in substance?"

"Mr. Black: It will be understood of course that our objection runs to all of this?"

"The Court: Are you speaking to the objection you urged last week?"

"Mr. Black: Yes, the objection that it is pure hearsay, that there is no authority in the agent to narrate past events."

* * *

"Mr. Ackerson: Will you read the question, Mr. Reporter?"

(The question referred to was read by the reporter as follows: "Q. Will you state what Mr. Ragland told you, what he said as nearly as you can in substance?")

"Mr. Ackerson: That is concerning Ragland's conversation with Mr. Krause."

"The Witness: Mr. Ragland told me that Mr. Krause came into the office and talked—"

"Q. (By Mr. Ackerson): Into the Flintkote office?"

"A. Into the Flintkote office, and talked so loudly to Mr. Ragland and pounded on the desk a little bit that Mr. Ragland got up and left and told Mr. Krause that if he couldn't talk as a gentleman he didn't want to talk to him any more, and until such time as he could behave as a gentleman, that he, Ragland, would come back and talk with him."

"Q. Did Mr. Ragland say what Mr. Krause was talking about?"

"A. He was objecting very strenuously to the aabeta company being in business."

"The Court: You cannot say he was objecting. That is a conclusion. You have to tell us what was said and then the jury can decide whether he objected to something or applauded, or something in between."

"The Witness: Well, I don't know how else to say it because that was what he was doing."

"Mr. Black: You weren't there."

"The Court: That is what he was doing? You tell us what he said. Of course you cannot remember it word for word, but you can say in substance he said A, B, C, D, and so forth, and go ahead and relate the substance of the conversations. Then it will be up to the jury to determine whether that was an objection or not."

"The Witness: I don't know quite how to answer that."

"Q. (By Mr. Ackerson): Did Mr. Ragland—are you relating Mr. Ragland's words to you as far as the word 'objection' goes, or did Mr. Ragland say Mr. Krause used other words?"

"A. He used the word 'objected.' He said, 'I object very much to the aabeta company being in business, in competition with us, using the same type of tile.' That is why I keep saying 'objected.' That is the word he used."

"The Court: If that it the word he used, that is all right. I thought you were using a word which you thought his words added up to."

"The Witness: Oh, no. Mr. Krause very definitely said those words, as I recall what Mr. Ragland told me, that he objected very strenuously to the aabeta company. He used the words 'I object to the aabeta company being in business here in the Los Angeles area, using the same type of acoustical tile that we are a dealer for.'

"And that is the time when Mr. Ragland decided to leave, not wanting to listen to the loud conversation, and he told me it was loud. That is not my assumption. He said he didn't like it, so he left. He left for about 10 minutes as I understand it—or I was told rather—and then went back and talked further with Mr. Krause. What they talked further about, I do not know." [Tr. 475 to 480, incl.]

[7] Mr. Waldon: "Yes, he (Mr. Ragland) said a Mr. R. E. Howard was down there complaining also."

"Q. (By Mr. Ackerson): And what did he say that Mr. Howard said, if anything?"

"A. I don't know any exact words, except he mentioned that they were trying their best to force an issue to stop our operations." [Tr. 269, 270.]

[8] Mr. Lysfjord: "Well, Mr. Ragland came into the office, met me at the office, and mentioned that in his words, things were getting a little bit hot. He said that pressure that you were talking about is starting to show up. The competitors of yours in the field are beginning to pick up your figures and the fact that you are bidding against them around in this general area.

"The manager of Howard Company, Mr. Howard, and Mr. Gustave Krause from Coast Insulating, a Sidney Lewis of Flintkote Company—I believe one of the principals there—and Mr. Newport, all had a meeting."

"Q. Who is Mr. Newport?"

"A. He is a principal of Coast Insulating. All of these are Flintkote dealers, incidentally."

"The Court: Are you telling this as a conversation?"

"The Witness: I am saying what Mr. Ragland told me."

"The Court: Very well."

"The Witness: That they had this meeting objecting very strenuously to the fact that we were in business, the aabeta company was in business.

"One of the very strongest statements was from Mr. Newport, saying that he would boycott, I believe the word was, all of Flintkote's materials and see that it wasn't used in the area, and he was willing to spend $40,000 or $50,000 to do it." [Tr. 474, 475.]

"Q. (By Mr. Ackerson): Did Mr. Ragland state the conversation of Mr. R. E. Howard on this occasion?"

"A. Only that he objected very violently. I don't recall the exact words." [Tr. 476.]

Conversation Number 2 was a portion of the conversation allegedly occurring on February 19, 1952, between Ragland, Baymiller, Thompson, Lysfjord and Waldron, when the plaintiffs were advised of Flintkote's refusal to sell further.[9]

Conversation Number 3 was an alleged telephone call between Krause and Lysfjord occurring "after the severance" [Tr. 267], of relations between Flintkote and the plaintiffs, and after the date the conspiracy was found by the court to have ended.[10] Upon motion of defendant, this conversation was struck out [Tr. 268], but after argument, the ruling was "recalled," apparently to be re-considered at the end of plaintiffs' case, when all defendants' motions to strike were denied.[11]

It is difficult to understand from the record precisely the theory upon which these various conversations were held admissible. At times both court and counsel talk of "res gestae," and at other times of "admissions," sometimes referring to "overt acts in furtherance of a conspiracy," at other times to the theory of "agency."

These three conversations had by plaintiffs involve individuals in two distinguishable categories—Ragland, and Baymiller, employees of the defendant Flintkote; and Krause, an alleged "officer, director and managing director of Coast Insulating Products,[12] a California corporation,"[13] one of the dismissed defendants at time of the trial.

The status of the various declarants poses distinct issues as to the admissibility of each of their statements. Requisite to the admission of incriminating statements attributed to Krause, Newport, and Ragland (in an alleged capacity other than as an agent of defendant) is a prima facie showing of Flintkote's participation in the conspiracy by competent evidence apart from the alleged statements. On the other hand, no such foundation need be laid for the alleged admissions of Baymiller and Ragland, if they were acting as agents within the scope of their employment for the defendant company.

[Hearsay Rule]

We start with the major premise that all such statements were hearsay. In fact, when Waldron or Lysfjord told the jury what Ragland said Krause had told him, we have hearsay placed upon hearsay; and when the plaintiffs testified that Ragland told them what Krause or Newport or Howard had said at a meeting, concerning which there had been no proper foundation laid as to whether Ragland was present, we have hearsay placed upon hearsay placed upon hearsay.

It is true that there are so many exceptions to the hearsay rule that much of the evidence which decides law suits is made up of hearsay evidence. But this does not eliminate the hearsay rule as a vital and important rule of evidence, nor permit us, or the lower court, to open wide the floodgates to any evidence, in total disregard of the rule.

One of the very best reasons for the hearsay objection is to prevent the presentation of self-serving statements.[14] The instant case is a perfect example of the reason and of the necessity for the rule. Without in any way passing upon or inferring as to the credibility of witnesses who testified, we here have two of the

---

[9] "Mr. Waldron: . . . I asked Mr. Baymiller if they wouldn't hold up, or why they didn't hold up, to our agreement, and that I said the pressure must have been terrific. And he said, 'Yes, we had the pressure all right.' " [Tr. 257.]

Mr. Waldron, cross-examination. (Testimony from Deposition of Mr. Waldron):

". . . I said the pressure must have been terrific from our competition to cause this to happen. He said there was pressure, and that is all he said." [Tr. 362.]

Mr. Lysfjord: "And then I believe Mr. Waldron mentioned, 'I guess the pressure started to work a little bit more than you anticipated, and that you are becoming worried about it.' . . Mr. Baymiller stated that there was considerable pressure brought to bear." [Tr. 489, 490.]

[10] Mr. Lysfjord: He [Krause] told me he didn't want me to feel that there was anything personal about his being chosen to front for the organization, association, which is the Contractor's Association, and their own interests; to force this termination of selling us acoustical tile." [Tr. 267.]

[11] "The Court: Considering all evidence before the court, the motions to strike are denied and the motion to dismiss is denied. Bring in the jury." [Tr. 766.]

[12] Amended Complaint, ¶ 10.

[13] Amended Complaint, ¶ 15.

[14] "In many instances, the danger of fabrication as to whether the statement was or was not made may be as great as the danger that a statement by a declarant was a false representation of the fact stated. This, however, does not preclude admissibility as long as the statement is not used for assertive purposes."

Mason Ladd, "The Hearsay We Admit." 5 Okla. L. Rev. 271, 280.

three most interested parties to the law suit ascribing vital culpatory statements to Krause;[15] to Newport; to Howard; to Baymiller; to Thompson; to Lewis and to Ragland, each one of whom (except Newport who did not testify) denies both any recollection of the specific alleged statements, and of the fact sought to be proved by the hearsay statement.

But the hearsay rule serves another more important purpose. It requires the person asserting a fact to be present in the courtroom, and to subject himself to the best method yet devised for a determination of the truth of a fact; cross-examination.[16]

There are many exceptions taking hearsay evidence out of the general rule of inadmissibility. We will discuss the general exceptions as they relate to each conversation individually.

Conversation Number 1:

Ragland's alleged statements were in part a narrative of past events and in part double hearsay. In either case it was necessary in view of the fact that Ragland did not himself testify about the declarations of the alleged co-conspirators that his alleged statements came within some exception to the hearsay rule.

A number of theories exist under which the alleged statements of Ragland might have been offered against the defendant Flintkote, as exceptions to the hearsay rule: (1) As an admission of a party's authorized agent; (2) as a statement of a co-conspirator; (3) as a statement made as part of the res gestae.

Here it should be kept in mind that the evidence was never offered against the declarant Ragland individually, for he was not a party to the action.

Evidence of a hearsay statement is admissible against a party to the action if the judge finds: (a) the declarant was authorized by the party to make a statement for him concerning the subject matter of the statement; or (b) the party, with knowledge of the content of the statement by words or conduct manifested his adoption or approval of the statement or his belief in its truth.[17]

Here there was no attempt to prove that Flintkote adopted or approved of Ragland's statement as to what Krause, Howard and Newport had said, as to alleged threats. Hence plaintiff was left with the possibility of showing that Ragland had authority to make alleged statements purporting to establish the threats.

No evidence was offered to establish direct written or oral authority. Plainly, counsel relied on an implied or inferred authority from Flintkote to Ragland, to make the statements described by Waldron and Lysfjord. Technically, we believe such a reliance takes the hearsay declaration out [15] Krause took the stand and denied that he had made any threats, although he readily admitted he had expressed displeasure. He claimed no right to influence or attempt to influence Flintkote; he denied he had used the word "boycott." [Tr. 1129.] The defendant's employees also denied any such statements.

[16] As one writer has said:

"The protection of the jury from being misled surely is a factor to be considered if a statement made out of court is to be regarded as intrinsically weak, subject to a cover for fraud, or containing the possibilities of error or mistake caused by bias, failure to understand, or the imperfection of memory. However, the hearsay rule applies in equity as well as in jury trials. Therefore these reasons alone, formidable as they appear, are not always sufficient to justify the exclusion of hearsay evidence. Professor Wigmore, in his thorough analysis of the hearsay rule of exclusion, concludes that the rule exists because of the lack of opportunity to cross-examine the declarant of a perceived fact as a testing process in the attempt to discover the truth. If the witness is a person who has personal knowledge, he may be examined as to the accuracy of his perception, memory, words of communication, and his sincerity or truthfulness. This is in line with the distinction between a deposition and an affidavit; for under the former the truth-testing device of cross-examination has been made available. Professor Morgan includes all of the reasons expressed above when he states:

" 'Hearsay is excluded because of potential in infirmities with respect to the observation, memory, narration and veracity of him who utters the offered words when not under oath and subject to cross-examination.'

"He also regards the hearsay rule of exclusion as now being directed more towards protecting the adversary than towards safeguarding the triers of fact, although both are so interrelated that it is hard to consider the effects separately. The rule at least rests in the hands of the adversary because, unless objection is urged, hearsay evidence will be admitted for consideration by the triers of fact." "The Hearsay We Admit." Professor Mason Ladd, Okla. L. Rev., 271, 272.

[17] American Law Institute, Model Code of Evidence, Rule 507; Pekelis v. Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., 2 Cir., 187 F. 2d 122, 128; United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,589], 189 [89] Fed. Supp. 349, 351.

of the "authorized declaration" class of exception to the hearsay rule, into the "vicarious admission" rule. That rule has been expressed as follows:

> "Evidence of a hearsay declaration is admissible against a party to the action if the judge finds (a) the declaration concerned a matter within the scope of an agency or employment of the declarant for the party and was made before the termination of the agency or employment, or (b) the party and the declarant were participants in a plan to commit . . . a civil wrong, and the hearsay declaration was material to the plan or its subject matter and was made while the plan was in existence and before its execution was complete . . ." [18]

Subdivision (b) presents no very difficult problem. The alleged conspiracy did not, either as pleaded, or as the case was tried, attempt to charge or make Flintkote's employee, Ragland, a member of the alleged conspiracy,[19] or a "participant" who "planned"to commit a civil wrong. Subdivision (b) is really an extension of the usual rules applicable to conspiracies, and the admissibility of admissions made by a co-conspirator.[20]

We think Wigmore hits the nail on the head when he observes that our problem is one of the law of agency, not of the law of evidence.

> "He who sets another person to do an act in his stead as agent is chargeable in substantive law by such acts as are done under that authority; so too, properly enough, admissions made by an agent in the course of exercising that authority have the same testimonial value to discredit the party's present claim as if stated by the party himself.
>
> "The question therefore turns upon the scope of the authority. This question, frequently enough a difficult one depends upon the doctrine of Agency applied to the circumstances of the case, and not upon any rule of evidence. (Italics added.) IV Wigmore, 3rd Ed., § 1078.

Let us examine the record to see what was Ragland's capacity with Flintkote. Ragland left the employ of the Flintkote Company on April 1, 1955.[21] He had started that employment February 1, 1951. He had started as a field service engineer, "to promote the general line of insulation board products, which had no connection with acoustical tile." On June 1st, 1951, he "was given the job of sales promotion for acoustical tile, in which position he remained." Ragland had worked with the two plaintiffs previously, and was friendly with them. They met socially on frequent occasions, and Ragland wanted to help them become representatives of Flintkote, if he could.

Ragland, as "promotional salesman," worked under an assistant sales-manager, of the Southwest Division, of the Pioneer Division, of The Flintkote Company, a Mr. Browning Baymiller. Baymiller's immediate superior was a Mr. E. F. Thompson, Sales Manager. Thompson's immediate superior was Mr. Frank S. Harkins, who "had charge of all activities of the building material division."

The determination of whether or not Flintkote was to contract with the plaintiffs was passed "upwards" seriatim by Ragland to Baymiller to Thompson to Harkins. Ragland had no executive duties for the corporate defendant, but was a representative at the lower echelon.

There was an utter lack of proof of or any questioning seeking to establish Ragland's authority to speak on behalf of Flintkote, concerning the alleged incriminating [18] Model Code of Evidence, Rule 508. In connection with subdivision (a), see Peoples Gas Co. of Kentucky, Inc. v. Fitzgerald, 6 Cir., 188 F. 2d 198; State Farm Mut. Auto Insur. Co. v. Porter, 9 Cir., 186 F. 2d 834; American Ins. Union v. Lowry, 5 Cir., 62 F. 2d 209; Sharpless Separator Co. v. Skinner, 9 Cir., 251 Fed. 25. The decisions propounding the rule set forth in subdivision (b) are legion. See e. g. Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 249.

[19] While there were statements in colloquy between counsel and the court indicating that plaintiffs relied on the proposition that all employees of defendant Flintkote were agents and co-conspirators [Tr. 259], it cannot be seriously urged that naming a corporate defendant a co-conspirator makes every employee of said corporation a co-conspirator; subject to the rules of evidence which relate to a conspiracy.

[20] In commenting on it, for example, American Law Institute's Model Code of Evidence points out that subdivision (b) does not accept the rule as generally stated with reference to declarations of co-conspirators, which require the alleged statement to further the conspiracy, not merely be material to it. "The tendency in the authorities is to receive evidence of all declarations of a conspirator concerning the conspiracy when made during its pendency." We do not here pass on the question of whether a declaration which does not tend to further the objects of the conspiracy is admissible.

[21] Hence, the witness Ragland was not employed by defendant Flintkote during the trial of this action.

statements of Krause, Howard, and Newport, threatening Flintkote with a boycott.

We must yet consider the admissibility of such hearsay statements under the res gestae exception. Wigmore has this to say:

> "In two departments of substantive law this use of 'res gestae' has been very common, namely in the law determining liability for the acts of an agent and for the acts of a co-conspirator. The acts and admissions of an agent are available to charge the principal when they occurred in the course of his employment; and of a co-conspirator, when they occurred in the duration of the conspiracy. It is often attempted to designate this course of action, which thus limits the range of chargeable acts as 'res gestae.' But the scope of it is to be ascertained wholly from the substantive law on those topics, not from any rule of evidence." VI Wigmore, Evidence, supra, § 1769.

> "The phrase 'res gestae' has long been not only entirely useless, but even positively harmful. It is useless, because every rule of Evidence to which it has ever been applied exists as a part of some other well established principle and can be explained in terms of that principle. It is harmful . . . (and) ought therefore wholly to be repudiated, as a vicious element in our legal phraseology." VI Wigmore, 3rd Ed., p. 182.

We conclude that if the alleged admission in Conversation Number 1 is not admissible as a statement of a co-conspirator or of a party's authorized agent, it is not admissible under any theory; i. e., it does not fall within the legitimate and accepted res gestae exceptions of Spontaneous Exclamations, Verbal Acts, or Statements of a Mental Condition. VI Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd Ed., § 1768.

We cannot pass on whom the jury could, or should believe, but we have the duty of seeing that any evidence ordinarily inadmissible as hearsay, is admitted into evidence for the jury to consider only when a proper foundation for its admission has been laid.

The discussion of both counsel throughout the trial recognized the responsibility resting in the trial court. The trial court recognized it. But when this complicated case went to trial, (without the usual pretrial conferences), the court was pressed for immediate answers on involved procedural and evidentiary points. We conclude the court erred (a) in permitting the introduction of this hearsay evidence (Conversation Number 1, supra) without any foundation showing the extent and scope of the authority resting in the employee Ragland, if any, to act for and bind the corporate defendant; and (b) in refusing to grant the defendant's motion to strike, made at the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case, relating to the same "vicarious admissions" allegedly made by the witness Ragland.

What was the effect of the erroneous admission of this evidence?

Here we have testimony introduced which goes to the very heart of plaintiffs' cause of action and to defendant's defense. Why did Flintkote terminate the contract? No reason was placed in writing. The only evidence (other than the bare refusal to sell, which was equivocal) were [was] the conversations. Of these a reading of the record persuasively demonstrates that Ragland's alleged statements were by far the most significant and the most damaging to defendant's cause. They spelled out in clear perspective the nature of the conspiracy and brought the events home to the jury with the dramatic and incisive impact that only admissions can produce. This was defendant's own former employee outlining the unlawful scheme. The full effect of this evidence on the jurors' minds cannot be measured with precision. To deny that it influenced the jury's verdict in a material manner is to ignore reality. What the verdict would have been had this evidence not been introduced is not certain. Moreover, it is not our function to decide a hypothetical case. We must rule only on the basis of what actually transpired in the court below and under the circumstances here presented we hold that the admission of Ragland's statement constituted prejudicial error.

Conversation Number 2:

The statement attributed to Baymiller (Conversation Number 2, supra) again tenders the question of agency. Baymiller may or may not have been an executive officer of defendant company, authorized to bind that company by his statements. He was Ragland's immediate superior. His position, and his activity in connection with the subject matter of this action justified the admission of his alleged statement for whatever probative value it may have had, provided that a proper foundation had been laid. We need not pass upon that issue here; nor upon the question of what the jury might have decided if this testimony was properly admitted, and the inadmissible Conversation Number 1 excluded.

Conversation Number 3:

Conversation Number 3 involves no question of agency, for Krause was neither agent, servant nor employee of the defendant Flintkote. Krause was named as a co-conspirator in the amended complaint. [¶ 10, T. 20.] Thus if plaintiff had made a prima facie showing that there was a conspiracy and that Flintkote had joined the conspiracy, then the statements made by a co-conspirator, if made during the existence of the conspiracy, and in execution of the common design, were admissible against all conspirators. Schine Theatres v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110, 117, 68 S. Ct. 947, 92 L. Ed. 1245; United States v. Gypsum Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,226], 333 U. S. 364, 393, 68 S. Ct. 525, 92 L. Ed. 746.

This conversation was introduced for the purpose of establishing that the act of termination was not equivocal, that it was an act in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that Flintkote had joined in that conspiracy. Excluding the evidence improperly introduced, no sufficient basis for the introduction of Conversation Number 3 was proved. Thus the foundation required to make the evidence admissible could only be established by the evidence itself. While much latitude is allowed in the order of proof establishing a conspiracy (as we have hereinabove discussed) the proponent of the evidence must still lay a proper foundation.

It may seem anomalous that the proponent must establish the existence of the conspiracy by independent evidence before statements of alleged co-conspirators showing the existence and operations of the conspiracy is [are] admissible. A cynic might observe that the law requires that the body be buried before the coffin is nailed. But the law has its reasons. The only conceivable basis upon which the admission of such unsworn and damaging evidence can be justified—the parties acted in concert and each authorized or approved the other's actions—intrinsically necessitates an independent showing of the conspiracy. If the rule were otherwise, persons would go to jail or be held liable in damages solely on hearsay evidence which they had no opportunity to impeach or refute.

There is a further reason why, under the record as it existed before the trial court, and the manner and theory under which the case was tried, this Conversation Number 3 was inadmissible. The court had previously ruled (and we do not here pass upon the merits of that ruling) that the refusal of Flintkote to deal further with plaintiffs on February 19, 1952, marked the termination of the conspiracy.[22] If that be true, the statements of Krause were inadmissible against Flintkote, the alleged co-conspirator.[23]

THIRD: ALLEGED ERRORS IN INSTRUCTIONS, OTHER THAN DAMAGES.

We next consider the defendant's third ground of alleged error, relating to instructions. Specification 12, alleged error in instructions respecting damages, will be considered later. There remains specification of alleged errors (Appellant's Points 5 to 10 inclusive) in instructions with re-

[22] "The Court: . . . Now I haven't heard anything yet which would indicate a court's duty to depart from the rule that admissions of a conspirator, one conspirator made in the course of a conspiracy and in furtherance of it, are admissible against and binding upon the fellow-conspirators. The rule I refer to is the one that holds that in order to be in furtherance of a conspiracy, the act or declaration must be one which was made in the course of the conspiracy and not afterwards. I think that the date of the conspiracy ended as the closing date for the making of admissible admissions binding on other conspirators—it is certainly binding upon the person who makes them—but as to their being in furtherance of a conspiracy they can't very well further it after it is ended. And I think if your February 19, 1952 date of ending is the date which forecloses the admissions of persons other than the firm on trial and its own direct agents acting for it rather than acting for it as a conspirator—"

"Mr. Ackerson: Very well, your Honor."

"The Court: —so if you have some holding of a court on that express question, I will reopen the ruling, but unless you do have, I will not admit testimony of the type just alluded to."

"Mr. Ackerson: Statements or acts subsequent to the termination date of the conspiracy, February 19th?"

"The Court: Yes. That statements or acts of persons other than the defendant on trial, and its agents, that is, the agents of Flintkote, Flintkote a corporation rather than Flintkote a conspiracy."

"Mr. Ackerson: Yes." [Tr. 293, 294, 295.]

[23] Krulewitch v. United States, supra; Fiswick v. United States, 329 U. S. 211, 67 S. Ct. 224, 91 L. Ed. 196.

gard to: Flintkote's participation in the conspiracy; reasonableness of restraint of trade; conflicting instructions on injury to public; refusal to give defendant's instructions 24, 25, and 33; error in refusal of defendant's instructions on burden of proof (Defendant's, 14 and 42).

[Single Defendant]

We have heretofore pointed out that the plaintiff's instructions in this case were prepared for a trial against all named defendants, including those dismissed out prior to trial, and that counsel for both parties and the court had agreed that they should be re-cast. Unfortunately, such recasting did not take place in every instruction. The court did carefully and properly instruct the jury:

> ". . . but there is only one defendant here. This complaint . . . was filed against many defendants. What has happened in this case with respect to the others is not of any concern to you. We are trying the case here today as to this one defendant." [Tr. 1239]

[Refusal to Sell]

The court further charged that:

> "The Flintkote Company can be liable for refusing to sell acoustical tile to plaintiffs only if such refusal to sell was in furtherance of and as a consequence of a knowing participation in an unlawful combination or conspiracy.
>
> "In other words, we come back to the old principle that if the Flintkote Company was acting entirely on its own, without conspiracy with the other defendants, then there is no cause of action." [Tr. 1247] [See also, Tr. 1252]

This charge was essentially correct.

But the jury was also instructed as follows:

> ". . . However, the case here is one in which the Flintkote Company is accused of being a member of a conspiracy. The Flintkote Company or anyone else engaged in private enterprise may select its own customers, and in the absence of an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy may sell or refuse to sell to any person, including these plaintiffs, for any cause or for no cause whatever. But under the antitrust laws it cannot do so if there has been a conspiracy." [Tr. 1236] [Italics added]

Without interpretation this is an inaccurate expression of the law. It permits a recovery against a defendant who refuses to deal "if there has been a conspiracy;" irrespective of whether or not the defendant then sought to be held participated therein. Plaintiffs can only urge that it might be inferred that because of the first sentence (de-emphasized in Appellant's Brief), there was impliedly added to the last sentence the words: "in which Flintkote participated."

The confusion thus created was compounded by another instruction:

> "If you are satisfied from all the evidence that any two or more of the defendants acted together for the purpose and with the effect of eliminating the competition in the purchase, sale or installation of acoustical tile, then you may return a verdict against the defendants and in favor of the plaintiffs, provided the evidence actually shows preponderantly that plaintiffs were damaged by such acts and conduct." [Tr. 1245, 1246.]

Here the jury was authorized to return a verdict against the defendant irrespective of whether or not the defendant ever participated in the conspiracy! This goes to the heart of the defendant's theory of defense.

Finally, the jury was instructed that if they found certain essential facts existed, then

> ". . . your verdict should be in favor of plaintiffs as to each defendant whom you find to have knowingly participated therein." [Tr. 1245.]

And again, if they were satisfied that certain acts took place,

> ". . . then you may return a verdict against the defendants." [Tr. 1245.]

[Failure To Object]

The given instructions were misleading and contradictory. They did not help the jury return a careful and thoughtful verdict. The instructions were not correct, and should not have been submitted nor read. However, defendant admits that no objection was made to these instructions at the time they were given, [Tr. 1257-1261] or before the jury retired. There thus exists the question as to whether defendant can take advantage, on this appeal, of the alleged error. Rules of Civil Procedure, (Rule 51.).

We recognize the fact that trial lawyers in some respects act at their peril, in requesting a revision of an instruction once it has been given to a jury. It may be unduly emphasized in the jury's mind. Nevertheless, if the instruction is erroneous, objection must be made, and as the rule says, "stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the grounds of his objection."

When a party fails to do this, he runs the risk that despite the error, he may be held to have waived it.

Because of other prejudicial error, to which exception was properly taken, we need not here pause to re-consider the question of whether "plain error" in the giving of misleading instructions may be reviewed where no proper objection or exception was made at the trial.[24]

Neither was any specific objection made to the court's failure to give certain instructions requested by the defendant, (No. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32 and 33). The court admittedly gave the substance of some of these. The trial court has a broad discretion in the emphasis it may direct to any legal position, or whether, after having spoken on the subject, it need or need not repeat the proposition in varying ways, as proposed by respective counsel. We believe the court clearly tried to fairly present both plaintiffs' and defendant's legal theories to the jury; and we hold that on this aspect of the case, he did so.

As to burden of proof, we agree with the trial court that many instructions were offered, that he selected one, and "did not wish," nor was he required, to repeat. No error was committed thereby.

FOURTH: ALLEGED ERROR IN REFUSING TO GRANT A NEW TRIAL; IN INSTRUCTIONS RELATIVE TO DAMAGES; IN FIXING ATTORNEY'S FEES; AND IN CREDITING THE $20,000 PAYMENT.

We now turn to defendant's fourth contention, concerning damages. Here there is no question but that the defendant objected, and took exception, to the theory of damages which went to the jury, and which governed the court's action thereafter.

Appellant contends that numerous errors were committed in respect to the ultimate amount of the judgment. Specifically, appellant asserts (A) the jury verdict was grossly excessive; (B) damages were awarded for a period of time beyond the permissible period; (C) the District Judge erred in determining the legal effect of The Covenant Not to Sue executed between appellees and others; and (D) the attorney's fees granted below and those sought on appeal are excessive. We will consider these points in order.

A. Excessive Damages.

At the outset appellees question this Court's power to review the denial of a new trial on the grounds of excessive damages. Regardless of what the rule may be in other circuits, this Court has repeatedly affirmed its authority to review such a denial. Cobb v. Lepisto, 6 F. 2d 128; Dept. of Water & Power v. Anderson, 95 F. 2d 577, cert. den. 305 U. S. 607; Southern Pacific Co. v. Guthrie, 180 F. 2d 295, 186 F. 2d 926, cert. den. 341 U. S. 904. And it may reverse the lower court's decision if it finds the verdict grossly excessive or monstrous. Southern Pacific Co. v. Guthrie, 186 F. 2d 295. Stated differently, however, appellant's contentions in the instant case actually challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jury verdict, a question of law, and one which this Court or any appellate court of ordinary jurisdiction has undoubted power to decide.

[Items of Damage]

Appellees here sought damages for three separate and distinct kinds of injury to their business:

(1) Out-of-pocket expenses incurred in establishing a business in San Bernardino. These exepnses consisted of sums expended for building rental, promotion and advertising, and trucking and utilities. Without dispute, they totaled $1,920.00. If we assume liability proven, the evidence supports without question an award as to this amount.

(2) Out-of-pocket expenses resulting from the increased cost of acoustical tile caused by appellees' inability to purchase their supplies from Flintkote. Appellees introduced evidence tending to show that during the period from January 1, 1952 to May 3, 1955, they paid $87,808.97 for acoustical tile obtained from persons other than Flintkote and that this represented an excess of $12,758.57 over that sum which Flintkote would have charged them for the equivalent quantity. The evidence on this point was conflicting and although it appears possible that some of the items included in the computation of the aggregate amount actually paid were not properly allocable to acoustical tile, that was a question for the jury's determination. Excepting the question as to the validity of the time period for which damages were here allowed, which we will later come to, no error appears in the record as to this theory of damages.

[24] Persons v. Gerlinger, 9 Cir., 227 F. 2d 337; Woodworker's Tool Works v. Byrne, 9 Cir., 191 F. 2d 662; Lynch v. Oregon Lumber Co., 9 Cir., 108 F. 2d 283.

(3) Loss-of-profits which appellees would have realized had they been able to acquire acoustical tile from Flintkote on a direct basis. The total possible damages sustained under items (1) and (2) is $14,678.57. Thus it is obvious that most of the award was based on loss-of-profits, and it is here that the evidence is frailest.

Initially, it should be noted that damages for all three kinds of injury alleged in the instant case are recoverable in the same action, if supported by competent evidence, and not all nor any two are necessarily mutually exclusive. Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U. S. 555, 51 S. Ct. 248.

[Lost Profits]

Turning to the issue of lost profits, the sole evidence adduced relative thereto was the oral testimony of the plaintiffs and their accountant, as supplemented by written computations. [Plaintiffs' Exhibits 38 and 39.] An analysis of the qualifications of the witnesses as well as the testimony is essential to an understanding of the problem which confronts us.

Mr. Lysfjord testified that prior to the formation of the Aabeta Company, he had worked twelve years in the acoustical tile industry, which were evenly divided between installing and selling, the last five of which were spent as a salesman for the R. W. Downer Co. He stated that he "never concerned" himself with the financial position of that company and "had nothing whatever to do with the purchasing of materials" for it. In short, his activities were restricted to the sales facet of this business. He evidently was thoroughly acquainted with this part of the business, but it is apparent from his own testimony that he knew little, if anything, about the myriad problems entailed in the proprietary and managerial operations of an acoustical tile business. That Mr. Lysfjord was an able and experienced salesman is not disputed. That is one thing. That this record qualifies him as an expert on business prognosis is quite another matter. His testimony bespeaks of great optimism, predicated not so much on economic reality as on his personal philosophy and enthusiasm.

> "I can't see any reason in my mind that I shouldn't be able to do as well for myself as working for somebody else. I surely would work as hard or probably twice as hard for myself as for anybody else." [Tr. 628.]

His partner, Mr. Waldron, demonstrated the same fervent hopes. His experience, too, had been confined to work as an applicator and then as a salesman before he embarked on this venture. Further, he admitted that he had had no previous experience in operating or owning any business; that in regard to his work at the R. W. Downer Co., he had never acquired any knowlledge of its working capital or financial structure and, indeed, had never even examined its books. Despite this patent lack of business background, he testified that he fully anticipated annual profit increases, justifying his assumption on

> "Just normal expected increase in good will and sales, promotional work, . . ." [Tr. 711.]

The accountant, Mr. Frank Hamiel, merely performed the mechanical function of computing the figures given him by plaintiffs.

What, then, were plaintiffs' estimates and upon what factual basis were they grounded? In essence, the computation of lost profits was based on the assumption that the plaintiffs would make as much working for themselves in their first year of operation as they and their employer, R. W. Downer Co., made together from their sales in their best year working for that going concern; that thereafer, profits would increase as much as 50% annually. In other words, they thought that they could have sold a carload of acoustical tile per month in 1952; one and one-half carloads per month in 1953; and two carloads per month in 1954. The gross sales price of a carload was estimated at $18,000, with a 20% net profit or $3600 per carload. The 20% profit factor was derived from adding plaintiffs' 10% commissions to the 10% profit made by the Downer Co. on their sales. Thus, the total net profit for each partner was approximated at $21,600 in 1952; $32,400 in 1953; and $43,200 in 1954, for a cumulative total of $97,200 each, from which actual earnings were deducted to leave a net loss of anticipated profits of $75,788.50. It was also shown that plaintiffs actually made a net profit of 5% of gross sales in 1952; 11% in 1953; and 5% in 1954. (This variance alone is of peculiar significance to the soundness of plaintiffs' theory of damages.)

The foregoing represents the sum and substance of plaintiffs' evidence on this issue. The omissions are manifold and significant. Nowhere in the record is there any substantial evidence of the state of the industry during this three year period. There is no evidence that plaintiffs would probably have obtained more business if they could have purchased Flintkote tile on a direct basis in that no showing is made of the existence or availability of such business or plaintiffs' ability to undertake additional work. We know only that business was "very competitive" and that plaintiffs encountered difficulty in disposing of the one and one-half carloads of Flintkote tile which had been supplied them. Financially, plaintiffs went into business with a relatively small capital investment ($6,000), with hopes of increasing their capital account by plowing profits back into the enterprise.

[General Rules]

A study of the adjudicated cases in this area readily dispels any impression that this question of damages is governed by an application of the common law rule of reasonable certainty. The cases have long since departed from this rule in antitrust litigation. (Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson, supra, at 565.) Just how far they have gone in imposing the risk of uncertainty on defendants we must now consider.

Preliminarily, it should be observed that the reasons underlying the evolutionary trend toward liberality in proving damages are grounded in logic and sound policy. Two principal factors have influenced the courts. First, the self-evident intangible nature of the subject matter. To ascertain what would have been is as difficult as trying to determine what should be. In the cryptic words of Judge Wyzanski, in a private antitrust action, "You can't go to a book and look for the answer." Cape Cod Food Products v. National Cranberry Ass'n., 119 Fed. Supp. 900, 910. Second, the legal maxim that a wrongdoer should not profit by his wrong. In light of the intrinsic uncertainty surrounding this problem, the responsibility for which lies in large measure with the defendant found liable, it has long been felt that this presents an ideal situation for application of that doctrine.

As stated by the Supreme Court,

> ". . . a defendant whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of the precise damages suffered by the plaintiff, is not entitled to complain that they cannot be measured with the same exactness and precision as would otherwise be possible." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., 273 U. S. 359, 379. Cf. Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., supra, at 563; Bigelow v. RKO Pictures Inc. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251, 264-5.

It is in this setting that the modern rule has developed.

We take it that the controlling rule today in seeking damages for loss of profits in antitrust cases is that the plaintiffs is required to establish with reasonable probability the existence of some causal connection between defendant's wrongful act and some loss of anticipated revenue. Once that has been accomplished, the jury will be permitted to "make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly." Bigelow v. RKO Pictures Inc., supra, at p. 264. The cases have drawn a distinction between the quantum of proof necessary to show the fact as distinguished from the amount of damage; the burden as to the former is the more stringent one. In other words, the fact of injury must first be shown before the jury is allowed to estimate the amount of damage.

The Supreme Court articulated this dichotomy of damage proof in the Story Parchment Co. case.

> "It is true that there was uncertainty as to the extent of the damage, but there was none as to the fact of damage; and there is a clear distinction between the measure of proof necessary to establish the fact that petitioner had sustained some damage, and the measure of proof necessary to enable the jury to fix the amount. The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect to their amount." 282 U. S. 555, 562. Cf. Bigelow v. RKO Pictures Inc., supra.

Although there may be instances where this distinction does not advance the resolution of a particular controversy, it here serves a useful purpose in accentuating the paucity of evidence of lost profits.

There are three chief types of evidence which the decisions have approved as the basis for the award of damages. (1) Business records of the plaintiff or his predecessor before the conspiracy arose.[25] (2) Business records of comparative but unrestrained enterprises during the particular period in question.[26] (3) Expert opinion based on items (1) or (2).[27]

In all three important Supreme Court decisions in this field, the jury verdict was sustained on the basis of evidence of prior business success by either the plaintiff or his predecessor.[28] There is, of course, no previous business history of a comparable nature in the case at bar. The absence of such history is not fatal, for even total exclusion from business is actionable, if substantial evidence of damages be adduced.[29] Here, though, plaintiffs did endeavor to introduce a type of prior business history. That is, they sought to show by their past performance with the Downer Co. what their expected profits would likely be in a new business. However, all they showed was evidence of their highest commissions during an unspecified period and what the company's profits on their sales had been. They selected only their segment of the business. There is no evidence of the over-all records of Downer Co.; nor evidence whether the company prospered as a whole; or whether it took more or less profit on plaintiffs' sales to compensate for gains or losses in other parts of the business. Further, there is no evidence of size of the Downer Company, or its financial resources as compared to that of the Aabeta Company. Indeed, plaintiffs conceded that they knew little about the affairs of the Downer Company.

Though the Supreme Court expressly withheld ruling on the validity of comparative figures in the Bigelow case,[30] subsequent lower court decisions in the motion picture cases have accepted them where similarities were shown.[31] Where no basis for comparison was shown such evidence has been rejected.[32]

Here no attempt whatsoever was made to introduce comparative figures of other acoustical tile businesses during the period in issue. The record is devoid of any evidence of what any other similar business did during any period. The references to the Downer Company business are fragmentary. There is no evidence of what established firms made during the period in question or what newly-formed companies made in their formative years during any period.

We have only the plaintiffs' own estimate. Yet their own testimony discloses their total lack of managerial experience and their lack of knowledge of the financial operations of an acoustical tile business.

The decision in William H. Rankin Co. v. Associated Bill Posters, supra, relied upon by appellees, does not support their position, for as explained by Judge Chase in Baush Mach. Tool Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 2 Cir. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,084], 79 F. 2d 217, 227, the Rankin decision (which he also authored),

> ". . . upheld the admission of an estimate of lost profits, but there was a

[25] Frey & Son v. Welch Grape Juice Co., 4 Cir., 240 Fed. 114; William R. Rankin Co. v. Associated Bill Posters, etc., 2 Cir., 42 F. 2d 152.

[26] William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,496], 69 Fed. Supp. 103, affirmed 3 Cir. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,209], 164 F. 2d 1021, cert. den. 334 U. S. 811, 68 S. Ct. 1061, 92 L. Ed. 1742; Bordonaro Bros. Theatres v. Paramount Pictures, 2 Cir. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,464], 203 F. 2d 676; Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, 7 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,891], 190 F. 2d 561; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. et al. v. Brookside Theatre Corp., 8 Cir. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,218], 194 F. 2d 846, cert. den. 343 U. S. 942, 72 S. Ct. 1035; Theatre Investment Co. v. RKO Pictures Inc. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,630], 72 Fed. Supp. 650.

[27] Frey & Son v. Welch Grape Juice Co., supra; William R. Rankin Co. v. Associated Bill Posters, supra; Bordonaro Bros. Theatres v. Paramount Pictures, supra.

[28] Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., supra; Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., supra; Bigelow v. RKO Pictures Inc., supra.

[29] William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, supra.

[30] Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. et al. v. Brookside Theatre Corp., supra, 327 U. S. at p. 266.

[31] See note 30, supra.

[32] Wolfe v. National Lead Co., 9 Cir. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,094], 225 F. 2d 427.

proper basis for estimate in that case afforded by a period of profitable operation prior to the defendants' unlawful interference which prevented a continuance of the former success."

In the Baush case itself, the court held inadmissible the testimony of plaintiff's president estimating future profits.[33]

We have reviewed the cases most favorable to appellees, but we have been unable to discover any case so fraught with uncertainty as the one at bar, which upholds a jury verdict. This Court only recently cautioned against giving "judicial blessing to a decision based upon speculation, surmise, and conjecture." Wolfe v. National Lead Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,094], 225 F. 2d 427, 434. There the District Court's dismissal of an action because of failure of proof of injury was affirmed.

We recognize the fact that as we examine this feature of the case, injured plaintiffs and a wrongdoing defendant face the court. In such a context the record will not ordinarily be searched with a microscopic eye. Yet something better is required to sustain a jury verdict than a mere interested guess.

As stated by the Supreme Court in Bigelow v. RKO Pictures Inc., supra,

"In such a case, even where the defendant by his own wrong has prevented a more precise computation, the jury may not render a verdict based on speculation or guesswork."

[Verdict Not Supported]

Where, as here, the sole evidence as to loss of profits is the testimony of the plaintiffs, both inexperienced in business operations, stating what they had expected to make during the infancy of a newly-created enterprise based on inaccurate computations[34] of the most money they had made working as salesmen for an established firm in years preceding those in question, with no attempt having been made to establish a comparison as to either the businesses or the years, the jury verdict predicated on such evidence cannot stand.

We do not hold nor imply that a jury verdict could not be upheld under any circumstances solely on the testimony of the plaintiffs. We hold only that if they are qualified to make these estimates, the record must show their competency and the factual basis upon which they rest their conclusions.

B. The Period of Time for Which Damages Were Recoverable.

[Cut-off Date]

The court below, over strenuous objection, admitted evidence and instructed the jury that it could award damages for injuries incurred up to the date the trial began. Appellant urges that the proper cut-off date is the day the action was filed. The original complaint was filed on July 21, 1952. The amended complaint was filed on March 23, 1953. The trial commenced on May 4, 1955. No special verdict was rendered apportioning the damages to any particular segment of time. Thus, it is apparent that this question permeates the entire damage award in a substantial manner and if error be found, it is perforce prejudicial.

[General Rules]

Two well-settled propositions of law govern the determination of this issue. Succinctly stated, they are, that a plaintiff is entitled to recover all damages for injuries proximately caused by wrongful acts committed prior to the filing of the action;[35] and conversely, a plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for injuries resulting from wrongful acts committed subsequent to the filing [33] Cf. Chiplets, Inc. v. June Dairy Products Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,625], 114 Fed. Supp. 129, holding conclusionary estimates of claimant's officers insufficient evidence upon which to ground judgment for alleged loss of profits.

[34] The computations of plaintiffs' average monthly 1951 earnings with the Downer Co.—the base figure in all their tabulations—are patently incorrect and distorted. They reflect not only commissions earned during the base year, 1951, but also include undisclosed sums earned in 1950, but not paid until 1951. For example, Lysfjord's purported average monthly earnings were $1,580.00. This figure was arrived at by adding the total amount he received during 1951, $12,739.85 to that received in 1952 for sales made in 1951, $6,221.00. That sum was then divided by twelve. It would appear basic that if there was some time lag between sales and compensation therefor, if the 1950 sales were to be included in the aggregate figure for 1951, then the 1952 sales should be excluded. But this was not done. Both were included on the rationalization that an accurate allocation among the particular years could not be made. This made for a basic inaccuracy of at least 50%.

[35] Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U. S. 522, 35 S. Ct. 170, 59 L. Ed. 341.

of the action.[36] The time of the wrongful act controls the measure of damages. Thus, it becomes necessary to ascertain whether plaintiffs' injuries were caused by a prior act or whether they are attributable to protracted conduct and repetitive acts which continued beyond the date this action was filed.

[Nature of Wrongful Act]

It is appellees' position that there was only one wrongful act in the instant case, i.e., "the act of terminating permanently appellees' source of supply" on February 19, 1952. It is true that Mr. Thompson's declaration made that day that Flintkote would no longer sell to plaintiffs was the only overt act of the alleged conspiracy charged against the defendant now sought to be held. Thereafter, say appellees, a continued refusal to sell in execution of the conspiracy could be implied from the already manifested refusal. Appellees' argument contains an inherent dilemma. If their position be that the February, 1952, announcement marked the termination of the alleged conspiracy, then any subsequent refusal to sell, express or implied, would be a lawful act and not actionable. If, on the other hand, we were to assume that the conspiracy did not end on that day, we would have to infer a continued refusal to sell; otherwise, plaintiffs could not succeed, for the record fails to show any attempt made by plaintiffs after February 19, 1952, to purchase acoustical tile from Flintkote.

Appellees' characterization of the refusal on February 19, 1952, as a "permanent" and fixed act is a mere conclusion, and more important, incorrect. In the very nature of things, the announcement lacked finality. It could mean no more than that Flintkote, on that day, was absolutely and unalterably opposed to future dealings with the plaintiffs. Appellees confuse unequivocality with permanency. Flintkote's position was neither irrevocable nor immutable. It was under no legal duty to adhere to that position. On the contrary, it was at all times completely free to reconsider and modify its views.

This cause of action is founded on an act of a continuing nature. The express refusal to deal constituted no more than a refusal to deal at that time. Plaintiffs' injuries were not caused just by the announced refusal but rather resulted from the explicit refusal coupled with the implied persistence in the announced course of conduct. Indeed, appellees themselves recognized the continuing nature of the conspiracy for in their brief they assert that:

> "At the time of trial it is clear that appellees . . . were still under the competitive limitations resulting from the conspiracy." [Appellees' Brief, p. 108]

[Relevant Decisions]

"[A] conspiracy . . . is in effect renewed during each day of its continuance." United States v. Borden Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,250], 308 U. S. 188, 202. Accordingly,

> "Each time the plaintiff's interest is invaded by an act of the defendants, he has a new cause of action. For that particular invasion he is at once entitled to recover as damages, not only for the injuries he suffers at once, but also for those he will suffer in the future from that particular invasion, including what he has suffered during and will suffer after the trial. Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U. S. 522, 35 S. Ct. 170, 59 L. Ed. 341. But he cannot at once recover for anticipated invasions, even though they are of the same general character as those he has already sustained." Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, 43 Fed. Supp. 996, 1006.

A case almost on all fours with the instant case is Connecticut Importing Co. v. Frankfort Distilleries, 2 Cir. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,200], 101 F. 2d 79, which also involved a private antitrust action under the Sherman Act. There the plaintiff, a distributor, alleged a conspiracy between defendants, other distributors and the manufacturer, Frankfort, to maintain fixed prices; its refusal to join the conspiracy; and the consequent refusal by Frankfort to supply plaintiff with Frankfort products. The trial judge restricted damages to those sustained before the action was brought and on appeal the Second Circuit, addressing itself to the precise question before this Court, held,

> "Neither do we find any error on the plaintiff's appeal. The recoverable damages were only those sustained by the plaintiff from the time the cause of action accrued up to the time the suit was brought. Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., D. C. 243 F. 205. Damages which accrue after the suit is brought cannot be recovered in the action unless they are the result of actions done before the suit was commenced. Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U. S. 522-536, 35 S. Ct. 170, 59 L. Ed. 341. Here the plaintiff's damages, if any, after the commencement of the suit were due to continued refusal or refusals, in furtherance of the consiracy, to supply it with the Frankfort products after that time. The unlawful acts which would give rise to such damages had from their nature to be committed in carrying out the conspiracy after the suit was brought. It would be impossible to predict how long such a conspiracy would remain in existence or how long the refusal to sell to the plaintiff would continue and even if such damages could, in a sense, be treated as the result of refusing to supply before suit was brought, they would be purely speculative." 101 F. 2d at p. 81.

[36] 25 C. J. S., Damages, Section 193, p. 908.

In Frey & Son v. Cudahy Packing Co., supra, where the identical question was again in issue, the Court stated:

"In this case the only damage proved by the plaintiff was the loss of profits it would have made on resales of Old Dutch Cleanser, if it had been able to buy Old Dutch Cleanser at the price at which other jobbers could obtain it. Such damage is a damage which occurs from day to day, and the damage on one day is not the necessary result of an act done by the defendant at an earlier date."

Cf. Savannah Theatre Co. v. Lucas & Jenkins, 8 F. R. Serv. 34.12, Case 2 (S. D. Ga. 1944).

The decision cited by appellees, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. et al. v. Brookside Theatre Corp., supra, is not contrary. In that case defendants' unlawful practices compelled plaintiff to sell its theatre business to a corporation controlled by the defendants. Among its assets was a fifteen year leasehold interest in the theatre. The court held that the jury could properly consider evidence of the threatre's profits during that period, although they accrued after commencement of the action, as one factor in determining the extent of injuries suffered by plaintiff as the result of the wrongful deprivation of its right to continue business.

The Brookside case is illustrative of the very distinction between the past and recurring act situations; that action for the destruction of plaintiff's business is analogous to an ordinary tort claim for a broken arm. In such instances, the causes of the plaintiff's injury have ceased to exist; only the effects remain. Here, though, the plaintiffs' injuries resulted from repetitive causes, the day-to-day implied refusal to sell to them. Both the cause and the effect continued. Yet there always existed the possibility that Flintkote would change its position. Thus, there was no assurance of the continuation of causal acts beyond any particular day.

Appellees assail the limitation of damage rule on its merits, but we find no compelling reasons for discarding so late in the day such a well-established rule. Not only the need for preserving some semblance of certainty in the law, but also the relatively simple procedural method of averting the time limitation pitfall dictates this result.

[Correct Procedure]

The proper procedure to be followed in seeking recovery for injuries caused by acts occurring after the filing of the action is to file a separate suit, as was done in Bordonaro Bros. Theatres v. Paramount Pictures, supra, or a supplemental action, Bigelow v. RKO Pictures Inc., supra, or as the administration of justice dictates upon the remand of the instant case, by a supplemental complaint.

The absence of any acceptable basis for segregating the damage award makes it unnecessary to consider whether the amended complaint, a superseding pleading, could be employed to sustain an award through March 23, 1953. Whether it did or did not would not affect our disposition of this issue.

C. The Covenant Not to Sue, Vis a Vis Damages.

On July 31, 1953, after the action was filed but before trial, the plaintiffs executed an agreement denominated "Covenant Not to Sue" with certain named co-conspirators other than Flintkote. By the terms of the agreement the plaintiffs agreed to withdraw their action against the covenantees in exchange for the sum of $20,000.00, expressly reserving therein all rights against defendant Flintkote.

The question presented is whether the $20,000 should be subtracted from the actual damages fixed by the jury verdict ($50,000) before said damages are trebled, or whether the award should first be trebled and then the $20,000 deducted from the trebled amount of $150,000. The former method produces a $90,000 judgment while the latter method results in a $130,000 judgment, or a difference in dollars and cents of $40,000.00.

The parties stipulated that all facts concerning the amount and effect of said covenant should be withheld from the jury and the question left to the determination of the District judge. He decided that the jury verdict should be trebled and then the aggregate sum diminished by $20,000.

So far as our research reveals, this is a question of first impression for an appellate court.[37] Nevertheless, the resolution of it clearly lies in the application of firmly rooted principles of joint liability and the manifest objectives of the antitrust laws in general and the treble damage provision in particular.

The germane portion of the covenant provides,

> "That the sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000) paid herein to the covenantors as consideration for the execution of this covenant not to sue does not represent to covenantors and shall not be construed as full compensation for the alleged damages claimed to have been suffered by the covenantors in their original complaint and in their first amended complaint, but is only partial compensation therefore, . . ."

The meaning of the italicized words is at best inconclusive. However, two conclusions can by inference be drawn from the document. First, it was not intended to be a release or to constitute full compensation. Second, the precise import of the treble damage statutory provision on the final settlement cannot be ascertained with scientific accuracy, but it can hardly be doubted that the spectre of potential three-fold liability influenced the negotiations.

The treble damage section reads as follows:

> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any District Court of the United States—and shall recover three-fold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U. S. C. A. § 15.

Thus, pursuant to congressional fiat, the jury award is trebled. Here the jury verdict placed the actual damages at $50,000. Superimposing the statutory sanction, the total collective liability for the alleged violation is $150,000.

Flintkote, if a co-conspirator, would be jointly and severally liable under well-settled principles of law for the entire amount if (1) the plaintiffs had successfully prosecuted any or all of the other co-conspirators, or (2) no jurisdiction could be acquired over the other alleged offenders and consequently only Flintkote was sued. Accordingly, the settlement does not impose an additional burden on Flintkote, but rather serves only to militate against its liability. The question is to what extent should it do so?

Irrespective of the nature of the cause of action, a plaintiff is entitled to one full satisfaction of his claim in an action against joint defendants.[38] In the case at bar, as it was tried, partly by jury and partly by the court, and assuming there was no error in the introduction of evidence, such satisfaction would not be achieved by the award of any sum, which added to the settlement sum, did not total $150,000.

We are told that the treble damage provision is a unique statutory penalty, and therefore the pro tanto reduction should be made from the compensatory verdict itself. The non-compensatory share of the award is akin to the award of exemplary or punitive damages. In the case of punitive damages joint tortfeasors are liable for the entire amount, not merely the compensatory part.[39] Further, a niggardly construction of the treble damage provisions would do violence to the clear intent of Congress. The private antitrust action is an important and effective method of combatting unlawful and destructive business practices. The private suitor complements the Government in enforcing the antitrust laws. The treble damage provision was designed to foster and stimulate the interest of private persons in maintaining a free and competitive economy.[40] Its efficacy should not be weakened by judicial construction.

[37] However, another District judge in an unreported case, Winekler & Smith Citrus Products Co. et al. v. California Fruit Growers Exchange, decided March 5, 1956, reached the same conclusion as did the court below.

[38] Davis v. Lawhon, 186 Ark. 51, 52 S. W. 2d 887.

[39] Reizenstein v. Clark, 104 Iowa 287, 73 N. W. 588; Waggoner v. Wyatt, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 75, 94 S. W. 1076. See also, Washington Gas-Light Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 553, 19 S. Ct. 296, 43 L. Ed. 543.

Moreover, a contrary result would put a premium on litigation and discourage settlements. It is not the policy of the law to encourage litigation at the expense of compromise.

The collective liability for the alleged conspiracy as found at this trial, was $150,000. If no error had been committed, this is the amount which plaintiffs should have received. The plaintiffs having already received $20,000, it was proper to deduct that sum from the trebled amount. Any other method would have resulted in plaintiffs receiving less than the whole to which they were entitled.

D. Attorney's Fees; Below and On Appeal.

The holding that there was prejudicial error in this case, requiring reversal, renders unnecessary a consideration of the arguments advanced concerning the propriety of the amount awarded as attorney's fees, and of the sum requested for legal services performed in connection with this appeal. Baush Mach. Tool Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra; Paramount Film Distributing Corp. v. Village Theatre, 10 Cir. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,239], 228 F. 2d 721.

[Reversed]

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.

[Concurring Opinion]

STEPHENS, Circuit Judge, Concurring.

I concur with the opinion insofar as it treats of the subject of damages. I express no opinion as to the rulings upon the objections to the evidence.

[¶ 68,675] The American Hospital and Life Insurance Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 16132. Dated April 9, 1957.

Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission, sitting at Washington, D. C.

Federal Trade Commission and McCarran-Ferguson Acts

Unfair Practices—False Advertising of Insurance—Jurisdiction of Federal Trade Commission to Regulate Insurance Advertising—McCarran-Ferguson Act.—The Federal Trade Commission did not have jurisdiction to issue a cease and desist order prohibiting a Texas insurance company, which was licensed to do business in several states, from falsely advertising its insurance policies. Each of the states in which the insurance company did business had laws regulating false and deceptive advertising of insurance; therefore, under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Federal Trade Commission did not have the power to regulate the advertising of the insurance company. The provisions of the McCarran-Ferguson Act evidence a design on the part of Congress to yield to the states which had undertaken, or which would undertake, to regulate the insurance business in those fields in which the Federal Trade Commission Act and other laws might otherwise have been applicable, with the exception of boycotts, coercion, and intimidation. The Commission's contention that a state does not have and never did have the power adequately to control the advertising practices of out-of-state insurance companies doing business within its boundaries was rejected. If there is an "irreducible area of Commission jurisdiction over the interstate activites of insurance companies which cannot be reached by state law," the matter presented in the instant case is not within it.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.362, 5201, 5301.

[40] Lawlor v. National Screen Service [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,061], 349 U. S. 322, 329, 75 S. Ct. 865, 99 L. Ed. 1122; United States v. Borden Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,754], 347 U. S. 514, 74 S. Ct. 703, 98 L. Ed. 903; United States v. National City Lines [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,259], 334 U. S. 573, 68 S. Ct. 1169, 92 L. Ed. 1584; Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp., 9 Cir. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,020], 221 F. 2d 358; Maltz v. Sax, 2 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,259], 134 F. 2d 2; Weinberg v. Sinclair Refining Co., 48 Fed. Supp. 203.

For the petitioner: J. D. Wheeler, San Antonio, Tex.

For the respondent: Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, and James B. Truly, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

Attorneys for Amicus curiae: George R. Cross, Associate Counsel, New York, N. Y., for the National Association of Insurance Agents; John S. Hamilton, Jr., Chicago, Ill., for The American Mutual Alliance; Lawrence Pomeroy, New York, N. Y., for the National Association of Insurance Brokers, Inc.; Whitney North Seymour, New York, N. Y., for the Health Insurance Association of America; Hugh B. Cox, Washington, D. C., for the Life Insurance Association of America and the American Life Convention; Edmund G. Brown, Attorney General, and Harold B. Haas, Deputy Attorney General, San Francisco, Cal., for the State of California; John Ben Shepperd, Attorney General, and Will B. Davis, Appellate Assistant, Austin, Texas, for the State of Texas.

A joinder to the Brief of Amicus Curiae of The State of Texas was filed by the Attorney General of the following States: New York, Louisiana, Maryland, North Dakota, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Florida, Idaho, Kentucky, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Wyoming, Utah, and Connecticut.

Reversing and setting aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission in Dkt. 6237.

Before HUTCHESON, Chief Judge, and CAMERON and JONES, Circuit Judges.

[Petitioner's Business—FTC Ruling]

JONES, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The petitioner, the American Hospital and Life Insurance Company, is a corporation of Texas. Its principal or home office is in San Antonio, Texas. It is engaged in the business of writing health and accident insurance. It has been licensed to do business and is doing business in Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Tennessee, as well as in the State of Texas. In each of these states the petitioner has agents through whom its business is conducted. Each of the states has statutes forbidding deceptive and misleading advertising. The petitioner employed printed brochures which it sent from its home office to its agents for use in advertising and soliciting business. It did no advertising by newspapers or other periodicals or by radio or television. The Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint against the petitioner charging it with engaging in unfair and deceptive advertising practices in commerce in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 41, et seq. The petitioner asserted that its advertising was not false, misleading or deceptive. It also contended that the Commission was without jurisdiction because of the McCarran Act. After a hearing the Examiner of the Commission, in an initial decision, held that the charges concerning the petitioner's advertising had not been sustained. The Examiner also held that the Commission was without jurisdiction, except as to petitioner's transactions in Mississippi where, at the time of the hearing, there was no adequate law regulating false and deceptive acts and practices. The Commission, on appeal, set aside the initial decision of the Examiner by a three to two decision. It determined that in passing the McCarran Act the Congress did not, and did not intend to, deprive the Commission of the power to regulate and control the interstate activities of insurance companies. It found the advertising brochures which had been sent from Texas to the other states were false and deceptive. It entered a Cease and Desist Order which is before us for review. In the opinion of the majority of the Commission, it was said that "there must remain an irreducible area of Commission jurisdiction over the interstate activities of insurance companies which cannot be reached by state law."

[South-Eastern Underwriters Case]

In the South-Eastern Underwriters case,[1] of which more will be hereafter said, Mr. Justice Black, in the majority opinion, observed that "Perhaps no modern commercial enterprise directly affects so many people as does the insurance business". Although it has not been classed as a public utility charged with the duty of serving all who may apply,[2] the business of insurance has been more generally regulated than any other sphere of business activities not a public utility.[3] It was determined in 1868 that the insurance business did not constitute transactions in commerce,[4] and this doctrine was adhered to in many subsequent decisions.[5] In 1944 came the South-Eastern case, supra, where, in a four to three decision, with two justices of the court not participating, it was held generally that insurance businesses are engaged in "commerce among the several states", and specifically that the Sherman Anti-Trust Act[6] applied to insurance activities. Mr. Chief Justice Stone, in his dissenting opinion, said that the action of the majority in overturning the precedents of the seventy-five years "cannot fail to be the occasion for loosing a flood of litigation and of legislation, state and national, in order to establish a new boundary between state and national power raising questions which cannot be answered for years to come * * *".[7] The litigation has not yet reached the flood stage and the McCarran-Ferguson Act,[8] sometimes referred to as Public Law 15, and more often merely as the McCarran Act, has been the only national legislation of consequence resulting from the decision. This act was proposed by Senators McCarran and Ferguson and on March 9, 1945, it was signed by the President and became a law. The enactment is brief and many of its provisions are here pertinent.[9]

[1] United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Association [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, 64 S. Ct. 1162, 88 L. Ed. 1440.

[McCarran Act]

The purpose and effect of the McCarran Act has been stated by the Supreme Court, it saying:

> "Obviously Congress' purpose was broadly to give support to the existing and future state systems for regulating and taxing the business of insurance. This was done in two ways. One was by removing obstructions which might be thought to flow from its own power, whether dormant or exercised, except as otherwise expressly provided in the Act itself or in future legislation. The other

[2] National Union Fire Insurance Co. v. Dickinson, 128 Ark. 367, 194 S. W. 254.

[3] For a statement of the reasons for and history of the regulation of insurance see 1 Richards on Insurance, 5th Ed. 136, et seq.

[4] Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357.

[5] These were reviewed by the Supreme Court in 1913, where it was said of the prior decisions "they constitute a formidable body of authority and strongly invoke the sanction of the rule of stare decisis." New York Life Insurance Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. 495, 34 S. Ct. 167, 58 L. Ed. 332.

[6] 15 U. S. C. A. § 1 et seq.

[7] 322 U. S. 583.

[8] 59 Stat. 33, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1011-1015.

[9] An act to express the intent of the Congress with reference to the regulation of the business of insurance.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That: The Congress hereby declares that the continued regulation and taxation by the several States of the business of insurance is in the public interest, and that silence on the part of the Congress shall not be construed to impose any barrier to the regulation or taxation of such business by the several States.

Sec. 2. (a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.

(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1941, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law.

Sec. 3. (a) Until June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the Act of June 19, 1936, known as the Robinson-Patman Antidiscrimination Act, shall not apply to the business of insurance or to acts in the conduct thereof.

(b) Nothing contained in this Act shall render the said Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation.

Sec. 4. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to affect in any manner the application to the business of insurance of the Act of July 5, 1935, as amended, known as the National Labor Relations Act, or the Act of June 25, 1938, as amended, known as the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, or the Act of June 5, 1920, known as the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

Sec. 5. As used in this Act, the term "State" includes the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia.

Sec. 6. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected.

was by declaring expressly and affirmatively that continued state regulation and taxation of this business is in the public interest and that the business and all who engage in it 'shall be subject to' the laws of the several states in these respects.

"Moreover, in taking this action Congress must have had full knowledge of the nation-wide existence of state systems of regulation and taxation; of the fact that they differ greatly in the scope and character of the regulations imposed and of the taxes exacted; and of the further fact that many, if not all, include features which, to some extent, have not been applied generally to other interstate business. Congress could not have been unacquainted with these facts and its purpose was evidently to throw the whole weight of its power behind the state systems, notwithstanding these variations." Prudential Insurance Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U. S. 408, 66 S. Ct. 1142, 90 L. Ed. 1342. See North Little Rock Transp. Co. v. Casualty Reciprocal Exchange, 8th Cir. 1950, 181 F. 2d 174; American Universal Ins. Co. v. Sterling, 3rd Cir. 1952, 203 F. 2d 159.

By the Act it was provided not only that the business of insurance should be subjected to regulation by the States, but that until June 30, 1948,[10] the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act should not apply to the business of insurance, and after that date the Sherman and Clayton Acts and the Federal Trade Commission Act should apply to such business to the extent it is not regulated by State law. It is also provided that nothing contained in the Act shall render the Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion or intimidation. Then too it was provided that the Act should not affect the application of the National Labor Relations Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act or the Merchant Marine Act to the business of insurance. These provisions evidence a design on the part of Congress to yield to the States which had undertaken, or which would undertake, to regulate the insurance business in those fields in which the Sherman Act might otherwise have been applicable, with the exception of boycotts, coercion and intimidation. Such was the intent of the Congress. Senator McCarran, in response to the query of a colleague, said:

"The Senator will recall the Southeastern Underwriters case. The decision was startling. It created consternation in the insurance business because by previous decisions rendered during the past 50 years or more we were entitled to believe that the business of insurance was not to be classified as interstate commerce. The Supreme Court of the United States specifically, directly, and emphatically put it into the category of interstate commerce. It put it squarely under the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and other Acts. The pending bill is for the purpose of creating a moratorium for 3 years in order that the business of insurance shall not be interfered with by any Federal power under either the Clayton Act or the Sherman Act. So during the period of moratorium the various states themselves may take steps to regulate the business of insurance."

Senator McCarran again said:

"The moratorium would not be continued; but if in the meantime the states themselves had regulated the business of insurance, the Sherman and Clayton Acts and the other Acts would not be effective."

[FTC Lacks Jurisdiction]

The Commission urges that a state does not have and never did have the power adequately to control the advertising practices of out-of-state insurance companies doing business within its boundaries. The Congress, seemingly, had no doubt that a state might exercise such power and we have none. The Supreme Court, we think, has expressed the same view in holding, with respect to another phase of state insurance regulation,

"These regulations can not be attacked merely because they affect business activities which are carried on outside the state. Of necessity, any regulations affecting the solvency of those doing an insurance business in a state must have some effect on business practices of the same company outside the state. Nothing in the Constitution requires a state to nullify its own protective standards because an enterprise regulated has its headquarters elsewhere. The power New York may exercise to regulate domestic insurance associations may be applied to foreign associations which New York permits to conduct the same kind of business." Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U. S. 313, 63 S. Ct. 602, 87 L. Ed. 777.

[10] The moratorium, intended to permit the States to enact regulatory measures if the laws were inadequate for the purpose, was extended from January 1, 1948, to June 30, 1948, by Act July 25, 1947, c. 326, 61 Stat. 448.

If there is an "irreducible area" of Commission jurisdiction, we are of the firm conviction that the matter presented by the record before us is not within it.

The Commission relied heavily upon United States v. Sylvanus [11] in support of its jurisdiction. An indictment was returned, in the Sylvanus case, for use of the mails to defraud in the sale of insurance by mail. The McCarran Act was held to be no bar to prosecution. A fraudulent scheme carried on by use of the mails would violate the mail fraud acts even though the mails never crossed a state boundary.[12] The doctrine of the case, with the decision of which we have no disagreement, is of no bearing on the problem before us here. A violation of the postal laws does not of itself confer jurisdiction on the Federal Trade Commission.

The Commission's Examiner found that each of the States in which the petitioner did business, except Mississippi, had enacted laws for the regulation of false and deceptive advertising. Mississippi enacted such a law while the matter was pending before the Commission. This is not controverted. The Examiner found that the petitioner's advertising matter was not false, misleading or deceptive. Holding, as we do, that the Commission was without jurisdiction, we do not reach the merits.

[Order Set Aside]

The order of the Commission is set aside and reversed.

[¶ 68,676] Federal Trade Commission v. William T. Reed, President, Reed Candy Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term 1956, April Session 1957. No. 11839. Dated April 11, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. HOFFMAN, District Judge.

Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Power To Issue Subpoena in Clayton Act Proceedings.—The Federal Trade Commission may properly use the subpoena power granted to it by Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in proceedings before the Commission based upon alleged violations of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The court agreed with the decision in Menzies v. Federal Trade Commission, 1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,648, in which the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit held that the history, purpose, and decisional law concerning the Clayton and Federal Trade Commission acts demonstrate that they are in pari materia—to be read and construed as one in such manner as to best effectuate the purpose of Congress in enacting them.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741, 8801.870.

For the appellant: David A. Canel, Chicago, Ill.

For the appellee: Robert B. Dawkins and John T. Loughlin, Washington, D. C.

Affirming an order of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,551, enforcing a Federal Trade Commission subpoena in Dkt. 6461.

Before DUFFY, Chief Judge, LINDLEY and SWAIM, Circuit Judges.

[FTC Subpoena Power]

SWAIM, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This appeal questions the power of the Federal Trade Commission to issue subpoenas duces tecum in proceedings before the Commission on a complaint charging violation of the Clayton Act, as amended.

[11] 7th Cir. 1951, 192 F. 2d 96.

[12] See New York Life Insurance Co. v. Deer Lodge County, supra.

[Clayton Act Proceeding]

On November 21, 1955, the Federal Trade Commission ("F. T. C.") issued a complaint charging the Reed Candy Company with violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended. 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(d). The proceeding was duly assigned to an examiner of the F. T. C. for hearing and initial decision. The examiner, on February 20, 1956, caused a subpoena duces tecum to be served on William T. Reed, as President of the Reed Candy Company, directing him to appear and testify before the F. T. C. and to produce certain documentary evidence described in the subpoena. Reed's motion to quash the subpoena was denied by the examiner and on appeal to the F. T. C. the examiner's ruling was affirmed. On April 4, 1956, another subpoena was issued which was identical in all respects with the first except that the date for the hearing was set for April 11, 1956. Reed did not appear at the April 11 hearing, but his counsel was present and he explained that Reed's refusal to obey the subpoena was upon the advice of counsel that the F. T. C. lacked subpoena power in proceedings under the Clayton Act.

[Order of Compliance]

On May 7, 1956, the F. T. C. filed an application in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, for an order requiring Reed to comply with the subpoena. The District Court ordered Reed to appear and show cause why the application should not be granted. After answer to the application of the F. T. C. and a hearing on the matter the District Court, on June 12, 1956, entered an order directing compliance by Reed with the subpoena. From that order Reed has taken this appeal.

[Contentions]

The arguments of the parties may be briefly summarized as follows: Reed contends that the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 12-27, prescribes a self-contained procedure for the enforcement of its provisions and does not contain a substantive grant of subpoena power. The F. T. C. contends that the subpoena and investigational powers granted it by the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 717, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 41-46 and 47-58, may properly be used in the discharge of the F. T. C.'s duties under the Clayton Act, as amended. This question has recently been the subject of decision in the district courts. Federal Trade Commission v. Menzies, D. C. Md. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,478], 145 F. Supp. 164 (holding for the F. T. C.); and Federal Trade Commission v. Rubin, S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,505], 145 F. Supp. 171 (holding against the F. T. C.).

[Menzies Decision]

During the pendency of this appeal the Menzies decision has been reviewed and affirmed by the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, per Judge John J. Parker, Menzies v. Federal Trade Commission (No. 7352, decided March 7, 1957) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,648], — F. 2d —. We agree with the Fourth Circuit that the history, purpose and decisional law concerning the Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts demonstrates that they are in pari materia—to be read and construed as one in such manner as to best effectuate the purpose of Congress in enacting them. We hold that the F. T. C. may properly use the subpoena power granted it by Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 722, 15 U. S. C. A. § 49, in proceedings before the F. T. C. on a complaint charging violation of the Clayton Act, as amended.[1] Even if the question were more doubtful than we think, we should be hesitant to reject the conclusion of the F. T. C. fortified as it is by years of administrative practice, consistent and generally unchallenged.

[Affirmed]

The order of the District Court is affirmed.

---

[1] On April 2, 1957, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained the power of the F. T. C. to subpoena documents pursuant to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in a proceeding before the F. T. C. on a complaint charging violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Federal Trade Commission v. W. W. Tuttle, Resident Manager, Ernst & Ernst (No. 24325) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,669], — F. 2d —.

[¶ 68,677] United States v. J. Myer Schine, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of New York. Criminal No. 6279-C. Dated February 28, 1957. Filed March 4, 1957.

Case No. 1186 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

O. Henderson, United States Attorney.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Consent Decree—Violation of Decree—Criminal Contempt.—Supplemental findings of fact are entered in an action in which individuals and corporations were found to be guilty of criminal contempt by reason of their wilful disobedience of a consent decree, U. S. v. Schine, et al., 1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,580.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.575, 8401.31, 8421.

For the petitioner: Joseph E. McDowell, Attorney, Department of Justice, and John

For the respondents: Raichle, Tucker and Moore (Frank G. Raichle and David C. Diefendorf, of counsel), Buffalo, N. Y.

Supplementing findings of fact of the U. S. District Court, Western District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,580. For related judgments and opinions, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,902, 67,844-67,850; 1952-1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,237; 1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,447, 62,245; 1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,518, 57,478; and 1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,413, 57,310, 57,309.

Supplemental Findings of Fact

HAROLD P. BURKE, District Judge [In full text]: In addition to the Findings of Fact heretofore made herein, I make the following Supplemental Findings of Fact:

41. In September, 1949 the respondents sent out a form letter to, among others, the firm of Berk and Krumgold, theatre brokers in New York City, which letter listed theatre properties offered for sale. Berk and Krumgold was a real estate brokerage firm specializing in the sale of motion picture theatres throughout the states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Illinois, Ohio, the District of Columbia and New England.

42. After the receipt of that letter, David Berk, of the firm of Berk and Krumgold, had a conversation with J. Myer Schine at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, particularly about the Palace Theatre in Watertown, New York. Berk had a prospect who was interested in buying the building in which the Palace Theatre was located and in leasing the theatre. In that conversation they talked in a general way about the other theatres which had been listed for sale in the form letter.

43. In November, 1949 Berk and Krumgold succeeded in selling the building in which the Palace Theatre was located and the leasehold interest of the Palace Theatre, and was paid a commission.

44. There were several conversations between November 1949 and March 10, 1954 between J. Myer Schine and David Berk on the subject of whether Berk and Krumgold had any prospects for the sale or lease of other theatres listed. Meanwhile Berk and Krumgold were also trying to interest J. Myer Schine in the purchase of theatres. Berk and Krumgold did not sell or lease any of the other theatres which had been listed for sale.

[¶ 68,678] Sunbeam Corporation v. John W. Richardson, Joe B. Richardson, John W. Richardson, III, Charles Robert Richardson, partners, d/b/a Richardson Hardware Company and Barren County Hardware Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 12980. Filed April 11, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court, Western District of Kentucky, Bowling Green Division. SWINFORD, District Judge.

Kentucky Fair Trade Act and McGuire Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Kentucky Fair Trade Act and McGuire Act—Nonsigner Provisions—United States and Kentucky Constitutions.—The Kentucky Fair Trade Act and the McGuire Act, as applied to a nonsigner of a fair trade contract, are valid under the United States Constitution. Therefore, a Federal District Court ruling that the acts are unconstitutional as applied to nonsigners was reversed. Also, the District Court's ruling that the Kentucky Fair Trade Act, as applied to nonsigners, is invalid under the Kentucky Constitution was reversed since the issue as to the constitutionality of the act under the Kentucky Constitution was pending in the Kentucky Court of Appeals. Comity and a regard for the consideration of the court of last resort in Kentucky require that the determination of the constitutionality of the Kentucky Fair Trade Act under the State Constitution be held in abeyance until the issue has been determined by the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3040.20, 3085, 3258.19, 3410.

For the appellant: Thomas M. Scanlon, Indianapolis, Ind.; and Carroll M. Redford, Glasgow, Ky.; Barnes, Hickam, Pantzer & Boyd, Indianapolis, Ind., by Thomas M. Scanlon and Raymond W. Gray, Jr.; and Finn & Van Mell, Chicago, Ill., on brief.

For the appellees: Robert M. Coleman, Bowling Green, Ky., and Richard L. Garnett, Glasgow, Ky.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, Western District of Kentucky, Bowling Green Division, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,407.

Before MARTIN, MCALLISTER and STEWART, Circuit Judges.

[Fair Trade Action]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: Sunbeam Corporation, an Illinois corporation, filed a complaint in the district court in Kentucky to enjoin appellees from selling trademarked electrical appliances manufactured by Sunbeam, at less than certain prices. Sunbeam sold such products in interstate commerce and maintained so-called fair trade contracts with its dealers in Kentucky. Fair trade contracts are methods by which wholesale and retail resale prices are maintained by the manufacturer of a trademarked product in free and open competition with other brands. Appellees had no dealers' contract, fair trade contract, or any contractual relations with Sunbeam; but they had knowledge of the fair trade contracts between Sunbeam and its dealers, and sold the trademarked appliances at less than fair trade prices.

[Kentucky Fair Trade and McGuire Act]

The Kentucky Fair Trade Act provides that resale prices of trademarked commodities may be regulated by contract, and that violation of a contract by one who offers the commodity at less than the agreed resale prices, is unfair competition and actionable, whether the party so selling the commodity is a party to the agreement or not, if such sale is wilfully and knowingly made. Kentucky Revised Statutes 365.080, 365.090. The McGuire Act of 1952, Title 15 U. S. C. A. Section 45(a) provides that contracts prescribing minimum or stipulated prices for the resale of a trademarked commodity shall be exempted from the operation of the Federal Anti-Trust Laws, and that nothing in the Anti-Trust Laws shall render unlawful the exercise of enforcement of any right or right of action created by any State, which provides that wilfully and knowingly selling any commodity at less than the price prescribed in such contracts, is unfair competition and actionable at the suit of any party damaged or injured thereby.

[Trial Court Ruling]

The district court dismissed appellant's complaint on the ground that appellee had signed no agreements with Sunbeam to maintain fair trade prices; that the Kentucky Fair Trade Act was unconstitutional under the Constitution of the State of Kentucky; and that the McGuire Act was unconstitutional under the Constitution of the United States.

[Constitutionality of McGuire Act]

In Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corp. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,141], 299 U. S. 183, an Illinois fair trade statute was attacked on the ground that it violated the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment and was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to private persons. The state statute provided that noncontracting parties, who had knowledge of a fair trade contract to sell at no less than the minimum resale price stipulated in the contract, were bound in the same manner as though they had executed such a contract, and that their resale at less than such a price was actionable. The Court held that the Illinois Statute did not violate the Federal Constitution.

As to the applicability of state fair trade laws to interstate commerce, Congress, in 1937, enacted the Miller-Tydings Amendment to the Sherman Act, which provided that fair trade contracts, which had been lawful within the state, would, in the future, be lawful in interstate commerce. However, in 1951 the Supreme Court construed the Miller-Tydings Act, and held that the terms thereof did not exempt nonsigners of such contracts from the operation of the Sherman Act. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384. Almost immediately thereafter, Congress passed the McGuire Act providing that nothing in the anti-trust laws would render the nonsigners provisions of state fair trade acts unlawful when applied in interstate commerce. Since then, the constitutionality of the McGuire Act has been upheld in Schwegmann Bros. Giant Super Markets v. Eli Lilly & Co. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,516], 205 F. 2d 788 (C. A. 5), cert. denied, 346 U. S. 856. See also S. Klein on the Square, Inc. v. Lionel Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,878], 348 U. S. 860 and Masters v. General Electric Co. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,907], 348 U. S. 892, dismissing appeals for want of a substantial federal question in cases from state courts holding constitutional fair trade acts, similar to that in the instant case.

In United States v. McKesson & Robbins [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305, 316, in a case involving the McGuire Act, the court stated that it was not only bound by the limitations marked by Congress, beyond which price fixing may not go, but was also bound to construe such limitations strictly, since resale price maintenance is a privilege restrictive of a free market. The foregoing is certainly persuasive that the Supreme Court views the McGuire Act as not invalid on constitutional grounds. Because of this strong implication, and because of the cases above cited, we are of the view that the district court erred in holding the McGuire Act unconstitutional.

[Constitutionality of Kentucky Act]

We come then to the determination of the district court that the Kentucky Fair Trade Act violated the Constitution of Kentucky. This question has not yet been passed upon by the Kentucky Court of Appeals, but a case is there pending on that issue, on appeal from the Circuit Court of Jefferson County. In Walker et al. v. Felmont Oil et al., — F. 2d — (C. A. 6), (decided February 12, 1957), this court noted that > "Conflicts in the interpretation of state law, dangerous to the success of state policies, are almost certain to result from the intervention of lower federal courts. . . . The reign of law is hardly promoted if an unnecessary ruling of a federal court is thus supplanted by a controlling decision of a state court. . . . There is no direct ruling by the Kentucky Court of Appeals on this question. No matter how seasoned the judgment of the District Judge may be, it cannot escape being a forecast rather than a determination. . . . Uniformity throughout the state with respect to this important question of property rights is not promoted by the exercise of federal jurisdiction in this case."

Under the circumstances of the instant case, we are of the view that comity and a regard for the consideration of the court of last resort in Kentucky require that the determination of the constitutionality of the State Fair Trade Act under the State Constitution be held in abeyance until the issue has been determined by the Kentucky Court of Appeals. The Circuit Court of Jefferson County, in the case above mentioned, although holding that the Kentucky Fair Trade Act violated the Constitution of Kentucky, nevertheless, upon the petition of the appellant in that case, continued the status of the case pending the determination of the appeal, upon the execution of a bond by the appellant therein to secure the rights of the party prevailing in the Circuit Court. Consonant with this determination, the judgment of the district court is reversed upon the Federal constitutional issue, and the case remanded to the district court, with instructions to stay further proceedings in the instant case, pending a determination of the validity of the State Fair Trade Act under the State Constitution by the Kentucky Court of Appeals, on such terms as the court may deem proper.

[¶ 68,679] United States v. Socony Mobil Oil Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Criminal Action Nos. 56-152-S through 56-156-S. Dated March 20, 1957.

Case Nos. 1289-1293 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Massachusetts Fair Trade Act, McGuire Act, and Sherman Antitrust Act

Resale Price Fixing and Fair Trade—Resale Price Fixing Practices—Absence of Formal Fair Trade Contracts—Validity Under McGuire Act and Massachusetts Fair Trade Act.—An oil company did not violate the Sherman Antitrust Act by agreeing to give service station dealers a rebate if they would sell its gasoline at specified prices, or by entering into agreements under which service station dealers were charged with the duty of meeting competition of a competing dealer. The purpose of the oil company was to have its gasoline sold at a price that would meet competition of dealers in other brands of gasoline. The Government's contention that the McGuire Act did not exempt the company's agreements from the prohibitions of the Sherman Act because the company did not enter into fair trade agreements with its dealers was rejected. There is nothing in the McGuire Act which limits its exemptions to fair trade agreements. Furthermore, the oil company's agreements were lawful under Massachusetts common law. The Massachusetts Fair Trade Act is, in effect, a statutory recognition of a long established public policy and common law principle that a producer of a trade-marked article may establish resale prices. The company's agreements were within the scope of the McGuire Act because the contracts provided for the sale of a commodity at a stipulated price, the container of the commodity bore the company's trade-mark, and the company's gasoline was in fair and open competition.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20, 3040, 3055, 3130, 3130.80.

Resale Price Fixing and Fair Trade—Commodities Which May Be Fair Traded Under McGuire Act—Gasoline Sold Through Trade-Marked Pumps.—The contention that gasoline stored in a tank, which is buried underground at a service station and from which a pipe conveys the stored gasoline to a pump which has a label designating the brand or name of the producer, is not a container bearing a trade-mark within the meaning of the McGuire Act was rejected. A tank which provides a continuous flow of gasoline to a pump, which bears the label of the producer, is a container within the meaning of the McGuire Act.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3150.80.

For the plaintiff: Stanley N. Barnes, Assistant Attorney General; Anthony Julian, United States Attorney; and Worth Rowley, Richard B. O'Donnell, John J. Galgay, Ralph S. Goodman, and Philip Bloom.

For the defendant: John L. Hall and Conrad W. Oberdorfer, Boston, Mass.

Opinion

[Indictments]

SWEENEY, Chief Judge [In full text]: There are before me five indictments which charge the defendant with violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, which is entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." In the various indictments it is alleged that the defendant through devious devices such as discounts, rebates, and abatement of rents to the dealers who traded in its product fixed the price of retail gasoline that was to be sold by the dealers to the public and still allowed the dealer a fair margin of profit. As a typical example, the defendant agreed with one Cail who was referred to in the 6th count of indictment 56-154 to allow him a rebate of 3.7¢ per gallon provided that he would sell his regular gasoline at 22.9¢ a gallon and his special gasoline for 25.9¢ per gallon. Whether the inducement was in the form of a rebate or a reduction in the purchasing price or an abatement of rent on property owned by the defendant and leased by the dealer is inconsequential for they were all inducements to persuade the dealer to sell his gasoline at a price that would meet the competition of dealers in other brands of gasoline. Right here it is important to note the government's argument that the arrangement was made possible and flowed from the maintenance of a tank wagon price by the defendant which was high, arbitrary, and non-competitive. The maintenance of a high tank wagon price may have been the result of the action on the part of the defendant and its dealers, but it could hardly be called a basis for the arrangements referred to. It was the apparent and real purpose of the defendant who was the wholesaler of the gasoline to allow its gasoline to be sold in a market where it could meet the competition of dealers in other brands of gasoline. Indictment 56-156 alleges an agreement between the defendant and two dealers, Frederick Abaid and Anthony Inglese, under which the dealers were charged with the duty, not of maintaining their retail price at a particular mathematical level, but rather to meet the competition of a competing retailer, known as Bell's Service Station.

[McGuire Act]

The defendant insists that the operations of the defendant are taken out of the Sherman Act, supra, by reason of the McGuire Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45, which provides in substance that "any contracts or agreements prescribing minimum or stipulated prices, or requiring a vendee to enter into contracts or agreements prescribing minimum or stipulated prices, for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trademark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others" shall not be unlawful under the Antitrust Acts "when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intra-state transactions under any statute, law, or public policy" in effect in the state involved. The government contends that gasoline stored in a tank, which is buried underground at the filling station and from which a pipe conveys the stored gasoline to a pump which has a label designating the brand or name of the producer or distributor, is not a container bearing a trademark within the meaning of the McGuire Act. In short it alleges that the tank which contains the gasoline prior to being pumped is not a container. I cannot follow this reasoning and find as a matter of fact and law that such a tank which provides a continuous flow of gasoline to the pump when needed where the pump bears the label of the producer or distributor is a container within the meaning of the McGuire Act.

[Necessity of Fair Trade Contract]

The next argument advanced by the government is that the McGuire Act refers only to "fair trade" contracts and that as the defendant, during the major portion of the time charged in the indictment, was not subject to fair trade agreements, it was outside the terms of the McGuire Act. This defendant had fair trade agreements with its dealers early in 1940 for a period of about 16 weeks after the passage of the Massachusetts statute of May 19, 1939, Mass. General Laws (Ter. Ed.), Chapter 93, § 14A, which included the vending equipment clause specifically, in what was felt to be a necessary amendment to cover gasoline pumps. At the end of 16 weeks of fair trading in 1940, the defendant ceased fair trading and did not resume it until August 8, 1956, which was some five or six weeks after these indictments were returned. I can find nothing in the McGuire Act which limits its exemptions to fair trade agreements. Had Congress intended to so limit this Act, it certainly could have used simple and appropriate words to indicate its intent. The language of the Act is clear of ambiguities, and I see no reason for referring to Congressional debates or expressions of intents or understandings on the part of individuals, prior to the adoption of the Act.

Conforming the facts in this case to the McGuire Act, I find that the indictments allege contracts for the sale of commodities at a stipulated price and that the container of the commodity bore the trademark of the producer and that the defendant's gasoline was in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class. The court takes judicial notice of this latter fact.

[Massachusetts Law]

The only question remaining to be determined is the effect of Massachusetts law upon such agreements. The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts has consistently held that a wholesaler or distributor had an absolute right to dictate the terms of resale. In Garst v. Harris, 177 Mass. 72, decided in 1900, the court allowed a recovery for breach of the retailer's agreement not to sell below the price stipulated by the distributor. This doctrine was reaffirmed, Garst v. Hall and Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, in 1901, although relief in that case was denied because it was against a third party and "fair trade" legislation which was needed for such recovery was not available. The most recent case which has reaffirmed a long series of cases involving the point is General Electric Co. v. Kimball Jewelers, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,291], 1956 Mass. A. S. 305. The court in upholding the Massachusetts Fair Trade Law held that "The producer of a trade marked article which is of a class in open competition may fix the price at which the retailer may sell," citing Garst v. Harris, supra, Garst v. Charles, 187 Mass. 144, Associated Perfumers, Inc. v. Andelman [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,248], 316 Mass. 176.

Mass. General Laws (Ter. Ed.) chapter 93, § 14A, states as follows:

> "No contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, or the vending equipment from which said commodity is sold to consumers bears, the trademark, brand or name of the producer or owner of such commodity and which is in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others shall be deemed in violation of any law of the commonwealth by reason of any of the following provisions which may be contained in such contract:
>
> ". . . That the buyer will not resell such commodity except at the price stipulated by the vendor. . ."

This enactment is, in effect, a statutory recognition of a long established public policy and common law principle on the part of the Commonwealth.

[Indictments Dismissed]

On the basis of the above findings, I rule as a matter of law that the indictments herein do not charge an offense under the Sherman Act, and the indictments, therefore, are to be dismissed.

[¶ 68,680] Massey-Harris-Ferguson, Limited v. Hon. Marion Speed Boyd, United States District Judge for the Western District of Tennessee.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 13121. Filed April 12, 1957.

Petition for Writ of Mandamus or Prohibition or Other Appropriate Writ.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—Denial of Motion To Quash Service of Process—Review—Petition for Writ of Mandamus.—A petition requesting a United States Court of Appeals to issue a writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ directing a United States District Judge to vacate his order overruling the petitioner's motion to quash the purported service of process on it was denied. The ruling was not a final order, but interlocutory in nature, and, therefore, it was not appealable. The rule against piecemeal appeals is not to be circumvented by resort to mandamus or prohibition, and the instant case does not involve such unusual circumstances as to warrant the use of such a writ. The question of whether or not the District Court had jurisdiction over the petitioner was difficult and the ruling doubtful, both as a matter of fact and in point of law.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9015.12.

For the petitioner: Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl, by John F. Sonnett and Kenneth D. Wallace, New York, N. Y.; and Canada, Russell, Turner & Alexander, by Cooper Turner, Jr., and Thomas R. Price, Memphis, Tenn.

For the movants: Lowell W. Taylor and William A. Percy, Memphis, Tenn., for Southland Tractors, Inc. and Farm Tractors, Inc.

Before: ALLEN, MILLER, and STEWART, Circuit Judges.

[Parties]

MILLER, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Petitioner, Massey-Harris-Ferguson, Limited, a Canadian corporation with its principal office in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, has filed in this court its Petition for Writ of Mandamus or Prohibition or Other Appropriate Writ against Hon. Marion Speed Boyd, United States District Judge for the Western District of Tennessee, pursuant to Section 1651(a), Title 28, U. S. Code. The petition prays that this court issue an appropriate writ directing Respondent to vacate and set aside the order entered by him on January 4, 1957 in Action No. 2969, U. S. District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, in which Southland Tractors, Inc., and Farm Tractors, Inc., are plaintiffs, and the Petitioner, herein referred to as the Canadian Corporation, together with Massey-Harris-Ferguson, Inc., a corporation organized under the laws of Maryland, and a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Petitioner, herein referred to as the American Company, are named defendants.

[Cause of Action—Service of Process]

In the District Court action, the plaintiffs claim to have been damaged in amounts exceeding $2,500,000 and $3,150,000, respectively, by reason of violations by the defendants of the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, Sections 1-33, Title 15, U. S. Code, for which alleged wrongs they claim triple damages. No question is raised about jurisdiction over the American Company. Process against the Canadian Corporation was served in Memphis upon an Assistant Branch Manager of the Memphis Branch of the American Company, and in Detroit, Michigan, upon Herman Klem, who was an officer of both the American Company and the Canadian Corporation. The Canadian Corporation appeared specially and moved to quash the purported service upon it upon the grounds that it was not an inhabitant of or transacting business in the Western District of Tennessee and was not either actually or legally present or found in the Western District of Tennessee, and accordingly was not subject to suit in said District. The motion was supported by affidavits of officers and agents of the two companies stating the separate corporate existence of the two companies, that the Canadian Corporation was not qualified to do business in Tennessee and had never maintained any office or place of business in the Western District of Tennessee, that it had never done any advertising, solicited any business, made any sales, or appointed anyone as its agent in the Western District of Tennessee, that it had never made any sales to the plaintiffs, and that the American Company had never acted as the agent for the Canadian Corporation but had in all its dealings with the plaintiffs acted solely in its own name and for its own account. The plaintiffs filed a verified response to the motion to quash which denied the allegation of the Canadian Corporation that it was not transacting business in the Western District of Tennessee, and stated that the Canadian Corporation had, since long prior to August 1953, carried on a tremendous business in the Western District of Tennessee through its own instrumentalities and agencies, and that the American Company was organized as an outlet for the sale in the United States of products manufactured by the Canadian Corporation and has at all times since its organization been an instrumentality and agency for the Canadian Corporation. Several hundred pages of depositions, which included numerous exhibits, were taken on the issue involved, which evidence has been forwarded to this Court for its consideration.

[Trial Court Ruling]

The District Judge made the following findings of fact:

"The American company maintains a district office at Memphis with a manager, and assistant manager, and certain other personnel. This office is the distributor for farm machinery manufactured by both the American company and the Canadian company. It appears that merchandise of the approximate value of three million dollars yearly was shipped into Memphis from the Canadian concern, and that this accounts for between sixty and seventy-five percent of the business done by the local office. The Canadian company, incidentally, claims that all of these sales are the result of contracts between it and the American company. However, the correspondence in the record reveals that the American company was mainly the sales outlet in the United States for the Canadian concern. There are (interlocking) officers and directors as between the two. Annual statements of the Canadian company shows the American company as a division or branch of the Canadian company, which would mean that the Memphis office is probably a sub-branch. Engineers are sent to Memphis from Canada to run field tests for the purpose of developing farm equipment for use by farmers in this trade territory or section of the country. These engineers paid expense money by the local office.

"The whole structure of the Canadian company is, in the Court's opinion, that of a very large enterprise with full control of all of its many operations, including the Memphis office in this judicial district. The American company operates wholly under the control and dominion of the Canadian company, even to the extent of procuring approval for the expenditure of moneys of any substantial amount."

The District Judge ruled that for all intents and purposes there was only one corporation, the parent Canadian Corporation, with the American Company and affiliates being merely adjuncts or instrumentalities of the Canadian Corporation; that the activities and operations of the Canadian Corporation were a continuous course of business of a substantial character within the Western District of Tennessee; and that the Canadian Corporation was found in the District, was transacting business in the District, and was subject to the jurisdiction of the court and its processes. The motion to quash was overruled by order of January 4, 1957, which is the order the present application for Mandamus by the Canadian Corporation seeks to have vacated.

[Contentions]

Petitioner contends that the ruling of the District Judge that the Court has jurisdiction over it is clearly erroneous, that it encroaches upon the sovereignty of Canada and will expose Petitioner or its officers to fines and penal provisions under Canadian or Ontario laws or to contempt of the lower court, that the Petitioner has no adequate remedy through any ordinary appellate procedure which might eventually be available to it, and that it will suffer irreparable injury from the action of the District Judge if it is required to proceed with the defense of the case, and that Mandamus or Prohibition under the All Writs Act, Sec. 1651, Title 28, U. S. Code, is the appropriate remedy where a District Court erroneously asserts jurisdiction over an alien corporation clearly not subject to jurisdiction. On the question of jurisdiction it relies chiefly upon Cannon Manufacturing Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 267 U. S. 333. See also: People's Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. American Tobacco Co., 246 U. S. 79, and Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., 273 U. S. 359. The District Judge relied chiefly upon United States v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795. See also: International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U. S. 310; Travelers Health Assn. v. Commonwealth of Virginia; 339 U. S. 643; Scholnik v. National Airlines, 219 F. (2d) 115, C. A. 6th, cert. denied, 349 U. S. 956, rehearing denied, 350 U. S. 868.

[Relief Denied]

In the present state of the litigation we consider it inadvisable to rule on the issue involved. The record in its present shape indicates that the question is a difficult one, and the ruling doubtful, both as a matter of fact and in point of law. As was said by the Supreme Court in Ex parte Muir, 254 U. S. 522, 533, "The suit is still in the interlocutory stage. The Court may take up again the question of its jurisdiction. If it does, the inquiry may proceed on other lines and the facts may be brought out more fully than before. In addition, the question may be re-examined in regular course on an appeal from the final decree." The Court in that case held that where the existence or absence of jurisdiction is in doubt, the granting or refusal of the writ is discretionary, and deemed it a proper exercise of discretion to refuse the writ. See also: Ex parte Chicago, R. I. & Pac. Ry., 255 U. S. 273.

Assuming that it should be found to be erroneous, it is subject to review by us if and when a final judgment should be entered against the Petitioner. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., supra. The present ruling is not a final order, but interlocutory in nature, from which an appeal does not lie. Sec. 1291, 1292, Title 28, U. S. Code. In the usual case the rule against piece-meal appeals is not to be circumvented by resort to Mandamus or Prohibition. Ex parte Harding, 219 U. S. 363; Roche v. Evaporated Milk Association [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,276], 319 U. S. 21, 27-31; Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Holland [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,626], 346 U. S. 379.

We do not consider the recent decision of the Supreme Court in La Buy v. Howes Leather Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,585], 352 U. S. 249, as changing the rule. It recognized that Mandamus should be resorted to only in extreme cases, but held that the unusual circumstances existing in that case made the use of the writ appropriate. In our opinion, the present case does not involve such unusual circumstances. Ex parte Fahey, 332 U. S. 258; Direct Transit Lines v. Starr, 219 F. (2d) 699, C. A. 6th; Sunbeam Corp. v. Picard, 227 F. (2d) 596, C. A. 6th. See also: Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., supra, 273 U. S. 359, 367-368, where the usual procedure was followed after an adverse ruling to the defendant on the question of jurisdiction.

The Petition for Writ of Mandamus or Prohibition or Other Appropriate Writ is denied.

[¶ 68,681] The Maryland Baking Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7292. Argued March 11, 1957; decided April 8, 1957.

On Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Geographic Pricing Practices—Price Cutting in Limited Area—Legality.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that a baking company unlawfully discriminated in price when it cut the price (approximately 25 per cent) of a particular type of ice cream cone in the limited area in which a small competitor operated, while maintaining higher prices in other areas where the company operated but the small competitor did not, was sustained by evidence. There was evidence that the price cut was initiated for the purpose of driving the competitor out of business, and that it deprived the competitor of its normal channel of distribution through jobbers, with the loss to the competitor of about half of its volume of business in the product involved. The company's contentions that its actions did not affect competition, and that the matter involved was a private business dispute not affecting the public interest, were rejected.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.390, 3508.345.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Price Discrimination Proceeding—Federal Trade Commission Cease and Desist Order—Scope of Order—Statutory Exceptions.—Where the Federal Trade Commission found that a baking company unlawfully discriminated in price when it cut the price of a particular type of ice cream cone in the limited area in which a small competitor operated for the purpose of driving the competitor out of business, the company's petition to set aside the Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order on the ground that the order was not limited to the type of ice cream cone which was the subject of the price cut and to the area in which the price cut occurred was denied. The Commission was acting within its power in making the order sufficiently broad to prevent evasion and proscribe unfair trade practices of the same general kind as that in which the company had engaged. "As to territorial extent, the company, having been found guilty of a flagrant violation of the act, was properly required to cease and desist from such practices in all areas in which it was doing business." Also, the Commission's order did not have to include provisions excepting from its prohibition the matters excepted by the provisos contained in Sections 2(a) and 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended, since such statutory exceptions are implicit in the Commission's order. However, the order was modified so as to forbid discrimination in prices within any area in the United States in which the company is doing business, but not to require uniform prices throughout the country or to forbid the company from making prices in good faith to meet competition. The company had contended that the order, before modification, required uniform prices even though no discrimination was involved.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.

For the petitioner: William Simon (Robert L. Wald and David Gerber on brief).

For the respondent: Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission (Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel; Alvin L. Berman and Gerald Harwood, Attorneys, Federal Trade Commission, on brief).

Affirming, as modified, a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6327.

Before PARKER, Chief Judge, SOPER, Circuit Judge, and HOFFMAN, District Judge.

[Price Discrimination]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: This is a petition by the Maryland Baking Company, Inc., to set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission, which found that the company had engaged in price discrimination in violation of section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended, 15 USC 13(a). The discrimination found was a price cut of about 25% on a particular type of ice cream cone in the limited area in which a small competitor operated, while maintaining higher prices in other areas where petitioner operated but the small competitor did not. While this finding is challenged by petitioner, it is amply sustained by the record. There is evidence that the price cut was initiated for the purpose of driving the competitor out of business and that it deprived the competitor of its normal channel of distribution through jobbers with the loss to the competitor of about half its volume of business in the product in question. The contention that petitioner's actions did not affect competition, and that the matter involved was a private business dispute not affecting the public interest, is so lacking in merit as not to warrant discussion. The Commission entered the following order:

> "It is ordered that respondent The Maryland Baking Company, a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the sale or distribution of ice cream cones in commerce, as 'Commerce' is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of such products of like grade and quality, by selling ice cream cones to any purchaser at higher prices than the prices charged any other purchaser engaged in the same line of commerce where, in the sale of said cones to such purchaser charged the lower price, respondent The Maryland Baking Company is in competition with another seller."

[Scope of FTC Order]

The baking company complains of the order because it was not limited to the particular type of ice cream cone which was the subject of the price cut and to the area in which the price cut occurred. It is clear, however, that the Commission was acting well within its power in making the order sufficiently broad to prevent evasion and proscribe unfair trade practices of the same general kind as that in which the company had been found guilty of engaging. P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Com'n 4 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,747] 186 F. 2d 52, 58, 59; Hershey Chocolate Co. [Corp.] v. Federal Trade Com'n 3 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,312] 121 F. 2d 968, 970; Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Com'n 8 Cir. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,527] 238 F. 2d 43, 52-53. As to territorial extent, the company, having been found guilty of a flagrant violation of the act, was properly required to cease and desist from such practices in all areas in which it was doing business. "When the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed." International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635] 332 U. S. 392, 400. See also Federal Trade Com'n v. Ruberoid Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,279] 343 U. S. 470; Federal Trade Com'n v. National Lead Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,629] — U. S. —, 77 S. Ct. 502, 509; and Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Com'n, supra.

[Statutory Exceptions]

The petitioner complains that the Commission did not include in the order provisos excepting from its prohibition the matters excepted by the provisos contained in subsections 2(a) and 2(b) of the Clayton Act 15 USC 13(a) and (b).* The Commis-

* These provisos are as follows:

"Sec. 13. Discrimination in price, services, or facilities—Price; selection of customers. (a) * * * Provided, that nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent differentials which make only due allow-sion says, however, that these are implicit in its order; and this is unquestionably correct. Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co. supra. As said by the Supreme Court in the case last cited:

"* * * we think the provisos are necessarily implicit in every order issued under the authority of the Act, just as if the order set them out in extenso. Although previous Commission orders have included these provisos, they gained no force by that inclusion. Their absence cannot preclude the seller from differentiating in price in a new competitive situation involving different circumstances where it can justify the discrimination in accordance with the statutory provisos."

[FTC Modification]

The company complains, also, that the effect of the order is to put its prices in a strait jacket throughout the country, so that it may not vary them in various localities even though no discrimination may be involved. To meet this objection, the Commission proposes to change its order so that it will read as follows:

"It is ordered that respondent The Maryland Baking Company, a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the sale or distribution of ice cream cones in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of such products of like grade and quality, by selling ice cream cones to any purchaser at a price which is lower than the price charged any other purchaser engaged in the same line of commerce, where such lower price undercuts the price at which the purchaser charged the lower price may purchase ice cream cones of like grade and quality from another seller."

We interpret the order as thus changed to forbid discrimination in prices within any area in the United States in which the company is doing business, but not to require uniform prices throughout the country nor to forbid the company's making prices in good faith to meet competition as permitted by the proviso to section 13(b), heretofore quoted in the note.

[Affirmed]

The order will accordingly be modified in accordance with the Commission's suggestion, the petition to set it aside will be denied and as modified it will be affirmed.

Affirmed.

[¶ 68,682] Packard Motor Car Company, et al. v. The Webster Motor Car Company. The Webster Motor Car Company v. Packard Motor Car Company, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Nos. 13152 and 13153, respectively. Decided April 18, 1957.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. HOLTZOFF, District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolies—Monopolization—Attempt or Conspiracy To Monopolize—Refusal To Renew Automobile Dealer Franchises—Grant of Exclusive Franchise—Legality—Relevant Market.—An automobile manufacturer did not violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act when it, at the request of its largest dealer in the Baltimore area, refused to renew the franchises of its other dealers in the area and granted the largest dealer an exclusive franchise for the area. The manufacturer offered to renew the franchise of the plaintiff-dealer for one year, but only after the plaintiff had threatened suit. However, the plaintiff did not accept ance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: * * *. (b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, that nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

the offer. There was no monopoly, or attempt or conspiracy to monopolize, within the meaning of the Sherman Act. The power which a manufacturer has over its trade-marked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in the terms of the competitive market for the product. Since there were other cars "reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes" as the manufacturer's make of car and therefore in competition with its car, an exclusive contract for marketing its car did not create a monopoly. There was no evidence of any attempt or conspiracy to create a monopoly, since there was no evidence of any attempt to get control of the relevant market.

Also, it was held that there was no contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and that the fact that the manufacturer had agreed not to renew the plaintiff's franchise when the proffered renewal expired was immaterial because the agreement was legal and because it inflicted no damage.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2530.10, 2540, 2610.300, 2610.720.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Refusal To Renew Automobile Dealer Franchises—Grant of Exclusive Franchise—Legality.—An automobile manufacturer did not violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act when it, at the request of its largest dealer in the Baltimore area, refused to renew the franchises of its other dealers in the area and granted the largest dealer an exclusive franchise for the area. The manufacturer offered to renew the franchise of the plaintiff-dealer for one year, but only after the plaintiff had threatened suit. However, the plaintiff did not accept the offer. There was no contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act. When an exclusive dealership is not part of a scheme to monopolize and effective competition exists at both the seller and buyer levels, the arrangement has been upheld as a reasonable restraint of trade. Of the manufacturer's 1600 dealers, 1100 were the only dealers of its cars in their cities, some of which were nearly as large as Baltimore, and such a ratio was typical in the automobile industry. The fact that other dealers in the same product of the same manufacturer are eliminated, and the fact that the largest dealer requested an exclusive franchise, did not make the exclusive dealership illegal. A relatively small manufacturer, competing with large manufacturers, thought it advantageous to retain its largest dealer in the area and could not do so without agreeing to drop its other dealers in the area. The fact that the manufacturer agreed not to renew the plaintiff's franchise when the proffered renewal expired is immaterial because the agreement was legal and because it inflicted no damage. Also, it was held that there was no violation of Section 2 of the Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.670, 2005.785; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.400, 9012.500, 9014.

For the appellants (No. 13152) and appellees (No. 13153): Harold L. Smith, with whom Robert W. Barker, Louis M. Denit, Jerome G. Shapiro, and Richard P. McGrath were on the brief.

For the appellee (No. 13152) and appellant (No. 13153): William J. Hughes, Jr., and Donald D. Webster, with whom William E. Leahy was on the briefs.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Columbia, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,171.

Before EDGERTON, Chief Judge, and PRETTYMAN and BAZELON, Circuit Judges.

[Appeal]

EDGERTON, Chief Judge [In full text]: Packard Motor Car Company and two of its officers appeal from a judgment for $570,000 in favor of Webster Motor Car Company, a former Packard dealer in Baltimore, for alleged violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 15. The essential facts are not disputed.

[Termination of Franchises]

There were formerly four dealers in Packard cars in Baltimore. In 1953 there were three, of which Webster was one. The usual dealer contract in the automobile business, and the contract between Packard and Webster, were for one year, with no option of extension. It was the custom in the business to extend contracts, from year to year, "barring some reason for cancellation." Webster and Packard had extended their contracts from year to year a considerable number of times.

In 1953 Zell Motor Car Company, the largest of the three Baltimore dealers in Packard cars, told Packard that Zell was losing money and would quit unless Packard gave it an exclusive contract. Packard told Zell it would do so, and told Webster and the other Baltimore dealer that their contracts would not be renewed. After Webster protested and threatened suit, Packard offered Webster the usual one-year renewal but refused to promise more. Packard told Zell, in effect, that this would be Webster's last renewal. Webster declined Packard's offer, quit the business, and brought this suit.

[Trial Court]

The District Court submitted to the jury the question whether there was an unreasonable restraint of trade, and also whether there was an agreement or attempt to monopolize. The jury found for the plaintiff and awarded $190,000 damages, which the court trebled in accordance with the statute. Motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and for a new trial, were denied. The court held that the jury had "a right to reach the conclusion that an agreement on the part of the manufacturer with one of its own dealers to terminate the franchise of all competitors and to grant to him a monopoly within a certain area, is an agreement in unreasonable restraint of trade, or an agreement to monopolize." Webster Motor Car Co. v. Packard Motor Car Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,171], 135 F. Supp. 4, 9.

[Defendants Entitled to Judgment]

We think the defendants were entitled to judgment. We agree substantially with Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899 (D. Md. 1956), aff'd [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564], 239 F. 2d 176 (C. A. 4, 1956).

[Monopoly]

1. There was no monopoly, or attempt or conspiracy to monopolize, within the meaning of the Sherman Act. The cellophane case, which had not been decided when the present case was tried, makes this clear. The Supreme Court there said: "this power that, let us say, automobile or soft-drink manufacturers have over their trade-marked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in terms of the competitive market for the product." And the Court held that "In considering what is the relevant market for determining the control of price and competition . . . commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." The Court accordingly held that, although du Pont produced about 75% of the cellophane sold in this country, there was no monopoly, because "the relevant market" was flexible packaging materials, including such things as glassine, waxed paper, and foil, as well as cellophane, and cellophane accounted for only 17.9% of this market. United States v. du Pont & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377, 393, 395, 399-400. Since there are other cars "reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes" as Packard cars and therefore in competition with Packards, an exclusive contract for marketing Packards does not create a monopoly. And there is no evidence of any attempt or conspiracy to create a monopoly, since there is no evidence of any attempt to get control of the relevant market.

[Restraint of Trade]

2. There was no contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act. As the court informed the jury, it has long been clear that only unreasonable restraints of trade are unlawful. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U. S. 1. When an exclusive dealership "is not part and parcel of a scheme to monopolize and effective competition exists at both the seller and buyer levels, the arrangement has invariably been upheld as a reasonable restraint of trade. In short, the rule was virtually one of per se legality" until the District Court decided the present case.[1] Of Packard's 1600 dealers,

[1] Handler, "Annual Antitrust Review," 11 Record of the Ass'n of the Bar of the City of New York 367, 370 (1956). Fargo Glass & Paint Co. v. Globe American Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,427], 201 F. 2d 534 (C. A. 7), cert. denied, 345 U. S. 942 (1953); Bascom Launder Corp. v. Telecoin Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,472], 204 F. 2d 331 (C. A. 2), cert. denied, 345 U. S. 994 (1953); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 45 F. Supp. 387, 398-399

1100 were the only Packard dealers in their cities, some of which were nearly as large as Baltimore, and such a ratio was typical in the automobile industry. The fact that any other dealers in the same product of the same manufacturer are eliminated does not make an exclusive dealership illegal; it is the essential nature of the arrangement. The fact that Zell asked for the arrangement does not make it illegal. Since the immediate object of an exclusive dealership is to protect the dealer from competition in the manufacturer's product, it is likely to be the dealer who asks for it.[2]

The short of it is that a relatively small manufacturer, competing with large manufacturers, thought it advantageous to retain its largest dealer in Baltimore, and could not do so without agreeing to drop its other Baltimore dealers. To penalize the small manufacturer for competing in this way not only fails to promote the policy of the antitrust laws but defeats it.

[Refusal of Renewal]

3. Though Packard had formerly expressed an intention not to renew its contract with Webster, Packard offered and Webster refused the usual renewal. That Packard had agreed with Zell not to renew Webster's contract again when the proffered renewal expired is immaterial, not only because the agreement was legal but also because it inflicted no damage.

[Reversed]

The judgment in favor of Webster is reversed. Webster's cross-appeal concerning the amount of Webster's attorneys' fee is dismissed as moot.

No. 13152 reversed; No. 13153 dismissed.

[Dissenting Opinion]

BAZELON, Circuit Judge, dissenting: Webster and Zell were competing Packard automobile dealers in Baltimore. In 1952 Packard served notice of termination of Webster's dealership, but then, after Webster's protest, offered to renew the dealership for only one year without further renewal.

I think the court properly instructed the jury upon the law applicable to conspiracies or combinations in restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and that the evidence supports the jury's finding in respect thereto. It is therefore unnecessary to decide whether the determination below of a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2 may also be sustained.

There was evidence that Zell had asked Packard to eliminate Webster as a competing Packard dealer; that Packard had never before considered that one dealer could be adequate representation in Baltimore; that Packard had found Webster to be a satisfactory dealer with a good organization; that there was an "understanding" between Zell and Packard, and that Packard had "agreed" with Zell that Webster's franchise be ended; and that, when Webster balked at his demise and threatened to bring an action for damages, Packard had offered Webster a renewal of its franchise in the usual form for one year, which Packard had agreed with Zell would be a final renewal. As a Packard memorandum put it: "This . . . was reviewed in detail and agreed to by Mr. Zell."

From this evidence the jury could have found—as it apparently did—that Webster's elimination as a dealer resulted not from a unilateral decision by Packard in selecting its customers, but rather from an agreement between Packard and Zell to eliminate Zell's competitor and make Zell the sole distributor of Packard cars in Baltimore; in simple terms, that it was an agreement which amounted to a combination or conspiracy to get rid of Webster.[3]

The "common right" of an individual to engage in a lawful calling was protected against restraints at common law,[4] is en-

(S. D. N. Y.), aff'd [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707, 719 (1944). Cf. G. & P. Amusement Co. v. Regent Theater Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,360], 107 F. Supp. 453, aff'd [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,888] 216 F. 2d 749 (C. A. 6); Boro Hall Corp. v. General Motors Corp. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,178], 124 F. 2d 822 (C. A. 2); Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,694], 211 F. 2d 268 (C. A. 5).

[2] Handler, supra note 1, at p. 372.

[3] We are not called upon to decide whether § 1 of the Sherman Act applies to a manufacturer who, after a discussion with one dealer, decides to make the latter his exclusive distributor, cutting off all others, for the purpose of improving the manufacturer's competitive position vis-a-vis more powerful manufacturers. Cf. Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, 906 (D. Md. 1956), affirmed [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564], — F. 2d — (4th Cir. 1956). That is not this case.

[4] Darcy v. Allen, 11 Coke 84b, 77 ENG. REP. 1260 (1576).

compassed within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment[5] and forms the very basis of the Sherman Act.[6] The purpose of the Act is to protect the individual business man as well as to assure to the consumer the benefits flowing from free competition. Applied to a dealership situation, the Act does not interfere with the manufacturer's right to select his dealers but it does prevent him from combining and conspiring with one not to deal with another.[7]

Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899 (D. Md. 1956), affirmed [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564], — F. 2d — (4th Cir. 1956), disagrees with the decision here under review. The latter case would limit the manufacturer's right to select his own customers by the requirement that he make no agreement with one to exclude another. Schwing would recognize this limitation only "if the agreement is a horizontal one between competitors, or if the manufacturer dominates the market in the commodity." 138 F. Supp. at 906. In this I think Schwing is wrong. The Supreme Court has held that, even apart from monopolistic effect, a vertical agreement which excludes a competitor of one of the parties from a substantial market violates § 1 of the Sherman Act.[8]

To avoid the application of the Sherman Act Packard contends that, because Webster rejected the proffered one-year renewal, the jury could not find that Packard refused to deal with Webster. But this contention is not persuasive. The record contains ample evidence from which the jury could have found that the renewal offer was not made in good faith, was prompted by Webster's threat to sue, and resulted from an agreement between Packard and Zell that it would be the last renewal.

[¶ 68,683] United States v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Republic Pictures Corporation; Republic Productions, Inc.; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Screen Gems, Inc.; Universal Pictures Company, Inc.; United World Films, Inc.; Films, Inc.; and Pictorial Films, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division. Civil Action No. 14354-Y. Filed April 11, 1956.

Case No. 1140 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Modification Pursuant to Terms of Decree—Decrees Vacated.—Consent decrees entered against three dependents in a Government antitrust action, 1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,137 and 68,160, were vacated and the action as to the defendants was dismissed on the motion of the Government. The decrees provided that if any final judgment is entered in the action against any defendant other than the consenting defendants and such judgment is more favorable to any such other defendant than the instant decrees are to the consenting defendants, the consenting defendants will be entitled to a modification of the decrees to substitute the more favorable provisions for corresponding provisions in the instant decrees. A final judgment dismissing the action as to other defendants had been entered.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8321.48, 8341.20, 8361.37, 8421.

---

[5] Butcher's Union v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 746 (1884), concurring opinions of Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Bradley.

[6] Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469, 497-98 (1940).

[7] Even individually conceived refusals to deal may be an element in a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Bausch & Lomb [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707, 723 (1944); Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Co., 257 U. S. 441 (1922); Report of The Attorney General's National Committee To Study The Antitrust Laws (1955), at 134; cf. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Parks, 220 U. S. 373 (1911).

[8] See Standard Oil of Calif. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, 305 (1949), explaining International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392 (1947).

For the plaintiff: James M. McGrath.

For the defendants: Loeb and Loeb, by Laurence M. Weinberg, Los Angeles, Cal., for Republic Pictures Corporation and Republic Productions, Inc.; and Lillick, Geary & McHose, by Don I. Johnson, Hollywood, Cal., for Films, Inc.

Vacating consent judgments entered in the U. S. District Court, Southern District of California, Central Division, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,137, 68,160; for a prior opinion and consent decree, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,205, 68,157.

LEON R. YANKWICH, Chief Judge [In full text]: The United States of America, plaintiff, having consented with defendants Republic Pictures Corporation and Republic Productions, Inc. to the entry of a final judgment in the above-entitled action, and said final judgment having been entered on September 12, 1955, and provision having been made in said final judgment for the substitution in place thereof of any more favorable judgment rendered with respect to any defendant other than Republic Pictures Corporation, Republic Productions, Inc., Films, Inc., Pictorial Films, Inc., or Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation, and the Court having rendered judgment against the Government with respect to defendants other than those named above, and having dismissed said action as to them, and said judgment having become final;

Now, Therefore, on motion of the Government, It Is Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed as follows:

1. The judgment as to defendants Republic Pictures Corporation and Republic Productions, Inc., entered September 12, 1955, is hereby vacated and set aside, nunc pro tunc as of September 12, 1955.

2. At the request of the Government, the action is dismissed as to Republic Pictures Corporation and Republic Productions, Inc.

LEON R. YANKWICH, Chief Judge [In full text]: The United States of America, plaintiff, having consented with defendant Films, Inc., to the entry of a final judgment in the above entitled action, and said final judgment having been entered on September 21, 1955, and provision having been made in said final judgment for the substitution in place thereof of any more favorable judgment rendered with respect to any defendant other than Republic Pictures Corporation, Republic Productions, Inc., Films, Inc., Pictorial Films, Inc., and with respect to Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation, other than a judgment containing no injunctive relief, and the Court having rendered a judgment against the Government with respect to defendants other than those named above, and having dismissed said action as to them and said judgment having become final;

Now, Therefore, upon motion of the Government, It Is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

1. The judgment as to defendant Films, Inc. entered September 21, 1955, is hereby vacated and set aside, nunc pro tunc as of September 21, 1955.

2. At the request of the Government the action is dismissed as to the defendant Films, Inc.

[¶ 68,684] Eastern Wine Corp. v. United Vintners, Inc. and Peerless Importers, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 118-140. Dated April 15, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures —Motion for Preliminary Injunction—Irreparable Injury—Legal Issues.—A wine distributor's motion for a preliminary injunction restraining a wholesaler and another distributor of wines from engaging in price cutting activities in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act was denied on the ground that the distributor failed to show that it will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction is granted. A showing of loss of future sales is not sufficient to meet the burden of showing irreparable injury. This is especially true in a case where there is a substantial legal issue in dispute, that is, whether or not a private action may be maintained for an underselling violation of Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9024.95, 9026.15.

For the plaintiff: Lester Lewis Jay, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Edward J. Carr, Jr., of Cravath, Swaine & Moore, argued and prepared the brief for United Vintners, Inc. J. Logan O'Donnell, of Olwine, Connelly, Chase, O'Donnell & Weyher, argued and prepared the brief for Peerless Importers, Inc. Mr. O'Donnell prepared the brief with W. N. Mairs, Jr. All of New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Injunction Sought]

DIMOCK, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, Eastern Wine Corp., moves for a preliminary injunction restraining defendants from engaging in price cutting activities in the sale of wine in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1, and section 3 of the Robinson Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13a. Plaintiff brings this action pursuant to section 16 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 737, 15 U. S. C. § 26.

Defendants contend that the motion should be denied on the grounds that (1) plaintiff has failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, (2) there is a substantial issue of fact in dispute, (3) there is a substantial issue of law in dispute, (4) money damages will adequately compensate plaintiff, and (5) granting of the injunction would do irreparable harm to defendant Peerless Importers, Inc.

[Price Cutting]

Plaintiff is a distributor of wines to retailers in the New York City area in competition with defendant Peerless Importers, Inc. (hereafter Peerless). Plaintiff alleges that it sells to wholesalers in competition with defendant United Vintners, Inc., (hereafter United) in Nassau, Suffolk and Westchester Counties. Defendant denies this. United markets, under various brand names including "Petri," about 20% of all California wines sold in the United States. Peerless is the sole wholesale dealer in the New York area of wines bearing the "Petri" brand name. The New York State market absorbs approximately 20,000,000 gallons of wine annually, a large percentage of which consists of dessert wines of California origin. The State of New York requires that the owner of the brand name fix the sale price to the jobber or wholesaler and the ultimate consumer each calendar month for the next succeeding calendar month. The jobber or wholesaler must likewise specify its sales price to retailers.

The particular circumstances that plaintiff complains of are the following: United is now selling to Peerless a case of 14 quarts of Petri Wine for $5.50, a price which plaintiff alleges is below cost; Peerless is reselling this case to retailers for $8.20 which provides a gross profit of $2.70 per case; Peerless had been making a gross profit of $3.00 per case of 12 quarts.

Plaintiff further alleges that defendants' price schedule is unreasonably low and has been adopted for the purpose of destroying plaintiff's business.

[Irreparable Injury]

Plaintiff, to obtain a preliminary injunction, must sustain the burden of showing that it will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction is granted. Plaintiff attempts to meet this burden with proof of reduced sales, and expectations of continued reduced sales. A showing of loss of future sales is not sufficient to meet the burden of showing irreparable harm. Foundry Services v. Beneflux Corporation, 2 Cir. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,554], 206 F. 2d 214. This is especially true in a case such as this where there is a substantial legal issue in dispute. See Nashville Milk Company v. Carnation Company, 7 Cir. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,520], 238 F. 2d 86, cert. granted 25 U. S. L. Week 3254, March 4, 1957, which holds that a private treble damage action may not be maintained for an underselling violation of section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, and Vance v. Safeway Stores, 10 Cir. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,538], 239 F. 2d 144, cert. granted 25 U. S. L. Week 3254, March 4, 1957, contra.

Motion denied.

[¶ 68,685] Switzer Brothers, Inc. v. James P. Byrne, d.b.a. Byrne Wallpaper & Paint Store.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 12902. Filed April 8, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. JONES, District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defenses—Patent Infringement Suit—Government Antitrust Consent Decree as Bar.—A Federal District Court exercised sound discretion in dismissing a complaint, with prejudice, charging the infringement of patents for fluorescent devices where a consent decree entered in a Government antitrust suit during the pendency of the patent infringement action directed the instant plaintiffs to dismiss any of their pending actions for the infringement of certain of their patents. The consent decree related to the patents involved in the instant action.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8401; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9040.

For the appellant: Albert Ely, Jr. (Albert L. Ely, Jr., and Ely, Pearne & Gordon, on brief), Cleveland, Ohio.

For the appellee: Carl Hoppe (Carl Hoppe, and Townsend and Townsend, on brief), San Francisco, Cal.

Before SIMONS, Chief Judge, ALLEN and MCALLISTER, Circuit Judges.

[Issues]

ALLEN, Circuit Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The District Court dismissed with prejudice a complaint alleging infringement of Patents Nos. 2,417,384 and 2,475,529 for fluorescent devices and materials and praying for the usual equitable relief. Two principal questions are presented in this appeal: (1) Are tenants in common of the patents in question indispensable parties to the suit? (2) If the tenants in common are indispensable parties and were not joined in the suit at its inception, does a subsequent assignment purporting to convey all right, title, and interest of the tenants in common to the licensee of the patents cure the defect in parties existing at the time the suit was instituted?

[Consent Decree]

The chronology of the case has importance and will be given somewhat in detail. On February 9, 1953, appellant, licensee of the patents above named, with authority to conduct and control all litigation relating to such patents, instituted the infringement suit herein. Robert C. Switzer and Joseph L. Switzer, hereinafter called the Switzer brothers, original patentees of such patents and holders of the record title, joined as plaintiffs. On January 10, 1951, the patents involved had been held valid and infringed, Switzer Brothers, Inc., v. Centennial Liquor Stores, Inc., 186 Fed. (2d) 414, 416 (C. A. 5). On February 13, 1953, Patent No. 2,417,384 was held invalid in view of the prior art. Texas-Miller Hat Corporation v. Switzer Brothers, Inc., 201 Fed. (2d) 824 (C. A. 5), certiorari denied, Switzer Brothers, Inc. v. Texas-Miller Hat Corporation, 346 U. S. 821. On October 22, 1953, appellant and the Switzer brothers, co-plaintiffs entered into a consent decree in a pending antitrust action, United States of America v. Switzer Brothers, Inc., brought in the District Court for the Northern District of California, 1952-53, CCH TRADE CASES, paragraph 67,598. This consent decree, which related to the two patents involved here, 1952-53 CCH TRADE CASES, paragraphs [pages] 68,878-9, provided:

"(A) Defendants are jointly and severally ordered and directed to grant to each applicant making written request therefor a non-exclusive, unrestricted, royalty-free license to manufacture, sell and use under United States Letters Patent Nos. 2,417,384; 2,475,529 or 2,450,085.

* * *

"(B) Defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute any suit or proceeding against any person to restrain or enjoin, or collect damages for, infringement occurring prior or subsequent to the date of entry of this Final Judgment, of said patents Nos. 2,417,384; 2,475,529 or 2,450,085; provided, however, that nothing herein shall prevent defendants (1) from defending the validity of said patents, or (2) by way of claim (counterclaim) or defense, from asserting claims for past unlicensed, contributory or induced infringement of said patents.

"(C) Except as to cases now on appeal or on certiorari defendants are ordered and directed to dismiss any of their pending actions for infringement of the patents listed in subsection (B) above in which a counterclaim has not been pled, or to dismiss any such pending action in which a counterclaim if pled, is dismissed. However, in case a counterclaim has been pled and is not dismissed, defendants may, but only to the extent of such counterclaim and only until the time of such dismissal, assert in such case the validity of said patents and plead by way of claim (counterclaim) or defense past unlicensed, contributory or induced infringement of said patents."

[Dismissal]

The instant case is not shown to have been on appeal or on certiorari on October 22, 1953, and no counterclaim had been filed therein. On November 5, 1953, presumably in compliance with paragraph (C) above quoted, appellant and the Switzer brothers moved for dismissal of the instant suit and appellee consented to such dismissal on condition that an award for attorneys' fees be granted defendant under 35 U. S. C. Section 285. Appellant and the Switzer brothers, after opposing dismissal upon such terms and conditions, withdrew their motion to dismiss the suit.

October 28, 1955, in Switzer v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 226 Fed. (2d) 329 (C. A. 6), this court affirmed a decision of the Tax Court of the United States to the effect that the license agreement executed in favor of appellant by Robert C. Switzer and Patricia Switzer, Joseph L. Switzer, and Elise DeGroot Switzer, dated July 30, 1946, and later transactions through 1949, did not constitute an effective assignment for tax purposes of the various patents and applications in which the wives of the Switzer brothers had acquired an interest on or before November 1, 1945. Later, December 16, 1955, the Switzer brothers and their wives quitclaimed to appellant all their right, title, and interest in the patents involved. Appellee then moved to dismiss the complaint for want of indispensable parties plaintiff, namely, Patricia Switzer and Elise DeGroot Switzer. Appellant opposed this motion and moved to drop Robert C. Switzer and Joseph L. Switzer as plaintiffs. The District Court granted the motion to dismiss for lack of indispensable parties plaintiff and from its order this appeal is prosecuted by Switzer Brothers, Inc.

We think the decision of the District Court was clearly correct. * * *

* * *

[Suit Barred]

During the pendency of the instant case, as heretofore set out, an antitrust suit filed against appellant and co-plaintiffs in the Southern District of California, United States of America v. Switzer Brothers, Inc., supra, was settled by the entry of a consent decree against appellant and coplaintiffs. The instant suit, filed February 9, 1953, set up infringement of the patents involved and asked for the usual equitable relief. Under (C) of the consent decree heretofore quoted appellant should have dismissed the case. Such a motion was filed November 5, 1953, but later withdrawn. In view of this record as to the consent decree, we conclude that the District Court exercised sound discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

[¶ 68,686] Frederick Rossi, Joseph Rossi, Nicholas Cucinotti, and Dominick Lento v. McCloskey and Company, Thomas McDonald, Peter Schultz, Michael McCary, Harry Jericho, and Local 470, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers, American Federation of Labor.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 19204. Filed March 29, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Identical Collective Bargaining Agreements—Employee Rights—Sufficiency of Complaint—Injury to Plaintiffs.—Truck drivers failed to charge a violation of the antitrust laws when they alleged that their employer (a contractor), their union, and union officers conspired to enter into a collective bargaining agreement which was identical to agreements then existing between other contractors and their employees and that the agreement was made to secure for their employer certain benefits then enjoyed by the other contractors and to enable their employer to join with the other contractors in monopolizing the excavation business. The allegations were not supported by statements of fact, and since the drivers were not competitors in the excavation business, any injury they may have suffered was wholly incidental and therefore not compensable under the antitrust laws. Allegations that the union, with the aid of the employer, discriminated against the drivers also were insufficient. The principle that when a union conspires with businessmen to control some substantial portion of a market it is vulnerable under the antitrust laws had no application in the instant suit.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.605, 2101.005; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275.

For the plaintiffs: Norman Shigon, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendants: Edward Davis, Philadelphia, Pa., for Thomas McDonald, Peter Schultz, Michael McCary, Harry Jericho, and Local 470, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers. J. Dress Pannell, Harrisburg, Pa., and Lawrence D. Beile, Philadelphia, Pa., for McCloskey and Co.

Opinion and Order

[Motion to Dismiss]

KRAFT, District Judge [In full text]: In this action, brought by plaintiffs under the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, the defendants have moved to dismiss the second amended complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and for failure of the plaintiffs to comply with the order of court requiring submission of the second amended complaint within twenty days.

[Causes of Action]

The plaintiffs are truck drivers, members of the defendant Local 470 (four officers of which are also defendants), and erstwhile employees of the defendant, McCloskey and Company, a Philadelphia contractor. Plaintiffs complain of manifold conspiracies: conspiracies among all of the defendants, between the Union and its officers, among McCloskey and other unnamed Philadelphia contractors, and among all the defendants and these contractors. They claim, inter alia, that their reputations have been injured, their "physical and mental conditions" damaged, and their seniority rights, rights to Union Welfare funds and to wages disregarded. For these alleged wrongs they seek treble damages, sundry injunctions and reinstatement.

Turning first to the sufficiency of plaintiffs allegations against McCloskey,[1] they aver substantially that McCloskey, the Union and its officers conspired to and did enter into a collective bargaining agreement which was identical to agreements then existing between other Philadelphia contractors and their employees; that this agreement was made to secure for McCloskey certain benefits then enjoyed by these other contractors, and to enable McCloskey to join with these other contractors in monopolizing the excavation business in Philadelphia. They aver that the agreement was openly opposed by McCloskey's truck drivers because it unfairly limited the "access to the labor market" which they had enjoyed under their prior collective agreement.

[Sufficiency of Allegations]

Few additional facts are stated and, for this reason alone, the complaint might be held fatally deficient. General allegations of conspiracy and of attempts to monoplize are no more than statements of legal conclusions. If they are not supported by statements of fact, no cause for relief is stated. Black & Yates, Inc. et al v. Mahogany Ass'n., Inc. et al., 129 F. 2d 227 (Cir. 3 1942); Feddersen Motors, Inc. v. Ward et al. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519 (Cir. 10 1950); Nelson Radio & Supply Co.,

[1] Complaint, ¶'s 6, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 16.

Inc. v. Motorola, Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386], 200 F. 2d 911 (Cir. 5 1952, cert. denied 345 U. S. 925).

[Injury to Plaintiffs]

A further and equally fundamental defect in the complaint against McCloskey deserves comment. The plaintiffs are not competitors in the excavation business which is allegedly being monopolized, and any injury they may have suffered from the asserted suppression of competition was wholly incidental thereto. Injury which is merely a collateral effect of illegal restraint upon competition is not compensible under the antitrust laws. Those who suffer such injury are not injured "by reason of" antitrust violations within the purport of the statute. 15 U. S. C. § 15; Conference of Studio Unions et al v. Loew's, Inc. et al. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,953], 193 F. 2d 51 (Cir. 9 1951, cert. denied 342 U. S. 919); Harrison v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,721], 211 F. 2d 405 (Cir. 3 1954, approving the opinion in [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,568] 115 F. Supp. 312), Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,020], 221 F. 2d 358 (Cir. 9 1955); Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,104], 224 F. 2d 678 (Cir. 2 1955).

[Claim Against Union]

Examination of plaintiffs' allegations against the Union and its officers [2] discloses defects of equal moment. Some,[3] such as those which allege slander and infringements of plaintiffs' rights freely to circulate petitions, are so totally unrelated to the antitrust laws on which this suit is founded that they merit no discussion. Others aver that the Union and its officers, in effecting the collective bargaining agreement previously mentioned, have, alone and with McCloskey's aid, discriminated against the plaintiffs in relation to employment and discharge, curtailed their opportunities to work and violated their rights under past and present collective bargaining agreements.

When a Union conspires with businessmen to control some substantial portion of a market, it is vulnerable under the antitrust laws. Allen Bradley Co. et al v. Local Union No. 3 et al. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797 (1945). However, the factual allegations in the present complaint are insufficient to bring it within this principle. The meager facts which are alleged relate to discrimination by the Union, a wrong which can find no redress in the antitrust law. "Congress has indicated no purpose to make a union's breach of duty to employees in a collective bargaining group an infraction of the Sherman Act." Hunt et al. v. Crumboch, et al., [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,385], 325 U. S. 821, 826 (1945). In Labor And The Antitrust Laws—A Preliminary Analysis,[4] Professor Cox, elaborating upon this point, stated:

> "Where a union controls job opportunities, it may abuse its power by limiting access to the trade, arbitrary discrimination, denials of individual liberty or unwarranted discipline; but these are problems primarily affecting labor-management relations or internal union affairs. They have little to do with the purpose of the antitrust laws . . . ."

He relied, in part, on the lengthy and authoritative treatment of antitrust policy in relation to labor unions in Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader et al. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469 (1940) which makes it abundantly clear that ". . . restraints on the sale of employee's services to the employer, however much they curtail the competition among employees, are not in themselves combinations in restraint of trade or commerce under the Sherman Act." [5]

[NLRB]

Whether the Labor Management Relations Act affords a proper basis for plaintiffs' action against the Union and its officers, and the National Labor Relations Board, a proper forum, need not here be decided. See Born v. Laube et al., 213 F. 2d 407 (Cir. 9 1954, cert. denied 348 U. S. 855).

[Time of Filing]

An additional and wholly procedural ground for dismissal of the second amended complaint must also be considered. The plaintiffs, pursuant to F. R. C. P. 15a, amended their initial complaint as a matter of course. Thereafter, on January 9, 1956, on plaintiffs' application following argument on defendants' motions to dismiss the first amended complaint, the court granted the plaintiffs leave to file, within twenty

[2] Complaint, ¶'s 6 through 16.
[3] Complaint, ¶'s 7, 8, 11 and 15.
[4] 104 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 252, 254 (1955).
[5] 310 U. S. 469, 503.

days, a second amended complaint.[6] The second amended complaint, however, was not submitted until March 15, 1956.

Leave of court, freely given when justice so requires, is a condition precedent to the filing of a second amended complaint, absent the written consent of the adverse parties.[7] To such leave, the court may attach reasonable conditions. Parrisi v. Foley, 203 F. 2d 454 (Cir. 2 1953); Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. v. Hughes Tool Co., 192 F. 2d 620 (Cir. 10 1951). The plaintiffs failed to comply with the reasonable condition here imposed, that the amended pleading be submitted within twenty days, and for such failure to comply with an order of court the defendants may move, under F. R. C. P. 41b, for dismissal of the action.

Order

Now, this 29 day of March, 1957, defendants' motions to dismiss the complaint are granted and plaintiffs' complaint is dismissed.

[¶ 68,687] The Crummer Company and One Other v. Jessie Ball duPont, et al., as Trustees, etc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida, Tallahassee Division. Civil Action No. 313. Filed February 13, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations—When Cause of Action Accrues—Fraudulent Concealment.—Where plaintiffs claimed that they had no knowledge of the existence of an alleged conspiracy to destroy their business because the defendants concealed their alleged conspiratorial activities behind the activities of Government employees, and that, therefore, the applicable state three-year statute of limitations was tolled by fraudulent concealment, the trial court, after the jury announced that it was in irreconcilable disagreement and unable to reach a verdict on this issue, directed a verdict for the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs' evidence was totally insufficient to sustain their allegations of fraudulent concealment. The fact that an appellate court had directed the trial court to submit the issue to a jury did not deprive the trial court of its power to enter a directed verdict.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.200.

For the plaintiffs: Hall, Sweeney & Godbee, DeLane, Fla.; Francis P. Whitehair, DeLane, Fla.; and Chris Dixie, Houston, Tex.

For the defendants: McCarthy Crenshaw; Clarence G. Ashby and Davisson F. Dunlap, of Adair, Ulmer, Murchison, Kent & Ashby; Charles R. Scott; and William H. Rogers and Taylor Jones, of Rogers, Towers & Bailey; all of Jacksonville, Fla. Richard W. Ervin, Attorney General, State of Florida; and Atkinson & Atkinson, all of Tallahassee, Fla. Maguire, Voorhis & Wells, by W. H. Poe, Orlando, Fla. Donald Russell, Columbia, S. C. Leonard W. Cooperman, St. Petersburg, Fla. S. Wallace Shafer, Lakeland, Fla.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,042, reversing U. S. District Court, Northern District of Florida, Tallahassee Division, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,980.

Memorandum-Decision Stating Grounds Upon Which the Court Directed a Verdict in This Case

[Conspiracy]

DOZIER A. DEVANE, District Judge [In full text]: This action was instituted by plaintiffs under the Anti-Trust Laws of the United States. Plaintiffs charge that various persons named as defendants, together with other persons not named as defendants, conspired with each other in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws to injure, damage and destroy plaintiffs in their business.

---

[6] Minutes of court, January 9, 1956: "Amended complaint to be submitted within 20 days."

[7] F. R. C. P. 15a; Canister Co. et al. v. Leahy et al., 191 F. 2d 255 (Cir. 3 1951).

This suit was instituted on December 19, 1949. The complaint charges that the conspiracy between defendants to put the plaintiffs out of business was formed early in 1941. Plaintiffs charge the defendants with the commission of approximately forty overt acts of conspiracy between that date and June 30, 1946.

[Prior Proceedings]

The case came on for hearing before the Court on a motion to dismiss filed by all the defendants save three on the ground that the suit was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The Court, after full hearing on said Motions to Dismiss, dismissed this case on the ground that same was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The Court held the three year statute applicable.

The three exceptions referred to above were Post Office Inspector Edward J. Mansfield, Walter Gaul and Cummer Cypress Lumber Company. The Court granted the motions of these defendants to dismiss on the ground that they had been improperly joined as co-conspirators and party-defendants in the case. (Crummer Company, et al., v. duPont, et al. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,980], 117 F. Supp. 870).

Promptly upon the Court's opinion and order coming down dismissing this case on the ground it was barred by the Statute of Limitations, plaintiffs applied to the Court for authority to amend the complaint, charging more specifically acts of fraudulent concealment of their activities by the defendants, an the Court gave to plaintiffs the right to file such amendment. Upon further hearing upon the amended complaint, the Court adhered to its former ruling and dismissed the action on the ground it was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

On appeal the Court of Appeals affirmed this Court in respect of every order it had entered in the case, save and except on the question of the fraudulent concealment of the alleged overt acts charged by plaintiffs. The Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to a jury trial on this specific issue. (The Crummer Company, et al., v. duPont, et al. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,042], 223 F. 2d 238).

When the case came back to this Court, an order was entered setting this case for trial before a jury on the single issue of fraudulent concealment and the case finally came on for trial upon this issue.

[Complaint]

As heretofore stated, the complaint charges defendants with the commission of approximately forty overt acts in the execution of the alleged illegal conspiracy. The complaint named public authorities of the State and Federal Governments as the only visible activity behind which plaintiffs claim the alleged overt acts were committed. These activities of public authorities behind which the defendants are alleged to have operated were grouped and classified into five groups by this Court in its opinion in this case (117 F. Supp. 874) and need not be repeated here.

[Fraudulent Concealment]

When the Court began holding pre-trial conferences to define the issues that would be submitted to the jury and to require counsel for the respective parties to designate those parts of the voluminous discovery depositions and exhibits they desired to use in the trial of the single issue of fraudulent concealment, plaintiffs announced the abandonment of all alleged overt acts except the fifth classification made by this Court as follows:

> "The alleged investigation authorized by the Attorney General of the United States which led to the return of two indictments against R. E. Crummer and Company and others in the District Court of the United States, District of Kansas, Second Division, in August, 1944."

This case was thereupon readied for trial upon this limited issue of alleged fraudulent concealment and counsel for the respective parties cooperated admirably in designating such parts of the voluminous discovery depositions and exhibits each party desired to use at the trial; in fact, they cooperated in this respect so completely that no counsel found fault with the designations made by any opposing counsel.

In connection with the limited designation of the issues by plaintiffs, it should be kept in mind that plaintiffs named as co-conspirators Post Office Inspector Edward J. Mansfield, who was named as a party-defendant in the complaint, and Thomas B. Hart, Robert T. Wright, George Ruetell, F. Joseph Butler and Alexander J. Brown, Jr., employees of the Securities and Exchange Commission, were not made party-defendants because they resided beyond the jurisdiction of this Court. As stated above, this Court by appropriate order dismissed Post Office Inspector Mansfield as a party-defendant and the Court of Appeals affirmed this Court in that action. So this case went to trial before the jury on the single issue of fraudulent concealment of the alleged conspiratorial activities between the named defendants, or some of them, and those Federal Government employees conducting the investigations, which investigations resulted in the return of the two indictments against the plaintiffs and others in Kansas.

[Governmental Activities]

The evidence in this case discloses no conspiratorial overt act by any of the defendants (with one noted exception to be referred to later) with any Government employee. All it discloses is that some of the Government employees during their investigations contacted a few of the defendants and solicited certain specific information from them. There was nothing improper or unusual brought out in the evidence in connection with these interviews being carried on by the Government employees. Moreover, these contacts were generally known by plaintiffs long before June 30, 1946.

The one noted exception is that of Walter P. Fuller. The evidence in the case discloses that the House of Representatives of Florida in the 1941 Session passed a resolution authorizing the appointment of a Committee to investigate into the activities of bond houses dealing in municipal bonds in the State of Florida. This Committee was reactivated early in 1942 by the Honorable Spessard Holland, Governor, and Walter P. Fuller was appointed as Investigator for this Committee. The Committee was to complete its investigation in time to make a report to the 1943 Session of the Legislature and to the Governor. The evidence shows that Fuller was an extremely active Investigator for his Committee, apparently limiting his activities to the Crummer Companies and he prepared for his Committee and the Committee submitted to the Governor and to the Legislature a report touching upon his investigation of these companies. R. E. Crummer testified extensively as to his relationship with Fuller dating back many years and as to the animosity Fuller held against him and his companies. The activities of Fuller as an Investigator for the Governor and the House Committee became fully known to plaintiffs when the Committee filed its report with the Governor and the Legislature early in 1943.

The investigations of the Post Office Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission were just getting under way, according to the testimony in the case, when Fuller was actively engaged in his investigation for the Legislative Committee and for the Governor of Florida. Fuller learned of this investigation through contacts he made with others during the course of his investigation for the Legislative Committee and he sought an interview with Post Office Inspector Mansfield, advised Mansfield of his activities for the Legislative Committee and the Governor and offered to supply Mansfield with any information in his possession that Mansfield might desire. There is no evidence in the case that any of the other named defendants had anything whatever to do with Fuller's activities in behalf of the Governor and his own Committee, or in the supplying of information to the Federal employees.

Fuller was subpoenaed to appear before the Grand Jury in Kansas and gave damaging testimony against plaintiffs, but there is no testimony in the record in this case that supports the allegations of the complaint that Fuller was a part of the alleged duPont-Wheeler-Pierce conspiracy. And on this record they cannot be held responsible for any of Fuller's activities as an Investigator for the State of Florida or in the contacts he solicited from and had with the Federal Employees during the course of their investigations, which led to the return of the two indictments against plaintiffs in Kansas.

[Plaintiffs' Knowledge]

The great preponderance of the evidence discloses that plaintiffs were fully aware of the activities of Fuller and of the Federal Investigators, including their contacts with the named defendants, all the while the investigations were going on and this knowledge and information was most effectively used by the plaintiffs in their arguments to Assistant Attorney General T. Lamar Caudle and the panel of attorneys in his office that he created at plaintiffs' request to pass upon the question as to whether or not the indictments against plaintiffs should be dismissed. The record in this case is full of information supplied Assistant Attorney General Caudle by plaintiffs on this question. The Statute of Limitations, therefore, was effectively in operation on all these matters save one from the date the moratorium act expired on June 30, 1946.

The one exception to the statement just made above relates to one act of defendants, Roger L. Main and Howard S. Wheeler. The evidence in this case shows that on May 21, 1941, these defendants filed with the Post Office Department in Washington, D. C., a memorandum with certain papers attached as exhibits, charging irregularities in connection with the handling of certain bonds of Lee County, Florida, for which R. E. Crummer and Company was fiscal agent at the time, and that thereafter on May 31, 1941, defendant, Roger L. Main, wrote a letter to the Post Office Department at the request of the Department formalizing these charges. Both Main and Wheeler testified that neither disclosed to anyone save probably Wheeler's business associate, Loomis C. Leedy, that this memorandum had been filed with the Post Office Department by them until after the Post Office Department itself made the disclosure.

It is alleged by plaintiffs and admitted by defendants, and the evidence shows, that plaintiffs had no knowledge of the above mentioned activities of the defendants, Main and Wheeler, until December 27, 1946. This date is within three years of the bringing of this suit. The Court held in this case, and so instructed the jury, that the filing of this memorandum by defendants, Main and Wheeler, with the Post Office Department constituted no act of conspiracy and that the failure of these defendants to disclose that they had filed said memorandum to anyone prior to December 27, 1946, did not constitute an act of fraudulent concealment. The Court held that it is the duty of every citizen to report to the appropriate department of the United States Government any violation of the Federal laws of which he has any knowledge, and that the activities of Main and Wheeler in filing the memorandum above mentioned were not wrongful or illegal in any respect. The Court further held and charged the jury that it was against Postal Regulations for the Post Office Department to make any disclosure with reference to this memorandum until the Post Office Department investigation had been terminated and the two indictments brought against plaintiffs had been dismissed. The evidence shows that the disclosure was in fact made to a United States Senate Subcommittee after the two indictments against plaintiffs had been dismissed. The Court, however, in this case went on to instruct the jury that the activities of Main and Wheeler in filing this memorandum with the Post Office Department may be considered by the jury in determining whether the defendants are guilty of other overt acts which they concealed from plaintiffs.

It appears from this record that plaintiffs rest their entire case of fraudulent concealment on the act of Main and Wheeler in filing the memorandum with the Post Office Department on May 21, 1941, and if the Court is in error as to the law on this issue, then fraudulent concealment as alleged has been fully established by the plaintiffs as to this one act.

[Conspiratorial Acts]

Near the conclusion of the trial of this case, counsel for plaintiffs attempted to again inject into the case the issue as to whether the activities of Walter Gaul and the Crummer Cypress Lumber Company in joining in the suit with the Board of Administration in a Pasco County case was barred by the Statute of Limitations. This Court and the Court of Appeals held in the two opinions referred to above that the alleged overt acts charged by plaintiffs against Gaul and the Crummer Cypress Lumber Company with reference to this litigation were not conspiratorial acts and the Court reaffirmed those holdings in this case.

[Directed Verdict]

At the conclusion of all the testimony of plaintiffs, counsel for defendants filed and pressed a motion for a directed verdict, which the Court promptly denied. Then again at the conclusion of all the evidence in the case and after all the parties had rested, counsel for defendants renewed their motion for a directed verdict. The Court held this motion under advisement until after the case had been submitted to the jury. After almost a full day of deliberation divided into two parts, the jury reported to the Court that it was in irreconcilable disagreement and unable to reach a verdict.

Upon the Court being so advised by the Foreman of the jury, the Court promptly directed a verdict for defendants and announced to the jury at the time its reasons for doing so. After the verdict had been returned by the jury at the Court's direction, counsel for plaintiffs excepted thereto and insisted that the Court was without authority to direct a verdict in the case inasmuch as it held a mandate from the Court of Appeals to submit the issue of fraudulent concealment to a jury and this mandate of the Court of Appeals deprived this Court of its authority to direct a verdict in the case. The Court held the point was not well taken and affirms that holding here. This Court certainly did not lose its power to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in this case had a verdict been returned for plaintiffs by the jury and assuming such power to exist in the Court, the Court certainly possessed authority to proceed in the matter in the simple way of directing the jury to return a verdict in the case.

[Dismissal]

The evidence in the case is totally insufficient to sustain plaintiffs' allegations of fraudulent concealment and the verdict directed by the Court brings this long, protracted litigation to an appropriate end. A final judgment dismissing this case in conformity with this Memorandum-Decision will be entered herein.

[¶ 68,688] E. B. DeGolia v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division. No. 32514. Filed April 1, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Bring Suit —Non-Operating Landlord of Motion Picture Theatre—Injury to Business or Property.— In a non-operating motion picture theatre owner's action alleging, among other things, that motion picture producers and exhibitors conspired to give the theatres which they own or operate a priority over his operating lessees in the exhibition of motion pictures, and that he has lost a substantial amount of percentage rentals which he otherwise would have received from his operating lessees, the court reserved its ruling on the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings until trial because, from the present record in the case, it could not be determined whether the alleged injury to the theatre owner lies within that remote area to which the private remedies afforded by the antitrust laws do not extend.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.55.

For the plaintiff: Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, San Francisco, Cal.

For the defendants: Landsburg, Hoffman, Arnold & Schiller; Dunne, Dunne & Phelps; and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, all of San Francisco, Cal.

Order Reserving Ruling on Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

[Complaint]

LOUIS E. GOODMAN, District Judge [In full text]: This is a private anti-trust action brought by a non-operating motion picture theater owner against numerous defendants who produce motion pictures and exhibit them in theaters which they own or operate. The complaint alleges that, in violation of the anti-trust statutes, the defendants attempted, in combination, to monopolize the business of operating motion picture theatres in San Francisco; maintained, in combination, a monopoly of exhibition of first and second run pictures in the downtown areas of San Francisco, conspired to give the theaters which they owned or operated in San Francisco a priority over plaintiff's operating lessees in the exhibition of motion pictures; conspired to impose unreasonable clearances upon and exact discriminatory rental from plaintiff's operating lessees; and indulged in the same unlawful practices in respect to plaintiff's theater and his operating lessees that they were found to have indulged in by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York in an equity anti-trust action brought against them by the United States.[1] As a result of these acts by defendants, it is asserted, plaintiff lost a substantial amount of percentage rentals which he would have otherwise received from his operating lessees.

[Motion for Judgment]

Defendants have moved for judgment on the pleadings and for a summary judgment in their favor. By their motion, they ask the Court to decide this case upon the bare pleadings supplemented by a single affidavit which adds nothing of substance. Plaintiff has submitted in opposition to the motion an affidavit which only sets forth excerpts from the pleadings and the findings in the equity action referred to in the complaint herein. Thus, the Court will treat the motion merely as one for judgment on the pleadings.

[Right To Maintain Action]

The ground of defendants' motion is that plaintiff is not entitled to bring an action under the anti-trust statutes as a "person injured in his business or property,"[2] because any injury to him was indirect and merely incidental to that suffered by his operating lessees.

The recognized limitations on the right to maintain a private antitrust action, based on remoteness of injury, are not spelled out in the statutes. They have been formulated by judicial decisions appraising the facts of each case in the light of the Congressional purpose in creating a private cause of action for violations of the anti-trust laws.

The courts that have thus far considered the right of a non-operating theater owner to maintain an anti-trust action for damages resulting from conspiracies similar to the one charted in the complaint herein, have reached divergent conclusions upon varied facts.[3] This diversity of judicial opinion stands as a caution against attempting to decide the question tendered by defendants' motion without an adequate factual record. The present posture of the case in the pleading stage does not enable us to determine, with any degree of confidence, whether or not the alleged injury to plaintiff lies within that remote area to which the private remedies afforded by the anti-trust laws do not extend. The Court cannot fairly rule upon the motion without a fuller and more detailed picture of plaintiff's place in the motion picture industry, his relationship to his operating lessees, and the impact of defendants' allegedly unlawful activities upon his economic position.

Ruling on the motion will therefore be reserved until the trial. Rule 12(d) Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

---

[1] United States of America v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al., Equity No. 87-273 (S. D. N. Y.)

[2] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 USC 15 provides that:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

[3] Cases sustaining the right of a non-operating motion picture theater to maintain a private anti-trust action are: Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,304], 232 F. 2d 190 (9 Cir. 1956); Tower Building Corp. v. Loew's Inc., No. 50 C 1307 (N. D. Ill., 1956), CCH 1956 TRADE CASES par. 68,537; Camrel Co. Inc. v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp., et al., CCH 1944-1945 TRADE CASES par. 57,233 (S. D. N. Y. 1944); East Orange Amusement Co. v. Vitagraph, Inc., CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS, 9th Ed., Supp. 1941-43 Court Decisions, par. 52,965, (D. N. J. 1943). Those denying him a right of action are: Melrose Realty Co., Inc. v. Loew's Inc. et al. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,358], 234 F. 2d 518 (3 Cir. 1956), aff'g CCH 1955 TRADE CASES par. 68,150 (E. D. Pa. 1955); Harrison v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,721], 211 F. 2d 405 (3 Cir. 1954), aff'g [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,568] 115 F. Supp. 312 (E. D. Pa. 1953); Walder v. Paramount Publix Corp., CCH 1956 TRADE CASES par. 68,275 (S. D. N. Y. Jan. 1956), CCH 1956 TRADE CASES par. 68,572 (S. D. N. Y. Dev. 1956); Congress Bldg. Corp. v. Loew's Inc., CCH 1956 TRADE CASES par. 68,513 (N. D. Ill. 1956).

[¶ 68,689] Health-A-Teria, Inc. v. The Gillette Company.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 56 C 1961. Dated March 13, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Production of Documents—Relevancy—Service of Subpoena by Defendant Before Answer.—A plaintiff's motion to quash a subpoena, which was served by the defendant before the filing of an answer to the complaint and which demanded the production of documents concerning the issue of damages, was granted. While it is not improper to allow discovery before an answer is filed, the information sought must be relevant to the issues as they probably will be framed. The information sought was held irrelevant at this stage of the proceeding.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.825.

For the plaintiff: Abraham Shanes, Jack Arnold Welfeld, and Jerome F. Dixon, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendant: Crowell & Leibman, Chicago, Ill.

Memorandum

[Production of Documents]

PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, District Judge [In full text]: This is a complaint to recover damages for alleged violation by defendant of the Sherman Act (Title 15 U. S. C. § 1 and 2). No answer or other pleading has been filed by defendant; on the contrary, it has taken the initiative in the suit by serving upon plaintiff's President a subpoena asking that he produce certain named documents. Presently before the court is plaintiff's motion to quash this subpoena.

The documents requested by defendant need not be now listed in detail. Briefly, they include defendant's financial statements for five years, and its customer lists and income tax returns for the same period. Defendant in its brief agrees that these items are all relevant to the question of damages. That being true, they are irrelevant at this time. While it is not improper to allow discovery before an answer is filed Avon Linen Service v. Gratenstein, 16 F. R. D. 469 (D. C., D. Conn, 1953), the information sought must be relevant to the issues as they will probably be framed (Avon Linen, supra; Wagner v. Kemper, 13 F. R. D. 128 (D. C. W. D. Mo. 1952).

In the present instance, the subpoena is premature. Defendant, if it believe that allegations of damages are insufficient to state a cause of action, it is at liberty to test that question by a motion to dismiss. There is no doubt that the information requested is highly confidential; whether or not it is legally privileged, it should not be needlessly revealed. Certainly it is not necessary to enable defendant to frame an answer; and if a motion to dismiss should be filed and allowed, revelation would serve no purpose and would be only harmful.

The motion to quash the subpoena is allowed, without prejudice to defendant's right to renew it at some subsequent time in the course of the trial.

[¶ 68,690] Abel Allan Goodman, an individual trading as Weavers Guild v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 15,124. Filed April 17, 1957.

On petition to review an order to cease and desist.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding—Misrepresentations by Salesmen Designated as Independent Contractors—Apparent Scope of Authority.—An individual engaged in the sale of a home study course in re-weaving was responsible for misrepresentations made by his salesmen, even though the individual designated his salesmen as independent contractors. The criteria of direction and control, which govern in determining whether or not a principal-agent relationship exists, are well recognized in law. However, "in dealing with a regulatory statute aimed to achieve a greater societal control through specialized agencies, the courts should disregard common-law definitions." Regardless of the manner in which the salesmen may have been designated, so far as the public was concerned, they were the individual's authorized agents and acted not only within the apparent but also within the actual scope of their authority. In view of the relationship between the individual and the salesmen, the individual was responsible for their acts.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding—Defenses—Cessation of Business.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting misrepresentations concerning a home study reweaving course was not set aside where the respondent, an individual, claimed that he was no longer engaged in the business of selling his reweaving course. The respondent testified that, while he has suspended his operations, he might want to resume business under another set-up, and that he sold his assets to a corporation, which took over his salesmen and the materials used in making sales of his course. The incorporators of the company which took over the business were the respondent's daughter, her husband, and a former employee; the respondent stated that he continues to act in an advisory capacity; the respondent receives a royalty for the use of his course; and the respondent signed a letter in which he was designated as a director of the corporation. The Commission was within its authority in concluding that the change in the relationship was more apparent than real and that too much reliance should not be placed on a promise of discontinuance of activities or participation in them by the respondent.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.171; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding—Misrepresentations—Sufficiency of Evidence—Evidence Relating to Particular Locality.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an individual from misrepresenting his home study reweaving course was affirmed where a large portion of the misrepresentations found by the Commission to exist related to one region of the country. However, the misrepresentations were not confined to that area because advertisements were published in trade magazines of national circulation and various circulars to salesmen had wide, interstate distribution. The Commission may prevent the spread of unfair practices, and the courts, on review of a Commission order, may infer the existence of practices other than those proved.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8621.

Unfair Practices—Misrepresentations—Home Study Reweaving Course—Test of Legality—Capacity To Deceive.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an individual from misrepresenting his home study reweaving course was affirmed, although the individual contended that some of his representations were nothing more than "puffing" which is tolerated in modern commerce. In the instant case, there were statements made to salesmen with the intention that they be conveyed by them to prospective purchasers and which were aimed to induce the purchase of a course of study. The doctrine of "buyer beware" does not apply in the instant proceeding. The capacity to deceive and not actual deception is the criterion by which practices are tested under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.201, 5201.621.

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Trade Status—Use of Word "Guild"—Private Enterprise.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an individual selling a home study reweaving course from using the word "guild" in his trade name was affirmed. There was no "guild" in existence, purchasers of the course derived no benefit from the individual's so-called "guild," and the individual's so-called "guild" was merely a fictitious name under which the individual was doing business. The word refers to a non-profit association of persons engaged in the same craft for mutual assistance. This was not the nature of the individual's business. Also, the order of the Commission prohibiting the individual from representing that his business is anything other than a private business enterprise was affirmed.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5089.10, 5103.29.

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting to Salesmen—Earnings and Materials To Be Furnished.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an individual selling a home study reweaving course from representing (1) that the typical earnings of persons selling his course of instruction are greater than they actually are, (2) that he will furnish sales leads or other selling assistance to those selling his course of instruction, or (3) that sales kits and other advertising material are furnished to sales agents was affirmed. Earnings represented by the individual as "typical" were "exceptional" rather than "typical." The individual did not furnish to sales agents the names of prospective purchasers or with everything necessary in selecting and closing sales. Also, salesmen were required to pay five dollars, as a returnable deposit, for sales kits, and if they needed additional sales material, they would have to pay for such material.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5101.51, 5101.80, 5101.90.

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Home Study Reweaving Course—Completeness of Course, Ease of Learning, Personal Instructions, Potential Earnings, Value of Supplies, and Governmental Approval.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an individual selling a home study reweaving course from representing (1) that his course of instruction constitutes a complete course in reweaving, (2) that reweaving is easily learned, or quickly learned, by taking his course, (3) that he will arrange for personal instructions for those purchasing his course, (4) that the potential earnings of persons completing the course and engaging in the reweaving business are greater than they are in fact, (5) that the needles supplied with the course are worth any amount in excess of the amount ordinarily charged for such needles by him, (6) that he will refund payments made on contracts, or (7) that his courses of instruction have been approved for training by the Bureau of Education of the State of California or the United States Veterans Administration was affirmed. Evidence established that the individual's course was not a complete course in reweaving, that reweaving is difficult to learn, that no personal assistance in completing the course was given as a regular part of the course, that it was not possible for persons completing the course to earn the amounts represented by the individual, that the needles supplied with the course were not worth the amount represented by the individual, that refunds were refused, and that the individual's course was not approved for training by the above government agencies.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5083, 5083.10, 5083.24, 5083.31, 5083.50, 5097.25.

For the petitioner: Wolver & Wolver, by Eugene L. Wolver, Los Angeles, Cal.

For the respondent: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission; Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, FTC; and Emerson K. Elkins, Washington, D. C.

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6153.

Before: LEMMON and CHAMBERS, Circuit Judges, YANKWICH, District Judge.

YANKWICH, District Judge [In full text]: The Federal Trade Commission, the respondent herein, to be referred to as "the Commission," after an investigation of the practices of Abel Allan Goodman, an individual trading as "Weavers' Guild," to be referred to as "the petitioner," filed a complaint on December 22, 1953, charging him with violation of §§ 25(1) and 25(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[1]

[1] 15 U. S. C., § 45(a)(1) and § 45(a)(6).

I

The Proceedings Under Review

[Complaint]

In substance, the complaint charged that by the use of the words "Weavers' Guild" the petitioner had represented himself that his business was an organization or guild of weavers organized to protect the interests of its members, and that, for the purpose of obtaining salesmen in connection with the sales and distribution of his home study course of instruction in a method of repairing damage to cloth, he had caused to be published in interstate commerce advertisements, and false, misleading and deceptive statements as to the prospective earnings of such salesmen and the assistance which would be given to them. And for the purpose of inducing the salesmen to sell the course of instruction he had made false, deceptive and misleading claims and representations concerning the course and the benefits which would accrue to those purchasing it.

These representations will be treated with specificity as we discuss the findings made by the Commission and the attack made on them by the petitioner.

[Answer]

The petitioner filed his answer on January 11, 1954, in which he admitted that he formerly sold and distributed in interstate commerce the course mentioned, but claimed that he no longer did so, but was, at the time,

> "only engaged in the liquidation and winding up of the business."

He also denied that certain of the representations were made either by him or in his behalf and claimed that others were true.

[Order]

A Hearing Examiner was designated and hearings were had in Los Angeles, San Francisco and New Orleans. Twenty-two witnesses were presented for the Commission, nine for the petitioner. The Examiner filed his Initial Decision on September 23, 1955. On appeal, the Commission, on March 14, 1956, denied petitioner's appeal and granted, in part, the appeal in support of the complaint. The order issued by the Commissioner differed in one respect, to be adverted to later, from that recommended by the Examiner. In substance, the Order required the petitioner, in conjunction with the sales and distribution of the course of instruction of reweaving in commerce to cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication:

(a) That the typical earnings of persons selling petitioner's course of instruction are greater than they actually are;

(b) That the petitioner will furnish sales leads or other selling assistance to those selling his course of instruction unless he actually does furnish such leads and assistance;

(c) That sales kits and other advertising material are furnished to sales agents, unless it is clearly disclosed that such articles are furnished only after the agents have made deposits or payment therefor;

(d) That the petitioner's course of instruction constitutes a complete course in reweaving unless and until such is in fact true;

(e) That reweaving is easily learned, or quickly learned, by taking the petitioner's course, unless such representation be specifically restricted to the overweaving or patch type of reweaving;

(f) That the petitioner will arrange for personal instructions for those purchasing his course;

(g) That the potential earnings of persons completing the petitioner's course and engaging in the reweaving business are greater than they are in fact;

(h) That the needles supplied with the course are worth any amount in excess of the amount ordinarily charged for such needles by the petitioner;

(i) That the petitioner will refund payments made on contracts unless he in fact makes such refunds upon demand by the purchasers;

(j) That the petitioner's courses of instruction have been approved for training by the Bureau of Education of the State of California or the United States Veterans Administration.

2. Using the word "Guild" in his trade name or otherwise;

3. Representing, directly or by implication, that his business is anything other than a private business enterprise selling a correspondence course of instruction in reweaving, unless such representation is true.

II

The Scope of Review

This is a petition to review the order. Under the Federal Trade Commission Act, the findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by evidence, are conclusive.[2]

In an Opinion just filed,[3] we had occasion to treat fully the scope of review under this statutory mandate and the impact of the Administrative Procedures Act[4] on it. The conclusion there stated was that the function of this Court is merely to make a comprehensive review of the record before the Commission and to determine if the findings are supported by substantial evidence on such record considered as a whole.[5]

In exercising the right of review, we are aware that the growing complexity of our economy has induced the Congress to place upon specialized agencies the power to regulate certain phases of it and to control the abuses in them. For this reason, the Supreme Court has stated, both as a policy and as a warning:

> "Courts are slow to interfere with their conclusions when reconcilable with statutory directions".[6]

III

The Status of the Salesmen

[Contention]

The petitioner's primary contention is that the salesmen who sold the course were independent contractors, for whose actions he was not responsible. The brunt of the argument is based on the claim that because the petitioner carried the salesmen on his books as independent contractors, his agreements with them so stated, and he had no control over their work and the manner of performing it, the connection between him and his salesmen conformed to the classical characteristics which courts have attached to that relationship.

[Common Law Definitions]

The criteria of direction and control, which govern in determining whether or not such relationship exists, are well recognized in law. However, even the general criteria are not applied with rigid consistency. And in the authorities[7] there are references to cases in which salesmen have been held to be agents of the principal notwithstanding assertions of a different relationship. However, when interpreting a statute the aim of which is to regulate interstate commerce and to control and outroot some evil practices in it, the courts are not concerned with the refinements of common-law definitions, when they endeavor to ascertain the power of any agency to which the Congress has entrusted the regulation of a business activity or the enforcement of standards it has established.

Illustrative is a case which arose under the National Labor Relations Act[8] involving the definition of the word "employee" as used in that Act. There was before the Supreme Court the important question whether newsboys who, by ordinary criteria—because they purchase the newspapers at a definite price and resell them, and, in many other respects—would be considered independent contractors, were within the Act.[9] Ruling in the affirmative, the Court rejected the contention that common-law concepts should be read into statutes of this character, saying:

> "It will not do, for deciding this question as one of uniform national application, to import wholesale the traditional common-law conceptions or some distilled essence

---

[2] 15 U. S. C., § 45(c).

[3] Jacques and Suze C. De Gorter, trading as Pelta Furs, v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 15184 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,691], — F. 2d —.

[4] 5 U. S. C., § 1009(e).

[5] See, Jacques and Suze C. De Gorter, trading as Pelta Furs, v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, Note 3; and see cases cited in Notes 6 to 13 inclusive. The present state of the law is well summed up by the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit:

"Conflicts in testimony are to be resolved by the Commission and not by us whose function is limited to determining whether upon a review of the whole record it appears that the Commission's findings are supported by substantial evidence. The weight to be given to the facts proved and the inferences to be drawn from them are for the Commission to determine, not the courts." (Bristol-Myers Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 Cir., 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,722], 185 F. 2d 58, 62)

[6] United States v. Storer Broadcasting Co., 1956, 351 U. S. 192, 203.

[7] 2 Am. Jur., Agency, § 8; 2 C. J. S., Agency, § 2(d); 35 Am. Jur., Master & Servant, § 5; 56 C. J. S., Master and Servant, § 3; Restatement, Agency, § 2(c), 220c.

[8] 29 U. S. C., § 152 et seq.

[9] National Labor Relations Board v. Hearst Publications, 1944, 322 U. S. 111.

of their local variations as exclusively controlling limitations upon the scope of the statute's effectiveness. To do this would be merely to select some of the local, hairline variations for nation-wide application and thus to reject others for coverage under the Act."[10]

The courts adopted a similar attitude under the Fair Labor Standards Act[11] when it was urged that homeworkers working on a piece basis, not under the direct control of the employer, were not employees, but independent contractors.[12]

The gloss of these cases is that, in dealing with a regulatory statute aimed to achieve a greater societal control through specialized agencies, the courts should disregard common-law definitions. Rather, should they envisage the legislation as a whole, the evils it sought to eradicate or the control which it aimed to achieve and interpret the words used with these objections in view. As said by the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit:

"We are dealing, however, with a specific statute which, * * * is of a class of regulatory statutes designed to implement a public social, or economic policy through remedies not only unknown to the common law but often in derogation of it. * * * If the Act presently considered, expressly or by necessary implication, brings within the scope of its remedial and regulatory provisions, workers in the status here involved, we are not concerned with the question whether a master-servant relationship exists under otherwise applicable rules of the common law".[13]

The statute under which the present proceeding was instituted declares unlawful,

"Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce".[14]

And the Commission is empowered to prevent persons

"from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and deceptive acts or practices in commerce".[15]

[Apparent Scope of Authority]

The courts in interpreting the particular statute have stressed the fact that one who

"places in the hands of another a means of consummating a fraud or competing unfairly in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act is himself guilty of a violation of the Act."[16]

So when they found that there were unfair or deceptive acts in conjunction with the sale or advertising of a product or service in commerce, they held the seller or manufacturer responsible whether the salespersons were what might have been considered at common law independent contractors or not. All they were interested in was to determine whether misrepresentations were made within the apparent scope of the authority of the salespersons.

Thus in one of the cases which arose in the Seventh Circuit the contention was made, as it is made here, that the concern involved had no such control over the persons participating in the sales plan as would make it liable for their acts. However, the Commission found that the testimony of customers, the representation made by the salespersons and the form of the credential cards, contracts and blanks on which the sales were made, were sufficient to hold the concern responsible as a principal. In sustaining this finding the court said:

"True, there was testimony by the so-called managers and representatives to the effect the business was being conducted by them independently and, that they received no orders or directions from the Art Company. There is evidence, however, including the physical facts, which demonstrate to the contrary. For instance, each salesman was issued a certificate designating him as the representative of the Art Company; the order was taken in its name; the picture was shipped in its name, and the customer was notified in its name of the time of delivery. All blanks used by the salesmen were furnished by the Art Company and bore its [10] National Labor Relations Board v. Hearst Publications, supra, Note 9, p. 125. As stated in another case,

"It is the total situation that controls." (Bartels v. Birmingham, 1947, 332 U. S. 126, 130) And see, United States v. Silk, 1947, 331 U. S. 704, 716-718.

[11] 29 U. S. C., § 201 et seq.

[12] Walling v. American Needlecrafts, 6 Cir., 1943, 139 F. 2d 60, 64; McComb v. Homeworkers' Handicraft Cooperative, et al., 4 Cir., 1949, 176 F. 2d 633.

[13] Walling v. American Needlecrafts, supra, Note 12, p. 63. See, United States v. Silk, supra, Note 10, loc. cit.; Stewart-Jordan Distributing Co. v. Tobin, 5 Cir., 1954, 210 F. 2d 427, 432.

[14] 15 U. S. C., § 45(a)(1).

[15] 15 U. S. C., § 45(a)(6).

[16] C. Howard Hunt Pen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 3 Cir., 1952 [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,286], 197 F. 2d 273, 281; and see, Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 1922, 258 U. S. 483, 494.

name. The customer had a right to believe—in fact, could not have believed otherwise, than that the salesmen were the agents of the Art Company, with full authority in the matter.

"Petitioners' argument and authorities are largely concerned with the relation between a manufacturer and a retail merchant. * * * It is also sought to compare the instant situation with the relation existing between the automobile manufacturer and its local agent. This is another instance, however, of the agency conducting its business in its own right and in an independent manner. These illustrations have no analogy to the present situation. Here, the agent was clothed with apparent and, we think, real authority to speak and act for and on behalf of the principal, and the latter is bound thereby. We know of no theory of law by which the company could hold out to the public these salesmen as its representatives, reap the fruits from their acts and doings without incurring such liabilities as attach thereto." [17] (Italics added.)

Thus the courts take the view that the principal is bound by the acts of the salesperson he chooses to employ, if within the actual or apparent scope of his authority, even when unauthorized. As said by the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit:

"But however unauthorized the offending conduct of the salesmen may have been and however condemned and discouraged by their superiors, it still was conduct which subjects the employers to the jurisdiction of the Commission and to its cease and desist order." [18]

In a later case the same court, in dealing with misrepresentations in conjunction with the sale of books, held the principal responsible because the salesmen were his authorized agents. This, despite the fact that the Commission found that the misrepresentations were made in violation of direct instructions. The Court summed up the matter in these words:

